A suit in a Circuit Court by an Indian to determine his rights under a patent conveying land to him in severalty in accordance with the provisions of a treaty between his tribe and the United States, on whatever ground the jurisdiction of the court is invoked, is one involving the construction of a treaty, and an appeal therein can be taken only to the Supreme Court. Terry v. Bird, (1904) 129 Fed. 592, 64 C. C. A. 160, dismissing an appeal.

Separate appeals.—As to the classes of cases enumerated in this section other than a "case in which the jurisdiction of the court is in issue" alone, the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is not necessarily exclusive. But "as to these [other] classes it has been repeatedly held that the Act of 1891 did not contemplate several separate appeals or writs of error on the merits in the same case and at the same time to two appellate courts." U. S. v. Larkin, (1908) 208 U. S. 333, 28 S. Ct. 417, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 517, citing numerous cases.

Waiver of appeal to Supreme Court.—If a defendant convicted in a criminal case in the District Court where a constitutional question was involved, so that he could have sued out a writ of error direct to the Supreme Court, takes the case to the Circuit Court of Appeals instead, the right of direct appeal to the Supreme Court is lost. MacFadden v. U. S., (1909) 213 U. S. 288, 29 S. Ct. 490, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 801.

"As said in more than one case, a party who might have carried his case to the Supreme Court, and does not choose to do so, cannot, after a final judgment in the Circuit Court of Appeals, have a second determination upon another writ of error." Weber v. Kentucky Grand Lodge, (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 839.

Scope of review.—If the Supreme Court acquires jurisdiction of an appeal on the ground of a constitutional question involved, it "has the power to dispose, not merely of the constitutional question, but of the entire case, including all questions, whether of jurisdiction or of merits." Chappell v. U. S., (1896) 160 U. S. 499, 16 S. Ct. 397, 40 U. S. (L. ed.) 510.

On appeal or writ of error upon the ground that a constitutional question is involved, the Supreme Court may decide the case without being restricted to the constitutional question. Field v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 618, 24 S. Ct. 784, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1142; Burton v. U. S., (1905) 196 U. S. 283, 25 S. Ct. 243, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 482.

On appeal from a decree on the merits because of a constitutional question involved, "in this, as in all cases, if it appears that the Circuit Court had no jurisdiction, it is the duty of this court to so declare and enter judgment accordingly." Holt v. Indiana Mfg. Co., (1900) 176 U. S. 68, 20 S. Ct. 272, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 374.

"If the record does not affirmatively show jurisdiction in the Circuit Court, we must, upon our own motion, so declare, and make such order as will prevent that court from exercising an authority not conferred upon it by statute." Minnesota v. Northern Securities Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 48, 24 S. Ct. 598, 600, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 870. See also Vance v. W. A. Vandercook Co., (1898) 170 U. S. 468, 18 S. Ct. 645, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 1111.

Where an appeal is taken to the Supreme Court on the ground of a constitutional question being involved and not on a certified question of jurisdiction, the Supreme Court will take notice of the want of jurisdiction of the court below and enter a decree appropriate to the circumstances. Covington, etc., Bridge Co. v. Hager, (1906) 293 U. S. 109, 27 S. Ct. 24, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 111, modifying a decree of dismissal on the merits by ordering that it be a dismissal for want of jurisdiction.

Where an appeal is properly taken from a decree because of a constitutional question involved, if the Supreme Court finds that the lower court had no jurisdiction, it will reverse the decree with direction to dismiss for want of jurisdiction. Dawson v. Columbia Ave. Sav. Fund, etc., Co., (1905) 197 U. S. 178, 25 S. Ct. 420, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 713, citing for that practice, Newburyport Water Co. v. Newburyport, (1904) 193 U. S. 561, 576, 24 S. Ct. 553, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 795, 799.

That a decision of a constitutional question may be had on appeal directed to that question, although the court below dismissed the case for want of jurisdiction and certified the question of jurisdiction alone to the Supreme Court, see cases cited supra, p. 1332, under Review limited to question of jurisdiction — exceptions.

CLAUSE 4. CONSTRUCTION OR APPLICATION OF CONSTITUTION.

Not every assertion of a right under some claimed construction or application of the Constitution, nor every claim that a pertinent Act of Congress is violative of the Constitution, is efficient to establish a right to a direct appeal to the Supreme Court. The claim must be real and substantial, not merely colorable or without reasonable foundation. Whether the question of the construction or application of the Constitution, or of the constitutional validity of an Act of Congress, is real and substantial, or is merely colorable and without reasonable foundation, depends, inter alia, upon whether it is an open one in the Supreme Court, or has been solemnly and directly determined by that court. If it has been so determined, it no longer constitutes a ground for a direct appeal to that court. Harris v. Rosenberger, (1906) 145 Fed. 449, 76 C. C. A. 225, certiorari denied 203 U. S. 591, 27 S. Ct. 778, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 331.

A writ of error was dismissed where it was based upon a contention that merchandise coming into the United States from the canal zone in the Isthmus of Panama could not be subjected, as is attempted by the Act of March 2, 1905, ch. 1311, 33 Stat. L. 843, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 71, to the duties imposed on merchandise imported from foreign countries. David Kaufman, etc., Co. v. Smith, (1910) 216 U. S. 610, 30 S. Ct. 419, the Supreme Court deeming that the constitutional question was not real and substantial, inasmuch as it was clearly controlled by the principles laid down in Downes v. Bidwell, (1901) 182 U. S. 244, 21 S. Ct. 776, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 1088.

speedy trial is not involved where the court below permitted the entry of a nolle prosequi, and overruled his motion to set it aside, nor is he legally aggrieved thereby. Lewis v. U. S., (1910) 216 U. S. 611, 30 S. Ct. 438, dismissing a writ of error.

An order denying relief by habeas corpus to a person convicted in a United States court for the Indian Territory was not reviewable as involving the construction of the Constitution, where the allegation in the petition that the accused was deprived of his liberty without due process of law was based entirely upon the supposed want of jurisdiction in the court where the conviction was had over an offense committed during the interim between the passage of the Oklahoma Enabling Act of June 16, 1906, and the admission of the state into the Union, which is a question involving the construction, and not the constitutionality, of the Enabling Act. Childers v. McClaughry, (1910) 216 U. S. 139, 30 S. Ct. 370, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 420.

"No conceivable constitutional right of the district attorney arose or could have been involved in committing him for contempt for refusing to obey the order of the court" directing him to return to the owner certain books and papers in his possession which the court found had been seized in violation of constitutional right; "and therefore there is no question presented on this record justifying a direct review of the order committing for contempt." Wise v. Mills, (1911) 220 U. S. 549, 31 S. Ct. 597, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 579, followed in Wise v. Henkel, (1911) 220 U. S. 556, 31 S. Ct. 599, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 581, dismissing an appeal from a judgment discharging a writ of habeas corpus sued out by the district attorney on account of the order of commitment.

"While in section 10 of article 1 of the Federal Constitution there is a recognition of the power of the state to pass inspection laws, yet, to justify a holding that the application of the Federal Constitution is involved, there should be a question as to the relation between some constitutional provision and the state statute." Knop v. Monongahela River Consol. Coal, etc., Co., (1909) 211 U. S. 486, 29 S. Ct. 188, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 294.

Where the only real, substantial point involved is whether or not the secretary of the treasury misconstrued a federal statute, it does not give the Supreme Court jurisdiction upon direct appeal. American Sugar Refining Co. v. U. S., (1908) 211 U. S. 155, 29 S. Ct. 89, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 129, dismissing for that reason an appeal based upon the contention by importers that the treasury regulations respecting the polariscope test for sugar assumed to add something to the dutiable standard prescribed by the Tariff Act of July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. L. 168, ch. 11, par. 208, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 427, and that the secretary of the treasury thus exercised legislative power confided by the Constitution solely to Congress.

A judgment in habeas corpus proceedings on behalf of a person whose interstate extradition is sought pursuant to the Federal Constitution and laws, and who contends that his detention in custody is unlawful because the indictment, which is its only excuse, is not a charge of crime within the meaning of U. S. Const., art. 4, sec. 2, 2d par., 9 Fed. Stat. Annot. 184, regulating extradition, is appealable as involving the construction of the Constitution. Pierce v. Creecy, (1908) 210 U. S. 387, 28 S. Ct. 714, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1096.

Contention that constitutional rights to trial by jury and due process of law are infringed by the action of a federal Circuit Court, after appointing receivers of the assets and property of a corporation, and enjoining any interference with such property, in compelling repayment by summary process, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, from one who, with knowledge of the injunction, collects a check drawn in his favor by the corporation to satisfy a debt, and in denying his application to compel the bringing of an action at law for the recovery of the proceeds of the check — is too frivolous to serve as the foundation of a writ of error under this section. Bien v. Robinson, (1908) 208 U. S. 423, 28 S. Ct. 379, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 556.

A case in which the contention is made that the decree which is the basis of the suit is void as violating the right, under the Federal Constitution, to a jury trial and to due process of law, does not involve "the construction or application of the Constitution" under this section, where the real issue as to such prior decree was whether it was res judicata between the parties, or, as is contended by the appellants, was rendered without jurisdiction. Empire State-Idaho Min., etc., Co. v. Hanley, (1907) 205 U. S. 225, 27 S. Ct. 476, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 779.

Contention that the constitutional privilege of a congressman from arrest embraces arrest and punishment for a criminal offense while Congress is not in session is not so frivolous as to defeat a writ of error under this section. And a writ of error to review the conviction of a congressman in a Circuit Court, presenting a question respecting his alleged constitutional privilege from arrest, will not be dismissed because the Congress of which the accused was a member has ceased to exist, since, even if the question has thus become a mere abstraction, jurisdiction of the writ of error depends upon the existence of a constitutional question when the writ was sued out, and carries with it the duty of reviewing the whole case. Williamson v. U. S., (1908) 207 U. S. 425, 28 S. Ct. 163, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 278. So in Burton v. U. S., (1905) 196 U. S. 283, 25 S. Ct. 243, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 482, a question respecting an alleged constitutional privilege of freedom from arrest as a United States senator was held to be reviewable on a direct writ of error.

The contention by a foreign corporation that the rendition of certain judgments in the state courts, sought to be introduced in evidence against it, was without due process of law, does not make the suit one involving "the construction or application of the Constitution," where this claim is based solely upon the theory that, under the circumstances, the service of process in the suits in the state courts upon the corporation's designated agent was unauthorized either by the state constitution and laws or the principles of general jurisprudence. Cosmopolitan Min. Co. v. Walsh, (1904) 193 U. S. 460, 24 S. Ct. 489, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 749.

In Guaranty Trust Co. v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., (1909) 171 Fed. 1014, it was held that an appeal should not be granted direct to the Supreme Court in a case involving a large number of miscellaneous and complicated questions, merely because the construction or application of the Constitution is incidentally raised.

The record, and not a certificate of the trial judge, furnishes the basis for determining whether the suit is one which involves the construction or application of the Constitution. "Indeed, we know of no authority for the making of such certificate." Cosmopolitan Min. Co. v. Walsh, (1904) 193 U. S. 460, 24 S. Ct. 489, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 749.

A judgment entered upon a verdict directed in favor of the government on the issues raised by a special plea in bar, by which the accused claimed immunity from prosecution under the Act of Feb. 25, 1903, 32 Stat. L. 904, ch. 755, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 173, as amended by the Act of June 30, 1906, 34 Stat. L. 798, ch. 3920, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 708, because of his testimony before the grand jury, is not a final judgment and is therefore not reviewable under this section, where leave was given to plead over, and a plea of not guilty was entered, upon which no trial has been had. Heike v. U. S., (1910) 217 U. S. 423, 30 S. Ct. 539, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 821.

Where a complainant has appealed from so much of a decree as denied his prayer for relief involving "the construction or application of the Constitution," the defendant may take a cross appeal to review the nonfederal questions decided against himself. "If he fails to take such appeal the correctness of the decision as against him will be presumed." Field v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 618, 24 S. Ct. 734, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1142.

Habeas corpus. — A decision of a federal Circuit Court denying a writ of habeas corpus to a person convicted in a federal District Court was held to be reviewable by direct appeal to the Supreme Court, where the petition averred that the imprisonment of the appellant was in violation of the Federal Constitution. Dimmick v. Tompkins, (1904) 194 U. S. 540, 24 S. Ct. 780, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1110, citing Craemer v. Washington, (1897) 168 U. S. 124, 127, 18 S. Ct. 1, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 407, 408.

Restriction of right to appeal to the Supreme Court in habeas corpus proceedings in certain cases, see Act of March 10, 1908, ch. 79, 35 Stat. L. 40, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 293.

CLAUSE 5. VALIDITY OF UNITED STATES LAW OR TREATY OR CONSTRUCTION OF TREATY.

If a case depends entirely on the construction of an Act of Congress — its constitutionality not being drawn in question — it cannot be taken direct to the Supreme Court under this section. Spreckels Sugar Refining Co. v. McClain, (1904) 192 U. S. 397, 407, 24 S. Ct. 376, 378, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 496.

"Assertion of errors of construction furnishes no basis for jurisdiction on constitutional grounds" of alleged invalidity of a law of the United States. Rakes v. U. S., (1909) 212 U. S. 55, 29 S. Ct. 244, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 401.

There is no foundation in substance for a claim that power of legislation is unconstitutionally delegated to the state legislatures by the Act of July 7, 1898, 30 Stat. L. 717, ch. 576, sec. 2, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 356, adopting such punishment for offenses committed in places under the exclusive jurisdiction and control of the United States as the laws of the state in which such places are situated "now provide" for a like offense, the punishment therefor not being otherwise provided for by any law of the United States. Franklin v. U. S., (1910) 216 U. S. 559, 30 S. Ct. 434, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 615, dismissing a writ of error. And respecting a cognate statute, it was held that a contention of the unconstitutionality of R. S. sec. 5509, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 864, "was long since put at rest," so that a writ of error based on that contention was dismissed. Rakes v. U. S., (1909) 212 U. S. 55, 29 S. Ct. 244, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 429.

The construction of a treaty is not "drawn in question" within the meaning of this section "when the rights of neither party are necessarily dependent upon such construction," but are dependent upon that which may have been given by a federal statute, and when the construction of that statute is independent of that which may be given by the treaty, although weight may be given to the treaty in determining the question of the construction of the statute; for the construction of the treaty must be drawn in question in "other than a merely incidental or remote manner." Sloan v. U. S., (1904) 193 U. S. 614, 24 S. Ct. 570, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 814.

In habeas corpus proceedings in the Circuit Court the construction of extradition treaties, on which the determination of the case depended in part, at least, "was none the less so drawn in question because it became necessary or appropriate for the court below also to construe the Acts of Congress passed to carry their provisions into effect." Pettit v. Walshe, (1904) 194 U. S. 205, 24 S. Ct. 657, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 938.

CLAUSE 6. CONSTITUTION OR LAW OF STATE CLAIMED TO BE IN CONTRAVENTION OF U. S. CONSTITUTION.

"The mere construction of a state statute does not of itself present a federal question." Knop v. Monongahela River Consol. Coal, etc., Co., (1909) 211 U. S. 485, 29 S. Ct. 188, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 294.

The mere fact that a defeated party in a suit in the federal Circuit Court set up the repugnancy of a state law to the Federal Constitution does not authorize him to maintain an appeal under this section, where his contention on that point was sustained. Anglo-American Provision Co. v. Davis Provision Co., (1903) 191 U. S. 376, 24 S. Ct. 93, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 228.

An appealable case within this section is presented by a bill in equity which alleges that a contract right of a waterworks company, with whose predecessors a municipality, with legislative sanction, contracted for a municipal water supply, is impaired by an ordinance directing that the waterworks company be notified that the city denies any liability on a contract for the use of hydrants, and by the subsequent action of the city in holding an election to authorize an issue of bonds to buy or construct waterworks of its own, and in refusing to pay the amount due and payable under the terms of the contract. Vicksburg v. Vicksburg Waterworks Co., (1906) 202 U. S. 453, 26 S. Ct. 660, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1102.

"The mere fact that a constitutional question is alleged does not suffice to give us jurisdiction to review by direct appeal if such question is unsubstantial and so devoid of merit as to be clearly frivolous." For that reason a claim that ten days' statutory notice of the time appointed for action upon a petition for settlement of the final account of an executor and for final distribution of a decedent's estate is so unreasonable as to a non-resident claimant as to be wanting in due process of law was held insufficient to support an appeal. Goodrich v. Ferris, (1909) 214 U. S. 71, 29 S. Ct. 580, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 914, dismissing the appeal.

In a case where the validity of a state statute had been sustained by the federal Supreme Court and an amendment not substantially altering the prior Act was afterward involved on a writ of error, the court said: "There is no claim by the appellee of any invalidity in the statute, but only of its inapplicability to the facts. In the face of the decision of this court and the claim of the appellee, it is difficult to see how there can be any question of a conflict between the legislation and the Federal Constitution. After a final decision, it is going too far to hold that there still remains an undecided question, and that when we have held that a statute of a state is valid there remains a controversy as to its validity, and this is emphatically true when neither party challenges that decision." Knop v. Monongahela River Consol. Coal, etc., Co., (1909) 211 U. S. 485, 29 S. Ct. 188, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 294, dismissing a writ of error.

Contention that due process of law is denied by a tax imposed under the authority of a state statute, upon a custodian of distilled spirits, which rests upon the theory that the taxing power of the state is, by its Constitution, confined exclusively to the levy of taxes in personam upon the owners of property is too devoid of merit to sustain a writ of error, where the highest state court has upheld the statute in controversy as an exercise of the taxing power of the state, and, in so doing, declared that it but reiterated and re-expounded the rulings by it previously made. Hannis Distilling Co. v. Baltimore,

Any question respecting the invalidity of the provisions of the West Virginia Constitution for the forfeiture of lands to the state for five years' neglect to pay taxes is too clearly foreclosed by prior decisions of the federal Supreme Court to serve as the basis of a writ of error to a Circuit Court. Fay v. Crozer, (1910) 217 U. S. 455, 30 S. Ct. 568, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 837.

A decree of a federal Circuit Court dismissing, for want of jurisdiction, a bill to quiet title, on the theory that either complainants' rights as mortgagee in possession had not been held by a decision of the highest state court, in a prior ejectment suit between the same parties, to have been destroyed by a subsequent state statute, and hence no constitutional question was involved, or that, if the state court so held, the remedy was by writ of error from the federal Supreme Court, will be affirmed on appeal, where the judgment of the state court, on a second appeal in the ejectment suit, and in a subsequent suit to quiet title, has been reversed by the federal Supreme Court for error in deciding the federal question involved. Bradley v. Lightcap, (1904) 195 U. S. 25, 24 S. Ct. 753, 40 U. S. (L. ed.) 76.

Vol. IV, p. 409, sec. 6.

The first part of this section (6), down to the provision for certifying questions or propositions of law to the Supreme Court, is substantially re-enacted in Judicial Code, sec. 128, ante, vol. 1 of this Supplement, title JUDICIARY, p. 195; the Judicial Code section, however, extending finality also to decisions in cases arising "under the copyright laws."

The next part of section 6, which provides for certification of questions or propositions of law to the Supreme Court and for action of the Supreme Court "thereupon," is re-enacted in Judicial Code, sec. 239, ante, vol. 1 of this Supplement, title JUDICIARY, p. 231.

The middle paragraph of section 6, which provides for certiorari from the Supreme Court, is substantially re-enacted in Judicial Code, sec. 240, ante, vol. 1 of this Supplement, title JUDICIARY, p. 232.

The first part of the final paragraph, providing for appeal or writ of error where the matter in controversy exceeds $1,000, is re-enacted in Judicial Code, sec. 241, ante, vol. 1 of this Supplement, title JUDICIARY, p. 232.

The last sentence in section 6, limiting the period of one year for an appeal or writ of error, was not imported into the Judicial Code, and doubtless remains in full force by virtue of the last paragraph in Judicial Code, sec. 297, ante, vol. 1 of this Supplement title, JUDICIARY, p. 251.

I. APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

Civil proceeding in a criminal case.—An order declaring a judgment of conviction in a criminal case—with a sentence to imprisonment and to pay a fine—abated by the death of the defendant after the entry of the judgment is an independent proceeding of a civil nature, and reviewable on writ of error by the Circuit Court of Appeals at the instance of the United States. U. S. v. Dunne, (1909) 173 Fed. 254, 97 C. C. A. 420, following U. S. v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 324, 90 C. C. A. 256.

Patent case.—Where a suit between citizens of the same state was for infringement of a patent, and was so tried and decided by the Circuit Court, the Circuit Court of Appeals had jurisdiction of an appeal therein, notwithstanding the fact that one of the defenses, upon which the case turned on appeal, depended upon the construction of a contract of license. Clancy v. Troy Belting, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 554.

A proceeding for naturalization under the Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3592, 34 Stat. L. 506, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 365, is not a "case" within the meaning of the text section, and there being no provision for direct review in the Naturalization Act a Circuit Court of Appeals is without jurisdiction to review the decision of a federal court in such a proceeding. Moreover, the admission of an alien to citizenship is a political and not a judicial act, and, having been vested by Congress in the courts to be exercised on proof "to the satisfaction of the court," its exercise is discretionary and not reviewable. U. S. v. Dolla, (1910) 177 Fed. 101, 100 C. C. A. 521.

False averment of constitutional question.—The Circuit Court of Appeals is not without jurisdiction of an appeal because the petition for removal of the suit from the state court to the federal court below alleged that the construction of the Federal Constitution was involved, if such was not the fact. Kansas City Northwestern R. Co. v. Zimmerman, (1908) 210 U. S. 336, 28 S. Ct. 730, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1084.

No jurisdictional amount.—Under this section the appellate jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of Appeals is without any pecuniary limitation. Kirby v. American Soda Fountain Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 141, 24 S. Ct. 619, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 911; The Joseph B. Thomas, (1906) 148 Fed. 762, 78 C. C. A. 428.

The provision of R. S. sec. 631, 4 Fed. Stat.

Annot. 251, limiting appeals from the District to the Circuit Court in equity and admiralty cases where the sum in dispute exceeds fifty dollars, is not applicable to appeals to the Circuit Court of Appeals. The Joseph B. Thomas, (1906) 148 Fed. 762, 78 C. C. A. 428.

II. FINAL DECISIONS.

Necessity of finality.—Where a decree does not grant or continue in force an injunction, and does not appoint a receiver, the Circuit Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction to review the decree unless it be a final decree. Odbert v. Marquet, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 44.

"The rule . . . for determining whether, for the purposes of an appeal, a decree is final, is, in brief, whether the decree disposes of the entire controversy between the parties." La Bourgogne, (1908) 210 U. S. 95, 28 S. Ct. 664, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 973.

A final decision "is one which completely adjudicates the rights of the parties to the suit, so that if it is affirmed the court below will have nothing to do but to execute the judgment or decree which evidences the decision it has already rendered. An order, judgment, or decree which does not have this effect—one which leaves the rights of the parties to the suit undetermined and subject to further adjudication—is not a final decision, and the Courts of Appeals have no jurisdiction to review it." Morgan v. Thompson, (1903) 124 Fed. 203, 59 C. C. A. 672.

A final decree "must so far terminate the litigation between the parties on the merits that in case of affirmance nothing would remain to be done but to execute the judgment or decree; and the reason for the rule is that thereby a multiplicity of appeals in the same case is prevented, and the case will not be heard by piecemeal." Scriven v. North, (C. C. A. 1904) 134 Fed. 366.

A writ of error operates only on a record in which a final judgment has been entered, and does not lie from an order in a personal injury action refusing plaintiff's application for leave to file an amended statement of claim; "in no sense does it, or can it, finally determine the cause." Stillwagon v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1908) 159 Fed. 97, 86 C. C. A. 287.

"An appeal does not lie from the order of the court below, denying the motion in a pending suit to permit a person to intervene and become a party thereto." Blaffer v. New Orleans Water Supply Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 389.

The Circuit Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction to review an interlocutory order refusing judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, although by the state statute such an order in the state court would be appealable. Shumaker v. Security L., etc., Co., (1908) 159 Fed. 112, 86 C. C. A. 302.

It was held that a judgment of the United States Court of Appeals in the Indian Territory which reversed the judgment of an inferior court, and remanded the case for further proceedings, in which the trial court might determine the rights of the parties, was not a final decision, and was not reviewable in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. Morgan v. Thompson, (1903) 124 Fed. 203, 59 C. C. A. 672.

Reference to master.—A decree which merely determines that complainants are entitled to recover damages from a defendant for fraudulent misrepresentations, and refers the matter to a special master to find and report such damages, is interlocutory and not appealable. Odbert v. Marquet, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 44.

A decree in proceedings in admiralty for limitation of liability, which grants such limitation, determines the questions of pending freight to be surrendered, and disallows all claims for loss of life, but refers all other claims to a commissioner to take testimony and report, cannot be regarded as final for the purpose of an appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals, especially where the court below and the parties have treated such decree as a mere interlocutory one. La Bourgogne, (1908) 210 U. S. 95, 28 S. Ct. 664, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 973.

A decree on a cross-bill, which orders complainants to pay to cross-complainants the amount due on certain notes, and directs that on default for a certain time a special master shall sell certain collateral to apply thereon, is a final appealable decree, since "no judicial action is required of the special master." Odbert v. Marquet, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 44.

Decree for accounting.—A decree in a patent infringement suit against a single defendant, which, in addition to granting an injunction as to the claims of the patent held to be infringed, and sending the cause to a master for an accounting, dismissed the bill as to the claims held invalid and those found not to be infringed, is not, as to such dismissal, a final decree from which complainant can appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Ex p. National Enameling, etc., Co., (1906) 201 U. S. 156, 26 S. Ct. 404, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 707.

Where a bill in a Circuit Court set up four distinct causes of action, one for infringement of a patent, one for infringement of a trademark, and two for unfair competition, a decree dismissing the bill as to the first three causes of action was held to be a "final decision" thereon, and appealable, although as to the fourth cause of action the bill was sustained and an accounting directed thereunder. Scriven v. North, (C. C. A. 1904) 134 Fed. 366.

Order to produce books and papers.—An order entered in an action to recover damages from a carrier for violation of the Interstate Commerce Act of Feb. 4, 1887, 24 Stat. L. 379, ch. 104, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 809, requiring certain specified officers and employees who are not parties to produce relevant books and papers, is not, as to those persons, a final judgment, and will not sustain a writ of error sued out by them from the Circuit Court of Appeals. Webster Coal, etc., Co. v. Cassatt, (1907) 207 U. S. 181, 28 S. Ct. 108, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 160; Pennsylvania Coal, etc., Co. v.

A judgment imposing a fine on a party for contempt for the violation of an injunction is a judgment in a criminal case, and if unconditional and absolute, so that nothing remains but to execute it, is final and reviewable by the Circuit Court of Appeals on a writ of error. Bullock Electric, etc., Co. v. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 105, 63 C. C. A. 607, certiorari denied 194 U. S. 636, 24 S. Ct. 859, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1160.

The Circuit Court of Appeals cannot, in advance of the final decree in the suit, review an order of a federal Circuit Court which adjudges the defendants in such suit guilty of contempt in disobeying an order for the production of certain books and papers for inspection for the benefit of the plaintiff, and imposes a fine or imprisonment in the event of failure to produce such books or papers by a specified date, since this is not a final order rendered in a proceeding criminal in its nature, but was intended to secure the rights of the party to the suit for whose benefit the original order was made. Doyle v. London Guarantee, etc., Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 599, 27 S. Ct. 313, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 641.

III. REVIEW BY CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS "IN ALL CASES OTHER THAN," ETC.

Contempt cases.—"The only right of review given to the Circuit Court of Appeals in contempt proceedings is derived from the Act giving that court such right in criminal cases. . . . Proceedings which are criminal in their nature and intended for the vindication of public justice, rather than the coercion of the opposite party to do some act for the benefit of another party to the action, are the only ones reviewable in the Circuit Court of Appeals under its power to take jurisdiction of and determine criminal cases." Doyle v. London Guarantee, etc., Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 599, 27 S. Ct. 313, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 641.

This clause gives the Circuit Court of Appeals jurisdiction of a writ of error to review a judgment finding a person not a party to the suit guilty of contempt in violating a restraining order and imposing a fine therefor, as it is a criminal proceeding. Bessette v. W. B. Conkey Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 324, 24 S. Ct. 665, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 997. To the same point, see Frankfort v. Deposit Bank, (1904) 127 Fed. 812, 62 C. C. A. 492, dismissing an appeal; In re Heinze, (1904) 127 Fed. 96, 62 C. C. A. 96; Bullock Electric, etc., Co. v. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 105, 63 C. C. A. 607.

Likewise reviewable by the Circuit Court of Appeals on writ of error is an order adjudging the defendant in a suit for the infringement of a patent guilty of contempt in disobeying a preliminary injunction, and ordering him to pay a fine, one-half to the United States and the other half to the complainant: the fine payable to the United States is clearly punitive, dominates the proceeding, and fixes its character. Matter of Christen- sen Engineering Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 458, 24 S. Ct. 729, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1072.

Method of review.—Writ of error, and not appeal, is the proper mode of reviewing a judgment or order of a federal court finding a person not a party to the suit guilty of contempt in violating a restraining order of that court and imposing a fine therefor. Bessette v. W. B. Conkey Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 324, 24 S. Ct. 665, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 997.

"It is no longer an open question that the proper method of reviewing judgments in criminal cases by this court is by writ of error and not by appeal." Sena v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 485, 78 C. C. A. 27.

A judgment at law in a federal court on a scire facias on a forfeited recognizance is reviewable by the Circuit Court of Appeals only on a writ of error, and not by appeal; and objection that review is sought by a writ of error cannot be waived by appearance, nor cured by amendment. Kerr v. U. S., (1907) 159 Fed. 428, 86 C. C. A. 408.

A suit in a federal court by an employee who has recovered a judgment for personal injury against his employer, to enforce payment of such judgment by an insurance company which issued a policy to the employer insuring it against liability on account of such injuries, the insolvency of the judgment defendant being alleged, is in equity, and the decree therein cannot be reviewed by the Circuit Court of Appeals on a writ of error. Thomson v. Travelers' Ins. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 867.

Review.—Where the record on a writ of error to review the decision of a District Court does not show a case within the jurisdiction of the latter, the Circuit Court of Appeals will notice the fact, although no jurisdictional question is raised by the parties. Yeandle v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1909) 169 Fed. 938, 95 C. C. A. 582.

A question of jurisdiction on the ground of diverse citizenship raised in the trial court can be brought by appeal or writ of error to the Circuit Court of Appeals along with other questions arising upon the trial of the merits of the case, and it will then be the duty of the Circuit Court of Appeals to decide the whole case, including the jurisdictional question, and its decision of that question as well as the others would be final, if jurisdiction rested on diverse citizenship, unless the Supreme Court should review it on certiorari. Boston, etc., R. Co. v. Gokey, (1908) 210 U. S. 155, 28 S. Ct. 657, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1002.

A Circuit Court of Appeals is bound to inquire, first, as to its own jurisdiction of a cause brought before it by appeal or writ of error, and, second, as to the jurisdiction of the court from which the record comes, even though the question is not raised by the parties. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Prunty, (1904) 133 Fed. 13, 66 C. C. A. 163; Utah-Nevada Co. v. De Lamar, (1904) 133 Fed. 113, 66 C. C. A. 179; C. C. Taft Co. v. Century Sav. Bank, (1905) 141 Fed. 369, 72 C. C. A. 671; Puget Sound Nav. Co. v. Laverdard, (1907) 156 Fed. 361, 84 C. C. A. 259.

strict Court, where it appears on the record on an appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals, cannot be ignored, but must be determined by that court in disposing of the appeal, although not made a ground of appeal. McGilvra v. Ross, (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 604, reversed, but not on this point, (1909) 215 U. S. 70, 30 S. Ct. 27, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 95.

It is the duty of the Circuit Court of Appeals, on an appeal from a decree in a suit removed from a state court, to determine whether the record exhibits a case properly removable, regardless of whether any objection was taken to the jurisdiction of the federal court either in the court below or on appeal. Fred Macey Co. v. Macey, (1905) 135 Fed. 725, 68 C. C. A. 363.

Disposition of case.—If a case at law in the District Court is tried by stipulation without a jury, contrary to the provisions of R. S. sec. 566, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 236, the judgment therein is not reviewable by the Circuit Court of Appeals. But it is appealable and the judgment will be affirmed, instead of dismissing the writ of error. U. S. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 306.

IV. "UNLESS OTHERWISE PROVIDED BY LAW."

"These words must be taken to refer to existing provisions, and not to be merely a futile permission to future legislatures to make a change. They do not save every existing provision, of course, or the Act would fail of its purpose. But they save some." Thus, the appeal required by the Act of June 22, 1860, 12 Stat. L. 85, 87, ch. 188, sec. 11, to be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States if the decree of the District Court in certain private land claim cases is against the United States, is "otherwise provided by law" within the meaning of the text section, and the Supreme Court, and not the Circuit Court of Appeals, has jurisdiction of such appeal. U. S. v. Dalcour, (1906) 203 U. S. 408, 27 S. Ct. 58, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 248.

V. WHEN DECISIONS OF CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS ARE FINAL.

See infra, p. 1360, division VIII. of this note.

The "jurisdiction" referred to in the phrase "cases in which the jurisdiction is dependent entirely," etc., is the jurisdiction of the federal court as originally invoked. MacFadden v. U. S., (1909) 213 U. S. 288, 29 S. Ct. 490, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 801.

As to the original jurisdiction of the federal District Court see Judicial Code, sec. 24, ante, vol. 1 of this Supplement, title JUDICIARY, p. 139.

"It is to be observed that the line of division between cases appealable directly to this court and those appealable to the Circuit Court of Appeals, made by section 5 of the Act, is based upon the nature of the case or of the questions of law raised. But the line of division between cases appealable from the Circuit Court of Appeals to this court and those not so appealable, drawn by section 6, is different, and is determined, not by the nature of the case or of the questions of law raised, but by the sources of jurisdiction of the trial court, . . . whether the jurisdiction rests upon the character of the parties or the nature of the case." MacFadden v. U. S., (1909) 213 U. S. 288, 29 S. Ct. 490, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 801.

Jurisdiction depending entirely on diverse citizenship, etc.—Jurisdiction below "is dependent entirely" upon diverse citizenship within the meaning of this section where that is the sole ground of jurisdiction disclosed by the complaint, although a federal question may have been raised at the trial. Bagley v. General Fire Extinguisher Co., (1909) 212 U. S. 477, 29 S. Ct. 341, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 605.

The jurisdiction of the federal court depended entirely upon diversity of citizenship where the cause was removed for prejudice or local influence from a state court. Cochran v. Montgomery County, (1905) 199 U. S. 260, 26 S. Ct. 58, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 182.

Jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court over a controversy between citizens of different states, claiming under grants from different states, depends entirely upon the diversity of citizenship, since that court has original jurisdiction over controversies of this character only when the parties are citizens of the same state. Stevenson v. Fain, (1904) 195 U. S. 165, 25 S. Ct. 6, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 142.

The mere assertion of title under a patent from the United States presents no federal question which, of itself, deprives the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals, in a petitory action for real property, of finality as dependent entirely upon diversity of citizenship. Bonin v. Gulf Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 115, 25 S. Ct. 608, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 970, dismissing a writ of error.

A suit against a railway company engaged in carrying the United States mails under the federal laws and postal regulations, to recover the value of a registered package alleged to have been lost through its negligence, does not arise under the Federal Constitution and laws so as to deprive the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals therein of finality as dependent entirely on diverse citizenship, where the plaintiff relied on principles of general law, and nowhere asserted a right which might be defeated or sustained by one or another construction of the Constitution or of any law of the United States. Bankers Mut. Casualty Co. v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., (1904) 192 U. S. 371, 24 S. Ct. 325, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 484, dismissing a writ of error.

An appeal from a Circuit Court of Appeals will not be dismissed on the ground that the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court was invoked solely on the grounds of diverse citizenship, where grounds of suit and relief were also based upon federal statutes which were necessary elements of the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals. Henningsen v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1908) 208 U. S. 404, 28 S. Ct. 389, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 547.

A decree of a Circuit Court of Appeals affirming a decree of dismissal rendered by a federal Circuit Court is not reviewable in the federal Supreme Court where, if the allegations which set up diversity of citizenship were stricken from the bill, the Circuit Court would have had no jurisdiction of the suit. Weir v. Roundtree, (1910) 216 U. S. 607, 30 S. Ct. 418.

Under criminal laws.—A judgment of a Circuit Court of Appeals in a case in which the jurisdiction of the District Court depended solely upon the fact that the case was one arising under the criminal laws is, by the very terms of this section, "final" and not reviewable in the federal Supreme Court on a writ of error, although constitutional questions were invoked by the accused, and the case might, therefore, have been brought directly from the District Court to the Supreme Court. MacFadden v. U. S., (1909) 213 U. S. 288, 2 S. Ct. 490, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 801.

VI. CERTIFYING QUESTIONS TO SUPREME COURT.

See also as to certification of questions under section 25*d* of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, ante, vol. 1 of this Supplement, title BANKRUPTCY, p. 641.

"I think such questions are to be encouraged as a mode of disposing of cases in the least cumbersome and most expeditious way." Per Mr. Justice Holmes in dissenting opinion in Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Williams, (1909) 214 U. S. 492, 29 S. Ct. 514, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 1058.

When questions will be certified.—See also cases cited under section 25*d* of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, ante, vol. 1, p. 641, of this Supplement.

"It is only in cases of grave doubt that questions should be certified to the Supreme Court. Fabre v. Cunard Steamship Co., (1892) 59 Fed. 500, 8 C. C. A. 199; The Horace B. Parker, (1896) 74 Fed. 640, 20 C. C. A. 572." Cella v. Brown, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 742.

Where the Circuit Court of Appeals, by reason of conflicting decisions, found itself unable to determine whether a provision of a state constitution rendering stockholders of a corporation individually liable to creditors for a sum equal to the amount of their stock in addition thereto was self-executing, and there was no decision of the Supreme Court of the state on the subject, the question was certified to the Supreme Court. Middletown Nat. Bank v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 127 Fed. 85.

Affirmances in the federal Supreme Court, upon equal division of opinion, of rulings of the Circuit Courts of Appeals against the legality of a tax, are not such authoritative determinations of the question as to preclude one of the latter courts, when called upon again to consider the question, and finding a decision of another Circuit Court of Appeals opposed, from certifying such question to the Supreme Court for determination. Hertz v. Woodman, (1910) 218 U. S. 205, 30 S. Ct. 621, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1001.

Following are the cases in which questions were certified, except those cited in the foregoing part of this note:

Hills v. Hoover, (1911) 220 U. S. 329, 31 S. Ct. 402, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 485, construction of Copyright Acts.

In re Harris, (1911) 221 U. S. 274, 31 S. Ct. 557, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 732, as to self-crimination in bankruptcy proceedings.

Hallowell v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 317, 31 S. Ct. 587, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 750, as to whether an Indian citizen may be convicted for introducing liquor into his allotment.

Kuhn v. Fairmont Coal Co., (1910) 215 U. S. 349, 30 S. Ct. 140, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 228, as to obligation of federal court to follow state decision.

Moxley v. Hertz, (1910) 216 U. S. 344, 30 S. Ct. 305, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 510, as to rate of taxation of colored oleomargarine.

Hertz v. Woodman, (1910) 218 U. S. 205, 30 S. Ct. 621, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1001, whether legacy exempt from federal inheritance tax.

The Eugene F. Moran v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., (1909) 212 U. S. 466, 29 S. Ct. 339, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 600, as to division of damages in collision cases.

Jahn v. The Folmina, (1909) 212 U. S. 354, 15 Ann. Cas. 748, 29 S. Ct. 363, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 546, as to liability of carrier by water for damages to cargo.

Hepner v. U. S., (1909) 213 U. S. 103, 16 Ann. Cas. 960, 29 S. Ct. 474, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 720, as to whether the trial court may direct a verdict for the government in action to recover statutory penalty.

Delaware, etc., Co. v. Albany, etc., R. Co., (1909) 213 U. S. 435, 29 S. Ct. 540, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 862, as to the requirements of equity rule 94.

Polk v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Assoc., (1907) 207 U. S. 310, 28 S. Ct. 65, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 222, constitutional questions as to contract obligations and due process of law.

U. S. v. A. Graf Distilling Co., (1908) 208 U. S. 198, 28 S. Ct. 264, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 452, construction of revenue law as to forfeiture of colored whiskey.

Loewe v. Lawlor, (1908) 208 U. S. 274, 13 Ann. Cas. 815, 28 S. Ct. 301, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 488, construction of Anti-Trust Act of 1890.

Guy v. Donald, (1906) 203 U. S. 399, 27 S. Ct. 63, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 245, as to liability of members of a pilot association for negligence of each other.

Doyle v. London Guarantee, etc., Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 599, 27 S. Ct. 313, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 641, as to jurisdiction of Circuit Court of Appeals to review an order in contempt proceedings.

Mason City, etc., R. Co. v. Boynton, (1907) 204 U. S. 570, 27 S. Ct. 321, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 629, as to whether the landowner in condemnation proceedings is the defendant for the purpose of removal of a cause from a state court.

Quinlan v. Green County, (1907) 205 U. S. 410, 27 S. Ct. 505, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 860, as to rights of a bona fide purchaser of county bonds for value before maturity.

Kesaler v. Eldred, (1907) 206 U. S. 285, 27

S. Ct. 611, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1065, in respect of the right of a successful defendant in a patent infringement suit to have the complainant enjoined from suing defendant's customers.

Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Thompson, (1906) 200 U. S. 206, 4 Ann. Cas. 1147, 26 S. Ct. 161, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 441, question of separable controversy authorizing removal.

St. Louis Dressed Beef, etc., Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co., (1906) 201 U. S. 173, 26 S. Ct. 400, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 712, recovery on employers' liability insurance.

Thomas v. Ohio State University, (1904) 195 U. S. 207, 25 S. Ct. 24, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 160, sufficiency of jurisdictional averments as to diverse citizenship.

Bradford v. Southern R. Co., (1904) 195 U. S. 243, 25 S. Ct. 55, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 178, as to whether a writ of error from the Circuit Court of Appeals can be prosecuted in forma pauperis.

Union Stock Yards Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 217, 2 Ann. Cas. 525, 25 S. Ct. 226, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 453, negligence, contribution among wrongdoers.

Sigafus v. Porter, (C. C. A. 1898) 84 Fed. 430, 85 Fed. 689, as to measure of damages, certified "in view of the recent opinion in" a case in the Supreme Court, and "apparent conflict of authorities."

Sun Printing, etc., Assoc. v. Edwards, (1903) 121 Fed. 826, 58 C. C. A. 162, question of jurisdiction of Circuit Court.

After a decision in the case a question will not be certified. Certification at that stage would be impertinent and unlawful, since there could then be no desire for instructions for a "proper decision" in the language of the statute. Dickinson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 808, where the court said: "We have refused to certify under circumstances like those at bar; and our refusal so to do seems justified and perhaps required, by the expressions in Columbus Watch Co. v.

"Questions should not be certified after the case has been decided. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Pope, (1896) 74 Fed. 1, 20 C. C. A. 253; Andrews v. National Foundry, etc., Works, (1897) 77 Fed. 774, 23 C. C. A. 454." Cella v. Brown, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 742. The remedy at that stage is by petition to the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari, as was pointed out in Andrews v. National Foundry, etc., Works, (C. C. A. 1897) 77 Fed. 774. As to petition for certiorari, see infra, VII., this note.

But a judgment may be vacated and a question then certified, as was done, according to Mr. Justice Gray's statement, in Wall v. Cox, (1901) 181 U. S. 244, 246, 21 S. Ct. 642, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 845. In German Ins. Co. v. Hearne, (C. C. A. 1902) 118 Fed. 134, there was a motion for certificate after judgment and the court said: "If the motion is to be treated as an application to rehear the cases, and, pending the rehearing, if this should be granted, to certify a question or proposition to the Supreme Court, we are equally without authority to grant such a request, because we cannot truthfully declare that the question or proposition of law that underlies the judgments recently entered in this court, but is believed by the defendant in error to have been wrongly decided, is a question or proposition concerning which we desire the instruction of the Supreme Court in order that we may properly determine it. The Circuit Court of Appeals was unanimous in its opinion, and none of the judges who then constituted the court considered then, or now considers, that the point in controversy was so doubtful that instruction thereon should be asked from the ultimate tribunal. Of course, our conclusion may have been erroneous, but, so long as we believe in its soundness, we cannot properly give the certificate required by the Act. Columbus Watch Co. v. Robbins, (1893) 148 U. S. 266, 13 S. Ct. 594, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 445." See also Andrews v. National Foundry, etc., Works, (C. C. A. 1897) 77 Fed. 774.

One or more questions out of many arising in the case may be certified, the court meanwhile deciding the questions upon which it desires no instructions and placing its opinion on file, "and, when instructions are received as to the question certified, the cause will be finally disposed of." Sigafus v. Porter, (C. C. A. 1898) 84 Fed. 430. See also the statement preceding the opinion of the court in The Delaware, (1896) 161 U. S. 459, 16 S. Ct. 516, 40 U. S. (L. ed.) 771.

Certifying the entire case.—This cannot be done, even if the case be divided into several points. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1909) 215 U. S. 216, 30 S. Ct. 86, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 164; Southern Pac. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1909) 215 U. S. 226, 30 S. Ct. 89, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 169; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Williams, (1909) 214 U. S. 492, 29 S. Ct. 514, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 1058, where Mr. Justice Holmes, dissenting with two other justices, said: "It is no objection to a question of law that the case turns upon it. That is the best of reasons for propounding it. The only objection is not to deciding the case here, but to putting questions that turn upon conclusions from evidence, or that present a general statement and ask a judgment with regard to unspecified questions of law."

A "case" or "judgment" cannot be certified, but only "questions," etc., as expressed in the statute. German Ins. Co. v. Hearne, (C. C. A. 1902) 118 Fed. 134.

The questions must present distinct points or propositions of law, and not require the Supreme Court to search the entire record and in effect determine whether the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed or reversed. Felsenheld v. U. S., (1902) 186 U. S. 126, 22 S. Ct. 740, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 1085.

"So far as the second question is concerned, it does not propound a distinct issue of law, but, in effect, calls for a decision of the whole case, and therefore need not be answered. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Williams, (1907) 205 U. S. 444, 27 S. Ct. 559, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 875, 878, and cases cited." Jahn v. The Folmina, (1909) 212 U. S. 354, 15 Ann. Cas. 748, 29 S. Ct. 363, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 546.

"Upon this state of facts can plaintiffs maintain an action against defendants under section 7 of the Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890?" was the question certified in Loewe v. Lawlor, (1908) 208 U. S. 274, 13 Ann. Cas. 815, 28 S. Ct. 301, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 488. Before hearing on the certificate a certiorari was granted to bring up the whole record, and the case was decided thereon.

In Hallowell v. U. S., (1908) 209 U. S. 101, 28 S. Ct. 498, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 702, where the certificate was "dismissed because not in conformity to the statute," the court said: "The certificate in the present case is objectionable upon the ground that it does not set forth propositions of law, clearly stated, which may be answered without reference to all the facts, but mixed questions of law and fact which require us to construe various Acts of Congress, and, in the light of all the testimony in the case, determine whether the accused could be held guilty of any offense legally punishable by the United States. It is as if the court were asked what, upon the whole case as sent up, should have been the verdict and judgment in the trial court."

"The present certificate brings to us a question of mixed law and fact; and, substantially, all the circumstances connected with the issue to be determined. It does not present a distinct point of law, clearly stated, which can be decided without passing upon the weight or effect of all the evidence out of which the question arises." Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Williams, (1907) 205 U. S. 444, 27 S. Ct. 559, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 875, dismissing the certificate.

Separate points.—A question containing "more than a single question or proposition of law" was, for that reason, not answered in Quinlan v. Green County, (1907) 205 U. S. 410, 27 S. Ct. 505, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 800.

A petition for certification of a question seems to be a proper proceeding if the court does not act of its own motion. See Cella v. Brown, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 742; Dickinson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 808.

But in Andrews v. National Foundry, etc., Works, (C. C. A. 1897) 77 Fed. 774, the court said questions are certified "only upon our own motion," citing Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Pope, (1896) 74 Fed. 1, 20 C. C. A. 253.

And in Cella v. Brown, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 742, the court said, quoting from Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Pope, 74 Fed. 1: "Whether a question should be certified rests within the discretion of the court, but it is not a discretion the exercise of which may be invoked by a party as of right. The certification is for the instruction of the court upon doubtful questions; and while in cases of magnitude and upon intricate and doubtful questions of law the court upon the argument may perhaps properly indulge the suggestion of counsel of the desirability of the advice and instruction of the Supreme Court, we are compelled to say that this formal motion is not conformable to correct practice. . . . It may be that upon the argument of the cause upon its merits some question may be raised which, upon consultation, the judges may deem proper to certify. . . . We must decline at this time to entertain the motion, or to recognize the right of a party to challenge our judgment upon the propriety of so doing in advance of the argument of the case upon its merits."

Form and frame of certificate.—See also cases cited under section 25d of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, ante, vol. 1, p. 641, of this Supplement.

Supreme Court rule 37 provides that "where . . . a Circuit Court of Appeals shall certify to this court a question or proposition of law concerning which it desires the instruction of this court for its proper decision, the certificate shall contain a proper statement of the facts on which such question or proposition of law arises." The phraseology of this clause "indicates that it is the fundamental facts that are to be stated, not the evidential facts from which the fundamental facts are found." Sigafus v. Porter, (C. C. A. 1898) 85 Fed. 689.

In American Land Co. v. Zeiss, (1911) 219 U. S. 47, 31 S. Ct. 200, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 82, where the certificate is quoted, it was held sufficient, considered as a whole, as against the objections: "First, because the certificate on its face indicates that the court below was not in a state of mind which required the instruction of this court, but was merely desirous of provoking a direct decision by this court, to avoid the delay and the public inconvenience which otherwise might result. Second, because the certificate is so broad as simply to refer the whole case to this court for decision, instead of presenting definite propositions of law for solution."

In a case where the court answered questions to some extent, it alluded to other "matters about which we do not feel disposed to express an opinion under the very general and indefinite questions certified." Wilkes

County v. Coler, (1901) 180 U. S. 506, 21 S. Ct. 458, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 642.

In Wilkes County v. Coler, (1901) 180 U. S. 506, 21 S. Ct. 458, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 642, the court considered a point, although it was "not specifically embraced in either of the certified questions," because of its close connection with a question certified.

In New England R. Co. v. Conroy, (1899) 175 U. S. 323, 20 S. Ct. 85, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 181, where the certificate is set forth, "it may be doubted whether the questions of law presented to us are really raised by the facts as certified," said the court. "However, waiving these suggestions," the court proceeded to answer.

Certificates dismissed as insufficient are quoted in Columbus Watch Co. v. Robbins, (1893) 148 U. S. 266, 13 S. Ct. 594, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 445; Cross v. Evans, (1897) 167 U. S. 60, 17 S. Ct. 733, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 77; Hallowell v. U. S., (1908) 209 U. S. 101, 28 S. Ct. 498, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 702; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Williams, (1909) 214 U. S. 492, 29 S. Ct. 514, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 1058, (1907) 205 U. S. 444, 27 S. Ct. 559, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 875.

Questions not answered because objectionable in form are quoted in McHenry v. Alford, (1898) 168 U. S. 651, 18 S. Ct. 242, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 614; Del Monte Min., etc., Co. v. Last Chance Min., etc., Co., (1898) 171 U. S. 55, 18 S. Ct. 895, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 72; Quinlan v. Green County, (1907) 205 U. S. 410, 27 S. Ct. 505, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 860.

Certificates pronounced defective in part are quoted in full in Warner v. New Orleans, (1897) 167 U. S. 467, 17 S. Ct. 892, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 239; Emsheimer v. New Orleans, (1902) 186 U. S. 33, 22 S. Ct. 770, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 1042.

Other certificates quoted.—In nearly all the cases cited in this note, at least a part of the certificate is quoted. In the following it is quoted in full or substantially in full: De La Vergne Refrigerating Mach. Co. v. Featherstone, (1893) 147 U. S. 209, 13 S. Ct. 283, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 138; New Orleans v. Graf Distilling Co., (1908) 208 U. S. 198, 28 S. Ct. 265, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 452; Delaware, etc., Co. v. Albany, etc., R. Co., (1909) 213 U. S. 435, 29 S. Ct. 540, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 862; Hills v. Hoover, (1911) 220 U. S. 329, 31 S. Ct. 402, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 485; Hallowell v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 317, 31 S. Ct. 587, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 750.

"The form of this certificate has been criticised, but we think it sufficiently states both the question and the desire of that court for the instruction of this court that it may make a proper decision. It conforms in substance with the statute, and finds precedence in a number of instances in matter of form." Hertz v. Woodman, (1910) 218 U. S. 205, 30 S. Ct. 621, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1001, citing as cases containing such precedents, U. S. v. Pridgeon, (1894) 153 U. S. 48, 14 S. Ct. 746, 38 U. S. (L. ed.) 631; Helwig v. U. S., (1903) 188 U. S. 605, 23 S. Ct. 427, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 614, and U. S. v. Ju Toy, (1905) 198 U. S. 253, 25 S. Ct. 644, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1040.

Amendment of certificate.—The certificate was amended at the suggestion of both parties, and by order of the Circuit Court of Appeals, before transmission to the Supreme Court, in Barber v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., (1897) 166 U. S. 83, 17 S. Ct. 488, 41 U. S. (L. ed.) 925. A motion to amend by incorporating specified parts of the evidence, etc., was denied in Sigafus v. Porter, (C. C. A. 1898) 85 Fed. 689, as "we find no fundamental fact in the proposed amendment not already included in our statement."

A fact deemed material by the parties and in the record, but not stated in the certificate, may be stipulated into it upon the argument in the Supreme Court as in Pennsylvania Lumbermen's Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Meyer, (1905) 197 U. S. 407, 25 S. Ct. 483, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 810.

Facts stated in certificate as constituting law of the case.—Where facts have been found and stated to the Supreme Court as the basis for asking its instructions, the Circuit Court of Appeals will not, after such instructions have been obtained, re-examine upon the identical evidence already considered controverted questions of fact which have been advisedly determined. The Folmina, (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 615, the court saying, however: "We do not now determine whether in a case where it clearly appears that a statement of fact accompanying a question certified to the Supreme Court was made through mistake or inadvertence, or in a case where new evidence has been received subsequently to the making of such statement, this court would have power to change the facts so found after the Supreme Court has answered the question, and render its decision upon the basis of the altered facts."

Recertification of questions.—In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Williams, (1907) 205 U. S. 444, 27 S. Ct. 559, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 875, a certificate was dismissed without answer because of its imperfect form; whereupon another certificate was sent up and dismissed because it was still imperfect (three justices dissenting).

A certificate was dismissed for informality in Hallowell v. U. S., (1908) 209 U. S. 101, 28 S. Ct. 498, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 702, but again sent up in satisfactory form in Hallowell v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 317, 31 S. Ct. 587, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 750.

There seems to have been an abortive certification prior to the final one in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Clark, (1894) 153 U. S. 252, 14 S. Ct. 809, 38 U. S. (L. ed.) 706.

Answer to questions.—Questions propounded must be answered in reference to the actual case and in view of the facts stated. Hills v. Hoover, (1911) 220 U. S. 329, 31 S. Ct. 402, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 485.

"Whole record and cause" brought up—Certiorari.—As far as appears in the reported cases, certiorari is invariably used for the purpose of requiring the whole record and cause to be sent up under this section.

In The Delaware, (1896) 161 U. S. 459, 16 S. Ct. 516, 40 U. S. (L. ed.) 771, a collision case involving construction of the Harter Act, the Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed a decree of the District Court in part and certified to the Supreme Court certain questions remaining, and the certificate was docketed as a separate cause. The appellant thereupon applied for and was granted a writ of certiorari to bring up the whole record.

In Loewe v. Lawlor, (1908) 208 U. S. 274, 13 Ann. Cas. 815, 28 S. Ct. 301, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 488, "after the case on certificate had been docketed here, plaintiffs in error applied, and defendants in error joined in the application, to this court to require the whole record and cause to be sent up for its consideration. The application was granted," etc.

In Brunswick Terminal Co. v. Baltimore Nat. Bank, (1904) 192 U. S. 386, 24 S. Ct. 314, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 491, the Circuit Court of Appeals certified certain questions, and "after full argument on the merits this court required the whole record and cause to be sent up for consideration." See also U. S. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1904) 193 U. S. 1, 24 S. Ct. 330, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 593.

The application for certiorari will be denied if it is evident that the Circuit Court of Appeals did not have jurisdiction of the case. Good Shot v. U. S., (1900) 179 U. S. 87, 21 S. Ct. 33, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 101.

Supreme Court Rule 37 provides that when a question is certified, "if application is thereupon made to this court that the whole record and cause may be sent up to it for its consideration, the party making such application shall, as a part thereof, furnish this court with a certified copy of the whole of said record."

Cases where the whole record was brought up under this section are as follows:

Sigafus v. Porter, (1900) 179 U. S. 116, 21 S. Ct. 34, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 113, damages for deceit, two justices dissenting; certiorari issued after the case was argued and submitted on the certificate;

Bedford v. Eastern Bldg., etc., Assoc., (1901) 181 U. S. 227, 21 S. Ct. 597, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 834, building and loan associations;

Hopkins v. U. S., (1898) 171 U. S. 578, 19 S. Ct. 40, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 290, and Anderson v. U. S., (1898) 171 U. S. 604, 19 S. Ct. 50, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 300, construction of Anti-trust Act of 1890;

U. S. v. Ranlett, (1898) 172 U. S. 133, 19 S. Ct. 114, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 393, as to free and dutiable goods;

Shaw v. Kellogg, (1898) 170 U. S. 312, 18 S. Ct. 632, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 1050, public lands, mineral grants;

Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Walker, (1893) 148 U. S. 391, 13 S. Ct. 650, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 494, "argument having been had upon the certificate, we directed a certiorari to issue," etc.

Humbird v. Avery, (1904) 195 U. S. 480, 25 S. Ct. 123, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 286, where, after the questions were presented to the Supreme Court on certificate, "the United States was allowed to intervene upon the general ground that the case involved important questions affecting the administration of the public land laws, including the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company then in process of adjustment, and on motion of the government, the plaintiffs and defendants concurring, the whole record was ordered to be sent up for our consideration."

VII. REVIEW BY SUPREME COURT ON CERTIORARI.

General authority to issue writs of certiorari in bankruptcy cases is granted in section 25d of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, ante, title BANKRUPTCY, p. 641 of this Supplement, where numerous cases are cited.

For certiorari to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia see Judicial Code, sec. 251, ante, p. 236 of this Supplement, and the Acts to which the note thereto refers.

For the general power to issue writs of certiorari, see R. S. sec. 716, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 498, and section 12 of the Circuit Court of Appeals Act of 1891, ch. 517, 26 Stat. L. 829, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 430, which are now embodied in Judicial Code, sec. 262, ante, p. 241 of this Supplement.

Object of the statute. — "In order to guard against any injurious results which might flow from having nine appellate courts, acting independently of each other, power was given to this court to bring before it for decision by certiorari any case pending in either of those courts. In that way it was believed that uniformity of ruling might be secured, as well as the disposition of cases whose gravity and importance rendered the action of the tribunal of last resort peculiarly desirable." Warner v. New Orleans, (1897) 167 U. S. 467, 17 S. Ct. 893, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 239.

The power of the Supreme Court to issue writs of certiorari is not limited to the provision in this section; it may be issued in other cases under U. S. R. S. sec. 716, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 498, now Judicial Code, sec. 262, ante, p. 241 of this Supplement. McClellan v. Carland, (1910) 217 U. S. 268, 30 S. Ct. 501, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 762.

The certiorari provided for by this section is "in the nature of an appeal or writ of error for the mere correction of error—a new use of the writ. . . . Certiorari cannot be independently used to supply the place of a writ of error for the mere correction of error." And since the government cannot have a writ of error to review a judgment reversing a conviction in any criminal case, it cannot have a writ of certiorari for that purpose. U. S. v. Dickinson, (1909) 213 U. S. 92, 29 S. Ct. 485, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 711.

The Supreme Court has power to issue the writ of certiorari to review a case pending in the Circuit Court of Appeals on an appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court entered pursuant to the mandate of the Circuit Court of Appeals on a prior appeal. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Wabash R. Co., (1910) 217 U. S. 247, 30 S. Ct. 510, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 752.

The Circuit Court of Appeals stayed its mandate in order to enable the party against whom it had rendered judgment to make application to the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari, as stated in In re Woods, (1892) 143 U. S. 202, 12 S. Ct. 417, 36 U. S. (L. ed.) 125.

If the Circuit Court of Appeals refuses to certify a question under the preceding provision of this section, the Supreme Court may nevertheless grant a writ of certiorari to determine that question as in Lau Ow Bew, Petitioner, (1891) 141 U. S. 583, 12 S. Ct. 43, 35 U. S. (L. ed.) 868.

A jurisdictional amount in dispute for the purpose of appeal is not necessary to authorize granting the writ of certiorari. Whitney v. Dick, (1906) 202 U. S. 132, 26 S. Ct. 584, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 963.

No limit of time for application for certiorari is fixed by statute. "While we think such application should be made with reasonable promptness . . . we do not think the party complaining is limited to the six months allowed . . . for suing out a writ of error from the Court of Appeals to review the judgment of the District or Circuit Court; and it would seem that he is, by analogy, entitled to the year within which . . . an appeal shall be taken or writ of error sued out from this court to review judgments or decrees of the Court of Appeals in cases where the losing party is entitled to such review." The Conqueror, (1897) 166 U. S. 110, 17 S. Ct. 510, 41 U. S. (L. ed.) 937.

Upon dismissing, for want of jurisdiction, a writ of error to the Circuit Court of Appeals the Supreme Court, without discussion, denied a writ of certiorari, the judgment sought to be reviewed having been entered May 22, 1902, the writ of error allowed May 22, 1903, the cause docketed June 1, 1903, and the petition for certiorari filed Feb. 17, 1905. Bonin v. Gulf Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 115, 25 S. Ct. 608, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 970.

At what stage of the case. — "We have declined to issue writs of certiorari in cases where, there being only a matter of private interest, there had been no final judgment in the Court of Appeals. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Osborne, (1892) 146 U. S. 354, 13 S. Ct. 281, 36 U. S. (L. ed.) 1002." Forsyth v. Hammond, (1897) 166 U. S. 506, 17 S. Ct. 665, 41 U. S. (L. ed.) 1095.

A writ of certiorari was denied where the cause was pending undecided, under peculiar circumstances, in the Circuit Court of Appeals, in Columbus Constr. Co. v. Crane Co., (1899) 174 U. S. 600, 603, 803, 19 S. Ct. 721, 884, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 1102.

The lack of finality in a decree reversing an order of a Circuit Court granting a preliminary injunction will not prevent a review in the Supreme Court on certiorari, where the record presented the whole case to the Circuit Court of Appeals so that it might properly have been finally disposed of in terms by its decree. Harriman v. Northern Securities Co., (1905) 197 U. S. 244, 25 S. Ct. 493, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 739.

"In Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co., (1898) 171 U. S. 138, 18 S. Ct. 808, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 108, an appeal was taken to this court and also to the Circuit Court of Appeals, and a motion was made in each court to dismiss the appeal, whereupon, by reason of the circumstances, we granted a writ of certiorari, and brought up the record from the latter court before it had proceeded to decree. The question as to which was the correct route to reach this court became immaterial, and we disposed of the case on its merits." Union, etc., Bank v. Memphis, (1903) 189 U. S. 71, 23 S. Ct. 604, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 712.

After questions have been certified by the Circuit Court of Appeals (see supra, p. 1343, VI.) and answers certified back to that court which thereupon proceeds to final judgment, a writ of certiorari may then be granted to review the judgment, as in Wilkes County v. Coler, (1903) 190 U. S. 107, 23 S. Ct. 738, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 971.

On motion to dismiss appeal or writ of error. — Certiorari is frequently granted on motion made after motion filed to dismiss an appeal or writ of error, and to avoid consuming time to consider questions as to the proper method of appellate review. In White-Smith Music Pub. Co. v. Apollo Co., (1908) 209 U. S. 1, 28 S. Ct. 319, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 655, there was a motion made to dismiss appeals, and a petition for a writ of certiorari was filed by the appellant. The writ was granted, "the record on the appeals to stand as a return to the writ," citing for that practice Montana Min. Co. v. St. Louis Min., etc., Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 204, 27 S. Ct. 254, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 444. For other instances of the same procedure and order as to the return, see O'Farrell v. O'Brien, (1905) 199 U. S. 89, 25 S. Ct. 727, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 101; Cochran v. Montgomery County, (1905) 199 U. S. 260, 26 S. Ct. 58, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 182; Whitney v. Dick, (1906) 202 U. S. 132, 26 S. Ct. 584, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 963; Baglin v. Cusenier Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 580, 31 S. Ct. 669, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 863. See also Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co., (1898) 171 U. S. 138, 18 S. Ct. 808, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 108. In Security Trust Co. v. Deat, (1902) 187 U. S. 237, 23 S. Ct. 61, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 158, the court remarked that the case was brought up by a writ of error, and then said: "We think the proper course was to have asked for a writ of certiorari to bring the final judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals here for review. However, under the powers possessed by us under the Judiciary Act of March 3, 1891, we now allow a writ of certiorari, and direct that the copy of the record heretofore filed under the writ of error shall be taken and deemed as a sufficient return to the certiorari."

Upon motion to dismiss an appeal for want of jurisdiction the appellant applied for a writ of certiorari, and the appeal being subsequently dismissed, the court granted the certiorari and at the same time proceeded to dispose of the case on the merits. O'Farrell v. O'Brien, (1905) 199 U. S. 89, 25 S. Ct. 727, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 101.

After dismissal of a writ of error by the Supreme Court for want of jurisdiction a writ of certiorari was awarded in Willis v. Eastern Trust, etc., Co., (1898) 169 U. S. 295, 18 S. Ct. 347, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 752.

Certiorari and writ of error.—"This case was brought here on certiorari, and also on writ of error, and will be determined on the merits, without discussing the question of jurisdiction as between the one writ and the other. Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co., (1898) 171 U. S. 138, 18 S. Ct. 808, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 108." Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., (1904) 196 U. S. 1, 25 S. Ct. 158, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 363.

A writ and a cross writ of certiorari are sometimes granted and the case heard thereon. The Victory, (1897) 168 U. S. 410, 18 S. Ct. 149, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 519; The Albert Dumois, (1900) 177 U. S. 240, 20 S. Ct. 595, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 751; U. S. Rubber Co. v. American Oak Leather Co., (1901) 181 U. S. 434, 21 S. Ct. 670, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 938; Kokomo Fence Mach. Co. v. Kitzelman, (1903) 189 U. S. 8, 23 S. Ct. 521, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 689; Fidelity, etc., Co. v. L. Bucki, etc., Lumber Co., (1903) 189 U. S. 135, 23 S. Ct. 582, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 744; Howe Scale Co. v. Wyckoff, (1905) 198 U. S. 118, 25 S. Ct. 609, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 972; La Bourgogne, (1908) 210 U. S. 95, 28 S. Ct. 664, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 973; Baglin v. Cusenier Co., (1911)

Successive writs of certiorari are sometimes granted (perhaps specially favored) to review on the later writs proceedings that have taken place after remand on the prior writs, as in Guarantee Co. of North America v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank, etc., Co., (1902) 183 U. S. 402, 22 S. Ct. 124, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 253; The Conemaugh, (1903) 189 U. S. 363, 23 S. Ct. 504, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 854; Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Co. v. Jones, (1904) 193 U. S. 532, 24 S. Ct. 676, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 778; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hill, (1904) 193 U. S. 551, 24 S. Ct. 538, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 788; Erie R. Co. v. Erie, etc., Transp. Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 220, 27 S. Ct. 247, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 450.

When such power will be exercised.—"The writ of certiorari authorized by the Act of 1891, and prayed for in this case, being in the nature of a writ of error to bring up for review the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals, the question whether the writ should be granted rests in the discretion of this court." American Constr. Co. v. Jacksonville, etc., R. Co., (1893) 148 U. S. 372, 13 S. Ct. 758, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 486.

The Supreme Court "ordinarily refuses a petition for certiorari in the early stages of a case." Burget v. Robinson, (1903) 123 Fed. 262, 267, 59 C. C. A. 260, 265.

In St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Wabash R. Co., (1910) 217 U. S. 247, 30 S. Ct. 510, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 752, a petition for a writ of certiorari was granted, because "both the private interests of the railroad companies and of the separate industries and the greater interests of the public call for the granting of the writ."

In McMullen v. Hoffman, (1899) 174 U. S. 639, 19 S. Ct. 839, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 1117, where certiorari was granted, the Supreme Court said: "There is a difference of opinion in the courts below [in this case] as to the law applicable to the case. The question is one of importance, involving as it does the principles which should control in regard to the procurement of contracts at public lettings for work to be awarded to the lowest bidder. Assuming the same facts, the courts below have come to opposite conclusions upon the character of the contract, and upon the right of the complainant to obtain redress for his alleged wrongs. It was on account of the general importance of the question, and the many lettings for public works by the government and by municipal corporations which are affected by the law relative to bidding, that this court thought it a proper case to issue the writ of certiorari herein. The cases upon the subject are not entirely harmonious, and we think it well to again consider some of them, and, so far as possible, to remove the doubts which seemingly have arisen in this branch of the law."

It is not a sufficient ground for granting the writ that the judgment thereon may effect a different result in the court below, but not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Smith v. Vulcan Iron Works, (1897) 165 U. S. 518, 17 S. Ct. 407, 41 U. S. (L. ed.) 810.

"Pure questions of fact depending on conflicting evidence and on the peculiar circumstances of the case; upon which, had they been the only questions presented by the record, a writ of certiorari would not have been granted," said the court in Crossman v. Burrill, (1900) 179 U. S. 100, 21 S. Ct. 38, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 106.

Table of certiorari cases.—See also cases cited at the end of division VI., supra, this note; certiorari in bankruptcy cases, vol. 1 of this Supplement, p. 643; certiorari to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, under the Act of March 3, 1897, ch. 390, 29 Stat. L. 692, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 466, annotated infra, this title. With the exception of the foregoing the following table of cases, where determinations were made on writs of certiorari, is believed to be complete, with expressed or inferred grounds for granting the writ.

Cases or questions of importance.—Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1911) 220 U. S. 559, 31 S. Ct. 612, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 582, construing the Safety Appliance Act of Congress under the circumstances and because of the importance of the questions raised.

Bean v. Morris, (1911) 221 U. S. 485, 31 S. Ct. 703, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 821, enjoining diversion of water of interstate stream; the case "suggested questions that might be grave."

U. S. v. Dickinson, (1909) 213 U. S. 92, 29 S. Ct. 485, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 711, a criminal case, because of the urgency of the government as to the importance of the particular decision, and division of opinion in the Circuit Court of Appeals.

White-Smith Music Pub. Co. v. Apollo Co., (1908) 209 U. S. 1, 28 S. Ct. 319, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 655, it being "evident that the question involved . . . is one of very considerable importance, involving large property interests and closely touching the rights of composers and music publishers."

Ex p. Young, (1908) 209 U. S. 123, 28 S. Ct. 441, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 714, a suit in effect against a state, and of very great importance "not only to the parties now before the court, but also to the great mass of the citizens of this country."

Montana Min. Co. v. St. Louis Min., etc., Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 204, 213, 27 S. Ct. 254, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 444, protracted litigation, large amount involved, questions of federal mining law, and "importance of the case seems to demand our examination."

Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1904) 195 U. S. 540, 25 S. Ct. 133, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 312, construction of Act of Congress the main issue in the case, and (per Harlan, J.) "in view of the importance of these cases."

Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., (1904) 196 U. S. 1, 25 S. Ct. 158, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 363, personal injury action, involving construction of Automatic Coupler Act of Congress of 1893, questions deemed of such general importance, etc., and division of opinion in court below.

Gregg v. Metropolitan Trust Co., (1905) 197 U. S. 193, 25 S. Ct. 415, 49 U. S. (L. ed.)

721, railroad mortgage foreclosure, preference for supplies, three justices dissenting, and (per McKenna, J.) "importance of the questions involved."

Workman v. New York, (1900) 179 U. S. 552, 21 S. Ct. 212, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 314, "serious question" in maritime law, four justices dissenting.

Louisville Trust Co. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1899) 174 U. S. 674, 19 S. Ct. 827, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 1130, railroad foreclosure with receivership, questions said to be novel and important and one justice dissenting.

Division of opinion in Circuit Court of Appeals in the same case. Delk v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 580, 31 S. Ct. 617, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 590, construing Safety Appliance Act of Congress;

Applicant for the writ.—A vice-consul of Russia was granted a writ of certiorari to review a judgment affirming an order discharging a Russian seaman who had been arrested for desertion from a Russian cruiser. Tucker v. Alexandroff, (1902) 183 U. S. 424, 22 S. Ct. 195, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 264.

The provision in Judicial Code, sec. 240, ante, title JUDICIARY, vol. 1, of this Supplement, p. 232, that the Supreme Court may issue certiorari "upon the petition of any party thereto" is new legislation as to the quoted clause, but probably merely declaratory of the pre-existing practice.

In Whitfield v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., (1907) 205 U. S. 489, 27 S. Ct. 578, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 895, it appears that the writ of certiorari was granted upon the application of the plaintiff in the court below and of a state on relation of its attorney-general, the question presented being the validity of a provision in a life insurance policy in view of the state statute.

Petition for writ, notice, record.—See instructions by clerk of Supreme Court “as to applications for writs of certiorari under Act of March 3, 1891,” which follow rule 39 in current publications of Supreme Court rules, and are printed in 210 U. S. 503, 29 S. Ct. xxiii.

A rule to show cause was granted upon presentation of a petition for a writ of certiorari in Smith v. Vulcan Iron Works, (1897) 165 U. S. 518, 17 S. Ct. 407, 41 U. S. (L. ed.) 810.

In In re Woods, (1892) 143 U. S. 202, 12 S. Ct. 417, 36 U. S. (L. ed.) 125, the application for certiorari was made upon notice, and accompanied by a certified copy of the entire record of the case, in compliance with the rule.

Supreme Court rule 37, 210 U. S. 501, 29 S. Ct. xxii., requires that on application for a writ of certiorari “a certified copy of the entire record of the case in the Circuit Court of Appeals shall be furnished to this court by the applicant as part of the application.” A printed copy of the transcript of record from a Circuit Court, which was printed under the supervision, direction, and control of the clerk of the Circuit Court of Appeals, under and pursuant to the rules of that court, may be used without being reproduced in manuscript by the clerk, in furnishing a certified copy of the record of the case as required by the rule above quoted. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Continental Trust Co., (1900) 176 U. S. 219, 20 S. Ct. 383, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 442.

Where a writ of certiorari is granted on a single petition for several cases which were considered below on one record, and it is conceded that the differences in the cases are unsubstantial, one record may suffice in the Supreme Court, as in Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., (1908) 209 U. S. 56, 28 S. Ct. 428, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 681.

On petition for certiorari or mandamus to review a decision dismissing a writ of error for want of jurisdiction, where the record was before the Supreme Court on the return to a rule to show cause, and full argument had been had, the writ of certiorari was issued, and the return to the rule was allowed to stand as a return to the writ. American Sugar Refining Co. v. New Orleans, (1901) 181 U. S. 277, 21 S. Ct. 646, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 859.

Effect of denial of the writ.—Where an application to the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari, presenting the identical issues which were determined by the Circuit Court of Appeals, has been summarily denied, it must be assumed that the Supreme Court has impliedly passed on such issues, unless in some way the fact is disclosed that it did not do so, and the Circuit Court of Appeals is precluded from proceeding anew on the same subject-matter by entertaining a petition for a rehearing. Burget v. Robinson, (1903) 123 Fed. 262, 59 C. C. A. 260.

Hearing and examination, determination, mandate.—“On writ of certiorari we can dispose of all questions arising on the record.” Donovan v. Pennsylvania Co., (1905) 199 U. S. 279, 26 S. Ct. 91, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 192. Especially is this true where the case is heard on a writ and a cross-writ of certiorari. La Bourgogne, (1908) 210 U. S. 95, 28 S. Ct. 664, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 973.

When the writ has been granted, and the record certified in obedience to it, the questions arising upon the record must be determined according to fixed rules of law. American Constr. Co. v. Jacksonville, etc., R. Co., (1893) 148 U. S. 372, 13 S. Ct. 758, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 486.

“The defendant’s counsel has not confined his argument to the questions presented by the record. It seems expedient, therefore, simply to determine the questions deemed to arise on the record, and stop there.” Green County v. Quinlan, (1909) 211 U. S. 582, 29 S. Ct. 162, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 335.

“We must take the case as it is presented here upon the stipulated return to the writ of certiorari on the record as presented to the Circuit Court of Appeals.” McClellan v. Carland, (1910) 217 U. S. 268, 30 S. Ct. 501, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 762.

Where, aside from errors pointed out in the petition for the writ, counsel suggested certain difficulties before a final decree, which were not disposed of in the opinion or decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals, the Supreme Court did not “feel under any obligation to do more than to hold that we find no error in the decree.” Omaha v. Omaha Water Co., (1910) 218 U. S. 180, 30 S. Ct. 615, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 991.

Judgment of reversal on certiorari is not necessarily an adjudication of any other than the questions in terms discussed and decided, and on a second certiorari to review a subsequent judgment below in the same case, all questions which appear upon the record and have not already been decided are open for consideration. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hill, (1904) 193 U. S. 551, 24 S. Ct. 538, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 788.

The scope of review will not be broadened so as to include, in addition to the questions which the petitioner has properly raised, technical questions tending to embarrass the progress and delay the final ending of an action, the merits of which are with the respondents. Green County v. Thomas, (1909) 211 U. S. 598, 29 S. Ct. 168, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 343.

An objection to the sufficiency of an indictment will not be considered on certiorari, although the grounds of demurrer and the general language of the exception taken on the trial are broad enough to embrace such objection, where the conduct of counsel for the accused in the courts below is wholly inconsistent with any intention to rely upon such objection, and the point was not referred to in the petition for a writ of certiorari, or in the brief submitted in support of that petition. Great Northern R. Co. v. U. S., (1908) 208 U. S. 452, 28 S. Ct. 313, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 567.

Whether or not the inventions covered by the claims of the patent in suit were exhibited in an expired foreign patent will not be considered on certiorari to review an order granting a preliminary injunction, where the question is largely one of fact, and pertains rather to the evidence than to a construction of the patents. Leeds, etc., Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., (1909) 213 U. S. 325, 29 S. Ct. 495, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 816.

A writ of certiorari was dismissed after argument without passing on the merits where the action of the court below was neither from its character nor importance within the scope of the grant of power to review by certiorari. U. S. v. Rimer, (1911) 220 U. S. 547, 31 S. Ct. 596, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 578.

Concurrent findings of fact by two courts below will not ordinarily be disturbed. Workman v. New York, (1900) 179 U. S. 552, 21 S. Ct. 212, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 314; International Nav. Co. v. Farr, etc., Mfg. Co., (1901) 181 U. S. 218, 21 S. Ct. 590, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 830; Schwartz v. Duss, (1902) 187 U. S. 8, 23 S. Ct. 4, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 53; The Iroquois, (1904) 194 U. S. 240, 24 S. Ct. 640, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 955; The Germanic, (1905) 196 U. S. 589, 25 S. Ct. 317, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 610; The Wilderoft, (1906) 201 U. S. 378, 26 S. Ct. 467, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 794; La Bourgogne, (1908) 210 U. S. 95, 28 S. Ct. 664, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 973; Continental Paper Bag Co. v. Eastern Paper Bag Co., (1908) 210 U. S. 405, 28 S. Ct. 748, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1122 (a patent case).

On certiorari the Supreme Court will finally dispose of the case by its direction to the Circuit Court, and thus do what the Circuit Court of Appeals might have done, where the latter court had before it a record presenting the whole case, but did nothing more than to reverse the decree of the Circuit Court granting a preliminary injunction. Harriman v. Northern Securities Co., (1905) 197 U. S. 244, 25 S. Ct. 493, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 739.

In a case where the Circuit Court of Appeals had rendered a judgment on the merits, but declined to decide a question of the jurisdiction of the court below which was presented, for want of power to decide it, the Supreme Court, holding that the Circuit Court of Appeals had power to decide it, proceeded to decide the question in favor of the jurisdiction and then affirmed the judgment on the merits, instead of reversing and sending the case back to have the question of jurisdiction decided. Boston, etc., R. Co. v. Gokey, (1908) 210 U. S. 155, 28 S. Ct. 657, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1002.

Upon certiorari to review a decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals dismissing a writ of error for want of jurisdiction, the Supreme Court held that the decision was erroneous and thereupon proceeded to determine the case upon the merits. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Phinney, (1900) 178 U. S. 327, 20 S. Ct. 906, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 1088.

If by the respondent's fault the record is not as favorable to him as the actual facts might have justified, lest any injustice be done upon reversal the remand may be with liberty to take such further proceedings, etc., as in Mueller v. Nugent, (1902) 184 U. S. 1, 22 S. Ct. 269, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 405.

As a general rule, to avoid circuitry, the mandate of the Supreme Court will go directly to the court from which the Circuit Court of Appeals took the case. But where the only reason for issuing the certiorari was the failure of the Circuit Court of Appeals to consider the case before it, the case was remanded to the latter court with instructions to hear and decide it. Lutcher, etc., Lumber Co. v. Knight, (1910) 217 U. S. 257, 30 S. Ct. 505, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 757.

VIII. REVIEW BY SUPREME COURT IN CASES NOT MADE FINAL.

See supra, p. 1342, division V. of this note.

"There shall be of right" etc.—If, in the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals, its judgment is not reviewable by the Supreme Court under this section, it will deny an application for a writ of error, as, for instance, in Weber v. Kentucky Grand Lodge, (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 839.

Alleged constitutional question.—Appellants cannot invoke the supposed presence of a constitutional question in a cause as a ground for an appeal from the Circuit Court of Appeals, where, if any such question was disposed of by the decree, it was decided in their favor. Empire State-Idaho Min., etc., Co. v. Hanley, (1905) 198 U. S. 292, 25 S. Ct. 691, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1056.

Where the alienage of complainants and the citizenship of defendants was alleged in a bill, but a constitutional question was also alleged, it was held on appeal from the Circuit Court of Appeals that the mere averment of a constitutional question is not sufficient, where the question sought to be presented is so wanting in merit as to cause it to be frivolous or without any support whatever in reason; and the appeal was dismissed as coming within that rule. O'Callaghan v. O'Brien, (1905) 199 U. S. 89, 25 S. Ct. 727, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 101.

A question as to the full faith and credit to be given judgments of another state is not disclosed so as to permit a review of a decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals under this section, where the complaint in which such judgments are mentioned seems to refer to them primarily, if not solely, as fixing the amount of the plaintiff's claim. Bagley v. General Fire Extinguisher Co., (1909) 212 U. S. 477, 29 S. Ct. 341, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 605.

A complaint invoking full faith and credit for judgments of another state does not present a case arising under the Federal Constitution so as to permit a review in the Supreme Court of a judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals, where the defendant was not a party to the judgments, and, if bound by them, is so bound, not by their own operation, but by an estoppel arising out of the contract relations between the parties and notice to defend the suits in which the judgments were rendered, the ground of the decision of the courts below being that there was no such estoppel, the decision turning wholly on the construction of the contract as excluding a liability over in the event that happened. Bagley v. General Fire Extinguisher Co., (1909) 212 U. S. 477, 29 S. Ct. 341, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 605.

An allegation by a party claiming an interest in a mining claim by virtue of a purchase from an administrator under a decree of the probate court, that a subsequent decree of that court annulling the prior decree was invalid for want of jurisdiction to render it at a subsequent term, for want of notice and for lack of evidence, does not amount to an assertion that he was deprived of his interest by the court without due process of law, which would support the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court irrespective of diverse citizenship, and therefore permit an appeal to the Supreme Court, under this section, from a decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals in the cause. Empire State-Idaho Min., etc., Co. v. Hanley, (1905) 198 U. S. 292, 25 S. Ct. 691, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1056.

Constitutional question abandoned.—In a suit between citizens of different states to enforce judgment liens against land, a city was made a defendant, the plaintiff claiming that the land was being taken under paving taxes without due process of law, in violation of the Constitution. Defendants denied that the taxes affected plaintiffs' rights. On a showing of the amount of taxes due, plaintiffs' tender of that amount was received, but afterward returned. On decree for plaintiffs defendants appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals, where the decree was affirmed on being amended to allow the paving taxes by allowing the city the taxes tendered. Defendants having failed to prosecute their appeal from this judgment, it was dismissed by the Supreme Court. It was held that the constitutional question was abandoned, making final the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals on a second appeal. Huff v. Bidwell, (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 374.

Trademark cases.—The issue of unfair competition must be regarded as open for consideration by the federal Supreme Court, on an appeal from the Circuit Court of Appeals, where there was both diversity of citizenship and the assertion of a valid trademark to give jurisdiction to the Circuit Court, in view of the statutory description in this section of cases in which the decrees of the Circuit Court of Appeals "shall be final" and in view of the provision in this section giving the Supreme Court jurisdiction "in all cases not . . . made final." Standard Paint Co. v. Trinidad Asphalt Mfg. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 446, 31 S. Ct. 456, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 536, where the court said: "In all other cases there is a right of review by this court if there is the statutory amount involved. The case at bar is within the letter of the statute. The opposite parties to the suit are citizens of different states, and while this diversity of citizenship was not necessary to give the Circuit Court jurisdiction of the case in so far as it involved the validity of the trademark, it was necessary to give the court jurisdiction of the issue of unfair competition. If the latter had stood alone, its decision would have been final in the Court of Appeals, and this court would have had no jurisdiction to review its decision, and there is some objection on principle, notwithstanding the union of the charge of unfair competition with the claim of a trademark, to our taking jurisdiction, but such, we think, is the effect of the statute. MacFadden v. U. S., (1909) 213 U. S. 288, 29 S. Ct. 490, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 801; Spreckels Sugar Refining Co. v. McClain, (1904) 192 U. S. 397, 24 S. Ct. 376, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 496."

But in a trademark case where there is no diversity of citizenship and the suit is brought under section 17 of the Act of Feb. 20, 1905, 33 Stat. L. 724, 728, 729, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 408, at p. 414, certiorari is the exclusive remedy for a review by the Supreme Court of a decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals. Hutchinson v. Loewy, (1910) 217 U. S. 457, 30 S. Ct. 613, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 838, dismissing an appeal.

Value of matter in controversy.—It was remarked in McClellan v. Carland, (1910) 217 U. S. 268, 30 S. Ct. 501, 503, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 762, that in a judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals denying an original petition for mandamus to a judge of the Circuit Court, "there is no amount in controversy, and consequently there could be no appeal to this court."

The want of any money value in controversy precludes an appeal to the Supreme Court from an order of a Circuit Court of Appeals, discharging, on a writ of certiorari, a person convicted of introducing intoxicating liquors into an Indian reservation, and sentenced to fine and imprisonment. Whitney v. Dick, (1906) 202 U. S. 132, 26 S. Ct. 584, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 963.

Waiver of right of review.—If a party defeated in the federal Circuit Court might have carried the case direct to the Supreme Court on the ground of a constitutional question involved, but carried it to the Circuit Court of Appeals as a case in which federal jurisdiction was dependent upon diversity of citizenship, the judgment of the latter court therein is not reviewable on writ of error by the Supreme Court. Weber v. Kentucky Grand Lodge, (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 839, denying an application for a writ of error.

Vol. IV, p. 422, sec. 7.

This section as amended by the Act of April 14, 1906, ch. 1627, 34 Stat. L. 116, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 291 (also annotated at the corresponding place, infra, this title), is again amended and superseded by the Judicial Code, sec. 129, ante, p. 195, of this Supplement.

The purpose of Congress in this legislation has been to enlarge and not to restrict the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of Appeals with respect to interlocutory injunctions. J. P. Jorgenson Co. v. Rapp, (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 732.

It was not intended to give to patent or other cases in which interlocutory decrees or orders were made any precedence. It is generally true that it is of importance to litigants that their cases be disposed of promptly, but other cases have the same right to early hearing. And the purpose of Congress in this legislation was that there be an immediate review of the interlocutory proceedings, and not an advancement generally over other litigation. Ex p. National Enameling, etc., Co., (1906) 201 U. S. 156, 28 S. Ct. 404, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 707.

This section and section 507 of the Alaska Code, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 148, are in accord and should be read in pari materia. In re McKenzie, (1901) 180 U. S. 536, 548, 21 S. Ct. 468, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 657; J. P. Jorgenson Co. v. Rapp, (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 732.

Cross appeal by complainant.—This section does not authorize a cross appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals by complainants from a decree in a patent infringement suit, which, in addition to granting an injunction, as to the claims of the patent held to be infringed, and sending the cause to a master for an accounting, dismissed the bill as to the claims held invalid and those found not to be infringed. Ex p. National Enameling, etc., Co., (1906) 201 U. S. 156, 28 S. Ct. 404, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 707, holding the case not to be within the scope of Smith v. Vulcan Iron Works, (1897) 165 U. S. 518, 17 S. Ct. 407, 41 U. S. (L. ed.) 810.

"Upon a hearing in equity."—The phrase does not mean the trial of an equity cause on the merits, the right of appeal being given from an "interlocutory" order or decree, which means one entered pending the cause and before final hearing on the merits, and disposing of some intervening matter relating to the cause. Taylor v. Breese, (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 678.

"An injunction."—A preliminary restraining order granting temporarily the relief prayed for by the bill and requiring the defendants to show cause why it should not be made permanent is an appealable error granting an "injunction" within the meaning of this section. Taylor v. Breese, (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 678.

Interlocutory order or decree.—A decree on the merits, finding infringement of a patent, awarding a permanent injunction, and directing a reference to ascertain damages and profits, although not a preliminary injunction intended to operate only until a hearing upon the merits, is nevertheless an "interlocutory decree" and appealable, inasmuch as the decree is not final in an appealable sense. Star Brass Works v. General Electric Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 102, 63 C. C. A. 604.

Interlocutory injunction in bankruptcy.—An interlocutory decree of the District Court, exercising jurisdiction as a court of bankruptcy, awarding an injunction, is appealable under this section. O'Dell v. Boyden, (C. C. A. 1906) 150 Fed. 731.

An interlocutory decree denying an injunction is not appealable under this section. Scriven v. North, (C. C. A. 1904) 134 Fed. 366.

Order denying or dissolving or refusing to dissolve injunction.—"It has frequently been decided that an order refusing to dissolve a preliminary injunction cannot be construed as an order continuing an injunction, so as to bring the case within the operation of section 7." Pioneer Lace Mfg. Co. v. Dodd, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 688, dismissing an appeal. To the same point see Lewis v. Hitchman Coal, etc., Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 549, 100 C. C. A. 137.

Since an order dissolving an injunction is not appealable under the section as it now reads, where a temporary injunction was dissolved on a demurrer to the bill being sustained, the plaintiff was not entitled to an appeal from so much of the order only as dissolved the injunction. Frye v. Carstens, (C. C. A. 1904) 130 Fed. 766.

In a cause in which an appeal from a final decree may be taken.—An appeal would not lie from an interlocutory decree awarding an injunction under this section in a case in which an appeal would not lie to the Circuit Court of Appeals from a final decree. O'Dell v. Boyden, (C. C. A. 1906) 150 Fed. 731, dismissing an appeal for that reason; Harris v. Rosenberger, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 449, certiorari denied 203 U. S. 591, 27 S. Ct. 778, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 331, where the appeal was entertained as not open to that objection. But the objection is removed by the amendment in the Act of April 14, 1906, ch. 1627, 34 Stat. L. 116, 1906 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 291.

Time of taking an appeal.—Prior to the enactment of this section and while the statute did not, as it now does, allow an appeal from an interlocutory order refusing to dissolve an injunction, it was held that the thirty days for appeal from an interlocutory order granting an injunction began to run from the entry of an order denying a motion to dissolve the injunction. Pioneer Lace Mfg. Co. v. Dodd, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 688, dismissing an appeal as too late.

Supersedeas.—See In re McKenzie, (1901) 180 U. S. 536, 21 S. Ct. 468, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 657, cited in note to section 507 of the Alaska Code, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 148, ante, p. 433 of this Supplement.

The power to grant a supersedeas is discretionary. Such discretion, however, should be cautiously exercised, and only where it is manifest that there are extraordinary reasons to justify it. Timolat v. Philadelphia Pneumatic Tool Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 903.

Power of Circuit Court to vacate supersedeas.—Where an appeal has been taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals from an interlocutory decree granting an injunction to restrain the infringement of a patent, and the Circuit Court has accepted an appeal bond and made it a supersedeas, such court has no power, after the appeal has been perfected, to suspend the operation of such bond and vacate the stay prior to the receipt of a mandate from the appellate court. Shelby Steel Tube

Co. v. Delaware Seamless Tube Co., (1908) 161 Fed. 798, where Archbald, J., said: "There is but little light thrown upon this question by the decided cases. . . . The case which comes nearest to justifying the present motion [to vacate the stay] is Timolat v. Philadelphia Pneumatic Tool Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 903, where a previous order granting a supersedeas was vacated on motion, the court deeming it advisable to retain the injunction in force while the appeal was pending, after having at first suspended it. But this action, like that in Black v. Zacherie, (1845) 3 How. 483, 11 U. S. (L. ed.) 690, was evidently taken while the case was still in the grasp of the court, or at least was so regarded, which may account for its authority not being questioned."

"Precedence in the appellate court" does not mean that the rules of the court with reference to the filing of briefs are to be ignored. Precedence is given by advancing the cause upon the calendar over other cases not advanced, so that it may be called when ripe for hearing under the rules, or earlier if counsel shall choose to expedite the preparation of the cause, or upon a special order made by the court for special reasons of exigency made to appear. Star Brass Works v. General Electric Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 102, 63 C. C. A. 604.

Review of case on the merits.—It is well settled that on an appeal from an interlocutory order the court has power to hear the whole case and dispose of it. Chapman v. Yellow Poplar Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 201.

The only questions which arise under the special or limited appeal from an interlocutory decree granting a preliminary injunction are those which are necessarily involved by the allowance of the injunction pendente lite. If the court below had jurisdiction and did not unreasonably exercise its discretion in the granting of an injunction to preserve the status until a final hearing, the Circuit Court of Appeals will not ordinarily go into the merits of the case any farther than necessary to determine this question. Owensboro v. Cumberland Telephone, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 739.

Injunctions in patent cases.—Where an interlocutory decree in a suit for infringement of a patent adjudges the patent valid and infringed, awards an injunction, and directs an accounting, an appeal may be taken from the whole of such decree, and the Circuit Court of Appeals has authority to consider and decide the case on the merits, not only with respect to the patent infringement of which was enjoined, but also as to another, infringement of which was charged but not determined by the lower court, and may render or direct a final decree dismissing the bill as to both. Highland Glass Co. v. Schmertz Wire

Glass Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 944, 102 C. C. A. 316.

Where the record on appeal from an interlocutory order granting a preliminary injunction restraining the infringement of a patent contains sufficient evidence to enable the Circuit Court of Appeals to determine that the patent is invalid or that for other reasons the bill cannot be maintained, such court may order its dismissal. Such power will only be exercised, however, in plain cases. Co-operating Merchants' Co. v. Hallock, (C. C. A. 1904) 128 Fed. 596.

Discretionary power of court on review.—Where a preliminary injunction has been granted on a sworn bill, which presents grave questions of law, to prevent immediate and certain injury to the moving party, and it appears that no injury will result therefrom to the defendant which cannot be provided against by a bond, the appellate court on an appeal from the order will not consider questions going to the merits of the bill, which should be raised by proper pleadings and first presented to the trial court. Lehman v. Graham, (1905) 135 Fed. 39, 67 C. C. A. 513.

Appeal presenting only moot question.—An appeal from an injunctive order requiring a postmaster to deliver to complainants all mail matter addressed to them received at his office between certain dates and to pay all money orders contained therein will not be entertained, where by reason of a full compliance with said order by appellant by delivering such mail and paying the orders the opinion of the appellate court will be on a purely moot question and it would be powerless to execute any decree it might render in appellant's favor. Meyers v. Cheesman, (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 783, dismissing the appeal.

Where an appeal has been taken from an interlocutory decree for an injunction in a patent infringement suit, and it appeared that no hearing of the appeal could be had until after the expiration of the patent, the court said: "It is therefore exceedingly doubtful whether the Circuit Court of Appeals will then listen to the appeal, the right of injunction having expired by operation of law." Timolat v. Philadelphia Pneumatic Tool Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 903,  citing National Folding Box, etc., Co. v. Robertson, (1900) 104 Fed. 552, 44 C. C. A. 29; Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Nassau Electric R. Co., (1902) 119 Fed. 354, 56 C. C. A. 96, and two other cases cited in 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 427.

Effect of neglect to appeal.—A failure to appeal from an appealable interlocutory order dissolving an injunction does not deprive the complainant of the right to a review of other matters determined by the order, not relating to the injunction, on an appeal from a final decree. Chapman v. Yellow Poplar Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 201.

Vol. IV, p. 428, sec. 10.

Certiorari by Supreme Court after remand.—The provision that in a case coming from a Circuit Court of Appeals "the cause shall be remanded to the proper District or Circuit Court" is not inconsistent with the power of the Supreme Court to issue a certiorari in a case that was an original proceeding in mandamus in the Circuit Court of Appeals. McClellan v. Carland, (1910) 217 U. S. 268, 30 S. Ct. 501, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 762.

Mandate on certiorari.—When the Supreme Court, on certiorari, reverses a decision of a Circuit Court of Appeals the mandate will, under some circumstances, go to the Circuit Court of Appeals instead of to the trial court. Lutcher, etc., v. Lumber Co. v. Knight, (1910) 217 U. S. 257, 30 S. Ct. 505, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 757.

Amendments.—Where a Circuit Court was without jurisdiction of a cause because of the absence from the complaint of necessary jurisdictional allegations, the Circuit Court of Appeals, in reversing the judgment therein for that reason, may properly remand the cause and direct that plaintiff be permitted to amend the complaint in that respect, especially where the question of jurisdiction was not raised in the trial court. Puget Sound Nav. Co. v. Lavendar, (1907) 156 Fed.

361, 84 C. C. A. 259. See also Eaton v. Hoge, (C. C. A. 1905) 141 Fed. 64, 5 Ann. Cas. 487.

But a Circuit Court of Appeals is without power to dismiss an appeal on motion of the appellant and remand the case to the court below with directions to permit the amendment of a pleading on a showing that facts were inadvertently omitted therefrom, the omission not being known to appellant until after the appeal was taken, and with directions for further proceedings. Strand v. Griffith, (1905) 135 Fed. 739, 68 C. C. A. 377.

Proceeding in court below after remand.—The judge of the Circuit Court cannot open the case when it is remanded. He cannot in any way modify the judgment of the higher court. He has no judicial function to exercise in the matter. He cannot exercise any discretion. All that can be done is to execute the judgment of the appellate court, and this is merely a ministerial act. Moore v. Chattanooga Electric R. Co., (1908) 119 Tenn. 710, 109 S. W. 497.

Vol. IV, p. 428, sec. 11.

Time for review.—It is settled doctrine that the Circuit Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction, where more than six months intervene between the day of judgment and the day on which the appeal is "taken" or the writ of error is "sued out." Blaffer v. New Orleans Water Supply Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 389, 87 C. C. A. 341, dismissing an appeal because more than eight months intervened between the final decree and the allowance of the appeal.

When the last day of the six months limited for appeal is Sunday it is not excluded, and an appeal cannot be taken on the next day. Meyer v. Hot Springs Imp. Co., (1909) 169 Fed. 628, 95 C. C. A. 156.

Where, although an appeal was allowed within the six months limited by the statute, no citation was issued to the persons who procured the order appealed from, and the record was not filed within the time required by rule 16 of the Circuit Court of Appeals (90 Fed. clix, 31 C. C. A. clix), nor until a year after the appeal was allowed, the court had no power then to award a citation, and, by a nunc pro tunc order, allow the appeal to stand as of the date when the record was filed. Hudson v. Limestone Natural Gas Co., (1906) 144 Fed. 952, 75 C. C. A. 678.

The limitation of time for appeal applies to suits on claims against the United States brought in the Circuit Court under the Tucker Act of March 3, 1887, ch. 359, 24 Stat. L. 505, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 82, and the court has no power to allow an appeal therein by the United States after the expiration of six months from the entry of the decree. Butt v. U. S., (1904) 126 Fed. 794.

A writ of error is not "brought," to use the verbiage of R. S. sec. 1008, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 622, within the legal meaning of the term until the writ is actually filed or lodged with the clerk of the court which rendered the judgment sought to be reviewed. Old Nick Williams Co. v. U. S., (1910) 215 U. S. 541, 30 S. Ct. 221, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 318. Kentucky Coal, etc., Co. v. Howes, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 163, dismissing a writ of error because it was not thus brought within six months, and also holding that while a motion for a new trial, having been seasonably entered, prevents the judgment from becoming final until disposed of, the allowance of a bill of exceptions does not have that effect.

An agreement between the parties extending the time within which to sue out a writ of error is ineffectual for that purpose. Clark v. Doerr, (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 960, dismissing a writ of error.

The Circuit Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction to review a judgment on a writ of error not issued until more than six months after the entry of the judgment, notwithstanding it may have been allowed within that time. Rutan v. Johnson, (1904) 130 Fed. 109, 64 C. C. A. 443.

Delay in filing the bill of exceptions, due to judicial engagements of the trial judge, is no excuse for the failure to sue out a writ of error within the six months, although an assignment of errors should accompany the petition for the writ of error, since such assignment may be formulated without the previous settlement of the bill of exceptions, and, besides, is not a jurisdictional requirement. Old Nick Williams Co. v. U. S., (1910) 215 U. S. 541, 30 S. Ct. 221, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 318, affirming a dismissal of a writ of error.

The sentence beginning, "And all provisions of law now in force," operated to continue the then existing method by which appeals and writs of error were taken from the Circuit Courts to the Supreme Court and make it applicable to the Circuit Courts of Appeals. So stated by the committee on revising in note to Judicial Code, sec. 250, ante, p. 235 of this Supplement.

It adopts as in full force, and applicable to an appeal in a bankruptcy case, R. S. secs. 698, 750, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 446, 556, as to what the transcript shall contain on appeal "in causes in equity." In re A. L. Robertshaw Mfg. Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 220.

The provision also makes applicable to the Circuit Court of Appeals, R. S. sec. 701, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 458, so that in order to authorize a Circuit Court to issue execution for costs awarded by the Circuit Court of Appeals on a writ of error, the mandate from the latter court should contain a special provision directing the same. American Trust, etc., Bank v. Zeigler Coal Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 512.

By virtue of the same provision, in connection with other sections of federal statutes, a Circuit Court of Appeals has ample power, on reversal of the judgment in a criminal case because of the imposition of an excessive sentence, to correct the error without disturbing the conviction, by remanding the case, with instructions to modify the judgment by remitting the excess. Hanley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1903) 123 Fed. 849.

Allowance of amendments.—Under this section and R. S. sec. 1005, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 617, the Circuit Court of Appeals is justified in allowing an amendment to correct a writ of error which, owing to the illness of counsel, does not set forth accurately the parties plaintiff, and in denying a motion to dismiss the writ, founded upon such mistake. Green County v. Thomas, (1909) 211 U. S. 598, 29 S. Ct. 168, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 343.

Vol. IV, p. 430, sec. 12.

This section is superseded by Judicial Code, sec. 262, ante, title JUDICIARY, vol. 1, p. 241, of this Supplement.

As to the power of other federal courts to issue writs, see R. S. sec. 716, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 498, and the corresponding page, infra, this title.

Mandamus to require a federal Circuit Court to proceed with and determine a pending suit which it has stayed to await the commencement and prosecution to final judgment of a suit in a state court may be issued by a Circuit Court of Appeals as in aid of its appellate jurisdiction. McClellan v. Carland, (1910) 217 U. S. 268, 30 S. Ct. 501, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 762.

A Circuit Court of Appeals has jurisdiction to issue a writ of mandamus in the exercise of and in aid of its appellate jurisdiction, and its power to issue the writ is not confined to cases where the appellate jurisdiction has been actually invoked by an appeal or a writ of error. Thus, in Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Morris, (1904) 132 Fed. 945, 66 C. C. A. 55, appeals from the allowance by the city council of Duluth of the claims of a citizen of West Virginia were taken by the city to the District Court of St. Louis county, Minn., and the charter of the city prohibited its officers from paying the claims pending the appeals except upon the order of that court. Thereupon the petitioner sued the city upon its claims in the federal court. The judge who was holding that court stayed all proceedings in the case pending in it until the final determination of the appeals in the state court. It was held that this was error, remediless otherwise than by the writ of mandamus, and accordingly the writ was granted commanding the judge holding the Circuit Court to vacate the stay, and to proceed with all convenient speed to try and adjudicate the controversy and to enforce the judgment upon it.

Certiorari.—The Circuit Court of Appeals has no authority to issue a writ of certiorari as an original and independent proceeding to review a conviction in a federal court, where the only question in the case is whether the punishment of the offense charged was within the jurisdiction of the federal courts, and the case was put in proper condition for a review on writ of error. Whitney v. Dick, (1906) 202 U. S. 132, 26 S. Ct. 584, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 963.

The Circuit Court of Appeals has power to issue writs of certiorari only in aid of its appellate jurisdiction, and cannot issue such a writ to review an order of a Circuit Court which is not appealable. U. S. v. Circuit Ct., (1903) 126 Fed. 169, 61 C. C. A. 315.

Prohibition.—A Circuit Court of Appeals has no power to issue a writ of prohibition as an original or independent proceeding, but only in aid of its own jurisdiction, which is wholly appellate, and, except in cases of petitions for review in bankruptcy proceedings, can only be invoked by an appeal or writ of error. Nor can it issue such writ as ancillary to a contemplated appeal or writ of error. Zell v. Judges, (C. C. A. 1906) 149 Fed. 86.

Habeas corpus.—A Circuit Court of Appeals cannot issue a writ of habeas corpus as an original and independent proceeding. Whitney v. Dick, (1906) 202 U. S. 132, 26 S. Ct. 584, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 963, where, however, the court said: "Cases may arise in which the writ of habeas corpus is necessary to the complete exercise of the appellate jurisdiction vested in the Circuit Court of Appeals. But it is unnecessary to speculate under what circumstances such an exigency may exist."

It has previously been held in Ex p. Moran, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 594, that the power of the Circuit Courts of Appeals to issue writs of habeas corpus is a part of their appellate jurisdiction, which is distinct and separate from their power to review by writs of error or appeal, and that it extends to cases of imprisonment by the judgments or orders of inferior courts within their respective territorial appellate jurisdictions when the final judgments or the orders in the specific cases are not reviewable in those courts by writs of error or by appeals, as well as to the cases in which they are so reviewable.

Vol. IV, p. 431, sec. 14.

Nothing in this section, nor in sections 5 and 6 of this Act, extended the right of review of judgments of the District Court sitting as a court of claims under the Tucker Act of March 3, 1887, ch. 359, 24 Stat. L. 505, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 80, and a writ of error will not lie to review a judgment in favor of the United States on a claim of less than $3,000, as provided in R. S. sec. 707, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 467. Reid v. U. S., (1909) 211 U. S. 529, 29 S. Ct. 171, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 313.

Vol. IV, p. 431, sec. 15.

Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico territories.—While this section and the Act of Jan. 20, 1897, ch. 68, 29 Stat. L. 492, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 433, were in force, and when Oklahoma was a territory, it was held that the Circuit Court of Appeals had jurisdiction on writ of error to review a conviction for grand larceny, in violation of the laws of the territory which had been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the territory; that the power of review extended to criminal cases arising under the criminal laws of the territory, as well as those of the United States. Miller v. Oklahoma, (1906) 149 Fed. 330, 9 Ann. Cas. 389, 79 C. C. A. 268. And in a case controlled by the same legislation it was held that the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of Appeals extends to all judgments of the Supreme Court of Arizona territory in cases not capital, arising under any criminal statute which such territorial courts administer, whether federal or territorial. Storm v. Arizona, (1909) 170 Fed. 423, 95 C. C. A. 593.

Construing this section and section 6 of the Act of Feb. 6, 1889, ch. 113, 25 Stat. L. 656, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 491, it was held in New v. Oklahoma, (1904) 195 U. S. 252, 25 S. Ct. 68, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 182, that a writ of error from the United States Supreme Court to the Supreme Court of Oklahoma would not lie in a capital case.

Under this section, in connection with sections 5 and 6, and the Act of Jan. 20, 1897, above cited, it was held that the appellate jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit extended to all judgments of the Supreme Court of Arizona territory in cases not capital, arising under any criminal statute which the territorial courts administer, whether federal or territorial. Storm v. Arizona, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 423.

And in Sena v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 495, 78 C. C. A. 27, a prosecution of a federal statute, it was held that the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit had appellate jurisdiction to review the judgments of the Supreme Court of the territory of New Mexico in cases of conviction of crime not capital.

Jurisdiction of writs of error in criminal cases, whether capital or not capital, is now vested solely in the Circuit Courts of Appeals. See Judicial Code, secs. 128, 133, 134, and 238, ante, pp. 195 et seq., 231, of this Supplement; and the Act of June 20, 1897, above cited, is repealed by Judicial Code, sec. 297, ante, p. 250.

Porto Rico.—The territories of the United States, referred to in this section, are those which it was contemplated would be assigned to some circuit, and they do not embrace Porto Rico. If Congress had intended that the judgments of the United States Court for Porto Rico should, in any class of cases, be re-examined in some Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, it would have so declared by appropriate words. It did not so declare. Royal Ins. Co. v. Martin, (1904) 192 U. S. 149, 24 S. Ct. 247, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 385.

Vol. IV, p. 436, sec. 687.

Original jurisdiction.—The question of jurisdiction precedes any inquiry into the merits. Oregon v. Hitchcock, (1906) 202 U. S. 60, 26 S. Ct. 568, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 935.

Neither the counsel nor the express consent of the parties will justify the Supreme Court of the United States in ignoring the question whether it has original jurisdiction of a suit commenced therein. Minnesota v. Hitchcock, (1902) 185 U. S. 373, 22 S. Ct. 650, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 954.

Leave to file an original bill in the Supreme Court of the United States is ordinarily a matter of course, and may be granted without intimating any opinion upon a question raised as to want of jurisdiction. Washington v. Northern Securities Co., (1902) 185 U. S. 254, 22 S. Ct. 623, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 897.

Suits by or against states.—The federal Supreme Court cannot take original jurisdiction of a suit by a state against corporations of other states brought to enforce by injunction the penal legislation of the state against traffic in intoxicating liquors. Oklahoma v. Gulf, etc., R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 290, 31 S. Ct. 437, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 469.

Oklahoma has no such interest in its corporate capacity as enables it to invoke original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court by suit to enjoin a foreign railroad company from charging more than certain specified rates; the state not being engaged in the transportation of such commodities. Oklahoma v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 277, 31 S. Ct. 434, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 465.

Suits between states.—The original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court extends to a suit by the commonwealth of Virginia against the state of West Virginia to determine the amount due to the former by the latter as the equitable proportion of the public debt of the original state of Virginia which was assumed by West Virginia at the time of its creation as a state (Virginia v. West Virginia, (1907) 206 U. S. 290, 27 S. Ct. 732, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1068), although by reason of certain transactions with her creditors, Virginia may have been discharged from all liability as to West Virginia's share, other than to turn over the proceeds of the suit. Virginia v. West Virginia, (1911) 220 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 330, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 353. And such suit is to be considered by the federal Supreme Court in the untechnical spirit proper for dealing with a quasi-international controversy. Virginia v. West Virginia, (1911) 220 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 330, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 353.

A conflict between the authorities of the states of Louisiana and Mississippi, arising out of the enforcement of the oyster legislation of those states, which involves a dispute respecting the true boundary line, creates a controversy between the states in their sovereign capacity, which is within the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States. Louisiana v. Mississippi, (1906) 202 U. S. 1, 26 S. Ct. 408, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 913.

The original jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court over "controversies between two or more states" extends to a suit by the state of South Dakota as the donee of the holders of certain bonds issued by the state of North Carolina, and secured by a mortgage of railroad stock belonging to that state, to compel payment of the bonds and a subjection of the mortgaged property to the satisfaction of the debt. South Dakota v. North Carolina, (1904) 192 U. S. 286, 24 S. Ct. 269, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 448.

Objections as to multifariousness, laches, and the like, except so far as they affect the merits, will not be considered by the Supreme Court in a suit by the commonwealth of Virginia against the state of West Virginia, to determine the amount due to the former by the latter as the equitable proportion of the public debt of Virginia which was assumed by West Virginia at the time of its creation as a state. Virginia v. West Virginia, (1911) 220 U. S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 330, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 353. See also Virginia v. West Virginia, (1907) 206 U. S. 290, 27 S. Ct. 732, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1068.

Suits between United States and states.—The original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court does not extend to a bill filed against the United States and others by the attorney-general of Kansas on behalf of the state as trustee for the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of certain lands in the Indian Territory, alleged to have been granted by Congress to the state for the benefit of the railway company, where the name of the state is being used simply for the prosecution of the claim of the railway company; "the United States is the real party in interest as defendant, and has not consented to be sued, which it cannot be without its consent." Kansas v. U. S., (1907) 204 U. S. 331, 27 S. Ct. 388, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 510.

The Supreme Court has no jurisdiction of a bill in equity filed by the state of Louisiana against the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office to establish its title under the Swamp Land Grant Act of March 2, 1849, to certain lands which were approved to the state by the Secretary of the Interior upon the manifest mistake of law, that, upon the abandonment of the military reservation of which they formed a part, the lands fell within the terms of the grant, since such suit raises questions of law and fact upon which the United States would have to be heard. Louisiana v. Garfield, (1908) 211 U. S. 70, 29 S. Ct. 31, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 92.

The original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court extends to a controversy between the states of Kansas and Colorado and the United States, presenting the questions whether Kansas has a right to the continuous flow of the waters of the Arkansas river as that flow existed before any interference therewith, or whether Colorado has the right to appropriate the waters of that stream so as to prevent that continuous flow, or whether the amount of the flow is subject to the superior authority and supervisory control of the United States. Kansas v. Colorado, (1907) 206 U. S. 46, 27 S. Ct. 655, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 956.

A suit by a state to enjoin the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the Land Office from selling school lands in the Red Lake Indian reservation must be regarded as a controversy to which the United States is a party, and of which, as a state is also a party, the Supreme Court of the United States has original jurisdiction, in view of the provision of the Act of March 2, 1901, 31 Stat. L. 950, ch. 808, that the Indians need not be made parties to such a suit if the Secretary of the Interior is made a party thereto, and that the Attorney-General, on request of the Secretary, shall represent and defend the Indian rights. Minnesota v. Hitchcock, (1902) 185 U. S. 373, 22 S. Ct. 650, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 954.

The immunity of the United States from suit prevents a state from maintaining, in the Supreme Court of the United States, a suit against the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to restrain them from allotting and patenting in severalty swamp lands within the limits of an Indian reservation. Oregon v. Hitchcock, (1906) 202 U. S. 60, 26 S. Ct. 568, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 935.

Vol. IV, p. 439, sec. 688.

Prohibition. — In Ex p. Joins, (1903) 191 U. S. 93, 24 S. Ct. 28, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 110, where a petition for a writ of prohibition against the Choctaw and Chickasaw Citizenship Court was denied because the cause in that court was finished, the Supreme Court expressly refrained from considering whether the jurisdiction to grant prohibition to the District Courts is confined, under section 688, to cases where those courts are "proceeding as courts of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction."

Prohibition against proceedings in the federal Circuit Court to enjoin the prosecution of search-and-seizure proceedings instituted in the state courts, under Okla. Sess. Laws 1907-1908, ch. 69, against intoxicating liquors shipped into the state, will not be granted by the federal Supreme Court, since adequate relief is afforded by the full right of review in the latter court and in the proper Circuit Court of Appeals by appeal or certiorari. Ex p. Oklahoma, (1911) 220 U. S. 191, 31 S. Ct. 426, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 431.

Mandamus. — "In cases over which we possess neither original nor appellate jurisdiction we cannot grant prohibition or mandamus or certiorari as ancillary thereto." In re Massachusetts, (1905) 197 U. S. 482, 25 S. Ct. 512, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 845, denying a petition for writs of prohibition, mandamus, and certiorari to restrain the justices of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia from taking further proceedings or entertaining jurisdiction in an equity cause pending in that court. Followed in In re Glaser, (1905) 198 U. S. 171, 25 S. Ct. 653, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1000, denying a petition for mandamus to require the judges of a federal Circuit Court to take jurisdiction of a suit alleged to be pending and undetermined in that court.

Mandamus is the proper remedy where a single federal judge, in violation of the Act of June 18, 1910, sec. 17, 36 Stat. L. 557, now embodied in Judicial Code, sec. 266, ante, p. 242, of this Supplement, vacates a temporary restraining order suspending on constitutional grounds the enforcement of a state statute by restraining the action of a state officer thereunder, and denies an application for an interlocutory injunction, since the section above cited makes no provision for any appeal from an order of this character made by a single judge, and a right of appeal is not otherwise given by statute. Ex p. Metropolitan Water Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 539, 31 S. Ct. 600, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 575.

The power of the Supreme Court to issue writs of habeas corpus and writs of mandamus was originally conferred by and is still derived from that portion of the Act of 1789 which is now embodied in section 716 of the Revised Statutes (4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 498). It has been settled by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court that this power is a part of its appellate and not of its original jurisdiction, except in cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers or consuls, and those in which a state is a party. Ex p. Moran, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 594, 596, citing Ex p. Bollman, (1807) 4 Cranch 75, 100, 2 U. S. (L. ed.) 554; Ex p. Yerger, (1868) 8 Wall. 85, 98, 19 U. S. (L. ed.) 332; Marbury v. Madison, (1801) 1 Cranch 137, 2 U. S. (L. ed.) 60; Bath County v. Amy, (1871) 13 Wall. 244, 249, 20 U. S. (L. ed.) 539; Kendall v. U. S., (1838) 12 Pet. 622, 9 U. S. (L. ed.) 1181; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Morris, (1904) 132 Fed. 952, 66 C. C. A. 62, 67 L. R. A. 761.

In In re Metropolitan Trust Co., (1910) 218 U. S. 312, 31 S. Ct. 18, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1051, the Supreme Court issued a mandamus to a federal Circuit Court to compel it to set aside a decree which vacated, after the term, a prior decree dismissing the bill as to one of the defendants, and to forbid the exercise of any further jurisdiction over such defendant.

Where a single judge, refusing to call to his assistance two other judges, had heard and denied an application for an interlocutory injunction under section 17 of the Act of June 18, 1910, ch. 309, 36 Stat. L. 557, which section is now embodied in Judicial Code, sec. 266, ante, title JUDICIARY, vol. 1, p. 242, of this Supplement, mandamus by the Supreme Court directing him to vacate his order was held to be the proper remedy, since the section made no provision for an appeal from an order made by a single judge denying an interlocutory injunction, and a right of appeal is not otherwise given by statute. Ex p. Metropolitan Water Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 539, 31 S. Ct. 600, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 575, citing Ex p. Harding, (1911) 219 U. S. 363, 31 S. Ct. 324, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 252.

Refusal of a federal Circuit Court to remand a civil cause to the state court whence it had been removed as presenting a separable controversy between citizens of different states cannot be reviewed by mandamus, which may not be used to perform the office of an appeal or writ of error. Ex p. Harding, (1911) 219 U. S. 363, 31 S. Ct. 324, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 252, disapproving and qualifying to some extent Ex p. Wisner, (1906) 203 U. S. 449, 27 S. Ct. 150, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 264; In re Moore, (1908) 209 U. S. 490, 14 Ann. Cas. 1164, 28 S. Ct. 585, 706, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 904, and In re Winn, (1909) 213 U. S. 458, 29 S. Ct. 515, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 873; and holding that the case was governed by the general rule expressed in Ex p. Hoard, (1881) 105 U. S. 578, 26 U. S. (L. ed.) 1176; In re Pollitz, (1907) 206 U. S. 323, 27 S. Ct. 729, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1081; Ex p. Nebraska, (1908) 209 U. S. 436, 28 S. Ct. 581, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 876; and applied in Ex p. Gruetter, (1910) 217 U. S. 586, 30 S. Ct. 690, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 892.

See further as to power of federal courts to issue writs of prohibition and mandamus, R. S. sec. 716, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 499-506, and infra, this title.

Vol. IV, p. 444, sec. 692.

Repeal of this section.—In The Joseph B. Thomas, (C. C. A. 1906) 148 Fed. 762, it was said: "It is true that section 691 of the Revised Statutes, conferring appellate jurisdiction on the Supreme Court from final judgments of Circuit Courts, or of District Courts acting as Circuit Courts in civil actions, where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of $2,000 (afterwards increased to $5,000), was expressly repealed by section 14 of the Act of March 3, 1891, 26 Stat. L. 829, ch. 517; but section 692, in which there are like provisions limiting the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in reference to appeals from final decrees of the Circuit Courts, in cases of equity and of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, is not repealed by the said Act, nor is there any express repeal in said Act of section 695, establishing the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court from all final decrees of a District Court in prize causes, and limiting the same to cases where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of $2,000, and providing that, without reference to the value of the matter in dispute, the appeal shall be allowed, on the certificate of the district judge that the adjudication involves a question of importance. Yet it is significant that as to causes described in these two sections, appellate jurisdiction without pecuniary limitation has uniformly been held to have been conferred by the Judiciary Act of 1891 upon the Supreme Court and the Circuit Courts of Appeals. This latter Act has been held to be a substitute for the old Judiciary Act, and supersedes and supplies the creation and regulation of appellate jurisdiction by said old Act and its amendments, except where they are consistent with the provisions of the later Act, or are preserved in force under the last paragraph of section 10 of that Act."

See note under R. S. sec. 692, supra, this page.

Vol. IV, p. 446, sec. 698.

Making up record.—A Circuit Court of Appeals cannot make its own record for the hearing of a case on appeal by authorizing the withdrawal from its files of the record on a previous appeal, and permitting the same to be refiled as a part of the record on a subsequent appeal in the same case. It can act only upon a record which comes from the court below, properly certified. Merri-man v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 120 Fed. 240.

What should be included in record.—A rule of the Circuit Court of Appeals which provides that "whenever it shall be necessary or proper in the opinion of the presiding judge in any Circuit or District Court that original papers of any kind should be inspected in this court upon writ of error or appeal, such presiding judge may make such rule or order for the safekeeping, transporting, and return of such original papers as to him may seem proper," fixes the limit within which the presiding judge may act in such matter and he is not authorized to make an order for incorporating original papers introduced in evidence in the record on appeal, instead of copies, merely for the purpose of saving expense to the parties, nor unless in his opinion an inspection of the originals by the appellate court, as distinguished from authenticated copies, is either necessary or would be useful or aidful in the determination of the appeal. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Brennan, (1907) 156 Fed. 213, wherein the court said: "Though in this matter acting for the Circuit Court of Appeals under rule 14, we have not overlooked sections 698 and 750 of the Revised Statutes (under which we may say that our ruling would have been precisely the same), but we have preferred to be guided entirely by the rule of the court where the appeals are pending, particularly as it has fixed the limits within which the presiding judge may act for it after the case has passed from his court."

The power of the court to direct what papers shall constitute that record which shall be transmitted to the appellate court by the transcript will not be questioned whenever such action becomes necessary because of the fact that the disputed paper has not been admitted to the files in the regular way, and this power is an essential grant of R. S. sec. 698, if not already inherent in the court without the statute. Southern Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Carey, (1902) 117 Fed. 325, 334.

The practice of bringing into the record, by bill of exceptions, pleadings, or papers which the court has refused to allow a party to file, is not known to the federal courts in equity cases; but inasmuch as a consideration of such documents may be necessary to enable the appellate court to determine whether or not they were properly rejected, it would seem that, in the absence of any statute or rule regulating the practice in that regard, the trial court may properly, by an order, direct the clerk to certify the pleading or other document rejected to the appellate court for that purpose. Southern Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Carey, (1902) 117 Fed. 326.

The court of bankruptcy from which an appeal is taken has no jurisdiction to designate what records shall be certified on which the appellate court shall determine the appeal. In re A. L. Robertshaw Mfg. Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 220.

Where the parties to an appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals in bankruptcy are unable to agree as to the contents of the appeal record, it is the duty of the appellant to file a præcipe with the clerk, pointing out specifically what records, in his judgment, should be certified, leaving appellee, if in his opinion the records certified are insufficient, to suggest a diminution of the record and ask for certiorari. In re A. L. Robertshaw Mfg. Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 220.

Remedies for defective record.—The Circuit Court of Appeals will not dismiss an appeal on motion on the ground that the record filed is insufficient; that being a matter to be determined at the hearing on the merits, or to be corrected by certiorari for a diminution of the record. Merriman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 120 Fed. 240.

Under this section, it devolves on an appellant to see to it that a record is brought up to such court showing such of the proceedings of the trial court as are necessary for the proper presentation of the errors assigned, and for want of such a record the court has power to dismiss the appeal. This power, however, ought not generally to be exercised unless the omission arose from negligence or indifference, and instead, where good faith is shown, the appellee will be directed to designate such additional papers, documents, and proof used on the hearing below as he deems necessary for a proper presentation of the case, and the appellant will be ordered to file the same as a part of the record under penalty of a dismissal of the appeal. Kansas v. Meriwether, (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 39.

Amendments.—A Circuit Court of Appeals is without power to dismiss an appeal on motion of the appellant and remand the case to the court below with directions to permit the amendment of a pleading on a showing that facts were inadvertently omitted therefrom, which was not known to appellant until after the appeal was taken. Strand v. Griffith, (C. C. A. 1905) 135 Fed. 739.

Vol. IV, p. 448, sec. 699.

Actions against revenue officers.—Section 844 of the Revised Statutes requiring the clerk to pay into the Treasury any surplus of fees and emoluments shown by his return is not a revenue law within the meaning of section 699. U. S. v. Mason, (1910) 218 U. S. 517, 529, 31 S. Ct. 28, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1133.

Vol. IV, p. 450, sec. 700.

Sections 649 and 700 are considered together herein, as they were in the original work.

To what court applicable.—Sections 649 and 700 relate exclusively to trials in the Circuit Courts, and there are no similar provisions in respect of trials in the District Courts. U. S. v. Cleage, (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 85; U. S. v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 73; Low v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 86.

But this section is applicable to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Paul v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 951.

To what cases applicable.—This section is not applicable to default cases; and in an action of replevin brought in a federal court within the state of Illinois, in which the defendant makes default, the court is authorized to assess the damages without a jury under the Illinois Practice Act. Midland Contracting Co. v. Toledo Foundry, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 797.

There is no authority either at common law or by statute under which the facts in an action at law may be tried by the judge of a District Court of the United States without a jury; and where a case is so tried by stipulation, the judgment is not reviewable by the Circuit Court of Appeals. U. S. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 306.

A judge of a federal District Court having neither statutory nor common-law authority to hear a criminal case without a jury on a plea of not guilty, he will be regarded in so doing as an arbitrator only, and his conclusions of fact cannot be reviewed on a writ of error. Low v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 86.

Effect of state laws and practice — Ruling on questions of law.—The court cannot be required to rule on specific propositions of law presented by the parties in accordance with a state practice. Streeter v. Chicago Sanitary Dist., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 124.

The statute does not contemplate separate conclusions of law such as are common in the state practice, and judgment should be directed on the findings of fact. Fowler v. Gowing, (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 891.

Ascertainment of facts.—The state legislature in so far as the same presents the method for the ascertainment of the facts of the case under consideration, contrary to and inconsistent with the legislation of Congress on the same subject, must and should give way to the plain provisions of the federal law. It is the duty of the trial courts to adhere rigidly to the enactments of Congress prescribed for their government, and the presumptions are all unfavorable to the waiver of the right of trial by jury. Swift v. Jones, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 489.

The making of special findings by a federal Circuit Court on waiver of a jury, and the effect thereof, is governed by R. S. secs. 649, 700, and not by state statutes. Jones v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1905) 135 Fed. 518.

A state statute permitting the waiver of a jury trial in actions at law by oral consent in open court entered in the minutes, does not apply to federal courts in the trial of actions at law as a substitute for a written waiver of a jury required by R. S. secs. 649, 700. Erkel v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 623.

Whatever may be the practice as to references of common-law actions in the courts of the state, in a federal court the reference of such a case can be made only on consent of both parties. Elkin v. Denver Engineering Works Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 684.

A motion for a new trial, although indispensable under the state practice, is not essential to a review of the rulings of the trial courts under the federal practice. Boatmen's Bank v. Trower Bros. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 804.

Compliance with Act essential to review—Generally.—Whenever cases are submitted for trial without a jury, it must plainly appear that the waiver was made as prescribed by the Act of Congress. Swift v. Jones, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 489.

The trial of issues of fact by the court without a jury was unknown to the common law. Such questions were exclusively for the jury, and in case questions of fact were submitted to the judge without a jury, by agreement of the parties, it was held that, in determining such issues, the judge was not acting in any official capacity, but as an arbitrator. Campbell v. Boyreau, (1858) 21 How. 223, 16 U. S. (L. ed.) 96. Manifestly, therefore, the judge has no power, without the consent of the parties, to determine issues of fact, and only by virtue of the provision of section 649 does the judge's decision upon a question of fact become a judicial act. U. S. v. Ramsey, (1907) 158 Fed. 488.

Rulings of a Circuit Court in the progress of the trial of an action at law by the court without a jury cannot be reviewed by the appellate court, unless a written stipulation waiving a jury is signed and filed with the clerk in accordance with R. S. sec. 649, so as to bring the case within the provisions of section 700; in the absence of such a stipulation the only question which can be considered is whether the judgment rendered is sustained by the pleadings. Defiance v. Schmidt, (C. C. A. 1903) 123 Fed. 1.

Reference to referee.—An agreement in open court by the parties to an action at law in a federal court that the cause may be referred to a referee to make findings of fact is a waiver of the right to a jury trial only on condition that the facts be found by a referee, and confers no power upon the judge to ignore such findings, and himself determine the issues of fact, and the judge has no such power unless by consent, but can only confirm or reject the findings of the referee, and in case they are set aside the cause stands for trial precisely the same as though it had never been referred. U. S. v. Ramsey, (1907) 158 Fed. 488.

Reference to special master.—Where an action at law was brought in the Circuit Court, the trial judge under such sections has no power, even with the acquiescence of both parties, to order a trial before a special master authorized to hear and pass on the issues of fact, and report his findings to the court. Swift v. Jones, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 489, wherein the court said: "Without, therefore, in any manner questioning the right, in a proper case, to arbitrate, either through the judge acting as arbitrator, or the selection of referees contemplated by state statute, or otherwise to be chosen, we hold that it is well recognized that neither by agreement of parties nor by the laws of the state can a federal court sitting in such state depart from the prescribed modes of procedure and rules embodied in the Act of Congress for its guidance (Graham v. Bayne, (1855) 18 How. 60, 15 U. S. (L. ed.) 265; Kelsey v. Forsyth, (1858) 21 How. 85, 16 U. S. (L. ed.) 32; Richmond v. Smith, (1872) 15 Wall. 429, 21 U. S. (L. ed.) 200); and hence when it appears that the reference of the lower court was not in any sense intended as an arbitration, or a purpose to have the referee to whom it was referred try and determine the same as an arbitrator, but that plainly the purpose of the reference was to have him ascertain the facts, in lieu of the jury or the judge of the lower court, by written consent of the parties, thereby substituting his judgment as to the facts of the case for that of the jury or the lower court, and that the judgment of the lower court was the result merely of his findings, as distinguished from rendering judgment upon its own findings in a proper case, we think it clear that such practice should not be sanctioned or adopted as a rule applicable to the trial of cases in this circuit. To do so would be, in effect, to create a new and additional method of disposition of common-law cases, neither provided for nor contemplated by the Acts of Congress on the subject."

What is a submission under the Act.—A written stipulation which clearly contemplates the trial to the court of an action at law, and requests a special finding, is a sufficient waiver of a jury to authorize a determination, upon writ of error, of the sufficiency of the facts found to support the judgment. Anglo-American Land, etc., Co. v. Lombard, (C. C. A. 1904) 132 Fed. 721.

A recital in a judgment that both parties, announcing "ready for trial," formally waived a jury in open court, is sufficient to show waiver of jury by written stipulation, as required by R. S. sec. 649. Columbus Compress Co. v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 487.

Stipulation in writing essential.—Where a case is tried to the court without a jury, and there is no written stipulation waiving the jury, none of the questions decided at the trial can be re-examined on writ of error. Erkel v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 623.

A request, made to the court by each party, to instruct the jury to render a verdict in his favor, is not equivalent to a submission of the case to the court without the intervention of a jury within the intentment of R. S. secs. 649, 700. Minahan v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 42; McCormick v. Waco Nat. City Bank, (C. C. A. 1906) 142 Fed. 132.

But a written stipulation is not essential to a waiver of a jury to assess damages on a bond after default, under R. S. sec. 961, declaring that when the sum for which judgment shall be rendered in such suit is uncertain, it shall, if either party request it, be assessed by a jury. Brock v. Fuller Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 272.

Effect of stipulation on new trial. — Whether the finding be general or special, it shall have the same effect as the verdict of a jury; that is to say, it is conclusive as to the facts so found. In the case of a special verdict (finding) the question is presented as it would be if tried by a jury, whether the facts thus found require a judgment for plaintiff or defendant. Powers v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1903) 119 Fed. 565; York v. Washburn, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 564.

A general finding upon a trial by the court without a jury has by the statute the same effect as the verdict of a jury. The parties are concluded upon the facts by the determination of the court, and nothing is presented for review except as might have been reviewed had there been a trial by jury. Streeter v. Chicago Sanitary Dist., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 124.

If the finding be general, only such rulings of the court in the progress of the trial can be reviewed as are presented by the bill of exceptions. Streeter v. Chicago Sanitary Dist., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 124.

Findings generally. — On a petition to revise in matter of law the proceedings of a District Court in bankruptcy, in order that it may appear by the record that the issues raised were presented below, and for other reasons, findings which involve distinct propositions of law, or something as a substitute therefor, are necessary, and they cannot be supplied by a mere opinion of the court. While in some cases involving issues of a substantial character justice may require a relaxation of the rule, or the consideration of issues not presented to the original tribunal, such course will not be followed where the questions raised relate merely to matters of form or administration, and no material detriment to the estate can result from the action complained of. In re Boston Dry Goods Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 226.

Where parties to a suit tried to the court without a jury desire a review of the law involved in the case, a special verdict raising the legal propositions must be procured, or propositions of law must be presented and ruled on by the trial judge. Paul v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 951.

In actions at law, where a trial by jury is waived, the duty of finding the facts is placed upon the trial court. Anglo-American Land, etc., Co. v. Lombard, (C. C. A. 1904) 132 Fed. 721.

But there need be no finding of a fact stated in an agreed statement of facts. Treat v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 760.

General and special — Special findings not obligatory. — The trial court is not required to make special findings. Paul v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 951.

When the trial is to the court, without the intervention of a jury, whether the finding shall be general or special rests in the discretion of the court. Dakota County School Dist. No. 11 v. Chapman, (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 887.

Parties have no right to require a federal court, in hearing a law case without a jury, to make a special finding. Southern R. Co. v. St. Louis Hay, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 728.

In Waialua Agricultural Co. v. Oahu R., etc., Co., (1906) 18 Hawaii 87, it was said that however desirable it may be to obtain special findings from the court, our statute does not require them to be made.

In Berwind-White Coal Min. Co. v. Martin, (C. C. A. 1903) 124 Fed. 313, it was said: "The defendant presented a number of requests for special findings of fact and conclusions of law, but the court, without passing upon them, found generally that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. There can be no question as to the entire propriety of this course. The statute expressly provides that the finding of the court on the facts may be general or special, and you can no more compel the latter than you can require a special verdict from a jury. It is true that in Norris v. Jackson, (1869) 9 Wall. 125, 19 U. S. (L. ed.) 608, it is said that, 'if the parties desire a review of the law involved in the case, they must . . . get the court to find a special verdict which raises the legal questions;' but it is not to be understood from this that it can be exacted, all that is meant being that the court should be persuaded to do so. Neither is the alternative, which is there suggested, of presenting propositions of law, and requiring the court to rule upon them, of any greater obligation. The right to this has been asserted without success in a number of cases, and the practice must now be considered as settled to the contrary. Mercantile Mut. Ins. Co. v. Folsom, (1873) 18 Wall. 237, 21 U. S. (L. ed.) 827; Cooper v. Omohundro, (1873) 19 Wall. 65, 22 U. S. (L. ed.) 47; St. Louis v. Western Union Tel. Co., (1897) 166 U. S. 388, 17 S. Ct. 608, 41 U. S. (L. ed.) 1044; Key West v. Baer, (1895) 66 Fed. 440, 13 C. C. A. 572; Consolidated Coal Co. v. Polar Wave Ice Co., (1901) 106 Fed. 798, 45 C. C. A. 638."

But the court should make special findings of fact when it is doubtful, under the decisions, whether the defeated party could otherwise properly present to an appellate court the questions of law involved. Joline v. Metropolitan Securities Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 650.

But the finding must be either one or the other, general or special, and its effect is to be determined upon its character in that regard. Powers v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1903) 119 Fed. 565.

Nor can there be both a general and a special finding. It must be one or the other. Streeter v. Chicago Sanitary Dist., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 124; U. S. v. Cleage, (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 85.

Where a general finding is made and judgment is rendered thereon, it cannot be regarded as superseded by a supposed special finding, which was not entered of record, is only found in the bill of exceptions, and does not purport to qualify or take the place of the general finding. U. S. v. Cleage, (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 85.

Special findings and agreed statement of facts — Manner of making. — A special finding should be a clear and concise statement of the ultimate facts, and not a statement, report, or recapitulation of evidence from which such facts may be found or inferred. The ultimate facts must be so stated that, without inferences, or comparisons, or balancing testimony, or weighing evidence, the case may be determined by the application of pertinent rules of law. If any ultimate fact material to the issues is to be inferred from the whole evidence, or from other facts proved or admitted, the inference must be drawn by the trial court, and the fact must be stated in the finding. Like the special verdict of a jury, a special finding can present only questions of law. Anglo-American Land, etc., Co. v. Lombard, (C. C. A. 1904) 132 Fed. 721.

A special finding should state the ultimate facts on which the law must determine the rights of the parties, and should not contain a statement of the evidence. American Nat. Bank v. Watkins, (C. C. A. 1902) 119 Fed. 545.

A special finding of facts should be the equivalent of the special verdict of a jury, and should cover all the issues, so that in the event of proceedings in error, if the trial court's conclusions of law are deemed incorrect, and if the proceedings are otherwise without error, the appellate court may, under section 701, Rev. Stat., direct such judgment as the special finding requires, without the necessity of awarding a new trial. Anglo-American Land, etc., Co. v. Lombard, (C. C. A. 1904) 132 Fed. 721.

A mere setting out of the testimony of a witness, with a statement that the court finds it to be true, is not a finding of fact which will support a judgment. Perkins v. Von Baumbach, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 265.

Where only probative facts are found, leaving the ultimate facts necessary to support the judgment to be inferred, the judgment must be reversed, and a new trial ordered. Powers v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1903) 119 Fed. 562.

When judgment has been rendered on a general finding, there is no authority for inserting special findings in the bill of exceptions signed at a succeeding term of court. Streeter v. Chicago Sanitary Dist., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 124.

What constitutes.—A special finding is not a mere report of the evidence, but a statement of the ultimate facts on which the law of the case must determine the rights of the parties; a finding of the propositions of fact which the evidence establishes, and not the evidence on which those ultimate facts are supposed to rest. Powers v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1903) 119 Fed. 565.

The special finding, contemplated by R. S. secs. 649, 700, corresponds to the special verdict of a jury, is equally specific and responsive to the issues, and is spread at large upon the record, as part thereof, in like manner as is such a verdict. U. S. v. Sioux City Stock Yards Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 126.

An opinion of the trial judge setting forth the reasons for his decision in an action at law tried by a Circuit Court without the intervention of a jury cannot be regarded as a special finding within the meaning of R. S.

secs. 649, 700. U. S. v. Sioux City Stock Yards Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 126.

Nor does such an opinion, by being copied into the judgment entry, become a special finding of the ultimate facts, in the nature of a special verdict. York v. Washburn, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 564.

An opinion of the trial judge analyzing the facts and applying the law is not a "special finding" of facts within section 700. Keeley v. Ophir Hill Consol. Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 598.

Omissions.—In Anglo-American Land, etc., Co. v. Lombard, (C. C. A. 1904) 132 Fed. 721, it was said: "While the special finding under consideration does not meet the requirements of the Act of Congress, it does sufficiently respond to some of the issues raised by the pleadings, although not responding to others. In this situation the finding may be examined to ascertain whether the ultimate facts found and stated therein are decisive of the controversy, and determine what judgments should be rendered, irrespective of any response which could be made to the issues upon which the finding is silent. If, under a correct application of legal principles, the facts adequately found and stated determine the cases, the imperfection in the special finding becomes immaterial, and the present judgments must be affirmed, or other judgments must be directed in their stead, as the facts found and stated may require. But if the facts found do not, under the application of pertinent rules of law, determine the cases, the judgments must be reversed, and a new trial awarded. In the latter event, the Circuit Court will be precluded from again adjudging in favor of the defendants upon the facts declared by the judgment of reversal to be insufficient to sustain the present judgments, and it will be incumbent upon that court to proceed to the trial and proper determination of the other issues."

Effect.—A special finding which states the ultimate facts is conclusive upon the appellate court, even though it contains, in addition, statements of evidence and inferences therefrom. American Nat. Bank v. Watkins, (C. C. A. 1902) 119 Fed. 545.

Special findings by a trial judge in an action at law in a federal court, where a jury has been waived pursuant to the provisions of R. S. sec. 649, have the same effect as special verdicts of a jury, and must embrace a finding on every material issue joined in the case, otherwise the result is a mistrial. Towle v. Boston First Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 566. See also San Fernando Copper Min., etc., Co. v. Humphrey, (C. C. A. 1904) 130 Fed. 300.

Questions reviewable.—If the findings be special the review may extend to the determination of the sufficiency of the facts found to support the judgment. No other or different review is permitted. Streeter v. Chicago Sanitary Dist., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 124; Southern R. Co. v. St. Louis Hay, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 728; Mason City, etc., R. Co. v. Boynton, (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 599; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 176

Fed. 237; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Frye-Bruhn Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 15.

The true test for determining whether or not a question or ruling in a trial by the court without a jury is reviewable is the answer to the question whether or not it would have been open to review if the trial had been to a jury. The question whether or not at the close of a trial there is substantial evidence to sustain a finding in favor of a party to the action is a question of law which arises in the progress of the trial. In a trial to a jury it is reviewable on an exception to a ruling upon a request for a peremptory instruction. In a trial by the court without a jury it is reviewable upon a motion for a judgment, a request for a declaration of law, or any other action in the trial court which fairly presents this issue of law to that court for determination before the trial ends. The trial ends only when the finding is filed, or, if no finding is filed before, when the judgment is rendered. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Woodson County, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 144.

Decisions upon the admission and exclusion of evidence, upon questions of law, upon the question whether or not there is any substantial evidence to warrant the finding, and upon the question whether or not the finding supports the judgment, are the only rulings at the trial that may be reviewed. Barnsdall v. Waltemeyer, (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 415.

Where a jury is waived, and an action at law is tried by a national court which makes a finding or renders a judgment, no question of fact and no question of mixed law and fact, except those questions of law which have been reserved by exception, motion, or request, are reviewable in an appellate court. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Woodson County, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 144.

Errors alleged in the findings of the court on a trial without a jury are not subject to revision by the Circuit Court of Appeals, that court being limited in that connection to the question whether there is any evidence on which such findings could be made. Paul v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 951.

A special finding that plaintiff was not a bona fide purchaser of a note for value, but took the same subject to any defense affecting the consideration, is one of fact, and is not reviewable on appeal as a conclusion of law. American Nat. Bank v. Watkins, (C. C. A. 1902) 119 Fed. 545.

An assignment that the court erred in making a particular finding of fact is not reviewable on appeal, if there is any evidence on which to base the finding. San Fernando Copper Min., etc., Co. v. Humphrey, (C. C. A. 1904) 130 Fed. 298.

Disposal of case on error.—Evidence which should have been excluded on the trial as irrelevant will be excluded on review under R. S. sec. 700. Black v. Supreme Council, etc., (1903) 120 Fed. 580.

Where, in an action on an award pursuant to a fire policy, a reversal was required because of an error of the trial court in disposing of a question of law and there was no disputed question of fact in the case, the Court of Appeals will render final judgment instead of remanding the cause for a new trial. Fellman v. Royal Ins. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 577.

General findings.—Where an action at law is tried without a jury, under R. S. secs. 649, 700, and only a general finding is made, and the ultimate facts are not agreed upon by the parties, there can be no review of the question whether the judgment is supported by the facts found; and, unless exceptions are taken to the rulings made during the trial, there is no question which can be reviewed by the appellate court. National Surety Co. v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 34.

Where, notwithstanding defendant's application for special findings of fact, the court found generally that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, the facts cannot be reviewed on appeal. Berwind-White Coal Min. Co. v. Martin, (C. C. A. 1903) 124 Fed. 313.

Where writs of error are prosecuted in cases tried to the court on stipulation waiving a jury trial, as authorized by R. S. sec. 649, the Court of Appeals is limited to reviewing exceptions taken to the admission or exclusion of evidence, and to rulings on question of law. Kruger v. Constable, (C. C. A. 1904) 128 Fed. 908; Paul v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 951; Streeter v. Chicago Sanitary Dist., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 124; Mankato v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 329; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 176 Fed. 237; Boatmen's Bank v. Trower Bros. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 804.

The sufficiency of the facts found to support the judgment cannot be reviewed. West v. Houston Oil Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 343.

An assignment of error that the court "erred in rendering judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant" presents no question which can be reviewed. Fitzgerald v. Bassford, (C. C. A. 1906) 142 Fed. 134.

Rulings and exceptions.—Objections to the admission or exclusion of evidence, or to the court's rulings on propositions of law, in a case tried to the court without a jury, must appear by bill of exceptions in order to be reviewed. Paul v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 951.

But where a case is tried to the court without a jury, a bill of exceptions cannot be used to bring up the entire testimony for review. Paul v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 951.

Necessity.—On writ of error to review a judgment of a Circuit Court in an action tried by stipulation to the court without a jury, as provided by R. S. secs. 649, 700, where there was a general finding, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, the record presents only the question whether the pleadings support the finding and judgment. Mexico Nat. R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 1004; Mexico Nat. R. Co. v. O'Leary, (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 363; Marinette Sawmill Co. v. Scofield, (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 562.

Applicable to Circuit Courts of Appeals.—American Trust, etc., Bank v. Zeigler Coal Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 512.

In Farrar v. Wheeler, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 482, it was said: "The series of statutes resulting in section 701 of the Revised Statutes was formally considered in Ballew v. U. S., (1895) 160 U. S. 187, 198, 16 S. Ct. 263, 40 U. S. (L. ed.) 388, and sequence, and the flexible powers of the Supreme Court, which powers we hold by the Act establishing the Circuit Court of Appeals, was fully explained. At page 202 of 160 U. S., page 263 of 16 S. Ct., 40 U. S. (L. ed.) 388, the conclusion is as follows: 'From this, and from a review of the legislation on the subject of the powers conferred upon this court as a reviewing court, it follows as a necessary conclusion that general authority was given to it on a writ of error to take such action as the ends of justice, not only in civil but in criminal cases, might require.'"

Modifying judgment.—Where all questions of fact have been tried and determined without error, the incorporation in the judgment of provisions which are unauthorized does not necessitate a new trial, but only a modification of the judgment. Mason City, etc., R. Co. v. Boynton, (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 599.

On affirmance of a judgment of conviction in a criminal case, the Circuit Court of Appeals may, at least with the consent of the United States attorney, authorize the trial judge to modify the sentence imposed. Scott v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 172.

Execution of costs.—The rules of the Supreme Court and Circuit Courts of Appeals provide that when costs are allowed the clerk shall insert the amount in the mandate, with the bill of items annexed. Rule 24, Supreme Court Rules, 3 S. Ct. xiii; Rule 31, Court of Appeals Rules, 150 Fed. cxxxiii, 79 C. C. A. cxxxiii. Therefore it has been held that to authorize a Circuit Court to issue execution for costs awarded by the Circuit Court of Appeals, the mandate should contain a special provision directing the same. American Trust, etc., Bank v. Zeigler Coal Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 512.

In Corn Products Refining Co. v. Chicago Real Estate Loan, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 63, it was held that where, on appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals, the bill of costs was taxed by the clerk and annexed to the mandate as required by the Circuit Court of Appeals Rule 29 (5), 150 Fed. cviii, 79 C. C. A. cviii, the mandate was sufficient, both for incorporation of the costs in the order with reference to costs in the Circuit Court, and for the issuance of an execution out of the Circuit Court for the collection of the residue after a set-off.

Final judgment.—An appellate court, on reversal of a judgment, will not direct the judgment to be entered below, unless it can thereby finally dispose of the case. Exchange Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Warsaw-Wilkinson Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 185 Fed. 487.

Vol. IV, p. 459, sec. 702.

Jurisdiction over Oklahoma courts.—In Ex p. Moran, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 594, it was said: "The Supreme Court has jurisdiction to review the final decisions of the Supreme Court of Oklahoma in certain classes of cases by writs of error or by appeals. This court has like jurisdiction in other and more numerous cases. Neither court has this power in cases of the conviction of capital crimes. But since each of these courts has appellate jurisdiction over the Supreme Court of Oklahoma and hence over the subordinate courts within its jurisdiction, the Supreme Court of the United States and this court each has the power to issue writs of habeas corpus to inquire into the power of any court in Oklahoma territory to imprison a person convicted of a capital crime."

This section has been cited in Royal Ins. Co. v. Martin, (1904) 192 U. S. 156, 24 S. Ct. 247, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 385.

Vol. IV, p. 460, sec. 2.

Method of review.—The findings of a territorial District Court, having been adopted and affirmed by the Supreme Court of the territory, serve the purpose of the statement of facts required by the Act of April 7, 1874, 18 Stat. L. 27, ch. 80, on appeal to the federal Supreme Court. Eagle Min., etc., Co. v. Hamilton, (1910) 218 U. S. 513, 31 S. Ct. 27, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1131.

The Supreme Court, in Stringfellow v. Cain, (1878) 99 U. S. 610, 25 U. S. (L. ed.) 421, in Hecht v. Boughton, (1881) 105 U. S. 235, 26 U. S. (L. ed.) 1018, and in Bonnifield v. Price, (1882) 154 U. S. 672, 14 S. Ct. 1194, 26 U. S. (L. ed.) 1022, has held that by virtue of this statute the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court over the judgment or the decree rendered by a territorial court in a case not tried by a jury can only be exercised by appeal, and dismissed cases of that nature which had been brought before it on writs of error. Shields v. Mongollon Exploration Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 539.

Oklahoma.—The manner of reviewing judgments, in civil cases, of the Supreme Court of the territory of Oklahoma, is specially provided for by the ninth section of the Act of May 2, 1890, 26 Stat. L. 81, 85, ch. 182, providing a territorial government for Oklahoma, and is not governed by the Act of Congress of 1874. Comstock v. Eagleton, (1905) 196 U. S. 99, 25 S. Ct. 210, 49 U. S.

Questions for review.—On an appeal from a judgment of a territorial Supreme Court, affirming the judgment of the court of first instance, which, after hearing the evidence, found all the issues in a suit for specific performance in favor of the defendants, the Supreme Court of the United States will ordinarily, in reviewing the facts, confine itself to questions of the admissibility of evidence and whether there was any evidence to sustain the conclusion reached, where such is the practice in the territorial court. Halsell v. Renfrow, (1906) 202 U. S. 287, 26 S. Ct. 610, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1032.

In De la Rama v. De la Rama, (1906) 201 U. S. 303, 26 S. Ct. 485, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 765, it was said: "Since that Act was passed we have always held that the jurisdiction of this court on an appeal from the Supreme Court of a territory did not extend to a re-examination of the facts, but was limited to determining whether the findings of fact supported the judgment, and to reviewing errors in the admission or rejection of testimony, when exceptions have been duly taken to the action of the court in this particular." Citing Stringfellow v. Cain, (1878) 99 U. S. 610, 25 U. S. (L. ed.) 421; Eilers v. Boatman, (1884) 111 U. S. 356, 4 S. Ct. 432, 28 U. S. (L. ed.) 454; Idaho, etc., Land Imp. Co. v. Bradbury, (1889) 132 U. S. 509, 10 S. Ct. 177, 33 U. S. (L. ed.) 433; Mammoth Min. Co. v. Salt Lake Foundry, etc., Co., (1894) 151 U. S. 447, 14 S. Ct. 384, 38 U. S. (L. ed.) 229; Young v. Amy, (1898) 171 U. S. 179, 18 S. Ct. 802, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 127.

The jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court under the Act of April 7, 1874, 18 Stat.

L. 27, ch. 80, on an appeal from a territorial court, is limited to the inquiry whether the findings of fact made by the court below support its judgment, and to a review of exceptions which have been duly taken to rulings upon the admission or rejection of evidence. Eagle Min., etc., Co. v. Hamilton, (1910) 218 U. S. 513, 31 S. Ct. 27, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1131.

Alaska.—The appellate jurisdiction of this court over appeals and writs of error from the District Courts of Alaska is not ruled by the Act of April 7, 1874, but by chapter 51 of the Act of June 6, 1900, 31 Stat. L. 414, ch. 786, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 147, providing a Civil Code for Alaska. Shields v. Mongollon Exploration Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 539.

Philippine Islands.—This Act has no application to the Philippine Islands, appeals from the Supreme Court of which are regulated by section 10 of the Act of July 1, 1902, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 722. De la Rama v. De la Rama, (1906) 201 U. S. 303, 26 S. Ct. 485, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 765.

Porto Rico.—In Garzot v. De Rubio, (1908) 209 U. S. 283, 28 S. Ct. 548, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 794, it was said: "While the suggestion that because there is no intermediate reviewing court between this and the District Court of the United States for Porto Rico, differing from what is generally the case in the territories of the United States, a wider scope of authority should exist in reviewing by appeal the decrees of the District Court of Porto Rico, may have cogency, it affords no ground for disregarding the plain command of the statute of 1874, which is here applicable, as expounded by many previous decisions of this court."

Vol. IV, p. 462, sec. 705.

This section has been cited in Columbia Heights Realty Co. v. Rudolph, (1910) 217 U. S. 547, 30 S. Ct. 581, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 877.

Vol. IV, p. 463, sec. 2.

Federal question involved.—"It is clear from the express words of those enactments that this court may review the final judgment of the Supreme Court of one of the territories of the United States in any case, without regard to the sum or value in dispute, where the Constitution or a statute or treaty is brought in question, and in every other case whatever where the sum or value in dispute exceeds $5,000, exclusive of costs." Royal Ins. Co. v. Martin, (1904) 192 U. S. 149, 24 S. Ct. 247, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 385.

Constitutionality of territorial enactment.—A controversy as to the constitutional right of a territorial legislature to pass a specified law under the broad legislative power conferred by R. S. sec. 1851 involves the validity of an authority exercised under the United States within the meaning of this section. New Mexico v. Denver, etc., R. Co., (1906) 203 U. S. 38, 27 S. Ct. 1, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 78.

"Matter in dispute."—That part of a judgment of a territorial District Court, in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover taxes, which was disallowed by the judgment of the territorial Supreme Court, reversing the judgment below except as to an item which was not contested, is the "matter in dispute," within the meaning of this section. New Mexico v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1906) 201 U. S. 41, 26 S. Ct. 386, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 651.

Some sum of value must be in dispute in order to sustain the appellate jurisdiction of the United States Supreme Court over the Supreme Courts of the territories which is conferred by this section. New Mexico v. Denver, etc., R. Co., (1906) 203 U. S. 38, 27 S. Ct. 1, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 78.

A suit in which the matter in dispute is the right of consignors to have a consignment shipped by a common carrier to its destination involves a valuable right, measurable in money, and therefore satisfies the requirements of this Act. New Mexico v. Denver, etc., R. Co., (1906) 203 U. S. 38, 27 S. Ct. 1, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 78.

The liability to a fine on a judgment of ouster in quo warranto proceedings, or the possible effect of such judgment in subsequent litigation over the emoluments of the office, does not make the matter in dispute in the quo warranto proceedings after the term of office has expired measurable by some sum or value in money, and thus bring the judgment within the scope of the provisions of this section. Albright v. New Mexico, (1906) 200 U. S. 9, 26 S. Ct. 210, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 346.

Oklahoma territory.—The jurisdiction to review by writs of error or by appeal the final judgments of the Supreme Court of the territory of Oklahoma is divided between the Supreme Court of the United States and this court. The former has jurisdiction to revise in that way cases which involve the validity of a treaty, a statute, or an authority exercised under the United States, and civil cases which are not reviewable by the Circuit Courts of Appeals in which the matter in dispute exceeds $5,000. Ex p. Moran, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 594.

This court has the power to review in that way final decisions of the Supreme Court of Oklahoma in all cases in which the jurisdiction below is dependent upon the citizenship of the opposite parties to the suit, in all admiralty cases, in all cases arising under the patent laws, the revenue laws and the bankruptcy laws, and in all cases arising under the criminal law except in cases of the conviction of a capital crime. Ex p. Moran, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 594.

Vol. IV, p. 466, sec. 8.

This section is evidently superseded by Judicial Code, sec. 250, ante, title JUDICIARY, vol. 1, p. 235, of this Supplement, and this note should be read in connection with that section and the note thereto.

As to section 233 of the District of Columbia Code mentioned in Judicial Code, sec. 250, above cited, "in effect that section [233] was but a re-enactment of the then existing provisions of the 8th section of the Act of Feb. 9, 1893 [27 Stat. L. 436, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 466], which established the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia." Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, (1904) 195 U. S. 322, 25 S. Ct. 28, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 219.

The procedure referred to in this section is that found in section 705, Rev. Stat., which provides that such writs or appeals shall be allowed in the "same manner and under the same regulations as are provided in cases of writs of error on judgments or appeals from decrees rendered in a Circuit Court." Columbia Heights Realty Co. v. Rudolph, (1910) 217 U. S. 547, 30 S. Ct. 581, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 877.

Cases arising under the patent laws.—In Moore v. Heany, (1909) 34 App. Cas. 31, the Court of Appeals refused to allow an appeal, holding that none would lie, from its decree which reversed a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, enjoining the Commissioner of Patents from striking certain applications for patents from the files of his office, and proceeding with an investigation as to whether the applications had been fraudulently altered or changed. Following Durham v. Seymour, (1896) 161 U. S. 235, 16 S. Ct. 452, 40 U. S. (L. ed.) 682, cited in 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 464.

A suit in which the validity of a regulation established by the Commissioner of Patents, under the authority of R. S. sec. 483, for the conduct of proceedings in the Patent Office, is assailed, is one in which there is drawn in question the validity of an authority exercised under the United States within the meaning of this Act. U. S. v. Allen,

Final judgment or decree.—A decree of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia on an appeal from the Commissioner of Patents, which affirms the latter's decision and directs the clerk of the court to "certify this opinion and proceedings in this court in the premises to the Commissioner of Patents, according to law," is not "final" within the meaning of this Act; as decisions on such appeals do not preclude any person interested from contesting the validity of the patent in court, and a remedy by bill in equity is given where a patent is refused. Frasch v. Moore, (1908) 211 U. S. 1, 29 S. Ct. 6, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 65.

A judgment of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, affirming the decision of the Commissioner of Patents in an interference proceeding, and directing that its own decision be certified to the commissioner, as required by law, is not final for the purpose of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. Johnson v. Mueser, (1909) 212 U. S. 283, 29 S. Ct. 390, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 514.

A decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia on an appeal from a decision of the Commissioner of Patents in proceedings arising under an application made pursuant to the Act of Feb. 20, 1905, 33 Stat. L. 724, ch. 592, sec. 1, for the registration of a trademark, which affirms the latter's decision, and directs the clerk to certify its opinion to the commissioner, according to law, is not final for the purpose of an appeal to, or writ of error from, the federal Supreme Court, since the proceedings under that Act are governed by the same rules of practice and procedure as in patent cases. Atkins v. Moore, (1909) 212 U. S. 285, 29 S. Ct. 390, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 515.

"Shall be final in all cases" in the Judicial Code, sec. 250, ante, title JUDICIARY, vol. 1, p. 235, of this Supplement, apparently includes cases arising under the trademark laws. And see Hutchinson v. Loewy, (1910)

217 U. S. 457, 30 S. Ct. 613, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 838. Compare Atkins v. Moore, (1909) 212 U. S. 285, 29 S. Ct. 390, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 515; Standard Paint Co. v. Trinidad Asphalt Mfg. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 446, 31 S. Ct. 456, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 536.

The jurisdictional limit upon writs of error and appeals to or from the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia is $5,000, exclusive of interest and costs. Wallach v. Rudolph, (1910) 217 U. S. 561, 30 S. Ct. 587, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 883.

A writ of error was dismissed for want of a jurisdictional amount in dispute, under the facts stated in the case, in Wallach v. Rudolph, (1910) 217 U. S. 561, 30 S. Ct. 587, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 883; Morgan v. Adams, (1909) 211 U. S. 627, 29 S. Ct. 213, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 362.

The amount in dispute was held sufficient in Harten v. Löffler, (1909) 212 U. S. 397, 29 S. Ct. 351, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 568.

The amount in dispute in a suit for equitable relief because of fraud in a sale of real property exceeds the sum of $5,000, which is essential, under this Act, to enable the Supreme Court of the United States to review a judgment of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, although the bill prays for the conveyance of a strip of land of slight value, where, if such relief is denied, the complainant seeks, in the alternative, to have the contract rescinded and the payment decreed of the sum of $6,000, the purchase money, with costs and interest. Shappirio v. Goldberg, (1904) 192 U. S. 232, 24 S. Ct. 259, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 419.

In mandamus proceedings.—The value of the matter in dispute in a proceeding to compel, by mandamus, the Secretary of State to seek to obtain $500,000 damages from the German Empire in redress of petitioner's alleged wrongful imprisonment while on a visit to that country, is not such as will bring the cause within the appellate jurisdiction over judgments of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia conferred upon the federal Supreme Court by D. C. Code, sec. 233, in cases in which the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, exceeds $5,000. U. S. v. Hay, (1904) 194 U. S. 373, 24 S. Ct. 681, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1025.

In criminal cases.—In Sinclair v. District of Columbia, (1904) 192 U. S. 16, 24 S. Ct. 212, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 322, it was said: "We were of opinion that section 8 of the Act establishing the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, and the Act of March 3, 1885, ch. 355, 23 Stat. L. 443, were the same in their meaning and legal effect. . . . The meaning of both statutes is that, in the cases enumerated, the limitation on the amount is removed, but both alike refer to cases where there is a pecuniary matter in dispute, measurable by some sum or value, and they alike have no application to criminal cases."

Validity of any authority exercised under the United States was not drawn in question so as to sustain the appellate jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court by a petition for mandamus to compel the restoration to her position in the classified civil service of a clerk whose contention was not that the President and his representatives were without authority to dismiss her, but that her dismissal was illegal because the requisite formalities prescribed by the civil service regulations were not observed. U. S. v. Taft, (1906) 203 U. S. 461, 27 S. Ct. 148, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 269.

Prize cases.—In U. S. v. Sampson, (1902) 19 App. Cas. 419, it was held that the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a District Court of the United States, had jurisdiction of a libel for the condemnation of prizes of war and to adjudicate the question of prize or no prize, and that an appeal from its decree would not lie to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, but must be taken direct to the federal Supreme Court.

Method of review.—Writ of error, and not appeal, is the only mode of review in a judgment of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, sustaining an assessment and award in condemnation proceedings instituted under the Act of Congress of June 6, 1900, 31 Stat. L. 668, ch. 810, in view of the provision of District of Columbia Code, sec. 233, quoted at the head of this note, because "the proceeding in question was legal in its nature." Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, (1904) 195 U. S. 322, 25 S. Ct. 28, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 219.

Vol. IV, p. 466. [District of Columbia court of appeals cases reviewable on certiorari, etc.]

This section is now embodied in Judicial Code, sec. 251, ante, p. 236 of this Supplement.

This statute authorizes the Supreme Court to issue writs of certiorari in cases made final in the Court of Appeals in the District of Columbia, to bring them up for review and determination, and such authority has been carried into section 234 of the District Code. Sinclair v. District of Columbia, (1904) 192 U. S. 16, 24 S. Ct. 212, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 322.

Table of certiorari cases.—See cases cited under this catchline in note to section 6 of the Circuit Court of Appeals Act of 1891, supra, this title, p. 1339.

Following are all the reported cases heard by the United States Supreme Court on certiorari to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia since the creation of the latter court.

Cases of importance.—Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, (1899) 174 U. S. 1, 19 S. Ct. 580, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 873, "a serious and important question" of the validity and construction of an Act of Congress.

Division of opinion in Court of Appeals in same case.—Winston v. U. S., (1899) 172 U.

S. 303, 19 S. Ct. 212, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 456 (conviction of murder); Baker v. Cummings, (1901) 181 U. S. 117, 21 S. Ct. 578, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 776 (judgment of dismissal as a bar); Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Wilson, (1903) 187 U. S. 467, 23 S. Ct. 189, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 261 (as to whether there can be a conditional delivery of a policy of insurance); Crawford v. U. S., (1909) 212 U. S. 183, 29 S. Ct. 260, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 465 (questions of criminal law and procedure); Gompers v. Bucks Stove, etc., Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 418, 31 S. Ct. 492, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 797 (determining validity of an injunction restraining continuance of a boycott, and reversing a judgment of imprisonment for contempt).

Other cases.—Willis v. Eastern Trust, etc., Co., (1898) 169 U. S. 295, 18 S. Ct. 347, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 752 (landlord and tenant); Roberts v. U. S., (1900) 176 U. S. 221, 20 S. Ct. 376, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 443 (audit certificates, mandamus to United States treasurer); U. S. v. Cadarr, (1905) 197 U. S. 475, 25 S. Ct. 487, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 842 (criminal case, motion to quash indictment, construction of District of Columbia Code); U. S. v. Evans, (1909) 213 U. S. 297, 29 S. Ct. 507, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 803 (constitutionality of an Act of Congress).

Vol. IV, p. 467, sec. 707.

The finality of a judgment of the Court of Claims cannot be contested by the defendant on account of the filing of amended findings of fact, where this was done at his own request in connection with a motion for a new trial and he also consequently took an appeal from the judgment after his motion for new trial was overruled. U. S. v. St. Louis, etc., Transp. Co., (1902) 184 U. S. 247, 22 S. Ct. 350, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 520.

Vol. IV, p. 467, sec. 709.

This section is re-enacted in the Judicial Code, sec. 237, ante, p. 230 of this Supplement, and is expressly repealed by section 297 of said Code, ante, p. 250.

I. GENERAL AUTHORITY TO REVIEW STATE COURT DECISIONS.

"The jurisdiction of this court to review the proceedings of the state courts, as we have had frequent occasion to declare, is not that of a general reviewing court in error, but is limited to the specific instances of denials of federal rights, whether those pertaining to the constitutionality of federal or state statutes, or to certain rights, immunities, and privileges of federal origin specially set up in the state court, and denied by the rulings and judgment of that court." Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, (1909) 212 U. S. 86, 29 S. Ct. 220, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 417.

as affecting the jurisdiction of this court under section 709." Barrington v. Missouri, (1907) 205 U. S. 483, 27 S. Ct. 582, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 890, dismissing a writ of error, although it was sued out by an alien who alleged violation of constitutional rights.

Who may invoke appellate jurisdiction.—A West Virginia County Court and its members have no personal interest in a controversy over the validity, under the Federal Constitution, art. 1, sec. 10, 8 Fed. Stat. Annot. 29, as affecting county bondholders, of a state statute limiting the amount which may be raised by taxation, so as to sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to review a judgment of the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals, awarding a mandamus to compel the County Court to change its assessment to conform to the requirements of the statute. Braxton County Ct. v. West Virginia, (1908) 208 U. S. 192, 28 S. Ct. 275, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 450, dismissing a writ of error, where the court said: "That the act of the state is charged to be in violation of the National Constitution, and that the charge is not frivolous, does not always give this court jurisdiction to review the judgment of a state court. The party raising the question of constitutionality and invoking our jurisdiction must be interested in, and affected adversely by, the decision of the state court sustaining the act, and the interest must be of a personal, and not of an official, nature."

Method of review.—"The only remedy to correct the decision of the highest court of the state is by writ of error, in chancery cases as well as in actions at law." Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Swanger, (1908) 157 Fed. 783, 789.

II. FINAL JUDGMENTS OR DECREES IN ANY SUIT IN THE HIGHEST COURT OF A STATE.

Final judgments.—The judgment of the highest court of a state, affirming, on a third appeal, a judgment of the trial court, entered on a verdict in favor of plaintiff, is the first final judgment in the action which is the subject of review in the federal Supreme Court, where the highest state court, on the first appeal, reversed the order of the lower court, granting a petition for the removal of the action to a federal Circuit Court, and remanded the case for trial, and, on the second appeal, reversed a judgment entered on a directed verdict in favor of defendant, although the court, on such third appeal, regarded itself as bound by its prior decision as the law of the case, and declined again to consider the federal question. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. McCabe, (1909) 213 U. S. 207, 29 S. Ct. 430, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 765.

A judgment of the highest state court reversing the decree of the trial court in an equity cause, and remanding the cause for further proceedings in harmony with its opinion, is not final in such a sense as will sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court, although equity causes are heard on appeal de novo in the state court, and the successful party is entitled to a decree in that court if he moves for it, where no such decree was applied for or rendered, and, under the state practice, newly discovered evidence may be introduced in the court below, and the pleadings amended after the cause is remanded. Schlusser v. Hemphill, (1905) 198 U. S. 173, 25 S. Ct. 654, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1000.

"There is a long line of decisions in that court [Supreme Court] to the effect that a judgment of a Supreme Court of a state reversing a judgment, order, or decree of a trial court, and remanding the case for farther proceedings either at law or in equity, is not a final decision, and cannot be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States." Morgan v. Thompson, (1903) 124 Fed. 203, 205, 59 C. C. A. 672, citing numerous cases. See further as to what constitutes finality for the purpose of appeal or error, note to section 6 of the Circuit Court of Appeals Act of 1891, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 510, supra, p. 1339.

Highest court of a state.—The federal Supreme Court has jurisdiction, upon writ of error, to re-examine the final judgment of a subordinate state court denying a federal right specially set up or claimed, if, under the local law, that court is the highest court of the state entitled to pass upon such claim of federal right. "This must be so, else it will be in the power of a state to so regulate the jurisdiction of its courts as to prevent this court from protecting rights secured by the Constitution, and improperly denied in a subordinate state court, although specially set up and claimed." Kentucky v. Powers, (1906) 201 U. S. 1, 5 Ann. Cas. 692, 26 S. Ct. 387, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 633.

An inferior state court is the final court of the state where the federal question involved can be decided, and therefore is the court to which a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court must be directed, where the highest state court, although discussing the federal question in its opinion, and declaring it to be without merit, dismissed a writ of error to the inferior court solely and expressly for want of jurisdiction. Western Union Tel. Co.

The judgment of the trial court was held to be that of the highest court of the state, for the purpose of a writ of error under section 709, where the highest state tribunal denied a writ of error to the trial court, under local practice, because the court thought the judgment was plainly right. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Crovo, (1911) 220 U. S. 364, 31 S. Ct. 399, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 498.

The Court of Civil Appeals of the state of Texas is the highest court of the state for the purpose of a review in the federal Supreme Court in a case in which the Supreme Court of the state has dismissed, for want of jurisdiction, an application to review the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals. Sullivan v. Texas, (1908) 207 U. S. 416, 28 S. Ct. 215, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 274.

III. FICTITIOUS OR MOOT QUESTIONS.

Generally.—The enactment by a state of a new inheritance tax law after a decision of the highest court of the state sustaining the previous legislation on that subject as against the contention that it denied the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment, does not convert such federal question into a moot question, so as to preclude a review by the federal Supreme Court, unless it is obvious that such new legislation relieved the plaintiffs in error from their obligations under the earlier law. Campbell v. California, (1906) 200 U. S. 87, 26 S. Ct. 182, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 382.

The federal Supreme Court may review a decision of a state court sustaining the enforcement against a railway company of an alleged charter obligation to pay over the surplus profits to the state, which could not have been reached except by erroneously construing the charter, without relying on subsequent legislation flagrantly repugnant to the Federal Constitution, and challenged for that reason, where the state court clearly did rely upon that legislation to some extent, although it put forward in its judgment the untenable construction more than the unconstitutional statutes. "To hold otherwise would open an easy method of avoiding the jurisdiction of this court." Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Indiana, (1904) 194 U. S. 579, 24 S. Ct. 767, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1124, otting to the quoted sentence, Louisville Gas Co. v. Citizens' Gas-Light Co., (1885) 115 U. S. 683, 697, 6 S. Ct. 265, 29 U. S. (L. ed.) 510.

Objections to the valuation of national bank stock for taxation, as being in excess of the actual value, exorbitant and unjust, and not in proportion to other like personal property but grossly in excess thereof, and constituting unfair and unequal taxation, do not raise any federal question that will sustain a writ of error to the state court, where no mention of the National Bank Act was made, nor of any right or privilege claimed under it, and the provisions of the United States Revised Statutes were not invoked, by name or otherwise, and there was no assertion that the local statutes under which the assessment was made were repugnant to R. S. sec. 5219, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 157, or to the Federal Constitution. Estherville First Nat. Bank v. Estherville, (1910) 215 U. S. 341, 30 S. Ct. 152, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 223.

A federal question may have been so explicitly foreclosed by prior decisions as to afford no basis for a writ of error under section 709. Leonard v. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 416, 25 S. Ct. 750, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1108.

A writ of error will not be dismissed on the ground that the federal question relied upon to confer jurisdiction has been so conclusively foreclosed by prior decisions of the federal Supreme Court as to cause it to be frivolous, where analysis and exposition are necessary in order to make clear the decisive effect of such prior decisions upon the issue presented, and there is some conflict in the opinions of the various state courts of last resort upon the question, and a division of opinion in the court below. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Melton, (1910) 218 U. S. 36, 30 S. Ct. 676, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 921.

Unsubstantial question.—The question whether the California legislature could enact the Act of April 2, 1866, ratifying conveyances made by the corporate authorities of the city of Monterey of pueblo lands confirmed to that city by the United States, and afterwards patented to it, its successors and assigns, was held not to be so far unsubstantial as to justify dismissal of a writ of error to a state court. Monterey v. Jacks, (1906) 203 U. S. 360, 27 S. Ct. 67, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 220.

IV. VALIDITY OF STATUTE OR TREATY OF, OR AUTHORITY EXERCISED UNDER, UNITED STATES.

Delegation of legislative power.—Whether or not legislative power was unconstitutionally delegated to the American Railway Association and the Interstate Commerce Commission by the provision of the Safety Appliance Act of March 2, 1893, ch. 196, sec. 5, 27 Stat. L. 531, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 755, that, after a date named, only cars with drawbars of uniform height shall be used in interstate commerce, and that the standard shall be fixed by the association and declared by the commission, was clearly a federal question, so as to sustain a writ of error under section 709. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Taylor, (1908) 210 U. S. 281, 28 S. Ct. 616, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1061.

Exclusive legislative power of Congress.—A contention, on a motion for a directed verdict, that the session to the United States in N. J. Act March 12, 1846, of jurisdiction over a certain strip of land at Sandy Hook, vested in the United States exclusive legislative jurisdiction over the littoral waters extending three miles to the eastward of the coast line, presents a question respecting the exclusive legislative power of Congress under U. S. Const., art. 1, sec. 8, cl. 17, which will sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. Hamburg-American Steamship Co. v.

Refusal to give effect to judicial proceedings of federal courts.—The contention that full faith and credit were not given to the judgment of a federal court dismissing an action by a foreign corporation because of its failure to register within the state before entering into the contract in suit, by a decision of a state court holding that such judgment was not a bar to a second action between the same parties upon the same contract, where the corporation had brought itself within the curative provisions of Pa. Act of May 23, 1907, was not so far frivolous as not to serve as the basis of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to the state court. West Side Belt R. Co. v. Pittsburgh Constr. Co., (1911) 219 U. S. 92, 31 S. Ct. 196, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 107.

Whether the provisions of Pa. Act of May 23, 1907, validating contracts of foreign corporations, extended to a contract which had previously been adjudged invalid by a federal court because of the corporation's failure to register within the state before entering into such contract, will be determined by the federal Supreme Court for itself on a writ of error to a state court, presenting the question whether full faith and credit were given to such judgment by the decision of the state court that it was not a bar to a second action between the same parties on the same contract, after the corporation had brought itself within the terms of such statute. West Side Belt R. Co. v. Pittsburgh Constr. Co., (1911) 219 U. S. 92, 31 S. Ct. 196, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 107.

"A judgment of a federal court awarding property or rights, when set up in a state court, if its effect is denied, presents a claim of federal right which may be protected in this court." Waterman v. Canal-Louisiana Bank, etc., Co., (1909) 215 U. S. 33, 30 S. Ct. 10, 13, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 80.

V. VALIDITY OF STATUTE OF, OR AUTHORITY EXERCISED UNDER, STATE.

Impairing contracts.—The affirmance by the highest state court of an order awarding a peremptory writ of mandamus to compel the reduction of railroad rates to conform to the schedule made by the Act under which the railroad was incorporated, on the ground that by its incorporation under that Act the company became subject to its provisions, is not based on nonfederal grounds so as to preclude a review in the federal Supreme Court, where the company relied upon the provisions of a prior Act authorizing the incorporation of the purchasers of a railroad after a sale in foreclosure proceedings, with the rights and privileges of the original company as a contract right, protected from impairment by the Federal Constitution. Grand Rapids, etc., R. Co. v. Osborn, (1904) 193 U. S. 17, 24 S. Ct. 310, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 598.

The question whether a provision in a railway charter exempting the company from liability for the death of any person in its service versa if contract rights are impaired, creating a contract right in favor of the state, and the contract right of the owner is not impaired, the decision is sufficient to sustain the writ of error under section 709. Texas, etc. R. Co. v. Mayor, (1911) 221 U. S. 408, 31 S. Ct. 534, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 704; Texas, etc. R. Co. v. Comm., (1911) 221 U. S. 417, 31 S. Ct. 544, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 714. Both cases holding, however, that the writ below decided correctly that no such contract right was created by the charter.

Whether or not municipal taxation under a subsequent statute is a point of law within the meaning of a movement by the lease of a municipality to pay the police taxes which shall become due on the land is a question which the federal Supreme Court will determine for itself on writ of error to a state court in a case involving the question of the impairment of contract obligations by the enforcement of the tax. J. W. Perry Co. v. Norfolk, (1911) 221 U. S. 472, 31 S. Ct. 465, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 549.

A decree of a state court adverse to the contention that, if the state constitution confers on one railway company an exemption from a special tax granted in aid of another railway company, it impairs contract obligations, is reviewable in the federal Supreme Court, although the state court rested its decision in part upon the ground that the latter railway company had not acquired all of its contract rights before the adoption of the state constitution. "Of course, this court must satisfy itself upon that point, and therefore has jurisdiction." Arkansas Southern R. Co. v. Louisiana, etc. R. Co., (1910) 218 U. S. 431, 31 S. Ct. 56, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1067, citing Sullivan v. Texas, (1908) 207 U. S. 416, 423, 28 S. Ct. 215, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 274, 277.

The contention that an attempt in the state constitution to limit taxation impairs the obligation of contracts with a municipal school board does not present a case for a writ of error to review a decree of a state court which refused mandamus to compel the levy of a tax to pay claims and judgments based upon such contracts, which rests mainly on the grounds that the relators were guilty of laches, and that the statute relied upon as authorizing such contracts did not empower the school board to make contracts in such wise as to bind the municipality to levy the tax, neither the constitution nor any subsequent legislation having been invoked or enforced by the court. Fisher v. New Orleans, (1910) 218 U. S. 438, 31 S. Ct. 57, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1069.

Only when a judgment of a state court gives effect to a law subsequent to that (or it may be a constitution) which it is alleged constitutes a contract can the federal Supreme Court review the judgment and decide the question of contract. Mobile, etc. R. Co. v. Mississippi, (1908) 210 U. S. 187, 28 S. Ct. 650, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1016.

Municipal legislation carried into effect by mandamus, which requires a railroad company to make repairs in a viaduct at its own expense, in accordance with plans adopted and approved by the municipal council, cannot be regarded as a mere repudiation by the municipality of its agreement to maintain the viaduct so as to prevent the appellate jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court over a state court invoked on the ground that contract obligations were thereby impaired. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Minnesota, (1908) 208 U. S. 343, 28 S. Ct. 341, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 630, citing Springfield St. Paul Gaslight Co. v. St. Paul, (1901) 191 U. S. 142, 21 S. Ct. 575, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 738, and Dawson v. Columbia Ave. Sav. Fund, etc. Co., (1905) 197 U. S. 178, 25 S. Ct. 439, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 713.

No federal question respecting the impairment of contract obligations, which will sustain a writ of error under section 709, is presented by the contention that the obligation of the contract made by bonds of the state is impaired by a joint resolution of the state legislature directing the state treasurer to write off the bonds in his office certain of such bonds, and to carry no longer such bonds on the books as a debt of the state, since such law merely directed a change of entries in the books of the treasurer, and could in no respect impair or affect the rights of the holders. Smith v. Jennings, (1907) 206 U. S. 274, 27 S. Ct. 610, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1061.

Decision giving effect to state law.—A decision of a state court dismissing, on the ground that the suit was one against the state, and therefore not within its jurisdiction, a bill which sought to enjoin a state oil inspector from enforcing a state inspection law, on the theory that such law, if applied to the facts in controversy, violated the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, was a decision giving effect to such law, and was reviewable by the federal Supreme Court under section 709. General Oil Co. v. Crain, (1908) 209 U. S. 211, 28 S. Ct. 475, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 754.

Regulation of interstate commerce.—The adequacy of the local facilities existing at a station at which a through interstate railroad train is required to stop by an order made under state authority, though not inherently a federal question, may be considered by the federal Supreme Court on writ of error to a state court in so far as the existence of such adequate local facilities is involved in the determination of the federal question as to whether the order does or does not directly regulate interstate commerce. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Wharton, (1907) 207 U. S. 328, 28 S. Ct. 121, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 230, citing Mississippi R. Commission v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1906) 203 U. S. 335, 27 S. Ct. 90, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 209.

Due process of law.—The contention that the due process of law clause in the Fourteenth Amendment was violated by West Va. Const., art. 13, and Code, ch. 105, for the forfeiture to the state of lands not listed by the owner for taxation for five successive years, with liberty to the owner to intervene and redeem, having been decided adversely in King v. Mullins, (1898) 171 U. S. 404, 18 S. Ct. 925, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 214, a writ of error based on that contention was dismissed for want of jurisdiction in King v. West Vir- ginia, (1910) 216 U. S. 92, 30 S. Ct. 225, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 396.

The due process of law clause in the Fourteenth Amendment does not authorize the federal court to review a conviction by a state court on account of errors involving the competency of jurors, or to determine whether a proposed execution of a death sentence, after the expiration of a reprieve, is in pursuance of law. In re Buchanan, (1895) 146 N. Y. 264, 40 N. E. 883.

The construction by the Iowa Supreme Court of the annual charge imposed by Iowa Code, sec. 5007, upon cigarette dealers and upon the real property and the owner thereof whereon cigarettes are sold, the payment of which is not to bar criminal proceedings, as being a tax upon the traffic, and not a penalty, was held not to be so clearly erroneous as to justify the federal Supreme Court in adopting a different construction on a writ of error to the state court, in which such statute is asserted to deny due process of law. Hodge v. Muscatine County, (1905) 196 U. S. 276, 25 S. Ct. 237, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 477.

The construction given by the Maryland Court of Appeals to Maryland Code 1904, art. 43, sec. 99, making it a misdemeanor to attempt to practice medicine without registration, as not being subject to the limitation of section 80 of that article, relating to the sending of notice to unregistered physicians, is conclusive upon the federal Supreme Court on writ of error to the state court. Watson v. Maryland, (1910) 218 U. S. 173, 30 S. Ct. 644, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 987.

Federal questions of serious import are not involved in contentions that riparian owners were denied due process of law or the equal protection of the laws by the decision of a state court awarding a municipality paramount rights in the waters of a stream under Spanish and Mexican laws, confirmed by the United States to the municipality as the successor of a Spanish pueblo. Los Angeles Farming, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles, (1910) 217 U. S. 217, 30 S. Ct. 452, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 736, dismissing a writ of error.

A specific contention on the trial of a criminal cause in a state court, that the denial to the accused of the benefit of his plea of former jeopardy operates to deprive him of his liberty without due process of law raises a federal question which will sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to review the judgment of the highest court of the state affirming the conviction below. Keerl v. Montana, (1909) 213 U. S. 135, 29 S. Ct. 469, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 734.

The contention that a state court, in appointing a receiver of a foreign corporation convicted of violating state anti-trust laws, upon the testimony already heard and the conviction already had, deprives the corporation of rights under the Fourteenth Amendment, presents no substantial question as to deprivation of due process of law. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, (1909) 212 U. S. 112, 29 S. Ct. 227, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 431, dismissing a writ of error.

The time or manner in which a state court sees fit to approve the bond of a receiver of the property of a corporation convicted of violating the state anti-trust laws does not present a substantial question as to due process of law so as to sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, (1909) 212 U. S. 112, 29 S. Ct. 227, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 431.

The decision of a state court will not be deemed to present a question respecting due process of law which will sustain a writ of error under section 709, on the theory that such decision gave retroactive effect to a statute passed since the argument of the appeal before the state court, where the language of the court's opinion may equally well be interpreted as a declination to pass upon a question not necessary to the decision, which had been set at rest for the future by legislation. Stickney v. Kelsey, (1908) 209 U. S. 419, 28 S. Ct. 508, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 863.

Questions respecting the impairment of contract obligations and the denial of due process of law because of the additional burden of taxation to which the citizens and taxpayers of a lesser city annexed under the authority of Pa. Act of Feb. 7, 1906, to an adjoining and larger city, would be subjected, was not so unsubstantial and devoid of all color of merit as to require the dismissal of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. Hunter v. Pittsburgh, (1907) 207 U. S. 161, 28 S. Ct. 40, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 161.

Demurring to an indictment in a state court on the ground that by reason of the inconsistency, multiplicity, and repugnancy of the different courts in such indictment the defendant is being proceeded against in violation of his constitutional right to be specially informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, does not raise a federal question. Barrington v. Missouri, (1907) 205 U. S. 483, 27 S. Ct. 582, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 890.

The contention that the proceedings taken under Conn. Gen. Stat., secs. 3694, 3695, by a railway company which was the lessee of another railway, and the owner of three-fourths of its stock, to condemn the outstanding shares owned by a person who refused to agree to the terms of purchase, violated the due process of law clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and impaired contract obligations, was held not so frivolous as to require the dismissal of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a state court. Offield v. New York, etc., R. Co., (1906) 203 U. S. 372, 27 S. Ct. 72, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 231.

VI. TITLE, RIGHT, PRIVILEGE, OR IMMUNITY CLAIMED UNDER CONSTITUTION, TREATY, OR STATUTE OF, OR AUTHORITY EXERCISED UNDER, UNITED STATES.

In general. — "Where a party to litigation in a state court insists, by way of objection to or requests for instructions, upon a construction of a statute of the United States which will lead, or on possible findings of fact from the evidence may lead, to a judgment in his favor, and his claim in this respect, being duly set up, is denied by the highest court of the state, then the question thus raised may be reviewed in this court. The plain reason is that, in all such cases, he has claimed in the state court a right or immunity under a law of the United States and it has been denied to him. . . . In no other manner can a uniform construction of the statute laws of the United States be secured so that they shall have the same meaning and effect in all the states of the Union." St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Taylor, (1908) 210 U. S. 281, 28 S. Ct. 616, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1061.

Assertion of right and immunity in general. — "A party who insists that a judgment cannot be rendered against him consistently with the statutes of the United States may be fairly held, within the meaning of section 709, to assert a right and immunity under such statutes, although the statutes may not give the party himself a personal or affirmative right that could be enforced by direct suit against his adversary." Nutt v. Knut, (1906) 200 U. S. 13, 26 S. Ct. 216, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 348.

Rights under federal statute in general. — A decision of a state court in a case in which rights under a statute of the United States were claimed by the defendant is reviewable in the federal Supreme Court, where that statute was referred to by the highest state court and was an element in its decision. Hammond v. Whittredge, (1907) 204 U. S. 538, 27 S. Ct. 396, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 606.

Under territorial statute. — A judgment of the Texas Supreme Court, which, reversing the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals of that state, affirmed the judgment of the trial court entered on a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in an action against a railway company for the negligent killing of an employee in the territory of New Mexico, is reviewable by the federal Supreme Court as necessarily deciding against a federal right specially set up, where the trial court sustained a demurrer to a plea setting up a defense under a statute for the territory, which, if applicable, was a complete bar to the action, because of noncompliance with its requirements, although the decision of the state Supreme Court proceeded upon the theory that the case was controlled by the federal Employers' Liability Act, which it held to be valid. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Sowers, (1909) 213 U. S. 55, 29 S. Ct. 397, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 695; El Paso, etc., R. Co. v. Gutierrez, (1909) 215 U. S. 87, 30 S. Ct. 21, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 106.

A claim by a railway company in a state court of immunity from liability for the negligent killing of an employee in the territory of New Mexico, because of noncompliance with the requirements of a statute of that territory governing actions for personal injuries received therein, presents a federal question, which, when adversely adjudicated, confers jurisdiction on the federal Supreme Court of a writ of error to the state court. El Paso, etc., R. Co. v. Gutierrez, (1909) 215 U. S. 87, 30 S. Ct. 21, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 106.

Mining claim. — The mere fact that the suit was brought under R. S. sec. 2326, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 35, to try adverse rights to a mining claim, does not necessarily involve a federal question so as to sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. McMillen v. Ferrum Min. Co., (1905) 197 U. S. 343, 25 S. Ct. 533, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 784.

Homestead exemption. — A decision of a state court sustaining a homestead exemption claimed under the state statutes, which rested on the effect, as res judicata, of an order of a court of bankruptcy sustaining such exemption in proceedings begun prior to a sale of the property to satisfy the lien of a general judgment, could not be reviewed on a writ of error under section 709, where the only federal right specially claimed, if any, was one of immunity from the discharge in bankruptcy. Smalley v. Laugenour, (1905) 196 U. S. 93, 25 S. Ct. 216, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 400, where the court said: "We are not able to perceive that the state Supreme Court denied in any way a right of plaintiffs in error specially set up or claimed under the Constitution or laws of the United States. All that was determined, and all that the state court was called on to determine, was the question of exemption under the state statutes. Its acceptance of the judgment of the federal court in that regard does not bring the case within section 709."

Under Oregon Donation Act, etc. — A decision of the Washington Supreme Court adverse to a claim founded upon the invalidity, under the Oregon Donation Act of Sept. 27, 1850, 9 Stat. L. 496, ch. 76, of a deed of the plaintiff's ancestor conveying land to the territory of Washington, and upon the incapacity of the territory to accept the deed under the Act of March 2, 1853, 10 Stat. L. 172, ch. 90, by which such territory was organized, was held reviewable on a writ of error under section 709. Sylvester v. Washington, (1909) 215 U. S. 80, 30 S. Ct. 25, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 101.

Under federal land patent. — The federal question presented by a claim of right and title under a patent from the United States to land within the place limits of the grant made by the Act of July 1, 1862, 12 Stat. L. 489, ch. 120, and the amendatory Act of July 2, 1864, 13 Stat. L. 356, ch. 216, in aid of branch railroads — which rested upon the theory that such grant was not one in presenti, and that therefore the title did not pass upon completion of the railroads and compliance with the terms and conditions of the grant, but the land remained in the jurisdiction of the Land Department, which, up to a short time before the execution of the patent, had assumed and exercised jurisdiction over controversies respecting the land — was not so frivolous as to require the dismissal of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to review a decision of a state court against the right or title claimed. Missouri Valley Land Co. v. Wiese, (1908) 208 U. S. 234, 28 S. Ct. 294, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 466; Missouri Valley Land Co. v. Wrich, (1908) 208 U. S. 250, 28 S. Ct. 299, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 473.

Under congressional grant.—Contentions in a suit between two railway companies, each claiming the same right of way through an Indian reservation, that the congressional grant to one company was abandoned by the grantee and that the circumstances show an estoppel to claim under it, do not present federal questions. Spokane, etc., R. Co. v. Washington, etc., R. Co., (1911) 219 U. S. 166, 31 S. Ct. 182, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 159.

Fifth Amendment.—No federal question which will confer jurisdiction on the federal Supreme Court of a writ of error under section 709 is involved in a contention in the highest state court that, by the judgment of the trial court, private property is taken for public use without just compensation, in violation of the Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, since this amendment operates solely as a restriction upon federal powers, and not upon those of the several states. Winous Point Shooting Club v. Caspersen, (1904) 193 U. S. 189, 24 S. Ct. 431, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 675.

No federal question which will sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court is involved in the contention that the defendant in a criminal case was compelled to be a witness against himself, contrary to the Fifth Amendment, since this amendment does not operate as a restriction of the powers of the state, but was intended to operate solely upon the federal government. Barrington v. Missouri, (1907) 205 U. S. 483, 27 S. Ct. 582, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 890.

Privilege or immunity under Constitution.—The judgment of the highest court of a state, sustaining, as a legitimate exertion of the police power of the state, a statute the validity of which was challenged as repugnant to the Federal Constitution, is reviewable in the federal Supreme Court by a writ of error. Western Turf Assoc. v. Greenberg, (1907) 204 U. S. 359, 27 S. Ct. 384, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 520.

Construction of Bankruptcy Act.—A judgment of the highest state court in favor of a trustee in bankruptcy in an action brought by him to recover the value of an alleged voidable preference may be reviewed by the federal Supreme Court as a decision against a federal right or immunity, specially set up or claimed, where the state court answered some of the defendant's contentions by the construction which it gave to the Bankruptcy Act. Eau Claire Nat. Bank v. Jackman, (1907) 204 U. S. 522, 27 S. Ct. 391, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 596.

An action brought by a trustee appointed under the bankruptcy law of the United States, seeking to recover what is asserted to be an asset of the bankrupt estate under that law, presents a federal question, and the denial of the asserted right is a denial of a right or title specially claimed under a law of the United States. Rector v. City Deposit Bank Co., (1906) 200 U. S. 405, 26 S. Ct. 289, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 527.

Claims by the United States, in proceedings under the supply lien law of a state, to establish the rights of creditors furnishing supplies for the construction of vessels building for the United States, that under the contract for the construction of one of the vessels the title vested in the government as fast as paid for; that a lien was reserved to the government under the contracts for building the other vessels superior to the claim of the supply lien creditors under the state law; that the right of the government to its superior claims could not be affected by, and was not subject to, such law; and that the state had no power to retard, impede, or control the operation of the federal government in making and carrying out such contracts—are assertions of rights and immunities, the creation of federal authority, and, when denied by a state court, present a case for writ of error under section 709. U. S. v. Ansonia Brass, etc., Co., (1910) 218 U. S. 452, 31 S. Ct. 49, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1107.

Liability of national bank officers.—The express denial of an immunity claimed in both the trial and appellate courts, under R. S. sec. 5239, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 180, by officers and directors of a national bank in respect to the rule of liability applied for making false official reports as to the bank's condition, is sufficient to sustain the exercise by the federal Supreme Court of its appellate jurisdiction over state courts. Yates v. Jones Nat. Bank, (1907) 206 U. S. 158, 27 S. Ct. 638, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1002.

The contention that the congressional consent in the Act of June 28, 1834, 4 Stat. L. 708, ch. 126, to the agreement or compact between the states of New Jersey and New York respecting their territorial limits and jurisdiction, vested exclusive jurisdiction in the federal government over the sea adjoining the two states, does not raise a federal question, where there is nothing in the agreement and confirmatory state statutes abdicating rights in favor of the United States, and the transaction simply amounted to fixing the boundaries between the two states. Hamburg-American Steamship Co. v. Grube, (1905) 196 U. S. 407, 25 S. Ct. 352, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 529.

Individual liability of national bank stockholders.—A decision of a state court that the statute of limitations applicable to the right to enforce the individual liability of stockholders in national banks is put in motion by a delay of the Comptroller of the Currency in making an assessment involves a federal question which will sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. Rankin v. Barton, (1905) 199 U. S. 228, 26 S. Ct. 29, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 163.

Under removal statute.—"Beyond peradventure a question of a federal nature . . . was raised by the contention, denied by the state court, that a right or privilege existed under a statute of the United States to remove the cause into the Circuit Court of the United States." Williams v. Pauls Valley First Nat. Bank, (1910) 216 U. S. 582, 30 S. Ct. 441, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 625.

Under Safety Appliance Act.—Where, in an action for injuries to a passenger, defendant alleged that its train, on which plaintiff was injured, was engaged in interstate commerce, and in accordance with Act of March 2, 1893, ch. 196, 27 Stat. L. 531, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 753, defendant had equipped all its passenger engines and cars with automatic couplers and driving wheel brakes, so required by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that such equipment greatly increased the hazard to passengers, which plaintiff assumed, and a judgment rendered against defendant was affirmed by the highest state court to which an appeal might be taken, the case was one in which defendant claimed an immunity under a statute of the United States, and was therefore reviewable under section 709. Mathew v. Wabash R. Co., (Mo. 1904) 81 S. W. 646.

Denial of equal protection of laws.—On a writ of error upon the contention that the exemption of banks or trust companies and bona fide mortgages from the operation of Conn. Pub. Acts 1907, ch. 238, prohibiting exacting more than fifteen per cent. on loans, or accepting a note for a greater amount than that actually loaned, with intent to evade this provision, denied the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by U. S. Const., Fourteenth Amendment, the court said: "The particular classification here assailed has not been the subject of express consideration in any prior decision of this court, and hence the power to make it cannot be said to have been so explicitly foreclosed as to cause contention on the subject to be obviously frivolous." Griffith v. Connecticut, (1910) 218 U. S. 563, 572, 31 S. Ct. 132, 134, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1151, 1155.

Giving effect to records, etc., of other states.—"When a party asserts that due faith and credit have not been given to a judgment rendered in an action between him and the other party, he asserts a right under the Constitution of the United States, and necessarily this raises a federal question." West Side Belt R. Co. v. Pittsburgh Constr. Co., (1911) 219 U. S. 92, 31 S. Ct. 196, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 107.

"We have repeatedly held that the mere construction by a state court of a statute of another state, without questioning its validity, does not, with possibly some exceptions, deny to it the full faith and credit demanded by the statute in order to give this court jurisdiction." Allen v. Alleghany Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 458, 25 S. Ct. 311, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 551. To the same point see Smithsonian Inst. v. St. John, (1909) 214 U. S. 19, 29 S. Ct. 601, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 892.

The exercise by a state court of its independent judgment in interpreting the statute of another state upon which the cause of action is based can present no federal question under the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution, where there is no local statute controlling the construction of statutes of other states, and no settled construction of the statute by the courts of the state enacting it is pleaded or proved. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Melton, (1910) 218 U. S. 36, 30 S. Ct. 676, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 921.

Whether or not a corporate contract entered into in contravention of the statutes regulating foreign corporations was, under the proper construction of such statutes, ipso facto void, and therefore unenforceable in the courts of another state, does not present a question under the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution which will sustain a writ of error under section 709. "The validity of these statutes was not denied. The case turned upon their construction and the effect to be given to them in another state." Allen v. Alleghany Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 458, 25 S. Ct. 311, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 551.

A decision of a state court sustaining the validity of a statute of another state, which is asserted to violate the constitution of that state, does not necessarily involve a decision respecting the full faith and credit to be given such constitution, so as to sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court, where the state court did not question the validity of the state constitution, but, rightly or wrongly, held that the statute was not repugnant to it. Smithsonian Inst. v. St. John, (1909) 214 U. S. 19, 29 S. Ct. 601, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 892.

The federal Supreme Court has jurisdiction of a writ of error sued out to review the decision of a state court adverse to the contention that no recovery against the plaintiff in error can be had if the judgment of a court of a sister state be given the full faith and credit to which it is entitled under the Constitution and laws of the United States. American Express Co. v. Mullins, (1909) 212 U. S. 311, 15 Ann. Cas. 536, 29 S. Ct. 381, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 525.

No refusal by the courts of one state to give full faith and credit to the judgment of that of another is shown, so as to give the federal Supreme Court jurisdiction to review their final judgment dismissing a proceeding by a wife to set aside a judgment annulling her marriage, because such judgment determined the question of the legality of her marriage against her, where it appears that such other court, being a court of competent jurisdiction, and having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, dismissed a suit by her for separate maintenance while she was living apart from her husband for alleged justifiable cause, in which the defense was that she never became the wife of defendant, because at the time of her alleged marriage to him she had a husband living, which allegation was supported by evidence at the hearing, although the dismissal might have been merely upon the ground that she was not justified in living apart from him, if she made no attempt to prove that it was in fact upon such ground. Everett v. Everett, (1909) 215 U. S. 203, 30 S. Ct. 70, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 158.

Under Enabling Act.—The claim of a right under an "authority exercised under the United States" was presented by a contention that a Montana statute was authorized by the Enabling Act of Feb. 22, 1889, 25 Stat. L. 676, ch. 180, and was therefore valid, even if repugnant to the constitution of that state. Montana v. Rice, (1907) 204 U. S. 291, 27 S. Ct. 281, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 490.

VII. DRAWN IN QUESTION OR SPECIALLY SET UP AND CLAIMED.

Necessity.—The appellate jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court under section 709 cannot be based upon the supposed denial of a federal right which was not urged in the trial court, or called to the attention of or decided by the state appellate court. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Slade, (1910) 216 U. S. 78, 30 S. Ct. 230, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 390.

A question which the federal Supreme Court can review on writ of error to a state court does not arise under the Act of March 2, 1893, ch. 196, 27 Stat. L. 531, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 753, requiring interstate carriers to equip their cars with automatic couplings, where no right under such Act, or dependent upon its construction, was specially set up or claimed, and denied by the state court. Southern R. Co. v. Carson, (1904) 194 U. S. 136, 24 S. Ct. 609, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 907.

The necessity of invoking the protection of the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, if the repugnancy to that clause of certain state legislation is to be considered by the federal Supreme Court on writ of error to a state court, is not obviated by a reference to the Fourteenth Amendment as invalidating such legislation. Cox v. Texas, (1906) 202 U. S. 446, 26 S. Ct. 672, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1009.

The refusal by an inferior state court of an application to remove a cause to a federal Circuit Court presents no federal question which will sustain a writ of error to review a judgment of the highest state court affirming the judgment below, where there is nothing in the record to indicate that the question of the right of removal was brought to the attention of the highest state court, and that court could not have considered the question even if presented, because, at the time the appeal from the final judgment was taken, it was too late to review the order refusing the removal. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. McDonald, (1909) 214 U. S. 191, 29 S. Ct. 546, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 963.

A decision of a state court that there was probable cause for beginning a trademark infringement suit in the federal courts in which a final decree was entered dismissing the bill on the merits after a temporary injunction had been dissolved is not reviewable in the federal Supreme Court, where the record does not show that any claim of right under the Federal Constitution or laws was made in the state court, on the theory that such court, by its reasoning, implies that it finds probable cause, in its own opinion, that the decree of the federal court was wrong, whereas not to assume it to be correct is to fail to give it the full faith and credit which R. S. sec. 905, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 37, requires. Burt v. Smith, (1906) 203 U. S. 129, 27 S. Ct. 37, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 121, dismissing a writ of error.

The defense to an action by a state to recover possession of a tract of land, so far as based upon a Spanish grant, involves no question of a federal nature which can be considered in the federal Supreme Court on writ of error to a state court, where neither the validity or construction of any treaty of the United States nor the validity of the grant were challenged. O'Connor v. Texas, (1906) 202 U. S. 501, 26 S. Ct. 726, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1120.

Time to raise question or make claim.—A federal question is presented in time and in the proper form by requested instructions in a state court, asserting rights under the Federal Constitution, which, if they actually exist, entitle the party asserting them to an instruction directing a verdict in its favor. National Mut. Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Brahan, (1904) 193 U. S. 635, 24 S. Ct. 532, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 823.

A federal question which will sustain a writ of error cannot be first raised in the assignment of errors in the federal Supreme Court. Mallors v. Commercial L. & T. Co., (1910) 216 U. S. 613, 30 S. Ct. 438.

Raising the federal question for the first time in the petition for a writ of error to a state court and in the accompanying assignment of errors is not sufficient to enable the federal Supreme Court to consider that question, even though another federal question has been properly raised and brought up by the same writ of error. Montana v. Rice, (1907) 204 U. S. 291, 28 S. Ct. 281, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 490.

In Rogers v. Clark Iron Co., (1910) 217 U. S. 589, 30 S. Ct. 693, the entire per curiam opinion was as follows: "Writ of error dismissed for want of jurisdiction. The case is reported below in (1908) 104 Minn. 198, where the facts are set forth at length. We hold that no federal question was decided either in express terms or by necessary implication, and that the attempt to raise a federal question was made in this court for the first time, which was too late."

The objection that the trustee in bankruptcy had no right to attack the validity of a chattel mortgage given by the bankrupt, because it did not appear that he represented any but simple contract creditors, is too late to be available on a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a state court, when the point was not made in the trial court. Frank v. Vollkommer, (1907) 205 U. S. 521, 27 S. Ct. 596, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 911.

The suggestion of a violation of a federal right, first made in a petition for the review, in the highest state court, of the judgment of an intermediate appellate court, is too late to serve as a basis for the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court, where it does not affirmatively appear that the state court passed upon the federal question, and the denial of the petition may well have been upon the ground that the question, not having been suggested in the court below, could not be made available on appeal. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. McGuire, (1905) 196 U. S. 128, 25 S. Ct. 200, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 413.

The suggestion of a federal question, first made in a petition for rehearing, filed in the highest state court, is too late to sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. Barrington v. Missouri, (1907) 205 U. S. 483, 27 S. Ct. 582, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 890.

A federal question, though first raised on a motion for rehearing in the highest state court, is in time to confer jurisdiction on the federal Supreme Court of a writ of error under section 709, where the state court entertained the motion and decided the question. Leigh v. Green, (1904) 193 U. S. 79, 24 S. Ct. 390, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 623; McKay v. Kalyton, (1907) 204 U. S. 458, 27 S. Ct. 346, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 566; Sullivan v. Texas, (1908) 207 U. S. 416, 28 S. Ct. 215, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 274; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Kentucky, (1910) 218 U. S. 551, 31 S. Ct. 95, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1147; Kentucky Union Co. v. Kentucky, (1911) 219 U. S. 140, 31 S. Ct. 171, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 137.

An attempt to assign new errors in a petition for rehearing in a state court which is overruled without an opinion passing on federal questions cannot avail to import such questions into the record so as to sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to the state court. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, (1909) 212 U. S. 112, 29 S. Ct. 227, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 431.

"It is not enough that the federal question was first presented by a petition for rehearing unless that question was thereupon considered and passed on adversely by the court. Corkran Oil, etc., Co. v. Arnaudet, (1905) 199 U. S. 182, 26 S. Ct. 41, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 143." Montana v. Rice, (1907) 204 U. S. 291, 27 S. Ct. 281, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 490.

"It has been many times held in this court that an attempt to introduce a federal question into the record for the first time by a petition for rehearing is too late. . . . There is an exception to this rule when it appears that the court below entertained the motion for rehearing, and passed upon the federal question. But it must appear that such federal question was in fact passed upon in considering the motion for rehearing; if not, the general rule applies. Mallett v. North Carolina, (1901) 181 U. S. 589, 21 S. Ct. 730, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 1015; Leigh v. Green, (1904) 193 U. S. 79, 24 S. Ct. 390, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 623; Corkran Oil, etc., Co. v. Arnaudet, (1905) 199 U. S. 182, 26 S. Ct. 41, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 143, 144; McMillen v. Ferrum Min. Co., (1905) 197 U. S. 343, 25 S. Ct. 533, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 784; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, (1909) 212 U. S. 112, 29 S. Ct. 227, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 431, 434." Forbes v. Virginia State Council, (1910) 216 U. S. 396, 30 S. Ct. 295, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 534.

A federal question first raised by a petition for a rehearing in the highest state court is too late to support the appellate jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court, where the state court, in denying the petition, made no reference to the federal question. McMillen v. Ferrum Min. Co., (1905) 197 U. S. 343, 25 S. Ct. 533, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 784.

Counsel's inadvertence in relying in the state court on the Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution as invalidating a provision of the state constitution was not corrected in time to sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court, by alleging a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment in a petition for rehearing in the highest state court, which was denied without any observations. Corkran Oil, etc., Co. v. Arnaudet, (1905) 199 U. S. 182, 26 S. Ct. 41, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 143.

An order of the highest state court, made in passing upon a petition for rehearing, which recites that "on mature consideration" the prayer of said petition is denied, does not show that the court passed upon the federal questions first raised by such petition, so as to sustain a writ of error under section 709. Forbes v. Virginia State Council, (1910) 216 U. S. 396, 30 S. Ct. 295, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 534, where the court said: "Except that the order is said to be upon 'mature' consideration, it is almost word for word the order on rehearing reviewed in McCorquodale v. Texas, (1908) 211 U. S. 432, 29 S. Ct. 146, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 269, which was held to amount to no more than a denial of the motion."

An affidavit in support of a petition for rehearing in the highest state court, stating that, in the brief as well as upon oral argument, a specified federal question had been presented and dismissed, will not support a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court, where the state court denied the petition, with the statement that no federal question had been raised in that court, which may be construed as denying that any such matter was brought to its attention, as stated in the affidavit, or as holding that it presented no federal question. Smithsonian Inst. v. St. John, (1909) 214 U. S. 19, 29 S. Ct. 601, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 892.

The federal Supreme Court has no jurisdiction of a writ of error in a case in which the only suggestion that a federal question was involved was put forward after the highest state court had affirmed, on a second appeal, a judgment rendered by the court below in strict obedience to its mandate, compliance with such mandate being in fact the only question open to and determined by the highest court. Bonner v. Gorman, (1909) 213 U. S. 86, 29 S. Ct. 483, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 709.

The proper way to raise the question or make the claim. — In respect of a case in the second class of those provided for in section 709, viz., "where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of," etc., the court said: "It has been frequently held that in cases coming within this class less particularity is required in asserting the federal right than in cases of the third class, wherein a right, title, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the United States, and the decision is against such right, title, privilege, or immunity. In the latter class the statute requires such right or privilege to be 'specially set up and claimed.' Under the second class it may be said to be the result of the rulings in this court that if the federal question appears in the record in the state court, and was decided, or the decision thereof was necessarily involved in the case, the fact that it was not specially set up will not preclude the right of review here. Columbia Water Power Co. v. Columbia Electric St. R., etc., Co., (1899)

172 U. S. 475 (19 S. Ct. 247, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 521), and cases cited on page 488. Nevertheless, it is equally well settled that the right of review dependent upon the adverse decision of a federal question exists only in those cases wherein a decision of the question involved was brought, in some proper manner, to the attention of the court, and decided, or it appears that the judgment rendered could not have been given without deciding it." Harding v. Illinois, (1904) 196 U. S. 78, 25 S. Ct. 176, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 394.

"If a party relies upon a federal right, he must specially set it up, and a denial of liability under the law is not a compliance with that requirement." Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, (1907) 204 U. S. 551, 27 S. Ct. 401, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 612.

The mere claim of a right under the Constitution of the United States in the objections filed to the confirmation of an assessment for a public improvement, which was never afterwards brought to the attention of the trial court or the Supreme Court of the state, is not sufficient to sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to the state court. Hulbert v. Chicago, (1906) 202 U. S. 275, 26 S. Ct. 617, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1026.

Statements in the writ of error and the petition for citation are insufficient to show that a federal question was raised and decided by a state court which will sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. Hulbert v. Chicago, (1906) 202 U. S. 275, 26 S. Ct. 617, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1026.

The defense in an action against the maker of a promissory note given in consideration of a promise to have cigars called for by a certain contract manufactured in Key West, that it was contemplated that such cigars were to be removed from the factory without compliance with the regulations prescribed by R. S. secs. 3390, 3393, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 745, 747, does not amount to the special assertion of a right, title, privilege, or immunity under a federal statute, within the meaning of section 709, since defendant could derive no personal rights under those sections to enforce the repudiation of his note, even though, on grounds of public policy, it was illegal and void. Allen v. Arguimbau, (1905) 198 U. S. 149, 25 S. Ct. 622, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 990.

A showing at every stage of the litigation in the state courts of the intention of a national bank to rely upon the United States banking laws for immunity against liabilities arising out of the ownership of shares in a partnership is sufficient to sustain the appellate jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court, although the bank did not, in the first instance, anticipate the specific and qualified form in which the immunity finally was denied—especially where the highest state court, by a certificate, made part of its record and judgment, stated that the federal question was involved. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Wehrmann, (1906) 202 U. S. 295, 26 S. Ct. 613, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1036.

Where it clearly and unmistakably appears from the opinion of the state Supreme Court that the federal question was assumed to be in issue was decided against the claim of federal right, and that the decision of the question was essential to the judgment rendered, this is enough to give the federal Supreme Court authority to examine that question on a writ of error. Montana v. Rice, (1907) 204 U. S. 291, 27 S. Ct. 281, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 490; Chambers v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1907) 207 U. S. 142, 28 S. Ct. 34, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 143.

An assignment of error in a state court which has refused to give effect to a judgment of a federal Circuit Court in deciding a controversy before it, which states the refusal of the trial court to give proper and full credit to the judgment of the Circuit Court, thereby denying to the complaining party "a right arising under the authority of the United States," does not lack certainty of specification, so as to prevent the federal Supreme Court from taking jurisdiction of the cause. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Kirven, (1909) 215 U. S. 252, 30 S. Ct. 78, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 179.

A decision of the Michigan Supreme Court that a foreign mutual insurance company which had not been authorized to do business in the state as provided by the state statutes could not maintain a suit to collect assessments due on a policy issued by one of its agents in another state on request of an insurance broker in Michigan who was unable to place the whole line in his own authorized companies, could not be reviewed in the federal Supreme Court, where the only showing of a federal question raised before judgment was made by a request for a finding as matter of law that the state statutes do not and could not under the Federal Constitution prohibit the insured from going or sending outside the state and there procuring insurance of its property located in the state from an insurance company not authorized to do business therein, which is entirely inadequate for the purpose. Swing v. Weston Lumber Co., (1907) 205 U. S. 275, 27 S. Ct. 497, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 799.

The objection that no federal right was "specially set up and claimed" within the meaning of section 709 could not successfully be maintained, where judicial proceedings in New Jersey were clearly relied upon in New York by executors in an "appeal to the surrogate" as a defense to the assessment of the New York transfer tax, although such right was not in terms stated to be one claimed under the Federal Constitution—especially where the constitutional right was specifically claimed in writing while the surrogate still had the "appeal" under consideration, and its denial was made the subject of exceptions. Tilt v. Kelsey, (1907) 207 U. S. 43, 28 S. Ct. 1, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 95.

References to the Dartmouth College case in the opinions of the state courts in discussing the question whether a certain educational institution is public or private, the decision of which question would determine the validity of state legislation under the state constitution, do not show that the contract clause of the Federal Constitution was relied upon to invalidate such legislation, so as to sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. Osborne v. Clark, (1907) 204 U. S. 565, 27 S. Ct. 319, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 619.

The assertion, on a motion for a new trial, that a state statute is contrary to the Federal Constitution, without pointing out the provision of that instrument which it is claimed to violate, does not present a federal question which will confer jurisdiction of a writ of error under section 709. Harding v. Illinois, (1904) 196 U. S. 78, 25 S. Ct. 176, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 394.

The full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution must be pleaded, or the attention of the court below directed to the fact that, in connection with the proper construction of a statute of another state, reliance was placed upon that clause, in order to present a federal question for review. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Melton, (1910) 218 U. S. 36, 30 S. Ct. 676, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 921.

In a criminal case in a state court the judgment of the state Supreme Court did not contain the slightest allusion to any federal question, but in a statement in a bill of exceptions allowed by the state Supreme Court it appeared that exceptions were taken to certain parts of the charge to the jury, because they "in effect deprived the plaintiff in error of his liberty without due process of law," and that the question thus raised was discussed before the Supreme Court of the state. Dismissing a writ of error, the federal Supreme Court said: "Something more than this vague and inferential suggestion of a right under the Constitution of the United States must be presented to the state courts to give us the limited authority to review their judgments which exists under the Constitution and is regulated by section 709 of the Revised Statutes. A mere claim in the court below that there has been a denial of due process of law does not of itself raise a federal question with sufficient distinctness to give us jurisdiction to consider whether there has been a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution." Thomas v. Iowa, (1908) 209 U. S. 263, 28 S. Ct. 487, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 783.

The question as to the validity of a state law under the Federal Constitution is not necessarily involved so as to sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a state court merely because the state law logically might have been assailed as invalid under the Federal Constitution upon grounds more or less similar to those actually taken. Osborne v. Clark, (1907) 204 U. S. 565, 27 S. Ct. 319, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 619.

A carrier's denial that "it was bound by law," as alleged by complainant, to receive, as a connecting and ultimate carrier, a certain interstate shipment, and forward and deliver it to its ultimate destination, does not amount to the assertion of a right under the Act to regulate commerce, so as to sustain a writ of error to review the judgment of a state court adverse to such contention. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, (1907) 204 U. S. 551, 27 S. Ct. 401, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 612.

Must appear in record.—Neither the petition for a rehearing, nor the petition for the writ of error, nor the assignments of error in the federal Supreme Court, nor the certification of briefs by the clerk of the state court, can cure the failure of the record to show that a federal question was raised and decided which would confer jurisdiction on the federal Supreme Court of a writ of error to the state court. Harding v. Illinois, (1904) 196 U. S. 78, 25 S. Ct. 176, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 394.

"Neither the petition for writ of error in the state court after judgment nor the assignments of error in this court can supply deficiencies in the record of the state court, if such exist." Appleby v. Buffalo, (1911) 221 U. S. 524, 31 S. Ct. 699, 701, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 838.

"In such cases it is thoroughly well settled that the record of the state court must disclose that the right so set up and claimed was expressly denied, or that such was the necessary effect, in law, of the judgment. Sayward v. Denny, (1895) 158 U. S. 180, 183, 15 S. Ct. 777, 39 U. S. (L. ed.) 941, 942; Harding v. Illinois, (1904) 196 U. S. 78, 25 S. Ct. 176, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 394; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, (1909) 212 U. S. 86, 97, 29 S. Ct. 220, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 417, 424." Appleby v. Buffalo, (1911) 221 U. S. 524, 31 S. Ct. 699, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 838.

"In any of the classes of cases mentioned in section 709 it is essential that the record disclose that the federal question involved was decided, or that the judgment necessarily involved the federal right, and decided it adversely to the claim of the plaintiff in error." Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. McDonald, (1909) 214 U. S. 191, 29 S. Ct. 546, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 963.

"It is well settled in this court that a review of the judgment of a state court is confined to the assignments of error made and passed upon in the judgment of the state court brought here for review. The assignment of errors in this court cannot bring into the record any new matter for our consideration. Harding v. Illinois, (1904) 196 U. S. 78, 25 S. Ct. 176, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 394." Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, (1909) 212 U. S. 112, 29 S. Ct. 227, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 431.

A motion to quash an indictment against a negro for disqualification of the grand jurors, who must be electors, because of a change in the state constitution respecting the qualifications of electors, alleged to violate the Act of Congress of June 25, 1868, 15 Stat. L. 73, ch. 70, does not present any question of the denial of a federal right, where there is nothing in the record to show that the grand jury as actually impeached contained any person who was not qualified as an elector under the earlier constitution, or that it was so made up as to exclude negro citizens on account of their race. Franklin v. South Carolina, (1910) 218 U. S. 161, 30 S. Ct. 640, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 980.

An order of the highest court of a state, on a motion for rehearing, which recites that the cause came on to be heard on such motion, and, "the same being considered by the court, said motion is overruled," does not show that the court passed on the federal question first raised by such petition; "it expresses no more than would be implied from a simple denial of the motion." McCorquodale v. Texas, (1908) 211 U. S. 432, 29 S. Ct. 146, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 269.

Assignments of error which simply allege in various forms that the state court erred in its decision of the cause present no federal question for consideration on a writ of error under section 709. Stickney v. Kelsey, (1908) 209 U. S. 419, 28 S. Ct. 508, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 863.

The federal Supreme Court is without jurisdiction on a writ of error to a state court to consider a federal question entirely outside the record and having no connection with any federal question which is raised in the record. Hunter v. Pittsburgh, (1907) 207 U. S. 161, 28 S. Ct. 40, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 151.

The petition for a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a state court, and the assignment of errors therein, form no part of the record on which to determine whether a federal question was decided by the state court. Corkran Oil, etc., Co. v. Arnau-det, (1905) 199 U. S. 182, 26 S. Ct. 41, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 143.

The fact that the chief justice of the highest state court allowed a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court does not help out the failure of the record to show that a federal question was raised and decided. Hulbert v. Chicago, (1906) 202 U. S. 275, 26 S. Ct. 617, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1026.

Effect of certificate from state court.—"Nothing is more firmly established" than that a certificate of the presiding judge of a state court that a federal question which was first raised by a petition for rehearing was duly considered and decided cannot confer jurisdiction on the federal Supreme Court of a writ of error to the state court, where, from the face of the record proper and from the opinions, the reasonable inference is that the court may have denied the application in the mere exercise of its discretion, or may have declined to pass upon the federal question in terms because it was suggested too late. Fulleton v. Texas, (1905) 196 U. S. 192, 25 S. Ct. 221, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 443.

"It is elementary that the certificate of a court of last resort of a state may not import a federal question into a record where otherwise such question does not arise; it is equally elementary that such a certificate may serve to elucidate the determination whether a federal question exists." Rector v. City Deposit Bank Co., (1906) 200 U. S. 405, 26 S. Ct. 289, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 527.

The certificate of the chief justice of the highest court of a state cannot help out the total failure of the record to show that a federal question was raised which would sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, (1907) 204 U. S. 551, 27 S. Ct. 401, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 612.

The certificate of the chief justice of the highest state court that the judgment of that court denied a title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up and claimed under a federal statute is not in itself sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the federal Supreme Court of a writ of error to that court. Allen v. Arguimbau, (1905) 198 U. S. 149, 25 S. Ct. 623, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 990.

The certificate of a state court that the defendant railway company, in a suit to recover damages for the infection of cattle because of a violation of the quarantine regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture under cover of the Act of Feb. 2, 1903, ch. 349, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 34, insisted that such statute was constitutional, and that, even if unconstitutional, it did not authorize such regulations or give a remedy in damages, removes any doubt as to whether a federal question was raised within the meaning of section 709, where, after a demurrer to the answer of the railway company setting forth the unconstitutionality of the law and the action of the secretary thereunder had been sustained, verdict and judgment were rendered against the defendant. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McKendree, (1906) 203 U. S. 514, 27 S. Ct. 153, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 298; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Edwards, (1906) 203 U. S. 531, 27 S. Ct. 159, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 305.

A certificate of the highest court of a state to the effect that it necessarily considered the federal question relied upon to sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court, which the record shows was raised, removes any objection that such question was raised too late under the local procedure. Cincinnati, etc., Packet Co. v. Bay, (1906) 200 U. S. 179, 26 S. Ct. 208, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 428.

The certificate of a state court of last resort may serve to remove any doubt whether rights under the federal bankrupt law were so relied upon and passed upon in affirming, without opinion, a judgment dismissing a suit brought by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover an alleged asset of the bankrupt estate, as to sustain a writ of error under section 709. Rector v. City Deposit Bank Co., (1906) 200 U. S. 405, 26 S. Ct. 289, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 527.

VIII. DECISION OF STATE COURT.

Must be adverse to right claimed.—Whether or not a statute of a sister state, alleged to create contract obligations protected against impairment by the contract clause of the Federal Constitution, has been repealed by subsequent legislation, presents no federal question, where there was neither allegation nor proof that the court of last resort in the state where the legislation was enacted had considered the question or made any ruling upon it. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, (1911) 221 U. S. 408, 31 S. Ct. 534, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 789; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Gross, (1911) 221 U. S. 417, 31 S. Ct. 536, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 796.

Decision when adverse.—A decision of a state court that the statute of limitations making adverse possession of real property for seven years a bar to its recovery operates to defeat an action brought under R. S. sec. 2326, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 35, to try title to conflicting mining claims, in which the defeated party relied on the relocation, under R. S. sec. 2324, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 19, of a forfeited claim, necessarily involves a denial of rights asserted by him under the latter section so as to make a case for a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court, where the state court treated as irrelevant and immaterial evidence tending to show that the premises in dispute were embraced in the forfeited location, and that possession of that claim was held and retained from a time at least contemporaneous with the initiation of the conflicting locations almost up to the relocation. Lavagnino v. Uhlig, (1905) 198 U. S. 443, 25 S. Ct. 716, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1119.

An adequate presentation of a federal question to a state court to make a case for a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court sufficiently appears where the record clearly shows that the trial court considered that the unsuccessful party was specially claiming rights under R. S. sec. 2326, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 35, authorizing an adverse of an application for a patent to mineral lands, and the highest state court necessarily acted upon that assumption in delivering its opinion. Lavagnino v. Uhlig, (1905) 198 U. S. 443, 25 S. Ct. 716, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1119.

A decision sustaining the validity, under the ex post facto clause of the Federal Constitution, of Fla. Act of May 30, 1901, amending Fla. Rev. Stat., sec. 970, so as to prevent collateral attack of a judgment for a disqualification which does not appear of record in the cause, is not so necessarily involved in the denial by the highest state court of a petition to vacate a decree entered before the amendment, for the relationship existing between the judges and one of the parties, which was not known at the time, as to sustain a writ of error under section 709. Caro v. Davidson, (1905) 197 U. S. 197, 25 S. Ct. 428, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 723.

A decree of the state court requiring defendants to vacate certain lands, and enjoining them from further mining thereon, which was the relief prayed in a bill proceeding on the theory that the corporation holding a mining lease under which defendants justified their occupation as its agents was no longer in existence, is not reviewable in the federal Supreme Court as involving a denial of the claim that in proceeding to determine the case without making the corporation a party defendant it will be deprived of its property without due process of law, since, not being a party, the rights of the corporation are not affected by such decree. Iron Cliffs Co. v. Negaunee Iron Co., (1905) 197 U. S. 463, 25 S. Ct. 474, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 836.

The question whether a state court, consistently with the Act to regulate commerce, can grant relief to a shipper because of the exaction by a common carrier of an alleged unreasonable freight rate for an interstate shipment, when such rate has been filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and promulgated as provided by the Act to regulate commerce, and has not been found to be unreasonable by the commission, will sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a state court, where such question was presented by the pleadings, was passed upon by the trial court, was expressly and necessarily decided by the highest state court, and is essentially involved in the case. Texas, etc., v. R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 426, 27 S. Ct. 350, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 553.

Other grounds of decision.—"It is well settled in this court that where a state court decides a case upon an independent ground not within the federal objections taken, and that ground is sufficient to maintain the judgment, this court will not review the case. Leathe v. Thomas, (1907) 207 U. S. 93, 28 S. Ct. 30, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 118; Eustis v. Bolles, (1893) 150 U. S. 361, 14 S. Ct. 131, 37 U. S. (L. ed.) 1111; Giles v. Teasley, (1904) 193 U. S. 146, 24 S. Ct. 359, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 655." Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, (1909) 212 U. S. 112, 29 S. Ct. 227, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 431.

"Where the disposition of a federal question was not necessary to the determination of the cause, and the judgment is based on a distinct ground or grounds broad enough to sustain it, over which this court has no jurisdiction, the writ of error cannot be maintained." Rogers v. Jones, (1909) 214 U. S. 198, 29 S. Ct. 635, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 965.

"When a state court decides a case upon two grounds, one federal and the other non-federal, this court will not disturb the judgment if the nonfederal ground, fairly construed, sustains the decision." Berea College v. Kentucky, (1908) 211 U. S. 45, 29 S. Ct. 33, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 81.

The federal Supreme Court will not take jurisdiction where the judgment of the state court rests on two grounds, one of which does not involve a federal question, or where it does not appear on which of two grounds the judgment was based, and the nonfederal ground is sufficient in itself to sustain the judgment. Allen v. Arguimbau, (1905) 198 U. S. 149, 25 S. Ct. 622, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 990.

"It is not enough that a right under the Constitution of the United States was specially set up and claimed. It must be made manifest either that the right was denied in fact, or that the judgment could not have been rendered without denying it." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wilson, (1909) 213 U. S. 52, 29 S. Ct. 403, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 693.

"According to the well-settled doctrine of this court with regard to cases coming from state courts, unless a decision upon a federal question was necessary to the judgment, or in fact was made the ground of it, the writ of error must be dismissed. And even when an erroneous decision upon a federal question is made a ground, if the judgment also is supported upon another which is adequate by itself, and which contains no federal question, the same result must follow, as a general rule. Moreover, ordinarily this court will not inquire whether the decision upon the matter not subject to its revision was right or wrong." Arkansas Southern R. Co. v. German Nat. Bank, (1907) 207 U. S. 270, 28 S. Ct. 78, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 201.

"Of course, there might be cases where, although the decision put forward other reasons, it would be apparent that a federal question was involved, whether mentioned or not. It may be imagined, for the sake of argument, that it might appear that a state court, even if ostensibly deciding the federal question in favor of the plaintiff in error, really must have been against him upon it, and was seeking to evade the jurisdiction of this court. If the ground of decision did not appear and that which did not involve a federal question was so palpably unfounded that it could not be presumed to have been entertained, it may be that this court would take jurisdiction. Johnson v. Risk, (1890) 137 U. S. 300, 307, 11 S. Ct. 111, 34 U. S. (L. ed.) 683." Leathe v. Thomas, (1907) 207 U. S. 93, 28 S. Ct. 30, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 118.

A writ of error to review a decision of a state court upholding a seizure, under the state laws, of intoxicating liquors shipped C. O. D. into that state from another state, on the ground that the sale was completed in the former state, will not be dismissed on the theory that its ruling rests upon a nonfederal ground broad enough to sustain it, where the protection of the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution was directly invoked in the state court. American Express Co. v. Iowa, (1905) 196 U. S. 133, 25 S. Ct. 182, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 417; Adams Express Co. v. Iowa, (1905) 196 U. S. 147, 25 S. Ct. 185, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 424.

The federal Supreme Court is without jurisdiction to review the judgment of a state court sustaining a demurrer to the petition in an action to recover damages for the refusal of a board of registrars to register a negro as an elector, on the ground that, conceding the truth of the averments of the petition that such board was appointed and qualified under a state constitution adopted for the purpose of disfranchising negroes, in violation of U. S. Const., 14th and 15th Amendments, no damage has been suffered because no refusal to register by a board constituted in defiance of the Federal Constitution could disqualify a legal voter otherwise entitled to exercise the elective franchise, since this amounts to a decision upon an independent nonfederal ground, sufficient to sustain the judgment without reference to the federal question presented. Giles v. Teasley, (1904) 193 U. S. 146, 24 S. Ct. 359, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 655.

A denial by a state court of a writ of mandamus to compel a board of registrars to register a negro as an elector, because the board would have no existence and no duties to perform if the truth of the allegations of the petition as to the unconstitutional character, under the 14th and 15th Amendments, of the registration authorized under the Alabama Constitution be admitted, rests upon a ground adequate to sustain it, and wholly independent of the federal rights claimed, and is therefore not reviewable on writ of error under section 709. Giles v. Teasley, (1904) 193 U. S. 146, 24 S. Ct. 359, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 655, dismissing a writ of error.

The assertion that state statutes have undertaken to confer water rights upon a municipality, and were given such effect in violation of federal rights of riparian owners, cannot serve as the basis of a writ of error under section 709, where the state court holds that the municipal rights were not determined by the effect of those statutes, but upon the right and title secured by Spanish and Mexican laws, and the subsequent confirmation thereof under a federal statute.

The ruling of a state court that the power to penalize a railway company for failure to furnish cars on demand arose from a state statute instead of from a rule adopted by the railroad commission, which was challenged as repugnant to the Federal Constitution, does not eliminate the federal questions from the case, so as to require the dismissal of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court, where the constitutional defenses asserted by the pleadings and embraced in the instructions asked and refused were not confined to the mere order as such, but plainly challenged the power of the state to inflict the penalty for the failure to furnish the cars under the circumstances disclosed by the pleadings. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Arkansas, (1910) 217 U. S. 136, 30 S. Ct. 476, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 698.

The decision of a state court sustaining its jurisdiction of a suit against a foreign railway corporation, commenced by attaching a box car belonging to that company, does not involve a ruling upon the company's contention that the levy upon such car was invalid, as burdening interstate commerce, where the court did not pass upon the question whether the levy of the attachment was regular, or whether the property seized was subject to levy, but held, construing the state statutes relating to attachments and the decisions of the highest court of that state, that it was unnecessary to decide those questions, because they had been waived by the conduct of the railway company in giving a replevy bond and answering without protestation. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Slade, (1910) 216 U. S. 78, 30 S. Ct. 230, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 390.

A judgment of a state court dismissing a suit founded upon the making and approval of a plat of a town site, although resting in some respects upon the proposition that, under the Idaho Act of Jan. 8, 1873, enacted pursuant to R. S. sec. 2387, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 344, to provide for the disposal of the land, there was no power given to make a survey or plat which did not conform to the lines of occupation, is reviewable in the federal Supreme Court, where the basis of the suit is that the federal laws authorize an official ascertainment of boundaries; that equitable rights under those laws vest upon condition that the owners, within a reasonable time, have their rights confirmed by the trustee upon an official survey; and that those laws require each town-site occupant to see that the official ascertainment is true before accepting confirmation. More than a mere construction of the Idaho statute is involved. Scully v. Squier, (1909) 215 U. S. 144, 30 S. Ct. 51, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 131.

A decree of a state court dismissing the bill in a suit to remove a cloud on title is not reviewable in the federal Supreme Court because of a ruling that an execution sale by a federal marshal, relied upon as the foundation of title, was made at the wrong place, where the decree is also based upon the grounds that the alleged return on the writ of fieri facias did not describe the lands in controversy, that title had not been deraigned as required by the state statute under which the suit was brought, and that the suit was barred by the state statute of limitations. Rogers v. Jones, (1909) 214 U. S. 196, 29 S. Ct. 635, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 965.

The refusal of a state court to permit the filing of a plea setting up a federal question does not necessarily involve a decision of such question so as to sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court, where the state court may have refused such permission either because the plea was not filed until more than nine months after the declaration, and not until the case was called for trial, or because such plea, which went in terms to the whole declaration, and prayed judgment, was clearly bad as to the second count in the declaration. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wilson, (1909) 213 U. S. 52, 29 S. Ct. 403, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 693.

A state court, by resting its decision in a suit to require railway companies to construct their railroad through a specified county seat, and to restrain them from abandoning a portion of the road, upon the ground that the petition by the railway companies to the railroad commission for approval of a consolidation, and its order thereon, constituted a binding contract, is not using a mere pretext to avoid the determination of the federal questions arising in the case under the contract and commerce clauses of the Federal Constitution, where the power of the commission and the effect of its order were necessarily presented by the case; and its decision is not reviewable by the federal Supreme Court. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Mississippi, (1908) 210 U. S. 187, 28 S. Ct. 650, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1018.

No federal question respecting due process of law or full faith and credit, which will sustain a writ of error under section 709, is involved in a suit in which the state court, after reversing a judgment for defendant on the ground that a judgment of a federal Circuit Court, set up as res judicata in a special replication to two of four pleas in set-off, is binding, decided on rehearing that, conceding the judgment of the federal court to be binding as to the two pleas to which the replication of res judicata applies, judgment for defendant can be upheld upon the other two pleas referring to earlier stages of the same transaction; nor does it matter that the federal Supreme Court may think the state court wrong in believing that there is evidence to support these pleas. Leathe v. Thomas, (1907) 207 U. S. 93, 28 S. Ct. 30, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 118.

A judgment of a state court against a carrier for the value of a shipment of cotton which it delivered without the surrender of the bills of lading is reviewable in the federal Supreme Court, although the state court refers to, and upholds, over an objection of repugnance to the Federal Constitution, a state statute forbidding delivery under such circumstances, where the court treats the contract of shipment itself as requiring a delivery to shipper's order and only upon the production of the bills of lading properly indorsed. Arkansas Southern R. Co. v. German Nat. Bank, (1907) 207 U. S. 270, 28 S. Ct. 78, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 270, where the court also said: "If we should be of opinion, as we are, that the Supreme Court [of the state] rested its judgment upon principles of common law as it understood them, we should go no farther, although that court also upheld and relied upon the statute, whether, in our opinion, its views were right or wrong."

The decision of a state court that the federal questions alleged to be involved in mandamus proceedings were entirely put out of the case by the facts set forth in the return to the alternative writ, presenting a question obviously not of a federal character, will not be reviewed by the federal Supreme Court, where there is nothing in the case to justify a suspicion that the federal questions were sought to be avoided or were avoided by giving an unreasonable construction to the pleadings. Vandalia R. Co. v. Indiana, (1907) 207 U. S. 359, 28 S. Ct. 130, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 246.

The contention that a second conviction of a public officer for failing, on demand, to pay over certain public moneys, deprives him of his liberty without due process of law, by twice subjecting him to jeopardy for the same offense, presents no federal question for a writ of error from the Supreme Court to the highest court of a state where the latter court decides that the accused was not put in jeopardy by his prior conviction because such conviction was reversed on the ground that there had been no legal demand. Shoener v. Pennsylvania, (1907) 207 U. S. 188, 28 S. Ct. 110, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 163.

A state court, by deciding that a railway employee who was killed while attempting to make a coupling with a car not equipped with an automatic coupler as required by the Act of March 2, 1893, ch. 196, sec. 2, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 753, was, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence in lifting his head a little too high after he had been warned of the danger, cannot defeat the appellate jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court, where section 8 of that statute was specially invoked as excluding the defense of assumption of risk. Schlemmer v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., (1907) 205 U. S. 1, 27 S. Ct. 407, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 681.

The judgment of the Ohio Supreme Court upholding the validity of the provisions of the Free Banking Act of March 21, 1851, sec. 30, as amended April 24, 1879, under which an indictment had been found against the cashier of a bank incorporated under that Act, in the face of the objection that such section, by subjecting officers of institutions so incorporated to criminal liability, when officers of other banking institutions guilty of similar acts are not so subject, denies the equal protection of the laws, cannot be reviewed by the federal Supreme Court, where the failure of the state court to file an opinion leaves it doubtful whether that court may not have held that the words "any banking company," as used in the section in question, embrace all banking institutions in the state, whether incorporated under the Free Banking Act or not. Bachtel v. Wilson, (1907) 204 U. S. 36, 42, 27 S. Ct. 243, 246, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 357, 360.

A federal question respecting the validity of a paving assessment against a street railway company is not open on writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a state court, where the latter court based its ruling that the question had no standing in the case upon its view as to the scope of the application of the railway company for relief from the assessment, and of the pleadings, and it is not contended that such view is erroneous. Fair Haven, etc., R. Co. v. New Haven, (1906) 203 U. S. 379, 27 S. Ct. 74, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 237.

The presence of a question respecting the construction and application of the congressional legislation as to swamp and overflowed lands gives no jurisdiction to the federal Supreme Court to review the judgment of a state court in an action of ejectment, holding defendant's title invalid, on the independent ground of noncompliance with an act of the state legislature. Leonard v. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 416, 25 S. Ct. 750, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1108.

Decisions on questions of fact.—"In cases coming from a state court we do not review questions of fact, but accept the conclusions of the state tribunals as final." Chrisman v. Miller, (1905) 197 U. S. 313, 25 S. Ct. 468, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 770, a chancery case.

"On a writ of error we do not deal with the facts." King v. West Virginia, (1910) 216 U. S. 92, 30 S. Ct. 225, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 396, a chancery case.

A writ of error to review a decree of a state court rejecting the contention of an owner of a mining claim that a certain vein or lode had part of its apex in his claim, was dismissed for want of jurisdiction, where the case turned upon a question of fact. Mammoth Min. Co. v. Grand Cent. Min. Co., (1909) 213 U. S. 72, 29 S. Ct. 413, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 702.

A decision of a state court, in a suit to quiet title, that the grantee from the United States, through the state of Arkansas and other grantors, took no title by virtue of riparian rights to lands lying between the government meander line and the main channel of a river, which lands the court found to be swampy, checked by bayous, subject to inundation, but reclaimable to some extent for agricultural purposes, was held not to be reviewable by the federal Supreme Court. Chapman, etc., Land Co. v. Bigelow, (1907) 206 U. S. 41, 27 S. Ct. 679, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 953.

In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Swanger, (1908) 167 Fed. 783, 789, Judge Smith McPherson said: "A writ of error is for the correction of erroneous rulings in matters of law, and not for a review of questions of fact; and it can be safely predicted that in all cases, including those in equity, taken up by writ of error, the contention will be that all questions of fact will be foreclosed. Such is the rule, and a writ of error in a case turning on questions of fact, concerning which the evidence is in conflict, will be no remedy at all. And the question naturally arises whether such will be the result. If so, then the Supreme Court is practically deprived of power in all such cases, with the result that the conflicting state court decisions will remain in force, instead of having that which is so desirable, viz., a decision by the national Supreme Court on all national questions. The real welfare of this country demands that all questions, of fact as well as of law, pertaining to our national Constitution, be ultimately decided by our national Supreme Court, to which all patriotic citizens should and do yield the most cheerful obedience. That a writ of error to a state court in a chancery as well as in a law case in which the evidence is in conflict will avail nothing, one need but read the case of Egan v. Hart, (1897) 165 U. S. 188, 17 S. Ct. 300, 41 U. S. (L. ed.) 680. And see Bement v. National Harrow Co., (1902) 186 U. S. 70, 83, 22 S. Ct. 747, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 1058. The only remedy to correct the decision of the highest court of the state is by writ of error, in chancery cases as well as in actions at law. In a large per cent. of these chancery cases the case turns solely on questions of fact, with reference to which the evidence is in conflict; and an important inquiry is thereby suggested as to whether, if the effort is successfully made to keep litigation involving federal questions in the state courts, depriving the national courts from passing on questions of fact in chancery cases, such party thus desiring a review is not deprived of due process of law. This is a question of great moment, but not now for discussion in this case."

"It is the settled law that this court, in an action at law, at least, has no jurisdiction to review the conclusions of the highest court of a state upon questions of fact." Clipper Min. Co. v. Eli Min., etc., Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 220, 24 S. Ct. 632, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 944.

Findings of fact made in the state court are accepted as conclusive by the federal Supreme Court. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, (1909) 212 U. S. 86, 29 S. Ct. 220, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 417.

Upon a writ of error to review a judgment which was alleged to be repugnant to federal statutes relating to the powers and liabilities of national banks, "it is elementary that, on error to a state court of last resort, in a case of this character, the findings of fact of the state court are binding on us." Rankin v. Emigh, (1910) 218 U. S. 27, 30 S. Ct. 672, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 915.

The verdict of the jury in the state court settles all questions of fact on a writ of error under section 709. Smiley v. Kansas, (1905) 196 U. S. 447, 25 S. Ct. 289, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 546.

Whether a bankrupt was insolvent at the time of giving an alleged preference, and whether the creditor had reasonable cause to believe that it was intended thereby to give a preference, are questions of fact, as to which the federal Supreme Court is concluded by the verdict of the jury in a suit by the trustee to recover the amount of such preference. Kaufman v. Tredway, (1904) 195 U. S. 271, 25 S. Ct. 33, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 190.

A finding of a state court that, when a commutation entry under the homestead laws was allowed, neither the entryman nor the land officers had actual knowledge of the amendment of R. S. sec. 2301, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 317 note, by the Act of March 3, 1891, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 317, which made such commutation premature, is a finding of fact, and, therefore, conclusive on the federal Supreme Court on a writ of error to the state court. Hill v. McCord, (1904) 195 U. S. 395, 25 S. Ct. 96, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 251.

The decision of a state court in a suit in equity that a trust deed was accepted by a national bank is a finding of fact; "and this court, on a question of that character, does not review the findings of fact which have been made in the state court." Kerfoot v. Farmers', etc., Bank, (1910) 218 U. S. 281, 31 S. Ct. 14, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1042.

A decision by a state court that certain tracts of land were not within the boundaries of a land grant rests upon a question of fact, which cannot serve as the basis of a writ of error under section 709. King v. West Virginia, (1910) 216 U. S. 92, 30 S. Ct. 225, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 396.

Whether or not discrimination against negroes because of their race or color was practiced by the jury commissioners in the selection of grand and petit jurors is a question of fact, the decision of which by the state court is conclusive on the federal Supreme Court on writ of error, unless so grossly wrong as to amount to an infraction of the Federal Constitution. Thomas v. Texas, (1909) 212 U. S. 278, 29 S. Ct. 393, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 512.

The decision of the highest state court of a state that the determination of the trial court, based on conflicting testimony, that the original locators of a mining claim had resumed their assessment work within the meaning of R. S. sec. 2324, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 19, before an attempted adverse relocation, was conclusive on appeal, does not amount to a denial of the right of location claimed under that section, so as to permit a review in the federal Supreme Court on writ of error. Yosemite Gold Min., etc., Co. v. Emerson, (1908) 208 U. S. 25, 28 S. Ct. 196, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 374.

The refusal of a state court to grant for local prejudice the change of venue asked for in a criminal case cannot involve a federal question of sufficient merit to sustain a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court, where the highest state court, after reviewing the testimony, decided that such refusal was not an abuse of the discretion vested in the court. Barrington v. Missouri, (1907) 205 U. S. 483, 27 S. Ct. 582, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 890.

If it was necessary for a trustee in bankruptcy to represent judgment as well as simple contract creditors when attacking the validity of a chattel mortgage given by the bankrupt, it will be presumed, on a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to review a judgment of a state court setting aside the mortgage as in fraud of creditors, that the trial court, in passing upon all the evidence, found that he did represent both classes of creditors, where the record shows that the entire record of the proceedings in the bankruptcy court, though not returned to the federal Supreme Court, was in evidence before the trial court. Frank v. Vollkommer, (1907) 205 U. S. 521, 27 S. Ct. 596, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 911.

Findings of fact upon which depends the answer to the question whether or not certain transactions were invalid under the Bankrupt Act as operating to give a creditor an unlawful preference are conclusive upon the federal Supreme Court, in reviewing by writ of error the judgment of a state court. Eau Claire Nat. Bank v. Jackman, (1907) 204 U. S. 522, 27 S. Ct. 391, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 596.

A judgment of a state court will be affirmed by the federal Supreme Court on a writ of error if there is evidence sufficient to sustain it, although there may be other conflicting testimony, where no special findings of fact were made, and the proceedings in the trial court were approved by the highest state court without an opinion. Gleason v. White, (1905) 199 U. S. 54, 25 S. Ct. 782, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 87.

The question whether a schedule of interstate freight rates filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission was posted as required by the Act to regulate commerce is not open in the federal Supreme Court on writ of error to a state court, where the latter court in effect declared that such schedule was conceded to have been filed and published in conformity with the statute, and it does not appear that if the court, having the evidence before it, had not treated the case as presented, it might not have considered the facts in relation to the publication of the schedule, and affirmatively found facts compelling the conclusion that the statute had been complied with, even if such inference was not sufficiently sustained by the findings of the trial court which the appellate court adopted. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 426, 27 S. Ct. 350, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 553.

Various grounds of decision — Res adjudicata. — The highest court of a state may decline to reopen, on a second appeal, a question of the validity of the service of summons, which it had upheld on the first appeal, without thereby making a case for a writ of error under section 709, where the claim that such service was invalid under the Federal Constitution was first set up on the second hearing in the trial court. The Supreme Court "held the question of jurisdiction had already been determined, and that it was not bound to re-examine it. This was, of course, a ground broad enough to sustain the judgment." Western Electrical Supply Co. v. Abbeville Electric Light, etc., Co., (1905) 197 U. S. 299, 25 S. Ct. 481, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 765.

Suit by bankrupt's trustee to avoid preference.—The decision of the highest state court that a trustee of a bankrupt partnership can avoid a preference under the state law arising out of a sale by an individual partner of his individual property, and that such preference may be avoided without previously ascertaining the existence of creditors of the individual estate, does not rest upon a non-federal ground broad enough to sustain the judgment, so as to defeat the appellate jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court, because the state court applied the state law in testing the existence of the preference. Miller v. New Orleans Acid, etc., Co., (1909) 211 U. S. 496, 29 S. Ct. 176, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 300.

Defect of parties to appeal.—There has been no decision of the federal question in the highest court of the state in which a decision in the suit could be had, where the highest state court dismissed an appeal in the suit because of a defect in the parties to such appeal. Newman v. Gates, (1907) 204 U. S. 89, 27 S. Ct. 220, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 385.

State procedure.—A decision of the highest state court that a plea, when construed most strongly against the pleader, does not disclose the defense that the note in suit was given to a foreign corporation in pursuance of business carried on in another state without compliance with the statutory conditions upon which its right to do business there depended, involved purely a local question which will not sustain a writ of error under section 709. Allen v. Alleghany Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 458, 25 S. Ct. 311, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 551.

A decision of a state court in an action founded on a statute of another state creating an action for death, qualified by a one year's limitation, that the failure to plead the statute in the complaint was cured by its inclusion in the answers, filed more than one year after the death, presents no question as to the full faith and credit to be given such statute, so as to sustain a writ of error under section 709, but involves nothing more than a question of local pleading and practice. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, (1911) 221 U. S. 408, 31 S. Ct. 534, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 789; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Gross, (1911) 221 U. S. 417, 31 S. Ct. 536, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 796.

Contentions that immunities secured by the Federal Constitution, 14th Amendment, are violated by a decision of a state court that forfeiture of a corporate franchise may be declared for nonuser, and by its ruling, following its conception of the rules of pleading, that the charges of nonuser contained in an information in the nature of quo warranto stand as confessed under the pleadings, so as to sustain a motion for final judgment of ouster, are too devoid of merit to serve as the basis of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. Delmar Jockey Club v. Missouri, (1908) 210 U. S. 324, 28 S. Ct. 732, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1080.

A decision of the highest state court that the defendant in a criminal case has been tried in accordance with the local procedure, although the names of all the witnesses were not indorsed on the indictment, cannot be reviewed in the federal Supreme Court on the theory that a meritorious federal question was involved in the claim that the accused was a subject of Great Britain, and, by virtue of treaties, the law of nations, the laws and Constitution of the United States, and the laws of the state, he was entitled to know who were the witnesses against him. Barrington v. Missouri, (1907) 205 U. S. 483, 27 S. Ct. 582, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 890.

Federal questions which the highest state court is, by its settled practice, justified in disregarding, either because not assigned or because not noticed or relied upon in the brief or argument of counsel, will not serve as the basis of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. Hulbert v. Chicago, (1906) 202 U. S. 275, 26 S. Ct. 617, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1026.

A federal question, although referred to in the assignments of error in the state appellate court and in the federal Supreme Court, cannot be considered by the latter, where it does not appear that the state court dealt with the question, and it may have refused to do so on the ground that it was not raised in the trial court. Cox v. Texas, (1906) 202 U. S. 446, 26 S. Ct. 671, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1099.

Comity.—Whether or not the courts of one state should, on principles of comity, permit an action to be maintained on a contract entered into in contravention of the laws of another state, is not a federal question which will sustain a writ of error under section 709. Allen v. Alleghany Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 458, 25 S. Ct. 311, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 551.

Matters of general law.—The exclusion from evidence in a suit to quiet title of a letter written by the Secretary of the Interior to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which is clearly res inter alios acta, presented no federal question to sustain a writ of error under section 709. Chapman, etc., Land Co. v. Bigelow, (1907) 206 U. S. 41, 27 S. Ct. 679, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 953.

In an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover from the bankrupt's mortgagee the proceeds of a sale of the mortgaged property the decision of a state court as to whether a conveyance by the bankrupt was made with intent to defraud creditors does not present a federal question reviewable under section 709. Thompson v. Fairbanks, (1905) 196 U. S. 516, 25 S. Ct. 306, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 577.

A decision of a state court that the general rule making the landlord responsible for the taxes has no application to the case of a perpetual leaseholder where the tenant is, in effect, the virtual owner of the property and entitled to its use forever, presents no federal question which can be reviewed by the federal Supreme Court on a writ of error. J. W. Perry Co. v. Norfolk, (1911) 220 U. S. 472, 31 S. Ct. 465, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 548.

Riparian rights asserted to have been secured by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo between the United States and Mexico are not rights of federal origin which, when denied, lay the basis for a writ of error under section 709, but involve only a question of state law and of general public law. Los Angeles Farming, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles, (1910) 217

U. S. 217, 30 S. Ct. 452, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 736.

The contention that the disposition of the public lands by the United States is interfered with by a judgment awarding a municipality rights in the waters of a stream paramount to those of riparian owners, which rests upon the effect of the Spanish and Mexican laws governing the rights of a pueblo of which the municipality is the successor, and the subsequent confirmation thereof under the federal laws, is too clearly unfounded to support a writ of error under section 709. Los Angeles Farming, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles, (1910) 217 U. S. 217, 30 S. Ct. 452, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 736, dismissing a writ of error.

A decision of a state court upon a question of law cannot be reviewed in the federal Supreme Court as presenting a question of the violation of the 14th Amendment because such decision is asserted to be wrong, and contrary to previous decisions of the same court. "There is no constitutional right to have all general propositions of law once adopted remain unchanged." Patterson v. Colorado, (1907) 205 U. S. 454, 27 S. Ct. 556, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 879.

The claim of a right under the Federal Constitution to prove the truth of certain published articles held to constitute a contempt of court is too clearly unfounded to serve as the basis of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a state court. Patterson v. Colorado, (1907) 205 U. S. 454, 27 S. Ct. 556, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 879.

In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Illinois, (1906) 200 U. S. 561, 26 S. Ct. 341, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 596, presenting the question as to the right to impose upon a railway company the expense attendant upon the removal and rebuilding of a bridge and culvert, made necessary by the widening and deepening of the channel of a creek to subserve the drainage of low lands, it was contended that as the state court based its judgment on the common-law duty of the railway company, and not expressly on any federal ground, it could not be said that there was any denial of the federal right claimed by the company; and consequently it was argued that the federal Supreme Court was without jurisdiction of a writ of error under section 709. But the court said: "Undoubtedly, the general rule is that where the judgment of the state court rests upon an independent, separate ground of local or general law, broad enough or sufficient in itself to cover the essential issues and control the rights of the parties, however the federal question raised on the record might be determined, this court will affirm or dismiss, as the one course or the other may be appropriate, without considering that question. But it is equally well settled that the failure of the state court to pass on the federal right or immunity specially set up, of record, is not conclusive, but this court will decide the federal question if the necessary effect of the judgment is to deny a federal right or immunity specially set up or claimed, and which, if recognized and enforced, would require a judgment different from one resting upon some ground of local or general law. And such plainly was the effect of the judgment in this case. If, as the railway company contended, the proposed action of the drainage commissioners would deprive it of property without due process of law and also deny to it the equal protection of the laws, then a judgment should have been rendered for the company. And that result could not be avoided merely by silence on the federal question, and by placing the judgment on some principle of the common law. The constitutional grounds relied on must, if sustained, displace or supersede any principle of general or local law which, but for such grounds, might be sufficient for the complete determination of the rights of the parties. The claim of a federal right or immunity specially set up from the outset went to the very root of the case and dominated every part of it. If that claim be valid, then the law is for the railway company; for the supreme law of the land must always control. Therefore a failure to recognize such federal right or immunity, and the decision of the case on some ground of general or local law, necessarily has the same effect as if the claim of federal right or immunity had been expressly denied. That claim having, then, been distinctly set up by the company, and being broad enough to cover the entire case, it may not be ignored, and this court cannot refuse to determine whether the alleged federal right exists and is protected by the Constitution of the United States. If the case had been decided in favor of the railway company on some ground of local or general law, then the claim of a federal right would have become immaterial, and we could not have re-examined the judgment. But the decision was otherwise, and was, in law, a denial of the claim of a federal right. For these reasons we are of opinion that this court has jurisdiction to re-examine the final judgment of the state court so far as it involved the federal right or immunity specially set up by the railway company." The foregoing views were reaffirmed in West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Illinois, (1906) 201 U. S. 506, 26 S. Ct. 518, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 845, which affirmed a judgment awarding a peremptory mandamus directing a street railway company at its own expense to lower, or, at its option, remove, its tunnel under the Chicago river.

The federal Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to review a judgment of a state court involving a question of estoppel or quasi-estoppel broad enough to support the judgment without reference to any federal question. Leonard v. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 416, 25 S. Ct. 750, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1108, holding that a decision of a state court that defendants in ejectment, who had successfully insisted in a prior suit in a federal court that only a portion of a tract of land was in issue, cannot invoke the rule that a judgment determining the ownership of a portion of a tract is conclusive between the same parties, claiming under the same titles, as to the ownership of the entire tract, is not reviewable as denying any federal rights asserted under the federal court's judgment; as the state court merely "applied the doctrine which forbids parties from assuming inconsistent positions in judicial proceedings."

Matters of local law.—The contention that a conveyance was either in fraud of creditors under the state law, or that a residuary estate remained in the grantor which would pass under an assignee's sale in proceedings in bankruptcy, presents a local and not a federal question, and cannot be considered on a writ of error under section 709. Cramer v. Wilson, (1904) 195 U. S. 408, 25 S. Ct. 94, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 256.

The decision of a state court upon questions of local law is not subject to review in the federal Supreme Court on writ of error to the state court. The Winnebago, (1907) 205 U. S. 354, 27 S. Ct. 509, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 836.

"The question what facts constitute a common-law marriage is purely a local one." Keen v. Keen, (1906) 201 U. S. 319, 26 S. Ct. 494, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 772, dismissing a writ of error.

"Whether the state court erred in its construction of the state constitution and statutes and the common law on the subject of reading depositions of witnesses is not a federal question." West v. Louisiana, (1904) 194 U. S. 258, 24 S. Ct. 650, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 965.

The misconstruction of a state statute by a state court is no ground for a writ of error from a federal Supreme Court. King v. West Virginia, (1910) 216 U. S. 92, 30 S. Ct. 225, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 396.

The question whether certain property is authorized by the state statute to be taken in proceedings by eminent domain, as well as the amount of compensation to the owner, "would not ordinarily involve a federal right." Per Harlan, J., in Madisonville Traction Co. v. St. Bernard Min. Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 239, 25 S. Ct. 251, 257, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 462.

The decision of the highest court of a state that a state statute is repugnant to the constitution of that state, is conclusive upon the federal Supreme Court in reviewing the judgment of the state court. Montana v. Rice, (1907) 204 U. S. 291, 27 S. Ct. 281, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 490.

The conformity with the state constitution of the proceedings of the state legislature in the enactment of a law is not a federal question which will sustain a writ of error under section 709, but is a question upon which the determination of the state court is final. Smith v. Jennings, (1907) 206 U. S. 276, 27 S. Ct. 610, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1061.

The decision by a state court that a void provision of a state statute is separable from its valid provisions does not present a federal question. King v. West Virginia, (1910) 216 U. S. 92, 30 S. Ct. 225, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 396.

The construction by a state court of the statutes of that state and its rulings as to the admissibility of evidence furnish no basis for a writ of error under section 709. Los Angeles Farming, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles, (1910) 217 U. S. 217, 30 S. Ct. 452, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 736.

Whether or not a state court exceeded its functions under the state constitution cannot give rise to a question respecting due process of law which will sustain the appellate jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court. Burt v. Smith, (1906) 203 U. S. 129, 27 S. Ct. 37, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 121.

Questions respecting the construction of state statutes on which the title to land depends are not federal, and cannot be considered by the federal Supreme Court on writ of error to a state court. O'Connor v. Texas, (1906) 202 U. S. 501, 26 S. Ct. 726, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1120.

An attack upon the validity of a state statute creating a new school district, upon the ground that it deprived the district or municipality of the right to local self-government, guaranteed to all municipalities by the state constitution, was held to present only a local question. Atty.-Gen. v. Lowrey, (1905) 199 U. S. 233, 26 S. Ct. 27, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 167.

A contention that a state statute was invalid because, in violation of the state constitution, the title to the Act indicated, and the Act itself embraced, more than one object, and the Act was broader than the title, and that the body of the Act embraced many objects not covered by the title, presented a strictly local question. Atty.-Gen. v. Lowrey, (1905) 199 U. S. 233, 26 S. Ct. 27, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 167.

The federal Supreme Court has no power to review a decision of a state court which puts upon a state statute a construction which removes every question of constitutionality from it "and seems to us reasonable even if a somewhat different one could be conceived." Tampa Water Works Co. v. Tampa, (1905) 199 U. S. 241, 26 S. Ct. 23, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 170.

The judgment of a state court denying the right of possession of real property under a title founded on an Act of Congress, which rests upon the ground that the title of the adverse party under a tax deed was made good by prescription under the state constitution, involves no federal question. Corkran Oil, etc., Co. v. Arnaudet, (1905) 199 U. S. 182, 26 S. Ct. 41, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 143.

A decision of a state court that the formalities required by the tax laws were fully observed does not present a federal question, where the contention is not that the statutes are unconstitutional, but that the manner of their observance was a denial of due process of law; "in other words, that the statutes had not been complied with." French v. Taylor, (1905) 199 U. S. 274, 26 S. Ct. 76, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 189.

The admission of evidence in a criminal case which the highest state court decided did not violate the rights of the accused under the state constitution and laws cannot involve a question of due process of law of sufficient merit to sustain a writ of error under section 709. Barrington v. Missouri, (1907) 205 U. S. 483, 27 S. Ct. 582, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 890.

Whether or not the construction of a log boom in a navigable stream lying entirely within the state is authorized by the state statutes is not a federal question. North Shore Boom, etc., Co. v. Nicomen Boom Co., (1909) 212 U. S. 406, 29 S. Ct. 355, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 574.

Whether a given corporation comes within the scope of the statutes of a state conferring the right of eminent domain, presents only a question of state law, which cannot be reviewed by the Supreme Court on a writ of error to a state court. Stone v. Southern Illinois, etc., Bridge Co., (1907) 206 U. S. 267, 27 S. Ct. 615, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1057.

A decision sustaining the validity under the state constitution of an alleged delegation of legislative power to a building commission does not present a federal question for determination by the federal Supreme Court. Welch v. Swasey, (1909) 214 U. S. 91, 29 S. Ct. 567, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 923, where the court said: "The state court holds that kind of legislation to be valid under the state constitution, and this court will follow its determination upon that question."

"The scope and effect of a state judgment is peculiarly a question of state law, and therefore a decision relating only to such subject involves no federal question." Kenney v. Craven, (1900) 215 U. S. 125, 30 S. Ct. 64, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 122, holding that a judgment of a state court adverse to the plaintiff in an action in which he specially set up a title acquired by a purchase of property from a trustee in bankruptcy, under the sanction of the bankruptcy court, did not involve a decision of the federal question so set up, where the state court rested its judgment solely upon the ground that, being a purchaser pendente lite from the trustee, he was bound by a decree rendered against the trustee in a suit brought by him in equity to set aside certain bills of sale executed by the bankrupt, covering the same property.

Whether clauses of a state pilotage law granting discriminatory exemptions, in violation of R. S. sec. 4237, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 749, can be eliminated without destroying the remaining provisions is a question for the state court to decide, and cannot be reviewed by the federal Supreme Court on writ of error under section 709. Olsen v. Smith, (1904) 195 U. S. 332, 25 S. Ct. 52, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 224.

Whether the Iowa constitution was violated by Iowa Code, section 5007, imposing a tax on cigarette selling, because the statute did not distinctly state the tax and the object to which it was applied, was a purely local question, which could not be considered on a writ of error under section 709. Hodge v. Muscatine County, (1905) 196 U. S. 276, 25 S. Ct. 237, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 477.

Whether or not a municipal corporation has the power, under its charter, to adopt a certain ordinance, is not a question which can be considered on a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court under section 709. Fischer v. St. Louis, (1904) 194 U. S. 361, 24 S. Ct. 673, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1018; Scheffe v. St. Louis, (1904) 194 U. S. 373, 24 S. Ct. 676, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1024.

The question whether certain acts amount to a violation of a municipal ordinance is not a federal one, which can be reviewed on writ of error under section 709. Fischer v. St. Louis, (1904) 194 U. S. 361, 24 S. Ct. 673, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1018; Scheffe v. St. Louis, (1904) 194 U. S. 373, 24 S. Ct. 676, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1024.

A decision of a state court construing the provisions of a city charter authorizing the city to prohibit the erection of cow stables and dairies "within prescribed limits," so as to permit the city to make the limits for the operation of the ordinance coincident with the city limits, presents no federal question. Fisher v. St. Louis, (1904) 194 U. S. 361, 24 S. Ct. 673, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1018; Scheffe v. St. Louis, (1904) 194 U. S. 373, 24 S. Ct. 676, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1024.

The dismissal of the petition of the owner, brought under Ky. Act of March 15, 1906, art. 3, for the assessment and taxation of his lands to escape the forfeiture provided by that statute, because such petition did not contain a description of the land sufficient to identify it, involved no federal question which could be reviewed on writ of error, unless the ruling was so arbitrary and baseless as to amount to a deprivation of due process of law. "Whether that petition contained an adequate description was a question for the state to determine in the construction of its own statute." Kentucky Union Co. v. Kentucky, (1911) 219 U. S. 140, 31 S. Ct. 171, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 137.

The nature and character of the rights of the surviving wife in the community property are peculiarly local questions, not open to review by the Supreme Court when determining on a writ of error to a state court whether the imposition of an inheritance tax under the state laws denies to the wife the equal protection of the laws. Moffitt v. Kelly, (1910) 218 U. S. 400, 31 S. Ct. 79, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1086.

Whether or not the rights of a surviving wife in the community property as they existed when the marriage was celebrated were correctly subjected to a state inheritance tax law subsequently enacted cannot be reviewed by the federal Supreme Court when determining, on writ of error under section 709, the validity of such statute under the contract clause of the Federal Constitution. It was "a purely state question." Moffitt v. Kelly, (1910) 218 U. S. 400, 31 S. Ct. 79, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1086.

The contention that the confirmation of a pueblo claim under the Act of March 3, 1851, barred the municipal successor to the pueblo from setting up water rights not claimed in the petition for confirmation, was held too unfounded for a writ of error, it having been decided by the Supreme Court in several cases that the matter involved was one of local or general law. Los Angeles Farming, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles, (1910) 217 U. S. 217, 30 S. Ct. 452, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 736.

The construction and effect of a prior decree of a state court, and whether or not it bound parties subsequently coming in, are matters of state procedure, the rulings upon which cannot present any question which will sustain a writ of error under section 709. King v. West Virginia, (1910) 216 U. S. 92, 30 S. Ct. 225, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 396, where the court said: "It is said that the decree established the law of the case, but that phrase expresses only the practice of courts generally to refuse to reopen what has been decided, not a limit to their power. . . . In some states it is true that a stricter rule is applied, . . . but there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States to require it, or to prevent a state from allowing past action to be modified while a case remains in court. . . . The highest court of the state is the final judge of the powers conferred by the state laws in that regard."

The effect of a valid conveyance to the territory of Washington by a claimant, under the Oregon Donation Act of Sept. 27, 1850, after occupation for more than four years, but before he had made final proof under that Act, upon the title subsequently given him by a patent from the United States, is a question of local law, not open for review upon a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a state court. Sylvester v. Washington, (1909) 215 U. S. 80, 30 S. Ct. 25, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 101.

No federal question was presented by a contention that the courts of Arkansas had no jurisdiction of causes arising under the laws of the Indian Territory giving a right of action for death. "Each state may, subject to the restrictions of the Federal Constitution, determine the limits of the jurisdiction of its courts, the character of the controversies which shall be heard in them, and, specifically, how far it will, having jurisdiction of the parties, entertain in its courts transitory actions where the cause of action has arisen outside its borders." St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Taylor, (1908) 210 U. S. 281, 28 S. Ct. 616, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1061.

Whether or not a city council has determined that the board of public works has complied with the conditions of its jurisdiction to order a street improvement is not a federal question reviewable under section 709. Londoner v. Denver, (1908) 210 U. S. 373, 28 S. Ct. 708, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1103.

Questions whose determination depends upon the power of a state railroad commission, upon the petition of certain railway companies for the approval of a consolidation, and upon the order of the commission made on the petition, are local, and not federal, and cannot be reviewed on a writ of error under section 709. "There is nothing in the statutes or Constitution of the United States which prevents a state from creating a board of railroad commissioners, and what powers the board shall have will depend upon the law creating them, of which the courts of the state are the absolute interpreters." Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Mississippi, (1908) 210 U. S. 187, 28 S. Ct. 650, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1016.

Whether railway companies waive their rights to change the line of narrow-gauge road, and are estopped to revoke such waiver, by obtaining the consent of the state, through its railroad commission, to broaden and standardize that line through its entire length, is a local, and not a federal, question, and cannot be reviewed by the federal Supreme Court. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Mississippi, (1908) 210 U. S. 187, 28 S. Ct. 650, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1016.

Whether or not the amount due to the holders of certain railroad equipment bonds on the issue of an execution against the railway company can be determined in a proceeding to enforce the lien of such bonds by a sale of the railroad property is a question exclusively for the state court, and is not open on a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. Wabash R. Co. v. Adelbert College, (1908) 208 U. S. 609, 28 S. Ct. 425, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 642.

The question of the validity, under the due process of law clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, of a tax sale made upon a notice published only in a Sunday newspaper, is not open on a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to the highest court of a state, whose decision upholding the tax title was based upon the grounds that a state statute made the tax deed, which, upon its face, was a valid instrument, prima facie evidence of the sufficiency of the notice, and that possession under such deed for the prescribed period met the requirements of the state statute of limitations; for the judgment proceeded solely upon the state law, and the latter was adequate to dispose of the case without reaching any federal question. Elder v. Wood, (1908) 208 U. S. 226, 28 S. Ct. 263, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 464.

The objection that certain published articles did not constitute a contempt of court does not present a question which will sustain a writ of error under section 709; at least, where there is no showing that innocent conduct has been laid hold of as an arbitrary pretense for an arbitrary punishment. "What constitutes contempt, as well as the time during which it may be committed, is a matter of local law." Patterson v. Colorado, (1907) 205 U. S. 454, 27 S. Ct. 556, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 879.

The objections that the information in contempt was not supported by an affidavit until after it was filed, and that the suits referred to in the published articles complained of as constituting the contempt were not then pending, present questions of local law, which are not open for re-examination by the federal Supreme Court. "The requirement in the Fourteenth Amendment of due process of law does not take up the special provisions of the state constitution and laws into the Fourteenth Amendment for the purposes of the case, and in that way subject a state decision that they have been complied with to revision by this court." Patterson v. Colorado, (1907) 205 U. S. 454, 27 S. Ct. 556, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 879.

Whether an order of the North Carolina corporation commission regulating the train service of connecting carriers was arbitrary and unreasonable, as being beyond the scope of the authority delegated to the commission by the state laws, was a local and not a federal question, and not reviewable by the federal Supreme Court. Atlantic Coast Line

R. Co. v. North Carolina Corp. Commission, (1907) 206 U. S. 1, 27 S. Ct. 585, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 933.

The federal Supreme Court cannot, independently of the federal question involved, reverse a judgment of the highest court of a state on the ground that a state statute enacted after the judgment under review was rendered had the effect of depriving the state of the power to enforce such judgment. Campbell v. California, (1906) 200 U. S. 87, 26 S. Ct. 182, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 382.

"A mere contest over a state office, dependent for its solution exclusively upon the application of the constitution of a state or upon a mere construction of a provision of a state law, involves no possible federal question. Taylor v. Beckham, (1900) 178 U. S. 548, 20 S. Ct. 890, 1009, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 1187." Elder v. Colorado, (1907) 204 U. S. 85, 27 S. Ct. 223, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 381, dismissing a writ of error.

IX. JUDGMENT ON ERROR.

That the highest court of a state remanded a cause to be retried in accordance with its former decision, instead of in conformity to the opinion of the federal Supreme Court as to the mandate of that court, is not ground for reversal, where the change was not prejudicial. Schlemmer v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 590, 31 S. Ct. 561, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 596.

The decree of a state court, enjoining a carrier from further violation of a law fixing rates for the carriage of coal within the state over the objection that the maximum rates so fixed are inadequate and confiscatory, will be affirmed by the federal Supreme Court, where the evidence leaves the question of reasonableness in doubt, but without prejudice to the right of the carrier to reopen the case by appropriate proceedings, if, after adequate trial, it thinks it can prove more clearly the confiscatory character of the rates. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. North Dakota, (1910) 216 U. S. 579, 30 S. Ct. 423, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 624.

X. EFFECT OF WRIT OF ERROR.

As a rule, no action can be taken by the state court as to any part of a case which has been removed by writ of error to the federal Supreme Court. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1909) 36 Utah 364, 104 Pac. 573.

Where, in an action in which defendant set up a counterclaim, an appeal was taken from the judgment dismissing the counterclaim before the issues raised by the complaint were determined, a writ of error from the federal to the state Supreme Court upon the latter's affirmance of the judgment appealed from, only removed the proceedings involving the judgment on the counterclaim to the federal court, so that the pendency of the writ of error would not stay proceedings in the trial court to determine the issues raised by the original complaint, especially where its action was not stayed by a supersedeas bond or otherwise. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1909) 36 Utah 364, 104 Pac. 573.

Vol. IV, p. 491, sec. 6.

The Supreme Court no longer has appellate jurisdiction of criminal cases, whether capital or other, in the inferior federal courts.—See Judicial Code, secs. 128, 238, ante, pp. 195, 231, of this Supplement.

Prior to the passage of this Act, no review of a criminal cause except upon a certificate of division of opinion among the judges of the Circuit Court was allowed. Bessette v. W. B. Conkey Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 324, 335, 24 S. Ct. 665, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 997; U. S. v. Dickinson, (1909) 213 U. S. 92, 98, 29 S.

Ct. 485, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 711; Bristol v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 87.

Judgment of trial court.—"It was ruled in Cross v. U. S., (1892) 145 U. S. 571, 12 S. Ct. 842, 36 U. S. (L. ed.) 821, that, in view of the terms of the whole section, the allowance of a writ of error to any appellate tribunal was not contemplated, but merely to review the judgment of the trial court." New v. Oklahoma, (1904) 195 U. S. 252, 25 S. Ct. 68, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 182.

Vol. IV, p. 493, sec. 711.

This section has been substantially re-enacted in Judicial Code, sec. 256, ante, p. 238 of this Supplement. See note thereat.

Vol. IV, p. 493, sec. 711, cl. first.

Perjury committed by a witness in the federal court is a crime against the federal laws only, and a prosecution therefor is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts. McIntosh v. Bullard, (1910) 95 Ark. 227, 129 S. W. 85.

A federal District Court has jurisdiction of a prosecution under R. S. sec. 5395, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 210, for false swearing in a naturalization proceeding, notwithstanding the fact that such proceeding was in a state court. Schmidt v. U. S., (1904) 133 Fed. 257, 66 C. C. A. 389; Holmgren v. U. S., (1907) 156 Fed. 439, 84 C. C. A. 301.

Perjury committed by false swearing before a United States commissioner is not subject to the jurisdiction of a state court under Ky. Stat., sec. 1174 (Russell's Stat., sec.

3708), defining and punishing perjury. Com. v. Kitchen, (1911) 141 Ky. 655, 133 S. W. 586.

Felonious entry.—In view of R. S. sec. 5456, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 790, an indictment charging the felonious entry of a private office from which the defendant feloniously stole certain moneys, postage stamps, and other valuable papers and checks, is not within the jurisdiction of the state court if the property stolen was in fact the property of the United States. Ex p. Roach, (1908) 166 Fed. 344.

Murder.—Under this section the federal court has exclusive jurisdiction of a prosecution for murder committed on land bought by the United States within a state for a post office and court house, and over which the state has ceded jurisdiction, the offense being created by R. S. sec. 5339, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 231. Battle v. U. S., (1908) 209 U. S. 36, 28 S. Ct. 422, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 670.

The federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of cases arising under the patent or copyright laws. Aberthaw Constr. Co. v. Ransome, (1906) 192 Mass. 434, 78 N. E. 485; Outcault v. Lamar, (1909) 135 App. Div. 110, 119 N. Y. S. 930.

Diversity of citizenship is not necessary to give the District Court jurisdiction of a case in so far as it involves the validity of a trademark, but it is necessary to give that court jurisdiction of the issue of unfair competition. Standard Paint Co. v. Trinidad Asphalt Mfg. Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 446, 31 S. Ct. 456, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 536.

If the invalidity of a patent is incidentally drawn in question in a cause properly cognizable in a state court the jurisdiction of that court is not thereby ousted. Marshall Engine Co. v. New Marshall Engine Co., (1908) 199 Mass. 546, 85 N. E. 741.

It is elementary that the state courts have no jurisdiction of any matter which arises under the federal patent laws, and the issue of which depends upon the construction or administration of those statutes. The converse of the proposition just stated is equally well settled. Whenever the rights of a plaintiff depend upon contract obligations which courts of general equity jurisdiction may enforce, or for breach of which courts of common-law cognizance may award damages, the mere fact that a patent is incidentally or collaterally related to the controversy does not oust the state courts of jurisdiction. Wise v. Tube Bending Mach. Co., (1909) 194 N. Y. 272, 87 N. E. 430.

What constitutes a case arising under the patent laws.—Exclusive federal jurisdiction applies only to cases arising under the patent laws upon a bill, complaint, or declaration setting up a right under the patent laws as a ground of recovery. Robison v. Fishback, (Ind. 1911) 93 N. E. 666.

Ownership of letters patent.—The state court has jurisdiction of a suit in equity to determine the ownership of letters patent and for an accounting for the use thereof. American Circular Loom Co. v. Wilson, (1908) 198 Mass. 182, 84 N. E. 133.

In an action for the price of a patent right to a machine, of the machine itself, and of certain other machinery and appliances for the operation of a patented machine, the defendants alleged that they were induced to purchase by fraudulent representations that the patented machine was not an infringement on a prior patent which plaintiff had sold. It was held that the state court, having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, had jurisdiction to determine the validity of the patent. Pratt v. Hawes, (1903) 118 Wis. 603, 95 N. W. 965.

A suit to obtain a conveyance of an interest in an invention, to enjoin the disposal of such interest, and to compel defendant to account for a sale to a third party of an interest therein, the sole issue being whether defendant had sold an interest to plaintiff, is not a suit arising under the patent laws. Merrill v. Miller, (1903) 28 Mont. 134, 72 Pac. 423.

In an action to compel the transfer of an interest in a patent, where both parties treated the patent as valid and it did not appear that it had been made in fraud of the provision of the United States statutes, the action is within the jurisdiction of the state court. Fuller v. Schutz, (1903) 88 Minn. 372, 93 N. W. 118.

Suits for infringement — Generally.—Where a suit involves the question of infringement of patents, it is one of which a federal Circuit Court has jurisdiction under this subdivision, although it also involves the question of the ownership of the patents or other contract rights. Harrington v. Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co., (1906) 143 Fed. 329.

A federal Circuit Court has jurisdiction of a suit for infringing a design patent. National Casket Co. v. New York, etc., Casket Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 533.

Sale or manufacture without license.—Where no decree is necessary to the cancellation of a license to manufacture or sell a patented structure, the manufacture or sale thereof by the licensee after notice of cancellation would constitute an infringement, over which the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction. Schalkenbach v. National Ventilating Co., (1908) 129 App. Div. 389, 113 N. Y. S. 352.

A bill charging that, after termination of a contract between complainants and defendants for the sale of complainants' patented devices, defendants obtained large numbers of such devices from sources to complainants unknown and sold the same within the district, without right or authority, alleges an infringement of complainants' patents after the termination of the contract, and was sufficient to confer federal jurisdiction, regardless of the amount involved. New Jersey Patent Co. v. Martin, (1909) 172 Fed. 760.

A suit for an injunction and accounting for the alleged infringement of a patent by the sale of the patented article without license is one arising under the patent laws, of which a Circuit Court of the United States has jurisdiction, although the determination of the question of infringement may also involve the construction or validity of a license contract under which defendant claims the right to sell. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. The Fair, (1903) 123 Fed. 424, 61 C. C. A. 58.

Granting additional relief. — In a suit for infringement of a patent, of which a federal court has jurisdiction because of the subject-matter, although the parties are citizens of the same state, it has also jurisdiction to grant relief against unfair competition by imitating in the infringing article the distinctive form and appearance of complainant's patented article. T. B. Woods Sons Co. v. Valley Iron Works, (1909) 166 Fed. 770.

Where the acts of the defendant alleged in a bill constituted an infringement of complainant's patent and also unfair competition in trade, it was held that the cause of action for the infringement gives a federal court jurisdiction of the suit and to grant any relief to which complainant may be entitled on either ground. Onondaga Indian Wigwam Co. v. Ka-Noo-No Indian Mfg. Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 832.

But it has been held that a bill to restrain the infringement of a patent, which thus presents a federal question, does not draw within the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court a further issue as to unfair competition growing out of the same acts of defendant. Cushman v. Atlantis Fountain Pen Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 94.

Question of infringement not raised. — Where the question of infringement between patents does not appear to have been raised in the evidence before the master in a suit on an assignment of an original patent for an improvement and of all improvements thereon, there can be no question of an infringement of which the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction. Marshall Engine Co. v. New Marshall Engine Co., (1908) 199 Mass. 546, 85 N. E. 741.

Ownership in doubt. — A bill in a federal Circuit Court alleged that complainants, who were owners of certain patents, and pending applications for patents, assigned the same in trust to one of the defendants, to be by him assigned to defendant telegraph company in exchange for shares of its stock; that its codefendant wrongfully assigned the patents to it; that it refused to issue the stock, but retained the assignments and was using the inventions. The bill prayed that the assignments be declared inoperative, and for a reconveyance of the patents, and also for an injunction and accounting for infringement against the telegraph company. That company in its answer claimed ownership of the patents by virtue of the assignments. It was held that the suit could not be maintained as one for infringement, under the patent laws, until the alleged fraudulent assignments had been set aside in equity, and title to the patents, either legal or equitable, vested in complainants, and that, it being admitted that the requisite diversity of citizenship did not exist between the parties, the court was without jurisdiction to grant such relief. Harrington v. Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 493.

Suits on contracts relating to patents — Suits involving contract rights only. — A complaint averred that plaintiff owned certain letters patent covering sliding couches, and granted defendant a nonexclusive license to manufacture and sell the same, and that he agreed not to sell or deal in any couches of that kind without attaching a license tag furnished by plaintiff at a certain price, and that he would not contest the patent, but account monthly for the couches sold and the number of tags on hand. It then charged a violation of the agreement, and prayed that defendant be required to perform the contract, that he be restrained from selling couches without attaching the tag, and that he be required to account. It was held that the case involved contract rights only, and that it was error to sustain a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that the suit was to restrain violation of patent rights, within the jurisdiction of the federal courts, as in such a case it does not matter that the construction or the validity of a patent may be collaterally involved. Couch Patents Co. v. Barman, (1910) 137 App. Div. 297, 121 N. Y. S. 978.

A federal court is without jurisdiction of a suit as one arising under the patent laws where the real question involved is not that of infringement, but one of contract rights arising out of a license. American Graphophone Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 188 Fed. 428, affirming 188 Fed. 431.

Where a suit is brought on a contract of which a patent is the subject-matter, either to enforce such contract or to annul it, the case arises on the contract or out of the contract, and not under the patent right laws of the United States. Wade v. Lawder, (1897) 165 U. S. 624, 17 S. Ct. 425, 41 U. S. (L. ed.) 851, as quoted in Marshall Engine Co. v. New Marshall Engine Co., (1908) 199 Mass. 546, 85 N. E. 741.

The federal courts have no exclusive jurisdiction of an action for breach of contract based on an act which is an infringement of a patent, and such action may be brought in the state courts. Manning v. Galland-Henning Pneumatic Malting Drum Mfg. Co., (1910) 141 Wis. 199, 124 N. W. 291.

The mere fact that a patent is incidentally or collaterally involved does not oust the state courts of jurisdiction. Wise v. Tube Bending Mach. Co., (1909) 194 N. Y. 272, affirming (1907) 119 App. Div. 920, 105 N. Y. S. 1150.

A suit on an assignment of an original patent for an improvement in a machine and of all improvements thereon, resulting in a decree directing defendants to assign to plaintiff a patent for an improvement subsequently obtained, and enjoining them from making, vending, and otherwise dealing in the machines covered by such subsequent letters patent, is a suit on contract, and is not, because a suit for an infringement would have resulted in a similar injunction, a suit arising under the patent right laws of the United States. Marshall Engine Co. v. New Marshall Engine Co., (1908) 199 Mass. 546, 85 N. E. 741.

A bill to compel specific performance of a contract to assign a patent and to restrain the alleged violation of a license contract under a patent states no ground for relief under the patent laws, and a federal court is without jurisdiction to grant relief thereon unless there is diversity of citizenship between the parties. St. Louis St. Flushing Mach. Co. v. Sanitary St. Flushing Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 725.

A suit for injunctive relief against the infringement of a patent, and incidentally for the recovery of damages arising therefrom, is one arising under the patent laws of the United States, and may be maintained in the courts of the United States. St. Louis St. Flushing Mach. Co. v. Sanitary St. Flushing Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 725.

Suits to enforce judgment against patent rights.—An action, by the owner of a judgment recovered against a corporation for infringement of a patent, to charge directors of such corporation with payment of the judgment on the ground that they were joint trespassers with the corporation, is not within the jurisdiction of the federal court unless there is diversity of citizenship. H. C. Cook Co. v. Beecher, (1909) 172 Fed. 166, affirmed

Suits arising under copyright laws.—Where plaintiff sued to enjoin the infringement of an alleged copyright by the person who assigned the same to him, but the matter was not subject to copyright, he could not claim that defendant, as assignor, was estopped from alleging that the federal court had no jurisdiction because the copyright which he sold did not cover the matter in question, and there being no requisite diversity of citizenship his bill was dismissed. Royal Sales Co. v. Gaynor, (1908) 164 Fed. 207, where the court said: "The jurisdiction of the court depends solely upon copyright, and no estoppel upon defendants can extend its jurisdiction to a subject not within the copyright law."

Where an action involves the question whether a combination entered into by defendants to control the sale of copyrighted books is illegal, as in restraint of trade, the state court has jurisdiction, though it may be necessary to construe the rights of parties under the copyright law. Straus v. American Publishers' Assoc., (1905) 103 App. Div. 277, 92 N. Y. S. 1052, affirming (1904) 45 Misc. 251, 92 N. Y. S. 153.

Vol. IV, p. 497, sec. 711, cl. eighth.

This subdivision, repealed by the Act of Feb. 18, 1875, ch. 80, 18 Stat. L. 318, is reenacted in Judicial Code, sec. 256, ante, title JUDICIARY, vol. 1, p. 238, of this Supplement.

During the period of its repeal the state courts had jurisdiction to hear and determine cases in civil matters, although the defendant was a consul-general of a foreign power. De Leon v. Walters, (1909) 163 Ala. 499, 50 So. 934.

Vol. IV, p. 497, sec. 713.

Generally.—In U. S. v. Delaware, etc., Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 215, 258, it was said: "The right to contract belongs to every citizen, but when a citizen becomes a member of Congress all right to contract with his government is, by R. S. sec. 3739, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 129, denied him. The profession of law has been held a right of which one may not be deprived by legislation, but only by decree of court. Ex p. Garland, (1866) 4 Wall. 333, 18 U. S. (L. ed.) 366. But when a lawyer becomes a federal judge, the law, by R. S. sec. 713, forbids him the right to use his property and practice his profession. Such prohibitions are not restrictions of liberty or deprivations of property. They are the law's aids to public service. They make the public servant have an eye single to the public duty, voluntarily assumed, and in forbidding legislators, judges, and public carriers alike to act in a dual capacity the law but throws around them the time-proved safeguard of faithful service, that "no man can serve two masters."

This section is now embodied in Judicial Code, sec. 262, ante, title JUDICIARY, vol. 1, p. 241, of this Supplement.

Power of Circuit Courts of Appeals to issue writs.—See section 12 of the Circuit Court of Appeals Act of 1891, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 430, and supra, this title, p. 1365.

Supreme Court.—See cases cited 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 499 et seq. As to power of Supreme Court to issue writs of prohibition and mandamus, see R. S. sec. 688, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 439, and supra, this title, p. 1368.

"In cases over which we possess neither original nor appellate jurisdiction we cannot grant prohibition or mandamus or certiorari as ancillary thereto." In re Massachusetts, (1905) 197 U. S. 482, 25 S. Ct. 512, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 845. Followed in In re Glaser, (1905) 198 U. S. 171, 25 S. Ct. 653, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1000.

Certiorari.—The provision in this section is not a grant of appellate jurisdiction to the Supreme Court to review by certiorari for the mere correction of error, any or all decisions of the lower federal courts not otherwise reviewable. U. S. v. Dickinson, (1909) 213 U. S. 92, 29 S. Ct. 485, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 711, holding that the writ cannot be used by the Supreme Court for the mere correction of errors in a judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals, even though the judgment was not reviewable by the Supreme Court on a writ of error.

Under this section the Supreme Court may issue certiorari to bring up for review the denial by a Circuit Court of Appeals of an original application for mandamus to compel the judge of a Circuit Court of Appeals to proceed with and determine an action pending before it, since the power of the Supreme Court is not limited to the cases mentioned in Judicial Code, sec. 240, ante, p. 232. McClellan v. Carland, (1910) 217 U. S. 268, 30 S. Ct. 501, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 762.

Whitney v. Dick, (1906) 202 U. S. 132, 26 S. Ct. 584, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 963, was a case heard on certiorari from the Supreme Court to a Circuit Court of Appeals to review an order discharging, on writ of certiorari issued on a petition for habeas corpus and certiorari, a person convicted in a federal District Court of introducing liquors into an Indian reservation, and sentenced to fine and imprisonment.

The Supreme Court will determine a cause brought before it by certiorari to a Circuit Court of Appeals upon the record made in that court, and certified to the Supreme Court. McClellan v. Carland, (1910) 217 U. S. 268, 30 S. Ct. 501, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 762.

Prohibition.—A Circuit Court of Appeals has no power to issue a writ of prohibition as an original or independent proceeding, but only in aid of its own jurisdiction, which is wholly appellate; and, except in cases of petitions for review in bankruptcy proceedings, can only be invoked by an appeal or writ of error. Nor can it issue such writ as ancillary to a contemplated appeal or writ of error. Zell v. Judges, (C. C. A. 1906) 149 Fed. 86.

Mandamus.—The United States Circuit Courts of Appeals have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus in the exercise of, and in aid of, their appellate jurisdiction. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Morris, (C. C. A. 1904) 132 Fed. 945.

The true test of the appellate jurisdiction in the exercise or in the aid of which the Circuit Courts of Appeals may issue the writ of mandamus is the existence of that jurisdiction, and not its prior invocation; it is the existence of a right to review by a challenge of the final decisions, or otherwise, the cases or proceedings to which the applications for the writs relate, and not the prior exercise of that right by appeal or writ of error; and the power of those courts to issue the writ is not restricted. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Morris, (C. C. A. 1904) 132 Fed. 945.

Under this statute there remains no question as to the power to issue writs of mandamus, but by judicial construction and interpretation the power is restricted and limited to such writs as are auxiliary or ancillary in character, that shall or may be necessary to the potent exercise of jurisdiction given and acquired by other and original process. Burnham v. Fields, (1907) 157 Fed. 246, dismissing a petition for mandamus to require the defendant, who was the duly elected and qualified clerk of a county in Oregon, to keep open his office during certain days and to file and record a deed. To the same point see Large v. Consolidated Nat. Bank, (1905) 137 Fed. 168, denying an application for mandamus to compel the defendant to permit the plaintiff to have an inspection of its list of shareholders, granted upon R. S. sec. 5210, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 152; Wiemer v. Louisville Water Co., (1903) 130 Fed. 246; Mystic Milling Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 289.

It is well settled that the United States courts can only grant a mandamus in aid of an existing jurisdiction. It is usually granted to enforce the collection of a judgment. Accordingly, where a receiver in bankruptcy was authorized to carry on the business of publishing a newspaper with a view to preserving its good will as an asset of the bankrupt's estate, but pending such publication the postmaster, by direction of the Postmaster-General, prohibited the circulation of the paper through the mails as unmailable matter, mandamus would not be granted to reverse such determination, though the question whether the publication was objectionable might be the subject of a difference of opinion. In re Coleman, (1904) 131 Fed. 151.

A writ of mandamus is, and a writ of error is not, the proper remedy for the refusal of a Circuit Court to prescribe the method and direct the service of a writ of scire facias and also for its refusal after sufficient service to take jurisdiction of and to decide the issues presented by the writ. Collin County Nat. Bank v. Hughes, (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 414.

The federal court cannot by mandamus compel a state official to perform even a clearly ministerial act, involving no exercise of discretion, unless the law makes it the duty of such official to perform such act. King v. Davis, (1905) 137 Fed. 222, 239.

A state law which prohibits the granting of a mandamus is not binding upon the federal courts, which derive their power to enforce their judgments in such cases by mandamus from section 14 of the federal Judiciary Act of 1789, nor R. S. sec. 716. U. S. v. Capdevielle, (C. C. A. 1902) 118 Fed. 809.

"Many of the cases are collected in 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 503," said Mr. Justice Day, in Covington, etc., Bridge Co. v. Hager, (1906) 203 U. S. 109, 27 S. Ct. 24, 51 U. S. (L. ed.)

111, the court holding that the federal Circuit Courts had no jurisdiction of an original action in mandamus to compel the return of a franchise tax collected under the authority of a state statute, although the basis of the relief sought was the alleged repugnancy of the tax to the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution.

Writ of ne exeat.—Partly upon the authority of this section, a court of bankruptcy may issue a writ in the nature of ne exeat to restrain the bankrupt within the district, where it is shown that he intends to leave and not to appear for examination at an adjourned date, as required by an order of the referee. In re Berkowitz, (1908) 173 Fed. 1012. See also In re Cohen, (1905) 136 Fed. 999. And see section 9b of the Bankruptcy Act, p. 530 of this Supplement.

Injunction.—This section modifies R. S. sec. 720, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 509, to the extent of authorizing a Circuit Court to grant an injunction restraining the plaintiff in an action in a state court from further prosecuting the action in that court, where the Circuit Court has possession of all the property involved and is lawfully operating it. Gay v. Hudson River Electric Power Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 279.

Power to issue writs of habeas corpus.—See R. S. sec. 751, 752, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 162, 167, and ante, p. 1100 of this Supplement.

Scire facias to revive a judgment of a federal Circuit Court may be issued and a reasonable method prescribed for the service thereof without the district where the judgment defendant has departed therefrom, and this power cannot be restrained, limited, or rendered less efficacious by the statutes of a state. Collin County Nat. Bank v. Hughes, (C. C. A. 1907) 155 Fed. 389, 152 Fed. 414.

Scire facias may be issued by a District Court to enforce a forfeited recognizance or bail bond. Kirk v. U. S., (1904) 131 Fed. 331, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 753.

Service.—The power to issue writs of scire facias to revive judgments granted to the national courts by the fourteenth section of the Judiciary Act of 1789 (Act Sept. 24, 1789, ch. 19, 1 Stat. L. 81) includes the power to prescribe the methods of their service and to cause them to be served either within or without the districts in which the courts sit. While the national courts may follow the methods of service prescribed by the states for similar writs issued by the state courts, they are not restricted to those methods, but may prescribe their own ways and cause them to be followed according to the course of the common law. Collin County Nat. Bank v. Hughes, (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 414.

Although it is expressly provided that the Supreme, Circuit, and District Courts of the United States may issue writs of scire facias, there is no provision that when issued in one district they may be served in another. Kirk v. U. S., (1903) 124 Fed. 324, 337.

An order which quashes the service of a writ of scire facias by publication, without determining that the writ may not be otherwise served, and without dismissing the action, is not a final decision, and is not reviewable by writ of error. Collin County

Nat. Bank v. Hughes, (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 414.

A fiat facias may be issued by a federal court of equity, under this section, for the purpose of enforcing the payment of any costs that may be decreed, notwithstanding the decree may dispose of matters other than a money demand. Western Pocahontas Corp. v. Acord, (1910) 178 Fed. 843.

Subpoenas duces tecum may be issued under the authority conferred by this section. American Lith. Co. v. Werckmeister, (1908) 165 Fed. 426, 91 C. C. A. 376, affirmed (1911) 221 U. S. 603, 31 S. Ct. 676, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 873.

R. S. sec. 4906, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 501, providing for the issuance by the clerk of any federal court of subpoenas for witnesses within the district, for the taking of testimony for use in any contested case pending in the Patent Office, does not authorize the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum, nor is such subpoena authorized by section 716, "which deals only with writs necessary for the exercise of the court's own jurisdiction to hear and determine a controversy before it." In re Outcault, (1906) 149 Fed. 228.

A writ in the nature of a writ of replevin may be issued in an action such as is authorized by R. S. sec. 4965, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 268, requiring the marshal to seize the alleged forfeited plates and copies, and asking in the same suit to recover the penalty for those found in the defendant's possession, even though under the state practice there is no form of action in which such double remedy can be enforced. Hills v. Hoover, (1911) 220 U. S. 329, 31 S. Ct. 402, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 485, the court saying that under the broad powers conferred by section 716, "where the state statute, or practice, is not adequate to afford the relief which Congress has provided in a given statute, resort must be had to the power of the federal court to adapt its practice and issue its writs and administer its remedies so as to enforce the federal law." See also American Tobacco Co. v. Werckmeister, (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 375, affirmed (1907) 207 U. S. 284, 28 S. Ct. 72, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 208; Stern v. Remick, (1908) 164 Fed. 781.

Warrant of arrest against judgment debtor.—Act Pa. July 12, 1842 (P. L. 339), authorizing the issuance of a warrant of arrest against a judgment debtor for specified causes after the return of an execution unsatisfied, may be enforced by the federal courts sitting in that state by virtue of this section, together with R. S. sec. 916, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 580. Johnson v. Crawford, (1907) 154 Fed. 761.

Process on indictment under Anti-trust Act.—Upon an indictment for conspiracy in restraint of trade under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act of 1890, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 336, the court has power, by virtue of this section, to issue summons to another state to bring before it corporation defendants who are citizens of such state and cannot be found or served in the state or district of the indictment. U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 728; U. S. v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 66.

Discretion in granting.—The granting of a temporary restraining order, like the granting of an injunction, is within the sound judicial discretion of the court. No universal rule can be announced to govern court or judge in all cases, but each case must be decided on its own facts. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. McLendon, (1907) 155 Fed. 974.

Extent of operation.—This section clearly contemplates that a restraining order is to have no other effect than to preserve in statu quo the rights and property of the parties until a hearing, after notice to defendants, can be had in due form on the motion for a preliminary injunction. Wabash R. Co. v. Hannahan, (1903) 121 Fed. 563.

The authority given to federal courts by this section to grant temporary restraining orders pending a motion for injunction is expressly limited to cases where "there appears to be danger of irreparable injury," and will usually be exercised only to preserve the existing status. Such an order will not be granted ex parte in a suit by a telephone company against a state commission empowered by the state constitution to establish and regulate telephone rates, to enjoin the commission from interfering to prevent the complainant from increasing its present rates of charge, where the application for permission to make such increase has been made to the commission and denied after a hearing, the decision of the commission being entitled at least to be treated as prima facie correct. Cumberland Telephone, etc., Co. v. Louisiana R. Commission, (1907) 156 Fed. 834.

Notice.—Under Circuit Court Rule 30, providing that a restraining order shall be granted without notice only when such danger exists, a municipality should not be temporarily restrained without notice, at the suit of a street railroad company, from taking further proceedings to construct a competing road, where the bill fails to show that any threatened injury is likely to result before a hearing on the application can be had. San Francisco United Railroads v. San Francisco, (1910) 180 Fed. 948.

This section contemplates, in cases where irreparable injury may be anticipated if the status quo be not preserved, the issue without notice of a temporary restraining order, to be enforced only until an order to show cause on the motion for an injunction can be heard and decided. Hutchins v. Munn, (1908) 209 U. S. 246, 28 S. Ct. 504, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 776.

Laches in application.—A temporary restraining order will not be granted ex parte to restrain the putting into effect of a railroad rate established by a state commission under authority given by the constitution and laws of the state after due notice and a hearing, when the commission's order by its terms was not to take effect for nearly three months after its adoption, and no application for a restraining order was made until within two days of the expiration of such time.

Security.—Restraining order may be granted with or without security at the discretion of the judge. H. B. Claffin Co. v. Furtick, (1902) 119 Fed. 429.

Liability on bond.—Where, on the granting of a temporary restraining order by a federal court, a bond is required, the amount of such bond is the limit of complainant's liability for damages on the dissolution of such order. U. S. v. Lewis Pub. Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 939.

Liability on an undertaking, required as a condition of granting a restraining order pending a decision upon a motion for a temporary injunction, ceases when a new and permanent injunction is granted without reference to the restraining order, which is by its terms to be in force "until further order, to be made, if at all, after a hearing." Houghton v. Meyer, (1908) 208 U. S. 149, 28 S. Ct. 234, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 432.

An undertaking accompanying a temporary restraining order directed against "the defendants and each of them" inures to the benefit of all the defendants who were included in that order, although the undertaking is expressed to be one "to make good to the defendant all damages by him suffered," where it was exacted by the court, was offered by the complainant at a time when none of the defendants knew of the pendency of the suit, and shows in its title that there was more than one defendant. Hutchins v. Munn, (1908) 209 U. S. 246, 28 S. Ct. 504, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 776.

The owner of property is entitled to the benefit of an undertaking exacted by the court as a condition of granting an order temporarily restraining the continuance of the erection of an addition to a dwelling, where, although such owner was never served with subpoena or notice, either of the order to show cause or of the restraining order, such order was observed until dissolved, and inflicted injury upon her rights. Hutchins v. Munn, (1908) 209 U. S. 246, 28 S. Ct. 504, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 776.

The refusal of the court of original jurisdiction to allow damages for the period during which the temporary restraining order was in force, upon the undertaking given as a condition of granting such order, cannot be sustained as an appropriate exercise of discretion, where, by such order, the Postmaster-General was restrained from refusing to transmit certain publications at second-class rates, and the result of the litigation was to establish not only the right of the government to receive additional postage pending the controversy, but also the fact that the publishers had received a very considerable service from the government in carrying the publications through the mails at a rate less than that which it was entitled to charge. Houghton v. Meyer, (1908) 208 U. S. 149, 28 S. Ct. 234, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 432.

Effect of other sections.—In Gay v. Hudson River Electric Power Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 279, it was held that section 720 was modified by section 716, and hence, where a federal court, in the exercise of its concurrent jurisdiction, has taken possession of all the property of certain corporations in receivership proceedings, it will enjoin the prosecution of suits against such corporation in the state court, by which the property so taken may be seriously impaired and the operations of the receiver seriously interfered with.

Extent of section.—This section prohibits the issuance of an injunction or restraining order against proceedings in a state court from the commencement of the suit until the judgment or decree is satisfied. Security Trust Co. v. Union Trust Co., (1904) 134 Fed. 301.

A federal court has no power to enjoin the further prosecution of an action at law in a state court between citizens of the same state, to permit one of the parties to litigate the same question before it by making the other party a defendant in a suit in equity pending therein. Patton v. Marshall, (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 350.

One contract creditor cannot maintain a suit in equity in a federal court to enjoin another creditor of the same debtor from prosecuting an action on his demand in a state court on the ground that the defendant will thereby secure a prior lien on the debtor's property, both because such a case presents no ground of equity jurisdiction and because such a suit is prohibited by this section. Maxwell v. McDaniels, (C. C. A. 1910) 184 Fed. 311.

Neither the fact that a plaintiff, who after removal dismissed his suit without prejudice, has instituted a new suit on the same cause of action in the state court from which the removal was made, nor that he has reduced his demand to a sum below that necessary to give the federal court jurisdiction, takes the case out from the operation of this section. Texas Cotton Products Co. v. Starnes, (1904) 128 Fed. 183.

But a bill seeking merely to maintain the original contract under which a complainant is furnishing water to the defendant city and its citizens, and to prevent the enforcement of lower rates of compensation fixed by an ordinance, and referring to no pending suit or proceeding, is not one to stay proceedings in a state court, which this section forbids a federal court to entertain; nor is it one to enjoin criminal prosecutions, though the ordinance, by its terms, may be enforced by fines and penalties. Palatka Waterworks v. Palatka, (1903) 127 Fed. 161.

Different parties.—A decree of the Circuit Court enjoining a party from setting up any claim to the right to use a railroad switch, which the state court had held that he was entitled to use, is not an injunction of proceedings in a state court, in violation of this section, where, since the decision of the state court was made, the railroad had sold the switch to a private owner, at whose instance the injunction was obtained. Oman v. Bedford-Bowling Green Stone Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 134 Fed. 65.

Protection of federal jurisdiction.—An injunction to sustain the jurisdiction of a federal court already rightfully acquired is not forbidden by this section. Stewart v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co., (1902) 117 Fed. 782; Louisiana R. Commission v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 68.

Where a federal court has first acquired jurisdiction of a suit to determine the respective rights of appropriators of water from a stream, it is its right and duty to protect such jurisdiction against interference, and it will enjoin a defendant from prosecuting a later suit brought by him against the complainant in a state court relating to the same subject-matter. Miller v. Rickey, (1906) 146 Fed. 575.

A federal court is not precluded by this section from granting a preliminary injunction restraining a defendant from enforcing a judgment of a state court, where necessary to preserve the rights of parties in a suit properly before it until final hearing therein. Southern R. Co. v. Simon, (1906) 153 Fed. 234.

This section does not prevent a federal court, having first acquired jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter of an action, from restraining the parties from resorting to proceedings in a state court having concurrent jurisdiction which would defeat or impair the federal court's jurisdiction. Rickey Land, etc., Co. v. Miller, (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 11.

Nor does it prevent a federal court from enjoining a party to an action before it from prosecuting a suit in a state court when necessary to protect its own prior jurisdiction, or to make effectual its own prior judgment, determining the rights of parties before it. St. Louis Min., etc., Co. v. Montana Min. Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 450.

A party who has appeared in a federal court, and contested an action therein through both trial and appellate courts, the result being a final judgment against him, will not be permitted to render such judgment ineffectual by instituting and maintaining a new suit in a state court, the purpose of which is to relitigate the questions determined by such judgment with the same adversary. St. Louis Min., etc., Co. v. Montana Min. Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 450.

A federal court has power to protect a litigant therein from seizure of his person by the authorities of a state while in attendance upon the trial of his case, whether upon process or in the exercise of the police power of the state without process, where necessary for the protection of its own jurisdiction, and where the threatened act must rest for its justification upon a proceeding the validity of which is the very matter it is called upon to determine. Chanler v. Sherman, (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 19.

restrain a defendant from selling, encumbering, or in any way disposing of lands purchased at a sheriff's sale, where such injunctive remedy is ancillary to the granting of relief in a suit to set aside the sheriff's deed, of which the federal court has jurisdiction. Massie v. Buck, (C. C. A. 1904) 128 Fed. 27.

An injunction to restrain proceedings in a state court is frequently an incident to a case of which the statutory and constitutional jurisdiction of the United States courts is unquestioned. If the federal court has jurisdiction of the case by reason of the citizenship or alienage of the parties, or otherwise, it can grant relief against a judgment of a state court obtained by fraud (or on other equitable grounds) in any case in which relief could be granted if the judgment were rendered by a United States court; and in such case a preliminary injunction may be issued against the defendants to prevent the collection of the judgment by execution or otherwise. Lehman v. Graham, (C. C. A. 1905) 135 Fed. 42.

Restraint of parties.—This section does not limit the power of the federal court to restrain parties of whom it has jurisdiction from instituting proceedings in any court. Glucose Refining Co. v. Chicago, (1905) 138 Fed. 209.

Enjoining, at the suit of the New York Cotton Exchange, the receipt and use by the defendant of quotations of sales on such exchange, is not forbidden to a federal Circuit Court by this section, as enjoining proceedings in a state court, because an injunction has been granted by a state court in a pending suit between the defendant and a telegraph company, restraining the latter from refusing to furnish him with such quotations. Hunt v. New York Cotton Exch., (1907) 205 U. S. 322, 27 S. Ct. 529, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 821.

A suit against the members of a state railroad commission, and the prosecuting attorney for a district of the state, to enjoin the enforcement of an order made by the commission which is unconstitutional and without authority of law is not a suit against the state within the meaning of the Eleventh Constitutional Amendment, and is within the jurisdiction of a federal court of equity. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Allen, (1910) 181 Fed. 710.

A state law providing for the search and seizure of intoxicating liquors unlawfully held and handled within the state, does not apply to liquors transported into the state in interstate commerce while remaining in the hands of the carrier and before delivery to the consignee, and officers seizing such liquors are not protected by such Act; hence a federal injunction restraining the enforcement of the search and seizure warrants by such officers as to such liquors is not a violation of this section. Danciger v. Stone, (1909) 187 Fed. 853.

What are state courts.—A commissioners' court of a county in Texas, in declaring and publishing the result of an election, acts ministerially, and is not a court, within the meaning of this section, whose action in such capacity may not be restrained by a federal court. Busch v. Webb, (1903) 122 Fed. 655.

State railroad commission.—The statute of Florida creating the state railroad commission vests it with executive, legislative, and quasi-judicial powers; but such judicial powers appertain only to acts of a judicial character; and the commission is not a state court, and as such exempt from the interference of a federal court by injunction, under this section, with respect to the enforcement of its orders made in a legislative capacity, as in fixing future rates to be charged by a railroad, which it is empowered to enforce only by regular proceedings in the courts. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, (1903) 123 Fed. 946.

A state statute which makes it the duty of the state railroad commission, on complaint thereof, to hear and determine whether a railroad company is exacting extortionate rates, and, if it so finds, to make and fix just and reasonable rates to be charged thereafter, does not confer judicial power on the commission. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Siler, (1911) 186 Fed. 176.

A suit by railroad companies against the Louisiana state railroad commission, to enjoin the enforcement of an alleged rate made by the commission, and the collection of fines imposed by it for past violation of its orders, is not a suit against the state, within the meaning of the Eleventh Constitutional Amendment, and is within the jurisdiction of a federal court. Louisiana R. Commission v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 68.

A proceeding before the Mississippi railroad commission does not become a proceeding in a state court, within the meaning of Rev. Stat. sec. 720, so as to prevent a federal court from enjoining the enforcement of an order of such commission which is claimed to violate the Federal Constitution, because the commission would have to resort to a state court to aid it in the enforcement of its order. Mississippi R. Commission v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1906) 203 U. S. 336, 27 S. Ct. 90, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 209, affirming (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 327.

Injunctive relief against railway passenger rates as fixed by the Virginia state corporation commission may be granted by a federal court if such rates are confiscatory, although, for some purposes, the commission is a court, since proceedings to establish rates are legislative, and therefore are not comprehended by the provision of Rev. Stat. sec. 720. Prennis v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1908) 211 U. S. 210, 29 S. Ct. 67, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 150.

The South Carolina dispensary commission created by Sess. Laws 1907, p. 835, No. 402, for the purpose of winding up the South Carolina state dispensary, disposing of its property, and paying its debts, is not a court of a state. Fleischman Co. v. Murray, (1908) 161 Fed. 152, affirmed (C. C. A.) 164 Fed. 1.

In criminal cases.—A court of equity has no power to enjoin the institution or prosecution of criminal proceedings, unless they are instituted by a party to a suit already pending before it, and to try the same right that is in issue therein, or to prohibit the invasion of rights of property by the enforcement of an unconstitutional law. Camden Interstate R. Co. v. Catlettsburg, (1904) 129 Fed. 422.

A federal court is without jurisdiction to enjoin the further prosecution of criminal proceedings instituted by a city for the violation of an ordinance, although this section does not deprive it of jurisdiction to enjoin threatened proceedings, which have not yet been commenced. Camden Interstate R. Co. v. Catlettsburg, (1904) 129 Fed. 422.

But the jurisdiction of a federal court of equity to enjoin the enforcement of an unconstitutional state statute to protect the property rights of complainant from irreparable injury is not defeated by the fact that the means of enforcement provided by the Act are by criminal prosecutions for its violation. Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 954.

Cases removed.—After the presentation of a sufficient petition and bond to the state court in a removable case, it is competent for the Circuit Court, by a proceeding ancillary in its nature, without violating this section, to restrain the party against whom the cause has been legally removed from taking further steps in the state court. Madisonville Traction Co. v. St. Bernard Min. Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 239, 25 S. Ct. 251, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 462 (citing the earlier cases).

Where, upon the face of the record, including a petition for removal duly filed, a cause appears to be removable, on the filing of such record and the docketing of the case in the federal court, it acquires jurisdiction at least for the purpose of determining that question, and, as ancillary to such jurisdiction, it may enjoin the plaintiff from proceeding in the state court until it shall hear and determine the question of its own jurisdiction. McAlister v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 740.

A proceeding to acquire land for a railroad right of way having been properly removed to the federal court after the report of commissioners had been filed in the state court, and the state court having been deprived of jurisdiction by such removal proceedings, it was held that the federal court had jurisdiction to enjoin the plaintiff from proceeding further with the action in the state court. St. Bernard Min. Co. v. Madisonville Traction Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 794.

Where a cause was properly removed to a federal court, but the state court erroneously denied a motion for an order transferring the cause, the federal court has jurisdiction on the application of the party removing the cause to grant an ancillary injunction restraining the opposite party from taking further proceedings in the state court, without violating this section. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Langley, (1906) 145 Fed. 415.

Fraudulent judgments.—A federal Circuit Court, sitting in equity, has jurisdiction to enjoin the enforcement of an unconscionable judgment of a state or of a national court for new causes, such as fraud, accident, or mistake, which prevented the judgment defendant from availing himself of a meritorious defense that was not fairly presented to the court which rendered the judgment. National Surety Co. v. Humboldt State Bank, (C. C. A. 1903) 120 Fed. 593.

But it has no power to take such action on account of errors or irregularities in the proceedings on which the judgment or decree is founded, or on account of erroneous or illegal decisions by the court which rendered the judgment or decree. National Surety Co. v. Humboldt State Bank, (C. C. A. 1903) 120 Fed. 593.

The national courts, sitting in equity, have the same jurisdiction and power to restrain judgment plaintiffs in unconscionable judgments of the state courts from using them to extort money from defendants who ought not to pay them, that they have to enjoin such plaintiffs in like judgments of the federal courts. National Surety Co. v. Humboldt State Bank, (C. C. A. 1903) 120 Fed. 593.

Condemnation proceedings.—This section has no application to the instance of a non-resident owner of land, entered upon by the defendant in condemnation proceedings, instituted in the state court, to which such non-resident owner is not made a party; and it does not prevent him from applying to the United States Circuit Court for an injunction to restrain the trespass upon his land. Colorado Eastern R. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 141 Fed. 898.

Proceedings in probate court.—A federal court cannot entertain a suit for the specific enforcement of a contract by which an intestate decedent agreed to make the complainant his sole heir, while his estate is in process of administration in a probate court of the state as an insolvent estate, since, should it decree the relief prayed for, there would be no property within its jurisdiction on which its decree could operate. Hall v. Bridgeport Trust Co., (1903) 123 Fed. 739.

Proceedings under unconstitutional Act.—The practice on an application to stay proceedings for the enforcement of a state statute alleged to be unconstitutional is now regulated by section 260 of the Judicial Code. See ante, title JUDICIARY, p. 242.

Equity has jurisdiction of a suit to enjoin the enforcement of a state or local law, on the ground that such enforcement will deprive the complainant of rights secured to him by the Constitution and laws of the United States. Busch v. Webb, (1903) 122 Fed. 655.

A suit in a federal court against an attorney-general of a state to enjoin the enforcement of an unconstitutional state statute by the institution of criminal proceedings for its violation is not within the prohibition of this section. Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 954.

A federal court has jurisdiction of a suit by a landowner to restrain revenue officers of a state from prosecuting proceedings expressly based on a state statute to enforce the collection of taxes against such lands, on the ground that such statute, as applied to complainant's lands, impairs the obligation of a contract with the state exempting such lands from taxation. University of the South v. Jetton, (1907) 155 Fed. 182.

But a federal Circuit Court, on principles of comity, should not entertain a suit by which injunctive relief is sought against railway passenger rates as fixed by the Virginia state corporation commission, in advance of the appeal to the highest state court from the order fixing the rates, which is given by the state constitution as of right to any aggrieved party. Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1908) 211 U. S. 210, 29 S. Ct. 67, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 150.

A Circuit Court has no power to grant an injunction to stay an action, civil or criminal, pending in a state court when the bill is filed, and based on a state statute, although such statute as therein sought to be enforced is unconstitutional and an invasion of property rights. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Allen, (1910) 181 Fed. 710.

Collection of taxes.—A federal court has jurisdiction of a suit by a landowner to restrain revenue officers of a state from prosecuting proceedings expressly based on a state statute to enforce the collection of taxes against such lands, on the ground that such statute, as applied to complainant's lands, impairs the obligation of a contract with the state exempting such lands from taxation. University of the South v. Jetton, (1907) 155 Fed. 182.

In Union Pac. R. Co. v. Flynn, (1910) 180 Fed. 506, it was held that where an owner of property against which a special tax bill had been ordered claimed that the proceedings were void for lack of proper notice, but had an adequate remedy at law in the state court, he could not maintain a bill in the federal Circuit Court to restrain the city clerk from attesting and the circuit clerk from filing the tax bills against his property on the theory that to do so would constitute a taking of property without due process of law.

Multiplicity of suits.—Where four independent actions at law were brought in a state court, by an insured against different insurance companies to recover on policies covering the same loss, two of which were removed into a federal court, the other two not being removable, it was held that the federal court was without jurisdiction, under this section, to grant an injunction on a bill subsequently filed by the insurance companies, restraining the plaintiff therein from proceeding further in the actions in the state court. Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Schmidt, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 721.

Jurisdiction over property involved.—The jurisdiction of specific property once lawfully acquired by a court, by reducing it to its lawful custody in a suit or other proceeding before it, includes the power to protect and effectuate its decrees or judgments therein and the titles of purchasers and others thereunder against attempts to annul or impair them by proceedings in other courts or elsewhere, and a court may lawfully retain jurisdiction after its surrender of its possession of the property for that purpose. Lang

v. Choctaw, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 355.

This section does not apply to a suit in a state court by which it is attempted to fasten an easement on the fee of lands taken into the possession of a federal Circuit Court for the administration of an estate through a receiver, since the federal court's possession drew to it power to hear and decide all controversies relating to rights and interests in the property. Holmes v. Dowie, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 182.

But the fact that a bill filed in a state court incidentally prays for relief which, if granted, might interfere with the constructive possession of property by receivers of a federal court, does not authorize the latter court to enjoin the prosecution of the suit, where the principal relief sought therein does not trench upon its jurisdiction. Guaranty Trust Co. v. North Chicago St. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 130 Fed. 801.

Proceedings in foreclosure.—The prohibition against enjoining proceedings in the state courts does not preclude a federal court, which has decreed a sale in foreclosure proceedings, from entertaining a supplemental bill, filed in the original suit by the purchaser under the decree of sale, to enjoin a sale of the property conveyed by such decree for the satisfaction of judgments rendered by state courts in suits against the mortgagor to which the purchaser was not a party, on causes of action arising subsequent to the confirmation of sale, where the decrees of sale and confirmation evince the purpose of the federal court to retain jurisdiction so far as necessary to determine all liens and demands to be paid by the purchaser, as a condition of security in the title decreed to be conveyed. Julian v. Central Trust Co., (1904) 193 U. S. 93, 24 S. Ct. 399, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 629.

A federal court which has decreed a foreclosure in a suit in which diverse citizenship was alleged and admitted may, by an ancillary suit, restrain any attack on the title of the purchaser under the decree by a suit in a state court brought by a party to the original suit, which proceeds on the theory that, by reason of his own untruthful admission of citizenship, the federal court assumed a jurisdiction which in fact it did not have. Riverdale Cotton Mills v. Alabama, etc., Mfg. Co., (1905) 198 U. S. 188, 25 S. Ct. 629, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1008.

A court of equity which by its decree foreclosed a mortgage given by a corporation to secure an issue of bonds, in a suit against the trustee named therein, and ordered a sale of the property free from the claims of any of the parties or persons claiming through or under them, reserving jurisdiction "for the purpose of enforcing the conditions of this decree," has ancillary jurisdiction of a bill by the purchaser against bondholders under such mortgage to enjoin them from prosecuting a suit in another jurisdiction to reforeclose the mortgage on the ground that they were not personally made parties to the original suit and are not bound by the decree therein, such court having exclusive jurisdiction.

tion to determine that question. Alton Water Co. v. Brown, (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 840.

Enforcing decrees.—Ancillary relief in a federal Circuit Court by way of injunction, in aid of a decree in a suit over the validity of state taxation, in which jurisdiction as to the state and its officers had been acquired as the result of the voluntary action of the state in submitting its rights to judicial determination, is not forbidden. Gunter v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1906) 200 U. S. 273, 26 S. Ct. 252, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 477.

The existence of an adequate remedy at law cannot successfully be urged to defeat ancillary relief by way of injunction in aid of a decree enjoining the collection of state taxes, since that question was foreclosed by the original decree. Gunter v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1906) 200 U. S. 273, 26 S. Ct. 252, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 477.

Where a national court is acting to enforce or protect its lawful decrees, or the titles thereunder, it may, notwithstanding this section, restrain all suits and proceedings in state courts which would have the effect to defeat or impair its jurisdiction. Lang v.

Choctaw, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 355.

In Ex p. Simon, (1908) 208 U. S. 144, 28 S. Ct. 238, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 429, it was said: "It would be going far to say that, although the Circuit Court had power to grant relief by final decree, it had not power to preserve the rights of the parties until the final decree should be reached."

Execution of state process.—This section does not prevent the granting by a federal court of an injunction restraining a party from making a wrongful or inequitable use of an execution issued on a judgment of a state court. Linton v. Safe Deposit, etc., Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 824.

The federal court may, through the injunctive process, restrain the plaintiff in a judgment from enforcing the same, and thereby prevent the perpetration of a wrong upon the judgment debtor, for in such case the process operates upon the person, and not against the state officers or authorities. National Surety Co. v. Humboldt State Bank, (1903) 120 Fed. 593, 56 C. C. A. 657; Schultz v. Highland Gold Mines Co., (1907) 158 Fed. 340.

- I. IN GENERAL, 1413.
- II. DECISIONS OF STATE COURTS, 1414.
- III. CONSTRUCTION AND APPLICATION OF STATE CONSTITUTION AND STATUTES, 1417.
- IV. QUESTIONS OF GENERAL LAW, 1425.

I. IN GENERAL.

The general rule is that the federal courts will be governed by the laws of the state with reference to the construction placed on the constitutional or statutory provisions of the state by the highest state court, by decisions of the highest court of the state which have become rules of property, and by rules of law of local character involving domestic customs or usage. Converse v. Mears, (1908) 162 Fed. 767.

Where Congress has not seen fit to legislate on a subject involving no federal question, and the case presenting such subject is in the federal court merely by reason of diversity of citizenship of the parties, the court will determine the question in accordance with the declared policy of the state in which it sits, as found either in its statutes or the decisions of its highest tribunal. Blackwell v. Southern Pac. Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 499.

Local laws—Law to protect health.—The construction placed by the highest court of the state upon a law enacted to safeguard natural mineral springs against waste and impairment must be accepted by the federal courts in determining the validity of such statute under the Federal Constitution. Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 61, 31 S. Ct. 337, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 369.

Local improvements.—The decision of the Supreme Court of a state, holding a local improvement statute valid under the state constitution, is binding on a federal court in a suit involving an assessment made after such decision was rendered; and decisions construing and applying its provisions, although made after such assessment, will also be followed unless under exceptional circumstances. Treat v. Chicago, (C. C. A. 1904) 130 Fed. 443, affirming (1903) 125 Fed. 644.

But in determining all questions of rights under the Constitution and laws of the United States, federal courts are not controlled by the decision of state courts. Shenandoah First Nat. Bank v. Liewer, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 16.

The rule that the construction of the constitution or laws of a state by its Supreme Court is binding upon the federal courts does not apply, where such construction affects the jurisdiction of a federal court, which is under the duty of determining such matter for itself. U. S. v. Tully, (1905) 140 Fed. 899.

A decree of a federal Circuit Court in a suit involving rights protected by the Constitution of the United States must be given, in the federal courts, the force and effect to which it is entitled under the principles of res judicata as settled by the Supreme Court of the United States, although they may differ from the doctrine announced by the courts of the state in which the Circuit Court was sitting. Gunter v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1906) 200 U. S. 273, 26 S. Ct. 252, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 477.

Due process of law.—State decisions cannot determine for the national courts what constitutes sufficient process of law, sufficient service of process, or sufficient appearance of parties, but they must exercise their independent judgment in deciding these questions notwithstanding the full faith and credit provisions of the Constitution. Michigan Trust

Co. v. Ferry, (C. C. A. 1910) 175 Fed. 667, 681.

Interstate commerce.—The question of what is interstate commerce is a federal question, and a decision of a state Supreme Court does not control. In re Monongahela Distillery Co., (1910) 186 Fed. 220.

Patent rights.—A state statute giving a defendant in ejectment the right to recover the value of improvements made by him in good faith under color of title cannot be applied in a case in which the plaintiff claims under a patent issued by the United States after the improvements were made, since the power of the United States to dispose of its public lands is absolute, and the right of its grantee to possession on receiving the legal title cannot be obstructed or affected by any claim made under a law of the state. Tegarden v. Le Marchel, (1904) 129 Fed. 487.

Proceeding under immigration laws.—This section does not require the recognition and application of state statutes in an examination or proceedings before an immigration officer for the purpose of determining the right of an alien to enter or to remain in the United States under our immigration statutes; and a state law which provides that the word "minor" shall mean a male under twenty-one or a female under eighteen years of age is not, therefore, controlling or binding upon such immigration officer, when conducting such a proceeding, in determining the question whether an alien female attains her majority when she reaches the age of eighteen years; but such officer should recognize and follow the common-law rule, which fixes the age of majority at twenty-one for both sexes. Ex p. Petterson, (1908) 166 Fed. 536.

Proceeding to cancel naturalization certificate issued by state court.—Since the construction of state laws is primarily within the authority of the state courts, a court of the state having held that it had jurisdiction under a state statute of a naturalization petition, and having granted a certificate of citizenship, a federal District Court of concurrent jurisdiction, in a proceeding by the government to cancel the certificate for alleged want of jurisdiction of the state court on considerations of comity, would reach a conclusion as to the construction of the state law in conformity with that of the state court. U. S. r. Andersen, (1909) 169 Fed. 201.

Whether state law superseded by federal law.—Whether a state statute authorizing arrest of a judgment debtor on certain grounds after the return of an execution unsatisfied has been superseded by the federal bankruptcy law is a federal question, as to which state decisions are merely advisory. Johnson v. Crawford, (1907) 154 Fed. 761.

II. DECISIONS OF STATE COURTS.

Rules of property — Generally.—Rules of property established by the highest courts of a state in considering its constitution or statutes prevail in the federal court where no question of right under the Constitution and laws of the nation and no question of general law is involved. Traer v. Fowler, (C.

C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 810; Paine v. Willson, (1906) 146 Fed. 488, 77 C. C. A. 44; Beckwith v. Clark, (C. C. A. 1911) 188 Fed. 171.

Title.—Decisions of the highest courts of a state affecting title to real property will be followed by the federal courts, when like questions come under consideration in the latter jurisdiction. Hubbard v. Goin, (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 822.

So, also, it has been held that a claim of title based on execution sales is a question of local law, and the determination by the Supreme Court of the state will be followed by the United States Circuit Court. Southern Pac. Co. v. Western Pac. R. Co., (1900) 144 Fed. 160.

Title acquired by Indians under treaty.—Decisions of the courts of a state respecting the title acquired by individual Indians under the treaty of Sept. 24, 1819, with the Chippewa Nation, to the lands therein reserved for their use, will not be disturbed by the Supreme Court of the United States, where they have become a rule of property, and do not clearly involve a misinterpretation of the words of the treaty. Francis v. Francis, (1906) 203 U. S. 233, 27 S. Ct. 129, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 165, affirming (1904) 136 Mich. 288, 99 N. W. 14.

Property rights.—Federal courts, in the exercise of bankruptcy jurisdiction, in determining property rights created by state statute, generally follow the rulings of the supreme appellate tribunal of the state. In re Burke, (1909) 168 Fed. 994; Mishawaka Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Teasdale, (1911) 145 Wis. 73, 129 N. W. 671. And see section 70a (5) of the Bankruptcy Act, ante, p. 823.

Right to easements.—The decisions of the highest court of a state that an owner of land abutting on a city street has no easement of light, air, and access as against the public use of the street, or any structure which may be erected thereon to subserve and promote that public use, are conclusive upon the Supreme Court of the United States, when determining, on writ of error to the state court, whether such abutting owner has been deprived of his property without due process of law by the erection in the street of an elevated iron viaduct for general public use under the authority of a statute which makes no provision for compensation to abutting owners. Sauer v. New York, (1907) 206 U. S. 536, 27 S. Ct. 686, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1176, affirming (1904) 180 N. Y. 27, 72 N. E. 579, 70 L. R. A. 717.

Construction of deed.—A federal court, although required to exercise an independent judgment as to the construction of a deed in the case in which the question is presented, will incline strongly to adopt the construction placed on a similar deed by the highest court of the state, where, under the ruling of the state courts, such construction becomes a rule of property. Kuhn v. Fairmont Coal Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 191, affirming (1907) 152 Fed. 1013; Dickson v. Wildman, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 398.

Thus where the highest court of a state decided that a deed to coal underlying certain land did not contain an implied covenant obligating the grantee to sustain the surface, it was held that such decision became a rule of property, which would be followed by the federal courts as to land located in such state when called on to determine the effect of a similar deed. Kuhn v. Fairmont Coal Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 1013.

Mortgages. — The statutes and decisions of the courts of last resort in a state where property mortgaged is situated, and where the controversy arose, are binding on the federal courts as a rule of property. Haggart v. Wilczinski, (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 22.

Thus it has been held that a state rule to the effect that, if property covered by an unfiled chattel mortgage passes into the hands of a receiver, the mortgage lien is lost, and the rights of creditors are the same as if the mortgagor had given an assignment in trust for their benefit, will be regarded as a rule of property and applied in proceedings in a federal court sitting in that state to administer assets of an insolvent through a receiver, as against the holder of an unfiled conditional contract of sale of goods to the insolvent; and not the federal rule that the possession of a receiver is only that of the court, and adds nothing to the previously existing title of the mortgagee, the receiver holding for the benefit of whomsoever it shall be found to concern. Hamilton v. David C. Beggs Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 949.

The validity of a chattel mortgage is determined by the decision of the highest judicial tribunal of the state in which it was made. Dodge v. Norlin, (1904) 133 Fed. 363, 66 C. C. A. 425; In re Canton First Nat. Bank, (1905) 135 Fed. 62, 67 C. C. A. 536.

And in determining whether a chattel mortgage executed by a bankrupt was fraudulent on its face, the federal courts follow the decisions of the courts of last resort of the state in which the controversy arose, the law on the subject being regarded as a rule of property. Dugan v. Beckett, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 56.

Leases. — Whether an oral contract for a lease of real property for more than a year, not complying with the statute of frauds of the state where the property is situated, is a nullity or unenforceable only at the election of the parties, is not a question of general jurisprudence or of commercial or mercantile law, but a rule of property, which must be determined in the federal courts according to the decisions of the highest judicial tribunal of the state where such property is located. York v. Washburn, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 564.

In an action for breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment in a lease of property, it was held that whether the eviction was by virtue of the act of the holder of a paramount title, for whose acts defendant was responsible, was a question relating to right and title to real estate and was determinable by the decisions of the state courts of last resort. Pabst Brewing Co. v. Thorley, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 117.

Instruments relating to mining property. — The construction given by the highest court of a state to a conveyance of mining property, as not including the portion of a vein beneath the surface and within the converging lines of the grantor's location, will be followed by the federal Supreme Court, on writ of error to the state court. East Cent. Eureka Min. Co. v. Central Eureka Min. Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 266, 27 S. Ct. 258, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 476.

A unanimous decision of the highest court of a state construing a writing relating to the sale of a vein of coal underlying land in that state, and holding it to be an option and not a contract of sale, establishes a rule of property, and will be followed by a federal court in construing another contract relating also to property in that state and identical in terms. Fretts v. Shriver, (1910) 181 Fed. 279.

Decisions impairing obligation of contracts. — The rule that the construction of a state statute by the highest court of the state is conclusive on a federal court does not apply where a federal question is involved, as where a complainant contends that it acquired contract rights under such statute which are protected from impairment by the Federal Constitution. Sunset Telephone, etc., Co. v. Pomona, (1908) 164 Fed. 581.

Where certain township railroad aid bonds were issued under a state statute, and passed into the hands of nonresident holders for value at a time when the highest court of the state had rendered no decision intimating that a provision of the constitution of the state would be subsequently so construed as to invalidate the bond act, the federal courts sitting within such state were not bound by such a decision holding that the bond act was illegally passed, the effect of which was to impair the obligation of the contract existing between the township and the bondholders. Hertford County v. Tome, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 81.

A decision of the highest court of a state, holding a contract made by a city void upon the facts shown, and not upon a construction of the local statutes, is not conclusive upon a federal court, where the rights of the plaintiff under the contract were fixed prior to such decision, to which it was not a party. Man-kato v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 329, 73 C. C. A. 439.

Where, in a suit to restrain a city from constructing and operating waterworks, complainant's rights were acquired under a municipal contract, and not by virtue of any constitutional or statutory provision, it was held to be immaterial that a decision of the highest court of the state construing such constitution and statutes to authorize the city to construct and maintain such waterworks was filed pending the suit in the federal court. Sioux Falls v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 721, 69 C. C. A. 373.

Decisions of state courts, which so construe their statutes as to impair rights previously acquired through contracts between citizens of different states under statutes and constitutions which warranted them when they were vested, are not obligatory on the courts of the United States. Westinghouse

Air Brake Co. v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 28.

A federal court will follow the law as established by the Supreme Court of the United States, that a contract by a city to pay an annual rental to a water company does not create an indebtedness of the city, within the meaning of a provision of the state constitution which would render such an indebtedness illegal, where at the time of the making of the contract in dispute the law of the state had not been settled otherwise by its Supreme Court, although that court may have subsequently declared such contracts invalid. Mercantile Trust, etc., Co. v. Columbus Waterworks Co., (1903) 130 Fed. 180.

But the decision of the highest state court that a state statute which is claimed to create a contract is valid, will be followed by the Supreme Court of the United States in determining whether any contract obligations have been impaired by subsequent legislation. Powers v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., (1906) 201 U. S. 543, 26 S. Ct. 558, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 860.

The construction of a state statute by the highest court of the state as a legislative change of the grade of a street for its full width is conclusive on the Supreme Court of the United States in determining, on writ of error to the state court, whether such statute impairs the obligation of any contract right of abutting owners to appropriate the street or an extension thereof for wharfage purposes. Mead v. Portland, (1906) 200 U. S. 148, 26 S. Ct. 171, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 413.

Decision rendered after rights accrued.—Where rights involved in a suit in a federal court were acquired on the faith of a constitutional or statutory provision of a state, the court is not bound by a construction subsequently placed on such provision by the highest court of the state, but is required to exercise its own independent judgment as to such construction. Wicomico County v. Bancroft, (C. C. A. 1905) 135 Fed. 977; Sioux Falls v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 721; Fleischmann Co. v. Murray, (1908) 161 Fed. 162; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Appanoose County, (1908) 170 Fed. 665.

Thus it has been held that a decision of the highest state court that the grantor in a deed conveying the coal under a tract of land, with the right to enter upon and under said land, and to mine, excavate, and remove all of the coal, cannot maintain an action for damages in tort, founded upon the failure of the grantee or his successors to leave sufficient support to the overlying or surface land, is not binding upon the federal courts in a similar action based on almost identical facts and circumstances, the granting clause of the two deeds being in fact identical, where such decision was handed down after the deed upon which the defendant relies was executed, and after the injury complained of was sustained, and the action begun, and where the point decided had not been previously adjudged by the state Supreme Court. Kuhn v. Fairmont Coal Co., (1910) 215 U. S. 349, 30 S. Ct. 140, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 228.

In an action on town bonds by a bona fide purchaser for value, decisions of state Courts of Appeal holding such bonds invalid, rendered subsequent to the issue and sale of the bonds in controversy, to which plaintiff was not a party, are inoperative to govern plaintiff's rights. Northwestern Sav. Bank v. Centreville Station, (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 81; Onslow County v. Tollman, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 753. See also Rees v. Olmsted, (1905) 135 Fed. 296, 68 C. C. A. 50.

Change of opinion after accrual of rights.

—So, also, the federal courts, in determining the rights of parties acquired under a state statute prior to the date of a change of opinion by the Supreme Court of the state as to its construction, will exercise their own independent judgment, and are not bound to follow the latest decision of the state court. Forest Products Co. v. Russell, (1907) 161 Fed. 1004; Northrop v. Columbian Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 770.

Decision based on common law.—Where a decision of the highest court of a state, although based upon the common law, is deemed of an application especially local, its authority in a federal court is almost as great as would be given to it if it construed a state statute. Percy Summer Club v. Astle, (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 1.

Inconsistent decisions.—Where the decisions of the state court conflict, the latest must control. Gay v. Hudson River Electric Power Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 499.

Inconsistency in decisions of lower courts.

—Where the constitutionality, under a state constitution, of a state law, is questioned in a federal court, and the matter has never been determined by the Supreme Court of the state, and its lower courts are divided on the question, the weight of their authority being in favor of the constitutionality of the Act, every possible presumption should be indulged in favor of its validity until its invalidity is shown beyond a reasonable doubt. Kane v. Erie R. Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 681, 67 C. C. A. 653.

Decision of intermediate appellate courts.

—A decision of an intermediate appellate court as to the construction or effect of a state statute is not binding on a federal court, where the Supreme Court of the state, which is the court of highest jurisdiction, is not concluded thereby, but may, should the same question be presented to it, determine it differently. State Trust Co. v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 455; Anglo-American Land, etc., Co. v. Lombard, (C. C. A. 1904) 132 Fed. 721; Federal Lead Co. v. Swyers, (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 687.

But where a state law provided that the jurisdiction of the appellate court "shall be final except where the case is transferred to the Supreme Court, or the Supreme Court on application shall order the case certified to it," it was held that, where a decision of the appellate court was not plainly in conflict with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the state, it was the duty of a federal court sitting in such state in applying the state law to follow such decision. In re Gilligan, (C. C. A. 1906) 152 Fed. 605.

Decision by single judge.—Where the highest state court is composed of a number of judges, it has been held that a construction placed upon a statute by the opinion of one judge which is not concurred in by a majority is not binding, but leaves the question to be determined independently by a federal court. San Jose-Los Gatos Interurban R. Co. v. San Jose R. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 455.

But where a taxpayer's action was brought in the federal court to determine whether a state statute increasing the salaries of judges infringed the state constitution, and before the determination of a motion to dismiss the bill the state Supreme Court decided that the act was constitutional, the Supreme Court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter and parties to the suit in which the question was determined, it was held that the validity of such determination could not be reviewed in the federal courts on the ground that the decision was rendered by a single justice as constituting the court, the other justices having refused to take any part by reason of alleged disqualification. Henry F. Michell Co. v. Matthues, (1905) 134 Fed. 493.

Point not passed on.—A federal court must decide a point for itself, when it has not been passed on by the courts of the state under which it arises. Hamilton v. Loeb, (1910) 179 Fed. 728.

Dicta.—The opinion of a state court of last resort, construing a state statute, is conclusive on the federal courts sitting in such state to the extent only of the precise question decided. Southern R. Co. v. Simpson, (1904) 131 Fed. 705, 65 C. C. A. 563.

Thus decisions which do not construe the particular statute in controversy are not of controlling effect in the federal courts. Lyman v. Hilliard, (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 339.

Decisions of the Supreme Court of a state construing and applying an amendment to the state constitution are not to be construed as determining its validity, or that it was legally adopted, where such question was not raised nor considered; and such decisions do not, therefore, affect the right and duty of a federal court to consider and determine such question in an action in which it is directly presented. Knight v. Shelton, (1905) 134 Fed. 423.

Previous decision by federal court.—Where the public policy of a state has been declared either by statute or by uniform decision, it will be recognized and followed by the federal courts as to contracts or other matters governed by the laws of such state, although it is contrary to what has been independently determined and announced by such courts as the true public policy. McCue v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 167 Fed. 435.

But in Davis v. Commonwealth Land, etc., Co., (1904) 141 Fed. 711, it appears that pending a number of suits to quiet title in a federal court by the owners of a large tract of land under a patent from the state which involved the question of the boundary of such tract, and after such question had been decided in two of the suits, an action in replevin to recover a number of logs, between different parties, was instituted in a state court, and the issues were so made as to raise the question of the boundary of the same tract of land, and a decision of such question by the highest court of the state was obtained therein, which reduced the area of the tract nearly one-half from that given it by the federal decisions. The owners of the land were not parties to such action, which was apparently brought for the purpose of obtaining such decision and was not seriously contested; and it was held that the decision of the state court, while entitled to the highest consideration, was not binding on the federal court in the suits by the owners of the land which were still pending.

III. CONSTRUCTION AND APPLICATION OF STATE CONSTITUTION AND STATUTES.

Construction of state constitution.—The construction of a state constitutional provision by the highest court of such state is conclusive on both the state and federal tribunals, provided such construction does not conflict with some provision of the Federal Constitution or statutes. Kibbe v. Stevenson Iron Min. Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 147, 69 C. C. A. 145; Harrison v. Remington Paper Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 385; Cheatham v. Evans, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 802; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Julian, (1909) 169 Fed. 166; Nielsen v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 393; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Central Stockyards Co., (1906) 97 S. W. 778, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 18.

Adoption of amendment to state constitution.—The fact that the speaker of the House of Representatives of the state declared a proposed amendment to the state constitution legally adopted on the canvass of the popular vote of the election at which it was submitted is not conclusive, in the absence of any constitutional, or even statutory, provision so declaring, and it is open to a federal court, equally with a state court, to consider and determine such question when it incidentally arises in a case properly brought in such court under the laws of the United States, and which cannot be disposed of without the determination of such question. Knight v. Shelton, (1905) 134 Fed. 423.

Constitutionality of state statutes.—The interpretation of a state constitution and the conformity of an enactment of the state legislature to that constitution are questions solely for the consideration of the state courts, whose decision thereon concludes the federal Supreme Court. Montana v. Rice, (1907) 204 U. S. 291, 27 S. Ct. 281, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 490; Hunter v. Pittsburgh, (1907) 207 U. S. 161, 28 S. Ct. 40, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 151; Mohl v. Lamar Canal Co., (1904) 128 Fed. 776; Kane v. Erie R. Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 681, 67 C. C. A. 653; Hughes v. Pfanz, (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 880.

Validity of state statutes under Federal Constitution.—A decision of the highest court of a state sustaining the constitutionality of a state statute, while binding on the federal courts so far as it affects the validity of the statute under the state constitution, is not binding on the question whether the statute is in violation of the Federal Constitution. Morenci Copper Co. v. Freer, (1903) 127 Fed. 199.

But the scope and meaning of a state statute as determined by the highest court of the state conclude the federal Supreme Court in determining on writ of error to the state court, whether or not such statute violates the Federal Constitution. Smiley v. Kansas, (1905) 196 U. S. 447, 25 S. Ct. 289, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 546; Gatewood v. North Carolina, (1906) 203 U. S. 531, 27 S. Ct. 167, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 305.

Construction of state statutes. — A federal court, in determining questions of local statutory construction, is controlled by the decisions of the highest court of the state. Smiley v. Kansas, (1905) 196 U. S. 447, 25 S. Ct. 289, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 546; Jacobs v. Glucose Sugar Refining Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 766; Yarrington v. Delaware, etc., Co., (1906) 143 Fed. 565; Hager v. American Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 396; Spinello v. New York, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 762; Malloy v. American Hide, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 776.

When the validity, meaning, and effect of a state statute involves no question arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, a court of the United States should accept the meaning and effect given to such law by the highest court of the state, except in the limited class of cases when rights have vested or contracts have been made under such statute before it has received interpretation by the state court. Hager v. American Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 396.

Construction regarded as part of statute. — A construction placed upon a state statute by the highest judicial tribunal of the state, which has been adhered to without variation, and has become the settled law of the state is as binding on the federal courts as though it were written into the statute itself. Zeiger v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 348; Joseph Dixon Crucible Co. v. Paul, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 784; In re Scheier, (1911) 188 Fed. 744.

The construction of a territorial statute by the local courts is of great, if not controlling, weight. Lewis v. Herrera, (1908) 208 U. S. 309, 28 S. Ct. 412, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 506.

The policy, wisdom, justice, and fairness of a state statute is not subject to review or criticism by the federal Supreme Court. Hunter v. Pittsburgh, (1907) 207 U. S. 161, 28 S. Ct. 40, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 151, affirming 217 Pa. St. 227, 66 Atl. 348.

A decision by the highest court of a state, placing a limitation upon the scope of a state statute, whether based upon a construction of its language or upon considerations of public policy, is in either case an interpretation of the statute which must be followed by the federal courts. Zeiger v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 158 Fed. 809.

Taxes — Generally. — The construction of state tax laws by the highest state court will be followed by the federal courts. Flanigan v.

Sierra County, (1905) 196 U. S. 553, 25 S. Ct. 314, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 597; Wheeler v. Plumas County, (1905) 196 U. S. 562, 25 S. Ct. 316, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 599; Hager v. American Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 396.

What is a tax. — A federal court of bankruptcy, in determining whether a state imposition is a tax, within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, requiring priority of payment thereof, will not be bound by the decisions of the state courts unless the state decisions have authoritatively expounded the substance of the question, and not merely given the name "tax" to an exaction which is not such. In re Cosmopolitan Power Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 858. And see the title BANKRUPTCY, sec. 64a, ante, p. 766.

Uniformity. — The conclusion of a state court that a tax is uniform, within the meaning of the requirement of the state constitution, when it is equal upon all persons belonging to the described class on which it is imposed, is not open to review upon writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States to the state court. Armour Packing Co. v. Lacy, (1906) 200 U. S. 226, 26 S. Ct. 232, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 451.

Interference with interstate commerce. — A decision of the state court that a statute imposing a tax on "every meat-packing house doing business in this state," does not apply to the interstate business of a foreign corporation, but only to its local business, such as the sale within the state of products already stored there, on orders received after the products are thus stored, is conclusive on the federal Supreme Court in determining, on writ of error to the state court, whether the tax is an interference with interstate commerce. Armour Packing Co. v. Lacy, (1906) 200 U. S. 226, 26 S. Ct. 232, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 451, affirming (1904) 134 N. C. 567, 47 S. E. 53.

Manner of levying taxes. — A ruling by the state Supreme Court that its state board of equalization was entitled to levy taxes in percentages under the statutes of that state will be followed in the federal courts with respect to land located in that state and sold for taxes there assessed. Paine v. Germantown Trust Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 527, 69 C. C. A. 303.

Tax law construed as giving lien. — A state tax, though in form levied upon land conveyed by the United States to a corporation for dry dock purposes, with a reserved right in the grantor to the free use of the dry dock, and a provision for forfeiture in case of the continued unfitness of the dry dock for use, or the use of the land for other purposes, will be held to create a lien upon the company's interest alone, where the highest state court so regards the effect of the tax, although it neglects to modify its judgment sustaining the tax to conform to its views. Baltimore Shipbuilding, etc., Co. v. Baltimore, (1904) 195 U. S. 375, 25 S. Ct. 50, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 242, affirming (1903) 97 Md. 97, 54 Atl. 628.

Relief against sale for taxes. — Where a state statute requires the repayment of all taxes with a certain rate of interest as a condition precedent to relief against a sale for taxes, such condition will be enforced in a federal court. Hobe-Peters Land Co. v. Farr, (1908) 170 Fed. 644.

Repeal of tax exemption law. — Whether a repealable exemption from state taxation has been in fact repealed by a subsequent state statute is a question of state law, upon which the decisions of the highest courts of the state, in the absence of any contract rights, are binding on the federal courts. Wicomico County v. Bancroft, (1906) 203 U. S. 112, 27 S. Ct. 21, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 112.

Private corporations — Interpretation of statute authorizing incorporation. — The decisions of the highest courts of a state, interpreting state statutes under which a corporation was organized, are controlling on the federal courts. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Quinby, (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 882.

Construction of charter. — Decisions of the highest court of the state as to the construction of the charter of an insurance company obtained under a general law of the state are binding upon the federal courts. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Brown, (1909) 213 U. S. 25, 29 S. Ct. 404, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 682, reversing (1907) 151 Fed. 1, 81 C. C. A. 1.

Corporate powers. — Rulings of the highest court of the state on questions involving the powers of corporations under the laws of that state are conclusive on the federal Supreme Court when reviewing the judgment of the state court. Stone v. Southern Illinois, etc., Bridge Co., (1907) 206 U. S. 267, 27 S. Ct. 615, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1057, affirming (1906) 194 Mo. 175, 92 S. W. 475.

Each state may determine what powers shall be possessed by corporations organized under its authority and what effect shall attach to acts done by such corporations beyond their powers. The question is one of state policy, and therefore a matter of local and not general law. Anglo-American Land, etc., Co. v. Lombard, (C. C. A. 1904) 132 Fed. 721.

But a decision of the highest court of a state denying a writ of mandamus to compel certain action on the part of a water company is not an authoritative adjudication of the statutory duties and powers of the company which is binding on a federal court in a suit in equity arising under similar circumstances, where, under the statutes of the state as previously construed, the court must necessarily have held that a proceeding in mandamus would not lie against a corporation of the character of the defendant. Wiemer v. Louisville Water Co., (1903) 130 Fed. 251.

Liability of officers. — The decision of a state Supreme Court that a statute imposing a personal liability for corporate debts on the president and secretary of a corporation for failure to file annual reports of the corporation's condition, etc., was remedial and not penal, has been held to be conclusive on all federal courts. Proctor-Gamble Co. v. Warren Cotton Oil Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 543.

poration by the constitution of Minnesota, declaring that each stockholder shall be liable to the amount of stock held or owned by him, as to whether such liability is wholly statutory or partially contractual, and therefore transitory, is a matter of general law as to which the federal courts sitting in Wisconsin are not bound to follow the decisions of the Wisconsin Supreme Court either as a matter of comity, or under R. S. sec. 721. Converse v. Meats, (1908) 162 Fed. 767.

Where the state Supreme Court held that a stockholder's statutory liability for debts arose at the time of the dissolution of the corporation, and that the date of the maturity of the obligation was immaterial, such decision would be followed in a federal court sitting in another state in a suit to enforce similar liability under the same statute. Ramaden v. Knowles, (1906) 151 Fed. 718.

What is ultra vires. — It is for the state courts alone to decide whether a display of exterior advertisements on automobile stages is ultra vires of a domestic corporation operating stage routes in a city. Fifth Ave. Coach Co. v. New York, (1911) 221 U. S. 467, 31 S. Ct. 709, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 815, affirming (1909) 194 N. Y. 19, 86 N. E. 824, 21 L. R. A. N. S. 744, 16 Ann. Cas. 695.

Regulating railroads. — The construction of a state law which requires railroads to erect and maintain suitable fences on both sides of the entire length of the railroad, etc., presents a local question, and a federal court will accept the construction placed thereon by the Supreme Court of the state. New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. Price, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 330.

Regulation of foreign corporation. — State statutes imposing requirements on foreign corporations as a condition precedent to their doing business in the state are valid, if reasonable in their provisions, and will be enforced by the federal courts, which will follow the construction placed on them by the courts of the state. Evansville, etc., Traction Co. v. Henderson Bridge Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 402; Tennis Bros. Co. v. Wetzel, etc., R. Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 193; Buffalo Refrigerating Mach. Co. v. Penn Heat, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 690.

Service of process on corporations. — The decision of the state Supreme Court that a local statute, relating to the service of process on corporations, applies to both foreign and domestic corporations, is binding on the federal courts if the service obtained in pursuance thereof constituted due process of law. Swarts v. Christie Grain, etc., Co., (1909) 166 Fed. 338.

Dissolution. — Where state statutes regulating the dissolution of corporations have been construed by the highest court of such state, the construction will be adopted by the federal courts in dealing with a corporation subject to such laws. In re Munger Vehicle Tire Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 901.

Right of action as against deposit required for protection of creditors. — Where a state statute required a corporation to deposit securities with the state treasurer for the protection of creditors, and authorized the latter on its insolvency to maintain a suit in a state court to avail themselves of such securities, such creditors who are qualified citizens of another state have the right to enforce such remedy and the trust created for their benefit in a federal court, and such court under its plenary jurisdiction as a court of equity to enforce trusts has power to take the securities into its own hands for administration at any stage of the suit when it deems such action for the best interest of the beneficiaries. Morrill v. American Reserve Bond Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 305.

Municipal and quasi-municipal corporations — Power. — Whether the action of a municipality is in excess of its powers is a question of local law which, having been determined by the Supreme Court of the state, will be followed by the United States Circuit Court. Southern Pac. Co. v. Western Pac. R. Co., (1906) 144 Fed. 160.

Incurring indebtedness. — Where a decision of the highest court in the state, construing the state constitution and laws with reference to a municipal corporation's power to incur indebtedness for waterworks, was urged as conclusive on the federal courts, it was held that the latter would not review an objection that the state action did not involve a genuine controversy, but was a friendly suit to obtain a favorable interpretation of the constitution to permit the issuance of water bonds. Sioux Falls v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 721, 69 C. C. A. 373, reversing (1904) 131 Fed. 890.

Bonds. — The federal courts, in determining the validity of a legislative Act, under which municipal bonds were issued, under the state constitution, will follow the construction placed upon the constitution by the highest court of the state at the time the bonds were issued and sold. Rees v. Olmsted, (1905) 135 Fed. 296, 68 C. C. A. 50.

County bonds, which were authorized and valid when issued under the law of the state as declared by its Supreme Court in previous decisions, will not be declared invalid in the hands of bona fide holders by a federal court because the state court has since reversed its former rulings. Henderson County v. Travelers Ins. Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 128 Fed. 817.

Validity of ordinance. — The validity, under the state laws, of an ordinance adopted by a board of county supervisors, is settled, so far as the federal courts are concerned, by a decision of the highest court of that state upholding a similar ordinance. Flanigan v. Sierra County, (1905) 196 U. S. 553, 25 S. Ct. 314, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 597, reversing (1903) 122 Fed. 24, 58 C. C. A. 340; Wheeler v. Plumas County, (1905) 196 U. S. 562, 25 S. Ct. 316, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 599, reversing (1903) 122 Fed. 1022, 58 C. C. A. 683.

Submission of question to voters. — Where the validity of an alternative submission of the question whether a city should issue bonds for the "construction or purchase" of a system of waterworks was in issue in a suit brought in the state courts to restrain the city from proceeding under such election, and a final judgment in favor of the city was affirmed on appeal to the state Supreme Court, it was held that such decision was conclusive on the federal courts against the validity of an objection to the alternative submission of such question. Sioux Falls v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 721, 69 C. C. A. 373, reversing (1904) 131 Fed. 890.

Validity of assessment. — The decision of the highest state court that the fact that members of the board levying an assessment for a local improvement were owners of property abutting on such improvement, and assessable therefor, would, at most, make the assessment voidable, and would not render it subject to collateral attack, is conclusive on the Supreme Court of the United States in reviewing the decision of the state court, foreclosing a lien on such assessment. Hibben v. Smith, (1903) 191 U. S. 310, 24 S. Ct. 88, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 195, affirming (1902) 158 Ind. 206, 62 N. E. 447.

Grant of water front. — Whether the grant by a town of its water front to an individual has been ratified, confirmed, or compromised by authority of law, and to what extent, if any, it has been so done, are questions of local law, the determination of which by the Supreme Court of the state will be followed by the United States Circuit Court. Southern Pac. Co. v. Western Pac. R. Co., (1906) 144 Fed. 160.

Drains. — The law as established by decisions in matters relating to public drains will be followed by the federal courts. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Appanoose County, (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 291, affirming (1908) 170 Fed. 665.

Rights of bidder for public work. — A federal court has jurisdiction of a suit by an unsuccessful bidder for public work to enforce any rights to which he may be entitled, to be determined according to the local law in accordance with the facts and the statutes involved as construed by the highest state tribunal. U. S. Wood Preserving Co. v. Sundmaker, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 678.

Contractual rights. — Where an employment contract was made in New York and broken there, if broken at all, by the employer's insolvency, a federal court administering the insolvent's estate in New York will follow the New York rule as to what constitutes a breach of such contract. Ely v. Van Kannel Revolving Door Co., (1911) 184 Fed. 459.

Where a contract of guaranty was made in New York, it was held that it should be construed according to the law of that state most favorably to the guarantee, though subject to the rule that, when the meaning is ascertained, the guarantor's liability is strictissimi juris. In re Merrill, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 312.

Where plaintiff, a resident of Montana, contracted in Minnesota with defendant for the transportation of certain cattle from Minnesota, to destination in Montana, and thereafter brought suit in the Montana state courts for damages resulting from delay, which suit defendant removed to the federal Circuit Court sitting in Montana, it was held that such court would not enforce a stipulation in the transportation contract, providing a sixty-day limitation for an action thereon, which was void under the express provisions of Civ. Code Mont., sec. 2245, though it was not prohibited by the laws of Minnesota, where the contract was made. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Kempton, (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 992.

A decision by the state Supreme Court in a suit brought under a local law to enjoin the further performance of a contract made by the city with a water company and the payment of any money thereunder, on the ground of its invalidity, in which the court denied the relief prayed for on the ground that the suit was barred by limitation, and expressed the opinion that the city, by reason of its accepting performance and itself performing the contract for a number of years, was without equity to question its validity, even though not technically operating to render the question of the validity of the contract res judicata, will be given such effect by analogy, and followed by a federal court in a subsequent action at law by the water company against the city to recover rentals under the contract, in which its invalidity is set up as a defense. Defiance v. McGonigale, (C. C. A. 1907) 150 Fed. 689, affirming (1905) 140 Fed. 621.

A decision of the highest court of a state adjudging void a contract made by a city, as beyond its constitutional powers, is not binding on a federal court in a suit involving the rights of a citizen of another state under such contract, unless the rule applied in such decision had been so long and firmly established as to have become a rule of property in the state at the time the contract was made. Columbia Ave. Sav. Fund, etc., Co. v. Dawson, (1903) 130 Fed. 152.

And see infra, under subdivision IV., p. 1425, as to the decision of questions concerning contractual rights and obligations, as a matter of general law.

Insurance contracts. — A state law which provides that insurance on life is a contract by which the insurer for a stipulated sum engages to pay a certain amount of money if another dies within the time limited by the policy, and that the life may be that of the insured, or of another in whose continuance the insured has an interest, etc., and that the insured may direct the money to be paid to his personal representatives, his widow, his children, or his assignee, and upon such direction, assented to by the insurer, no other person can defeat the same, etc., is merely declaratory of the general law, and hence the federal courts are not bound by a construction thereof by the highest court of the state not in accord with the views of such federal courts. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Lane, (1907) 151 Fed. 276, affirmed (C. C. A.) 157 Fed. 1002.

Rights of policy holders. — In a suit in the federal courts to determine the rights of policy holders and the insurer, the decisions of the highest courts of the state are of controlling authority. Polk v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Assoc., (1905) 137 Fed. 273.

Construction of policy. — The meaning and construction of a policy of insurance issued by a New York company, and both executed and to be carried out in that state, as declared by the highest court of the state, is of most persuasive influence, even if not of binding force, in the federal courts, in the absence of any federal question arising in the case. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Brown, (1909) 213 U. S. 25, 29 S. Ct. 404, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 682, reversing (1907) 151 Fed. 1, 81 C. C. A. 1.

Attaching application to policy. — Where the Supreme Court of the state in construing a statute providing that, unless a correct copy of the application is attached to life insurance policies, it shall not be considered a part of such policy or received in evidence, laid down the rule that where, under its terms, the application was not in itself admissible in evidence, the company could not be permitted to show by oral evidence statements made by the insured, which were afterwards incorporated into the application in support of a defense of fraud; and such rule had been acquiesced in regard to its correctness, such rule was binding upon the federal courts sitting within the state in actions at law of the same character. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Albro, (C. C. A. 1904) 127 Fed. 281, affirming (1902) 119 Fed. 629.

Matters affecting title to realty — Adverse possession. — The decision of the Supreme Court of the state that, where lands are wild and uninclosed, a local statute makes seven years' successive payments of taxes under color of title equivalent to seven years' actual adverse possession, and vests the title to such land in one who shows that he has paid the taxes during the period required, is conclusive on the federal court. Forshaw v. Layman, (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 193.

Right to quiet title. — A right given by a state statute to one in possession to maintain a suit to quiet title may be enforced in the federal courts. Kraus v. Congdon, (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 18.

Lis pendens. — A state statute providing that no lis pendens shall bind or affect a bona fide purchaser of real estate for a valuable consideration, without actual notice of such lis pendens, unless and until a memorandum, etc., is filed in the office of the clerk of the court in the county where the land lies, has no application to federal courts sitting in Virginia; such courts having no power to enforce the registration of such memoranda. King v. Davis, (1905) 137 Fed. 222.

Liens — Attorney's lien. — Whether an attorney has a lien for services rendered on money recovered as the result of his efforts is a matter of local law, not to be disposed of on independent views entertained by the federal courts. Cain v. Hockensmith Wheel, etc., Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 992.

Code Civ. Pro. N. Y., sec. 66, creating an attorney's lien on the client's cause of action, etc., and providing for the enforcement thereof on petition, is not a mere practice act, but created a right and provided a remedy for its enforcement, and was therefore controlling on the federal courts sitting in such state. In re Baxter, (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 22.

Mechanics' liens. — The construction of the New York mechanic's lien law by the New York Court of Appeals, to the effect that during the time a laborer, mechanic, materialman, or subcontractor is entitled to file his lien, he has a preferential statutory claim, in the nature of a nonperfected equitable lien, which cannot be defeated by the party against whom it might be asserted by a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, will be followed in the federal courts. In re Grissler, (1905) 136 Fed. 754, 60 C. C. A. 406.

Liens on vessels. — The Michigan Water Craft Act (Comp. Laws, ch. 298), which gives a lien to contractors and persons furnishing labor and materials in the construction of vessels, relates to contracts which are not maritime, and its construction by the Supreme Court of the state is binding on the federal courts. The Winnebago, (1905) 141 Fed. 945, 73 C. C. A. 295.

Recording of liens. — A decision of the highest court of a state, construing the recordation acts as respects what is necessary to be done to secure liens thereunder, will be followed by the federal courts. Tygart Valley Brewing Co. v. Vilter Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 184 Fed. 845, reversing (1909) 168 Fed. 1002.

Decedents' estates — Generally. — It is the settled rule that the courts of the United States will follow the decisions of the highest court of a state in the interpretation of its local statutes, and especially when they concern the descent and alienation of lands and the construction of wills and conveyances; and where there is a conflict of decision on such a matter the federal court will follow the latest, when no intervening contract rights are involved. Yocum v. Parker, (1904) 134 Fed. 205, 67 C. C. A. 227, affirming (1903) 130 Fed. 722; Selden v. Illinois Trust, etc., Bank, (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 872.

Establishment of claims of foreign creditor. — A foreign creditor may establish his claim in the courts of the United States against the personal representatives of a decedent, though the laws of the state in terms limit such right to proceedings in the local probate courts, but in such case the federal court administers the state laws and is bound by the same rules that govern the local tribunals. Schurmeier v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 1.

Conflict with federal equity practice. — Where the laws of the state governing the descent of real property and constituting rules of property conflict with the practice of the federal courts in equity, the former control; and where there is no conflict, both are in force. Childs v. Ferguson, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 795.

Testamentary trust. — While the federal courts adopt the local law of real property, as ascertained by the decisions of the state courts, including that pertaining to the construction of wills, such decisions merely afford a guide in applying the general rule that the intention of the testator is to be carried out to the solution of the question whether a will creates, by way of wish or recommendation, a testamentary trust. Russell v. U. S. Trust Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 445.

Negligence and liability therefor — Master and servant. — Since, in the federal courts, negligence of a superior servant does not create liability of the master for injuries to an inferior servant, a state law providing that every person in the employ of a railroad company, having charge or control of employees in any separate branch or department, shall be held to be the superior, and not the fellow servant, of employees in any other branch or department who have no power to direct or control in the branch in which they are employed, does not create a liability of the master to an inferior servant for injuries sustained through the negligence of the superior servant, enforceable in the federal courts. Kane v. Erie R. Co., (1904) 128 Fed. 474.

Where a statute of a state in which a servant was injured (for which injury action was brought in the federal court of another state) provided that, if such injury was caused by the negligence of any person in the service or employment of the master to whose orders or directions the servant at the time of the injury was bound to conform, if such injury resulted from his having so conformed, the master was liable, and the highest court in such state had held that, where a servant suffered injury through the negligence of a co-employee, such statute vested a right of action in the servant against the master without regard to the contract of hiring, which was material only as creating the relation of master and servant, such construction was binding on the federal court on the trial of the action for such injury. Dormidy v. Sharon Boiler Works, (1904) 127 Fed. 495.

In an action in a federal court for injuries to a servant of a railroad company, whether plaintiff and the engineer, by whose negligence plaintiff was injured, were fellow servants, depends on the law of the state where the accident occurred. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Farmer, (C. C. A. 1909) 176 Fed. 692.

Employers' liability law. — The New York employers' liability law (Laws 1902, p. 1748, ch. 600), extending and regulating the liability of employers to make compensation for personal injuries suffered by employees, having been construed by the state courts to repeal all other remedies previously available for injuries to employees within the state, and to require as a condition precedent to an action thereunder that notice of the time, place, and cause of injury shall be given within 120 days, such construction is binding on the federal courts sitting in New York in an action for injuries to an employee occurring therein. Crosby v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (1903) 128 Fed. 193. See also Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. Lakkonen, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 325; Proctor, etc., Co. v. Williams, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 695.

Since the sufficiency of a notice of injury to, or death of, an employee to a master preliminary to a suit required by the New York Employers Liability Act depends on the construction to be given to that statute, the federal courts in determining such question will follow the construction of the statute approved by the state court of last resort. U. S. Gypsum Co. v. Sliwienska, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 688 (construing Consol. Laws, ch. 31, art. 14).

Fellow-servant Act. — The Supreme Court of North Carolina having decided that the Fellow-servant Act of that state, providing that "any servant or employee of any railroad company" injured through the negligence of any other servant, employee, or agent of the company may maintain an action therefor against the company, applies to a manufacturing corporation which owns and operates a spur track on its ground as incidental to its main business, with respect to servants employed in such service, such construction of the statute is binding on the federal courts. U. S. Leather Co. v. Howell, (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 444.

Failure to place lookout on locomotive. — A state statute which requires that a lookout shall be maintained on railroad locomotives, and, when any person or other obstruction appears on the road, that the alarm whistle shall be sounded, etc., and that a failure to observe such precautions shall make the company liable for damages, having been construed by the state Supreme Court as giving damages notwithstanding contributory negligence, such construction will be followed in the federal court. Rogers v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 573, 89 C. C. A. 321.

Necessity of safeguarding machinery. — The construction and effect of a state statute requiring owners of mills and factories to safeguard their machinery is not a matter of general, but of local, law, and the decisions of the highest court of the state thereon are binding on the federal courts. Welsh v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 465.

Actions for wrongful death. — A federal court, in administering a state statute giving a right of recovery for wrongful death, will follow the decisions of the highest court of the state with respect to the measure of damages. Quinette v. Birso, (1905) 136 Fed. 825, 69 C. C. A. 503.

Recovery by nonresident alien. — The construction by the highest state court of a statute of that state creating a right of action for death in favor of the surviving relatives of the deceased, as not extending to such relatives as are nonresident aliens, must be accepted by the federal Supreme Court on a writ of error to the state court. Maiorano v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (1909) 213 U. S. 268, 29 S. Ct. 424, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 792, affirming (1907) 216 Pa. St. 402, 65 Atl. 1077, 116 Am. St. Rep. 778; Fulco v. Schuylkill Stone Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 98.

Liability of municipal corporations. — Whether a municipal corporation in a state is responsible for negligence of its officers in any stated case is a matter of local law, which it is the duty of the federal courts within such state to follow, when made manifest by legislative action or the decisions of the highest state court. Denver v. Porter, (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 288; Clark v. Atlantic City, (1910) 180 Fed. 598.

Public lands. — Where an action in the federal court depends on the construction of a state statute providing for the sale of state lands, the federal court is required to adopt the construction placed on the statute by the highest court of such state. Lockard v. Asher Lumber Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 689, 65 C. C. A. 517, reversing (1903) 123 Fed. 480.

Thus where the state Supreme Court located the boundaries of the grant of water front in determining the extent and validity of the grant, such boundaries will be followed by the Circuit Court of the United States in determining conflicting claims of parties claiming title to lands on such water front. Southern Pac. Co. v. Western Pac. R. Co., (1906) 144 Fed. 160.

Where the priority of certain state grants had been settled by the Supreme Court of the state the decision is binding on the federal court sitting in such state in a suit instituted therein. North Carolina Min. Co. v. Westfeldt, (1907) 151 Fed. 290.

The question "What did the legislature mean by the use of the term 'ship channel'?" in the grant of the lands lying between high tide and ship channel, is a question of local law, and where the Supreme Court of the state determines it as comprising waters left free to navigation, and the definite natural boundary of such navigable waters as the line of low tide, its decision will be followed by the United States Circuit Court. Southern Pac. Co. v. Western Pac. R. Co., (1906) 144 Fed. 160.

Criminal laws — Construction. — Upon the question of the construction of a state statute, enforceable through criminal proceedings, a federal court is bound by the construction placed thereon by the state court. Love v. Busch, (1906) 142 Fed. 429, 73 C. C. A. 545. See also Ughbanks v. Armstrong, (1908) 208 U. S. 481, 28 S. Ct. 372, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 582.

Misnomer in complaint. — What constitutes a misnomer in a criminal complaint or warrant for violation of the laws of the state is a local question as to which the federal courts will follow the settled rule of the state courts, in the absence of any statute on the subject. O'Halloran v. McGuirk, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 493.

Conspiracy to defraud. — A decision of the highest state court that a conspiracy to defraud is a crime under the laws of the state concludes the Supreme Court of the United States on habeas corpus to inquire into a detention under a conviction for that crime in a court of the state. Howard v. Fleming, (1903) 191 U. S. 126, 24 S. Ct. 49, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 121.

Offenses against United States. — But Rev. Stat. sec. 721 has no application to criminal offenses against the United States. U. S. v. Central Vermont R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 291.

Accrual of cause of action. — Where a cause of action is created by a state statute, the question when the right of action accrues, and what conditions authorize its enforcement, is one of judicial construction, as to which the decisions of the highest court of the state are controlling on the federal courts. Whitman v. Atkinson, (C. C. A. 1904) 130 Fed. 759.

The right of a third person to sue upon a contract made for his benefit being fully established by decision in the state courts, such rule is controlling upon a federal court. Bethlehem Iron Co. v. Hoadley, (1907) 152 Fed. 735.

Elements of damage.—Where a state law required all telegraph messages to be delivered without unreasonable delay, and declared that any officer or agent of a telegraph company who wilfully violated the provisions of the Act should be guilty of a misdemeanor, and that the company should be liable in damages to the party aggrieved, it was held that, though the state court had construed such statute to entitle the plaintiff to recover nominal damages in any event, it had not construed it as conferring also the right to recover for mental damages or injured feelings, irrespective of some physical injury, but that the common law gives the right to recover for injured feelings whenever the plaintiff has either a common-law or statutory right to recover "some damages" upon any other ground. The question, therefore, whether a statutory right to recover some damages for a breach of a statutory duty affords a basis to recover also for injured feelings is a question of general jurisprudence, with regard to which the federal court was not bound by the state court's opinion. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Sklar, (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 295.

Defense to action.—A statute which provides that any employer maintaining a relief department for its employees shall be liable for the payment of all benefits to which an employee shall be entitled therefrom by reason of any sickness or injury, and that in case of injury the acceptance of such benefits shall not estop the employee to maintain an action against the employer to recover damages for its negligence causing such injury, having been held by the state court to be beyond the power of the legislature, so that an employee who had elected to accept benefits was estopped from bringing an action for damages notwithstanding the Act, the federal court should have ruled that the acceptance of benefits was a good defense to the action for damages. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Dunning, (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 850, reversing (1906) 150 Fed. 775.

Statutes of limitation.—Federal courts in suits in equity will accept the statutory regulations of the states prescribing the time within which suits may be brought, where to do so will not abrogate their own principles. Dupree v. Mansur, (1909) 214 U. S. 161, 29 S. Ct. 548, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 950, reversing (1907) 150 Fed. 329, 80 C. C. A. 213; Schurmeier v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 124 Fed. 865; McGonigale v. Defiance, (1905) 140 Fed. 621; U. S. v. Boomer, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 726, 730; Armstrong Cork Co. v. Merchants' Refrigerating Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 184 Fed. 199, modifying (1909) 171 Fed. 778; Kentucky Coal, etc., Co.

v. Kentucky Union Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 945.

Rules of evidence — Production of books and papers.—Whether the notice to a corporation to produce books and papers before a grand jury is broader than that provided for by the law of the state, is a question of the construction of the statute and of the notice, on which the decision of the state court is final, and not reviewable by the federal Supreme Court on writ of error. Consolidated Rendering Co. v. Vermont, (1908) 207 U. S. 541, 28 S. Ct. 178, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 327, affirming (1907) 80 Vt. 55, 66 Atl. 790.

Evidential effect of statute.—A rule established by decision of the state courts that an engrossed act of the legislature duly approved, signed, and filed is conclusive evidence of its contents, and cannot be contradicted by any evidence whatever, is one relating to the construction of the state statutes and is binding on the federal courts. U. S. v. Andem, (1908) 158 Fed. 996.

Relation of physician and patient.—Whether the relation of physician and patient so existed as to exclude the former's testimony, under the state law, involves a question of the construction of a state statute, on which the decisions of the highest state court will be accepted on a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States to that court. Supreme Lodge, etc., v. Meyer, (1905) 198 U. S. 508, 25 S. Ct. 754, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1146, affirming (1904) 178 N. Y. 63, 70 N. E. 111, 64 L. R. A. 840.

Failure to use war revenue stamps.—Decisions of state courts that instruments, though unstamped, as required by the War Revenue Act, were admissible in evidence, have no application to federal courts. Sackett v. McCaffrey, (C. C. A. 1904) 131 Fed. 219.

Anti-trust legislation.—The construction given by the state courts to a state statute as removing the discriminatory features of prior anti-trust laws is conclusive on the federal Supreme Court in determining, on writ of error to the state court, whether such statute denies the equal protection of the laws. National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, (1905) 197 U. S. 115, 25 S. Ct. 379, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 689; Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, (1905) 197 U. S. 134, 25 S. Ct. 383, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 696.

Division of state Supreme Court.—Where a state statute dividing the state Supreme Court into divisions and conferring separate powers and duties on such divisions was held to be constitutional by all of the justices of such court sitting in banc in a case in which the question was directly involved, such decision is conclusive on the federal courts. Williams v. Stearns, (1903) 126 Fed. 211.

Increasing salary of judges.—Where a taxpayers' action was brought in the federal court to determine whether a local act, increasing the salaries of state judges, infringed the state constitution, and before the determination of a motion to dismiss the bill the state Supreme Court decided that the act was constitutional, it was held that such decision was binding on the federal court. Henry F. Michell Co. v. Matthues, (1905) 134 Fed. 493.

IV. QUESTIONS OF GENERAL LAW.

General and commercial law.—The federal courts must render independent decisions on questions of commercial or general law, in which matters decisions of state courts are not controlling. In re Hopper-Morgan Co., (1907) 154 Fed. 249; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hummel, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 80; Russell v. Grigsby, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 577; Scherer v. Everest, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 822; Shenandoah First Nat. Bank v. Liewer, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 16; Guernsey v. Imperial Bank, (C. C. A. 1911) 188 Fed. 300.

Common law of state.—Upon the question as to what is the common law of the state, unless the decisions of its courts have so clearly established a settled rule in the premises as to make it a part of the peculiar and local law of that state, the federal courts exercise an independent judgment, their jurisdiction being co-ordinate with, and not subordinate to, the state court. Snare, etc., Co. v. Friedman, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 1.

Contractual rights and obligations.—The right of a party to an executory contract, on the refusal of the other party to perform, to sue for and recover his entire damages for the breach, without waiting for the expiration of the time for performance, is a question of general law, upon which the federal courts are not bound by the rule of the state courts. H. T. Smith Co. v. Minetto-Meriden Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 777.

A contract of guaranty is a well-known form of commercial contract, as to the construction and effect of which the federal courts are not bound to follow state decisions not based on a local statute or usage having the force of a local law. Johnson v. Charles D. Norton Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 361.

A decision of an appellate state court construing a contract between the parties, while not conclusive on the federal courts of concurrent original jurisdiction, will nevertheless be given strong persuasive effect. Henderson v. Phillips, (1910) 178 Fed. 374.

Insurance contracts—Double insurance.—The question whether a case of double insurance is made out, so as to require contribution between the insurers, is one of general commercial law, the determination of which by the Supreme Court of the state where the question arose is not binding on the federal courts of that jurisdiction. Meigs v. London Assur. Co., (1905) 134 Fed. 1021. 68 C. C. A. 249, affirming (1904) 126 Fed. 781.

Assignment of policy.—Where the validity of an assignment of a life insurance policy between citizens of Tennessee and made in that state is to be determined by a federal court sitting therein, and such validity does not depend on a local statute or usage, but is to be decided on principles of general law, the court must exercise an independent judgment, though it leads it to a different conclusion from that arrived at by the Tennessee courts. Russell v. Grigsby, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 577.

The question whether or not an insurable interest in an assignee is requisite to the validity of the assignment of a policy of life insurance originally issued to one who had an insurable interest is a question of general law, on which decisions in the state in which the assignment was made are not controlling in the federal courts. Gordon v. Ware Nat. Bank, (1904) 132 Fed. 444, 65 C. C. A. 580, 67 L. R. A. 550.

Limitation of time to sue on insurance policy.—Whether a provision in an insurance policy that no action shall be brought after the lapse of a year from the date of death is valid is a question of general public policy, as to which federal courts will follow federal decisions, though in conflict with the decisions of the highest courts of the state. Spinks v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Assoc., (1905) 137 Fed. 169.

Negotiable instruments.—The negotiability of a note is a question pertaining to the law merchant, with regard to which federal courts are not bound by local decisions, unless predicated on a special statutory enactment defining the elements of a negotiable instrument. St. Louis State Nat. Bank v. Cudahy Packing Co., (1904) 126 Fed. 543.

Whether or not a certificate of deposit is a negotiable instrument, when not controlled by statute, is a question of general commercial law, upon which a federal court is not concluded by state decisions. Forrest v. Safety Banking, etc., Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 345.

Where, in an action on city notes, defendant claimed that the city was not liable because the notes sued on constituted an over-issue, but the facts concerning such defense were not known to plaintiffs when they purchased the notes and they did not appear on the face thereof, plaintiffs' right to recover in a federal court is not a question of local law, but of general law concerning the rights of bona fide holders of commercial paper, concerning which the federal courts are not bound by local decisions. Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Newburyport, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 766.

Provision for payment of attorney fees for collection.—A provision in a negotiable note for the payment of attorney's fees by the maker in case of collection by suit, when such note is collected in a court of admiralty in another state by the enforcement of a mortgage on a vessel securing the same, is not governed by the law of the state where the contract was made, but by the general commercial law, and will not be enforced by a federal court, and especially where, owing to the death of the maker, insolvent, the amount, if allowed, must be taken from holders of junior liens. The Avalon, (1909) 169 Fed. 696.

Construction of bond.—The question of the construction and validity of a bond given in conformity to the requirements of a state statute is one of general law, as to which a federal court is not controlled by a decision of the state courts, but must exercise its independent judgment. Kansas City Hydraulic Press Brick Co. v. National Surety Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 507.

Collateral attack on judgment.—The right of collateral attack on a judgment is a matter of general law, as to which the decisions of the courts of a state are not binding on a federal court. Phoenix Bridge Co. v. Castleberry, (C. C. A. 1904) 131 Fed. 175.

The validity of an arbitration agreement to oust the courts of all jurisdiction over the subject of a controversy, under the contract, is a matter of general law, as to which federal courts are not bound by state decisions. Jefferson F. Ins. Co. v. Bierce, (1910) 183 Fed. 588.

Nonreturn of replevied property. — Where the question of what will excuse a plaintiff for nonreturn of property replevied, on his failure in the action, is one of general law in the state, the decisions of its Supreme Court thereon are not binding on a federal court. Three States Lumber Co. v. Blanks, (1904) 133 Fed. 479, 66 C. C. A. 353.

The penal character of a state statute precluding its enforcement outside the state is a question of general jurisprudence uncontrolled by the decisions of the courts of the state. Leyner Engineering Works v. Kempner, (1908) 163 Fed. 605.

Liability for negligence — Generally. — The question of liability for negligence, when not modified or governed by statute law, is one of general law, upon which federal courts are not required to follow the state decisions, although there may be such a decision based on the identical facts. Snare, etc., Co. v. Friedman, (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 1.

Master and servant. — In the absence of a state statute governing the subject, the question of the liability of an employer for an injury to an employee is one of general law, as to which the federal courts are not bound by the decisions of the state courts. Salmons v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 722; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Hart, (C. C. A. 1910) 176 Fed. 245; Farrar v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1910) 149 Mo. App. 188, 130 S. W. 373.

Liability of lessor of railroad. — Under the holdings of the federal courts, a lessor of a railroad track is not liable for the negligence of its lessee in operating its trains on such track, and, the question being one of general law, a federal court is not controlled thereon by state decisions. Yeates v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 943. See also Curtis v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 777.

Care required at crossings. — Upon the question of the care required of a traveler on a highway on approaching a street railway crossing, the local decisions are persuasive in a federal court. Milford, etc., St. R. Co. v. Cline, (C. C. A. 1907) 150 Fed. 325.

Fellow-servant doctrine. — The common-law fellow-servant doctrine, as construed by the Supreme Court of Louisiana, prevails in that state, and in a federal court in that state the liability of a master for injury of a servant, through the negligence of a fellow servant, and the question who are fellow servants, are questions of general law, not controlled by state decisions. Jones v. Southern Pac. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 973; Kinnear Mfg. Co. v. Carlisle, (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 933; Snipes v. Southern R. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 1; Spring Valley Coal Co. v.

Res ipsa loquitur. — Whether the doctrine res ipsa loquitur applies to an action for injuries to a servant by the breaking of a ladder rung on the side of a freight car is a question of general jurisprudence, and not of local law, as to which federal courts are governed by their own decisions and not by those of the state in which the court is sitting. Patton v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 530.

On removal from state court. — When a case involving negligence is removed from a state to a federal court, unless the action is founded on a state statute such question is one of general law on which the courts of the United States will exercise an independent judgment. Force v. Standard Silk Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 992.

Effect of previous decision by state court. — Where an action against a carrier to recover damages for injuries to a passenger had been dismissed pursuant to the unanimous opinion of the highest state court, and the questions of negligence presented were not questions as to which the federal and state courts were at variance, it was held that comity required such decision to be followed by the federal courts in a subsequent action therein by the same parties for the same cause, though such opinion was not controlling authority. Mearns v. New Jersey Cent. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 543.

Measure of damages. — The question of the measure of damages recoverable in an action of tort, where not governed by the state constitution or statutes, is one of general jurisprudence, upon which state decisions are not controlling on the federal courts. Woldson v. Larson, (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 548.

Under the rule of the federal courts there can be no recovery of damages from a telegraph company for mental anguish caused by failure to deliver a message, or by delay in delivery, where that is the only ground of damage; and in the absence of statutory provisions the question is one of general law, upon which state decisions are not controlling in the federal courts. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burris, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 92.

Whether a carrier is liable for exemplary damages for wanton and oppressive conduct by a servant toward a passenger is a question of general jurisprudence, and not of local law, on which the federal courts, in the absence of express statutory regulation, will exercise their own judgment uncontrolled by the decisions of state courts. Norfolk, etc., Traction Co. v. Miller, (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 607.

Submission to physical examination. — The question whether a court has at common law the power to compel a plaintiff in an action for a personal injury to submit to a surgical examination is a matter of practice and not of evidence, and, as a matter of practice relating to the power of courts, neither state statutes nor the decisions of state courts on the subject are binding on federal courts. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Kendall, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 62.

Vol. IV, p. 529, sec. 722.

Application of state laws.—Under R. S. secs. 722 and 800 the court has the right, in every case in which there is no express provision of the federal statute, to apply laws of the state in which the court is held. U. S. v. Mitchell, (1905) 136 Fed. 896.

There is no ambiguity whatever in this section; nor can there be any question as to its general application. U. S. v. Mitchell, (1905) 136 Fed. 896.

Vol. IV, p. 530, sec. 723.

Effect of adequate remedy at law.—In the national courts, equity will not assume jurisdiction if the law courts afford a plain, adequate, and complete remedy. Hunter v. Robbins, (1902) 117 Fed. 920; Safford v. Ensign Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 120 Fed. 480; Giberson v. Cook, (1903) 124 Fed. 988; Miller v. Schwarner, (1904) 130 Fed. 561; Kane v. Luckman, (1904) 131 Fed. 609; American Lighting Co. v. New Jersey Public Service Corp., (1904) 134 Fed. 129; Indian Land, etc., Co. v. Shoenfelt, (C. C. A. 1905) 135 Fed. 484; Hunt v. O'Conner, (1907) 151 Fed. 707; Wallula Pac. R. Co. v. Portland, etc., R. Co., (1906) 154 Fed. 902; Johnston v. Corson Gold Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 152; Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, (1909) 168 Fed. 756; Stockton v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 627; Gilbert v. Hopkins, (1909) 171 Fed. 704; Pullman Co. v. Tamble, (1909) 173 Fed. 200; Buchanan Co. v. Adkins, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 700; Shawnee Milling Co. v. Temple, (1910) 179 Fed. 517.

This section is merely a statutory expression of the equitable rule. In no sense does it enlarge or contract the equitable jurisdiction of the federal courts, or exclude them from any recognized field of equitable jurisdiction. Brissell v. Knapp, (1907) 155 Fed. 815.

It does not alter the rule that was in force prior to 1789, when it was first enacted, concerning the power of a court of equity to assume jurisdiction in a case triable at law. Manning v. Berdan, (1905) 135 Fed. 159.

Nature of remedy at law required.—But it is not enough that there is a remedy at law; such remedy must be plain, adequate, and complete, and as efficient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration as the remedy in equity. Hunter v. Robbins, (1902) 117 Fed. 920; Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Schmidt, (1904) 126 Fed. 998; Manning v. Berdan, (1905) 135 Fed. 159; Brewster v. Lanyon Zinc Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 801; Balfour v. San Joaquin Valley Bank, (1906) 156 Fed. 500; Rumbarger v. Yokum, (1909) 174 Fed. 55; Laws v. Fleming, (1910) 177 Fed. 450; Howard v. National Telephone Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 215; Preston v. Sturgis Milling Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 1.

This section does not prevent the granting of legal relief therein where jurisdiction has been acquired to grant equitable relief, and the legal remedy is not as practicable and efficient. Salton Sea Cases, (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 792.

The remedy may be inadequate because the procedure at law is too inflexible to suit the exigencies of the case, or because the relief which a common-law judgment can afford is not adaptable to the peculiar facts. When neither of these difficulties is in the way, there can be no reason for resorting to a court of equity. Miller v. Steele, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 719.

Legal and equitable suits distinguished.—So marked is the distinction between the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States in equity and at law with respect to procedure, that the blending together in one suit in a federal court of essentially legal and equitable remedies cannot be authorized or justified by any state statute or practice on the subject; but, although no state legislation is competent to extend or restrict the jurisdiction of the federal courts, a state may create an enlargement of rights and remedies, whether equitable or legal, which may be enforced or pursued in a federal court, in the exercise of that branch of its jurisdiction which is appropriate to the case; and where a state statute creates a right and a remedy for its protection or enforcement, and such remedy substantially conforms to the procedure in chancery, it, in the absence of a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law, may be pursued on the equity side of a federal court. Where the direct object of a suit is the judicial ascertainment of the existence and amount of a pecuniary legal demand and the enforcement of its payment by the process of the court in which the suit is brought, the proceeding is essentially an action at law and in a federal court must be so treated, regardless of state legislation. Nor is the distinctly legal nature of such a remedy lost merely because, owing to the circumstances of a given case, the purpose of the action may fail of accomplishment. The want of a remedy and the inability to obtain the fruits of a remedy are quite distinct. Jones v. Mutual Fidelity Co., (1903) 123 Fed. 507.

Extent of equitable jurisdiction.—Generally.—The fact that a right may be cognizable at law by no means determines that it may not be cognizable in equity and serve as the basis for a purely equitable remedy; for in many cases a given demand or interest may constitute the foundation of a suit either at law or in equity, and whether the procedure shall be at law on the one hand, or on the other in equity, absolutely depends on the object of the suit and the nature of the relief sought. If the procedure and relief are essentially equitable the circumstance that they bear relation to a legal demand is immaterial. Jones v. Mutual Fidelity Co., (1903) 123 Fed. 508.

In aid of legal remedy.—If a remedy is essentially legal, and in its nature fitted or adapted, in the absence of obstacles which may or may not exist, to attain the object in view, then, whatever equitable procedure may in particular cases be resorted to in aid of the legal remedy, it cannot wholly displace it. The jurisdiction of chancery to reach the equitable or legal assets of a defendant, whether a corporation or a natural person, in aid of a legal remedy for a money demand is indisputable. But such an exercise of jurisdiction is not by way of substitution for, but only in aid of, the legal remedy, and it can be resorted to only after the plaintiff has exhausted such remedy. This necessitates the obtaining of judgment for the demand, and, usually, the issuance of execution and its return unsatisfied. Jones v. Mutual Fidelity Co., (1903) 123 Fed. 506.

The fact that equitable relief can be granted in aid of a legal remedy only after the plaintiff has exhausted such remedy precludes the possibility of any clash or conflict between legal jurisdiction and equitable jurisdiction, or of any blending of legal and equitable remedies in the same suit. Jones v. Mutual Fidelity Co., (1903) 123 Fed. 506.

Bill of discovery.—In a case in which discovery and relief are sought, but the only ground for equitable relief appears to be a discovery of evidence to be used in the enforcement of a purely legal demand, the jurisdiction cannot be sustained. Safford v. Ensign Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 120 Fed. 483.

But where the subject-matter of a suit in a federal court is clearly within the jurisdiction of a court of equity, the complainant is entitled to discovery in respect to any matters relevant and necessary to his case. Brown v. Pegram, (1906) 149 Fed. 515.

Relief against collection of judgment.—It is well established that equity will entertain jurisdiction and afford relief against the collection of a judgment where in justice and good conscience it ought not to be enforced, as where there is a meritorious equitable defense thereto, which could not have been set up at law or which the party was, without fault or negligence, prevented from interposing. Brown v. Pegram, (1906) 149 Fed. 520.

To prevent assessment and collection of taxes.—Federal jurisdiction in equity to prevent the assessment and collection of taxes against complainant is not ousted because of an alleged adequate remedy in the state courts. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Trapp, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 114.

Effect of state rules.—The elements of federal jurisdiction being present, a right of action created or enlarged by the laws of a state and made enforceable in its courts of general jurisdiction is equally enforceable in the federal courts sitting in that state; but, notwithstanding the procedure prescribed by the laws of the state, the enforcement in the federal courts can be by suit in equity only where there is not a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law, according to the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity prevailing in those courts. U. S. Min- ing Co. v. Lawson, (C. C. A. 1904) 134 Fed. 769 (citing the earlier decisions).

The adequacy or inadequacy of a remedy at law for the protection of the rights of one entitled upon any ground to invoke the powers of a federal court is not to be conclusively determined by the statutes of the particular state in which suit may be brought. One who is entitled to sue in the federal Circuit Court may invoke its jurisdiction in equity whenever the established principles and rules of equity permit such a suit in that court; and he cannot be deprived of that right by reason of his being allowed to sue at law in a state court on the same cause of action. It is true that an enlargement of equitable rights arising from the statutes of a state may be administered by the Circuit Courts of the United States (citing authorities). But if the case in its essence is one cognizable in equity, the plaintiff—the required value being in dispute—may invoke the equity powers of the proper Circuit Court of the United States whenever jurisdiction attaches by reason of diverse citizenship or upon any other ground of federal jurisdiction. A party by going into a national court does not lose any right or appropriate remedy of which he might have availed himself in the state courts of the same locality; the wise policy of the Constitution gives him a choice of tribunals (citing authorities). So whenever a citizen of a state can go into the courts of a state to defend his property against the illegal acts of its officers, a citizen of another state may invoke the jurisdiction of the federal courts to maintain a like defense. A state cannot tie up a citizen of another state, having property rights within its territory invaded by unauthorized acts of its own officers, to suits for redress in its own courts. Colorado Eastern R. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 141 Fed. 898.

Where the procedure and relief provided by a state statute are essentially equitable, and such relief is impossible of attainment in any action at law, not owing to the existence of any accidental or abnormal obstacles or difficulties, but by reason of the essential nature of such action and legal process, a case for purely equitable cognizance under the statute is presented. Jones v. Mutual Fidelity Co., (1903) 123 Fed. 508.

All actions which seek to recover specific property, real or personal, with or without damages for its detention, or a money judgment for breach of a simple contract, or as damages for injury to person or property, are legal actions, and can be brought in the federal courts only on their law side. Demands of this kind do not lose their character as claims cognizable in the courts of the United States only on their law side, because in some state courts, by virtue of state legislation, equitable relief in aid of the demand at law may be sought in the same action. Such blending of remedies is not permissible in the courts of the United States. Norton v. Colusa Parrot Min., etc., Co., (1908) 167 Fed. 205; South Penn Oil Co. v. Miller, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 729.

Since state legislation cannot enlarge the jurisdiction of the federal courts in equity, such legislation, if conflicting with the distinction observed in federal courts between law and equity, is unenforceable. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Quigley, (1910) 181 Fed. 190.

A state statute cannot confer on a federal court jurisdiction of a suit in equity to quiet title to real estate of which the defendant is in possession. Giberson v. Cook, (1903) 124 Fed. 986; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Cunningham, (1909) 173 Fed. 93.

Time to object.—In a suit in equity in a federal court, the objection that plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law is jurisdictional, and may be made at any stage of the case. Kane v. Luckman, (1904) 131 Fed. 609.

The defense of adequate remedy at law is one of substance in the national courts affecting the jurisdiction, and may therefore be raised at any stage of the proceedings, either by the parties, or the court of its own volition. Marthinson v. King, (C. C. A. 1906) 150 Fed. 49.

Waiver of objection to equity jurisdiction.—This section secures a privilege personal to the defendant, which he may waive. Warmath v. O'Daniel, (C. C. A. 1908) 150 Fed. 87.

The objection that complainant had an adequate remedy at law does not—when not made until the hearing—require the dismissal of a cause the subject-matter of which is within the jurisdiction of a court of equity. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., (1906) 200 U. S. 341, 26 S. Ct. 296, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 507.

Concurrent jurisdiction.—An exception to the general rule that a suit in equity cannot be maintained in a federal court where there is a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law, exists in the case of an executory contract for the sale of real estate, where the vendor has an election of remedies, and may maintain a suit in equity to enforce the obligation of the purchaser to pay the purchase money, whenever the latter could maintain such a suit to compel a conveyance. Nelson v. Husted, (1910) 182 Fed. 921.

If the remedies at law and in equity are concurrent the plaintiff may choose which he will pursue. Griesa v. New York Mut. L. Ins. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 514.

It was not intended to restrict the ancient jurisdiction of courts of equity, or to prohibit their exercise of a concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law in cases where such concurrent jurisdiction has been previously upheld. U. S. v. Leslie, (1909) 167 Fed. 673.

Right to jury trial.—The main purpose of this section was to emphasize the necessity for preserving to litigants in courts of the United States the right to trial by jury secured by the Seventh Amendment in suits at common law, and that, where a state statute grants to litigants in its courts an equitable remedy which does not impinge on their right to a trial by jury at common law, courts of the United States, sitting in the state as courts of equity, may grant the same statutory relief as that afforded in the state tribunals. In such cases, where the right of trial is not interfered with, the equitable remedy afforded by the statute of the state is usually so much more complete than the old remedies that the language of section 723 interposes no obstacle to equitable jurisdiction in the federal courts. Ames Realty Co. v. Big Indian Min. Co., (1906) 146 Fed. 175.

Waiver.—The right to a trial by jury when there is a suitable remedy at law is confirmed by this section. But that right is one which the defendant may waive; and he does waive it if he answers to the merits without claiming it. This, of course, does not preclude the court from raising the objection if the case made by the bill is plainly unsuitable for the exercise of the jurisdiction of a court of equity. Toledo Computing Scale Co. v. Computing Scale Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 142 Fed. 919.

Vol. IV, p. 534, sec. 725.

Purpose of this section.—In Ex p. McLeod, (1903) 120 Fed. 130, it was said: "It is to be borne in mind that this section of the Revised Statutes was induced by the acquittal of District Judge Peck, who was impeached for imprisoning an attorney for a criticism of one of his decisions, after the case had ended in his court. The acquittal was largely due to the consideration that the common law authorized the judge to treat such criticism as a contempt of court, and that there was not sufficient evidence in other respects to show that the judge had acted corruptly or maliciously. Public opinion, which had not forgotten the passions aroused by the alien and sedition laws, and the partisanship of judges in their enforcement, looked upon the act of Judge Peck as an attempt of the judiciary to revive the principles of these obnoxious laws, and to assert common-law powers which were inconsistent with our Constitution and institutions. Congress intended by this statute to put an end to the power of any federal court to prevent, by punishment as for contempt, criticism of judicial acts or decisions, or even mere libels on individuals concerned in the administration of justice. The statute was drawn by Mr. Buchanan, one of the managers of the impeachment, who afterwards became President. It is doubtful, to say the least of it, whether any of the eminent lawyers in the Congress which adopted this provision, taken from a similar statute in Pennsylvania, had in mind anything more than to prevent the punishment, as for a contempt, of exercises of the right of free speech and liberty of the press in criticising and denouncing judicial acts. It is questionable, to say the least of it, whether Congress intended to take away from the courts the existing common-law power to punish, as for a contempt, improper efforts, in the guise of published statements or comments, pending the trial of a particular case, to secure judgment therein, in obedience to the dictates of passion or prejudice, or to thrust other ulterior considerations before the tribunal, against which justice and the law seeks to guard judge and jury in the trial and decision of causes."

What constitutes contempt — Contempt by juror.— A grand jury is only impaneled to make preliminary investigations of those things committed to its charge. These investigations require, in ordinary practice, but a few days each term to complete. The members are then discharged, and by the terms of section 812, Rev. Stat., as modified by Act June 30, 1879, ch. 52, sec. 2, 21 Stat. L. 43, a juror who has thus served a term should not be allowed to serve again until after the lapse of one year. But if the oath should be held to require perpetual secrecy on the part of such juror, and even if he might subject himself to prosecution for perjury because of its violation, he is nevertheless shielded from the power of the court to attach him for contempt so soon as the court has discharged him from further service. Atwell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 97.

Contempt by witnesses.— By the very terms of the Act a witness duly subpoenaed may be punished for contempt in refusing to obey its commands. U. S. v. Tom Wah, (1908) 160 Fed. 207, affirmed (C. C. A.) 163 Fed. 1008.

Violation of injunction.— A proceeding against members of labor unions to punish them for contempt for prosecuting a criminal conspiracy to violate an injunction, granted by the court in a civil suit, restraining them from interfering with the business or employees of the complainant therein, is a criminal proceeding within the meaning of R. S. sec. 860, which provides that no discovery or evidence obtained from a party or witness by means of a judicial proceeding shall be given in evidence or in any manner used against him in any court of the United States in any criminal proceeding. Hammond Lumber Co. v. Sailors' Union of the Pacific, (1909) 167 Fed. 809.

Disobeying order for stay of proceedings.— The sheriff and night jailer in charge of a prisoner under sentence of death in a state court are chargeable with contempt of the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States staying all proceedings pending an appeal from an order of a federal Circuit Court denying relief by habeas corpus, where such officials made no preparation to prevent the murder of the prisoner by a mob, actuated by the intent to prevent the delay attendant upon such appeal, although such action was reasonably to be anticipated, and made no effort to resist the mob, to save the prisoner, or to identify the participants in the crime. U. S. v. Shipp, (1909) 214 U. S. 386, 29 S. Ct. 637, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 1041.

Lack of jurisdiction in the federal Circuit Court of a petition for habeas corpus, or in the Supreme Court of the appeal from the order denying the writ, does not enable persons to disregard, without liability to process for contempt, the order of the Supreme Court that "all proceedings against the appellant be stayed, and the custody of said appellant be retained pending this appeal," since that court necessarily has jurisdiction to decide whether the case is properly before it. U. S. v. Shipp, (1906) 203 U. S. 563, 27 S. Ct. 165, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 319.

Participants in the murder of a prisoner under sentence of death in a state court, after an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from an order of a federal Circuit Court denying relief by habeas corpus has been allowed and the proceedings stayed, are guilty of contempt of the Supreme Court, where their crime was actuated by the intent to prevent the delay attendant upon such appeal. U. S. v. Shipp, (1909) 214 U. S. 386, 29 S. Ct. 637, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 1041.

Bankruptcy.— Contempts in bankruptcy proceedings have been considered under section 41 of the Bankruptcy Act. See ante, the title BANKRUPTCY, p. 589 of this Supplement.

The words "so near thereto."— The inherent power of the court to punish for contempt is based upon the theory that it is essential that the court should possess ample authority to secure the free and unobstructed exercise of its functions in the enforcement of the law. Therefore it is only such acts as tend to interfere with the orderly proceedings of the court or with the due administration of justice that can be properly punished as a contempt of court. Words written or spoken at a place other than where the court is held, and not so near thereto as to interfere with the proceeding of the court, do not render the author liable. Any loud noise or other disturbance in the presence of the court, or in the street or other place so near thereto as to interfere with the orderly proceedings of the court, would undoubtedly tend to obstruct the administration of justice, and under such circumstances the court is empowered to summarily punish for contempt. That newspapers sometimes engage in unwarranted criticism of the courts cannot be denied. In some instances they construe the liberty of the press as a license to authorize them to engage in a wholesale abuse of the court; but these instances are rare, and do not warrant a departure from the well-settled principles of the law as declared by Congress and construed by the courts. If judges charged with the administration of the law are not to be criticised on account of their official conduct, the liberty of the press is abridged, and the rights of individuals imperiled. While all citizens should entertain due respect for the courts of the land, it does not follow that editors and public speakers are to refrain from legitimate criticism of the acts of any tribunal. Such criticism should be invited by public officials, in order that the people may fully understand what is being done by those who are acting as their agents in the administration of the law. Cuyler v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 95.

A direct attempt by a person to bribe or persuade a witness to testify contrary to the truth in a cause pending and then on trial, or to influence the jury or any member thereof to find a verdict in favor of one party or the other, made on the street in the immediate vicinity of the court, constitutes a direct contempt, and the mere denial of the charge by the accused under oath is not sufficient to exonerate him, but the matter should be heard and determined upon all the testimony produced. U. S. v. Carroll, (1906) 147 Fed. 947.

But a bare attempt, without success, to induce a third person to do what he could to influence jurors in a pending case in a federal court, does not obstruct the administration of justice so as to constitute a contempt under the rule that, to constitute such contempt, the act done by the accused must naturally and directly tend to such obstruction. U. S. v. Carroll, (1906) 147 Fed. 947.

Neither the taking of a deposition to be used in a federal court in another state, in pursuance of a conspiracy to impose upon the court, nor the filing and publication of such deposition, is a misbehavior in the presence of the court, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice, punishable as a contempt under this section; but to constitute such contempt the deposition must have been used or offered in evidence. Doniphan v. Lehman, (1902) 179 Fed. 173.

Limitation of power.—This section is in the nature of a limitation of the power of the court to punish for contempt. Cuyler v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 95.

While courts are vested by common law with inherent powers to protect themselves and enforce their mandates, there can be no question that this power may be limited by legislative authority, and it cannot be further questioned that this section has limited such power in federal courts to a greater extent than it has been limited by any other government where the common law prevails. While this is true, it must be conceded by all that this power cannot be absolutely destroyed. Atwell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 97.

In U. S. v. Zavelo, (1910) 177 Fed. 536, it was said that this section limits the jurisdiction of the federal court to punish for contempt to three classes of cases: (1) Misbehavior of any person in the presence of the court or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice; (2) misbehavior of officers of the court in their official transactions; and (3) disobedience or resistance to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of the court by any person.

A federal court is without power to punish for contempt a person not an officer of the court, nor a suitor therein, on a rule which charges him only with using or attempting to use its process to obstruct the administration of justice in a state court. In re Riggsbee, (1907) 151 Fed. 701.

Determination.—Accusations of contempt where of criminal import must be supported by evidence sufficient to convince the mind of the trier beyond a reasonable doubt of the actual guilt of the accused, and to establish every element of the offense including the criminal intent. U. S. v. Carroll, (1906) 147 Fed. 947.

Methods of procedure.—A proceeding in equity for civil contempt consisting in doing that which was forbidden by an injunction, where the only remedial relief possible was a fine payable to the complainant, must be dismissed without prejudice to the power and right of the court granting the injunction to punish for contempt by proper proceedings, where there has been a complete settlement between the parties of all the matters involved in the original equity cause. Gompers v. Bucks Stove, etc., Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 418, 31 S. Ct. 492, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 797.

An affidavit for a warrant of arrest for contempt of court in disobeying an injunctive order against interfering with work by lawless acts of intimidation need not be made by a party to the injunction suit, but by any one knowing the facts; the acts forbidden being themselves offenses. Castner v. Pocahontas Collieries Co., (1902) 117 Fed. 184.

Contempt of a federal court is an offense, within R. S. sec. 1014, which, with Act May 28, 1896, 29 Stat. L. 184, authorizes a United States commissioner to arrest, imprison, or bail for an offense against the United States. Castner v. Pocahontas Collieries Co., (1902) 117 Fed. 184.

Punishment.—The power of the national courts to enforce obedience, and to punish disobedience, of their orders, is not derived from this section, but from the grant to them of all the judicial power of the nation by section 1 of article 3 of the Constitution, which declares that the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The grant of the judicial power of the United States to these courts ex vi termini vested them with authority to enforce obedience to their orders and to punish disobedience and contempt of their authority by fine and imprisonment, because this authority is an attribute of judicial power as inherent and indispensable as a judge. The power to punish for contempts is inherent in all courts. Its existence is essential to the preservation of order in judicial proceedings and to the enforcement of the judgments, orders, and writs of the courts and consequently to the due administration of justice. The moment the courts of the United States were called into existence and invested with jurisdiction over any subject, they became possessed of this power. In re Nevitt, (C. C. A. 1902) 117 Fed. 448.

A decree adjudging each defendant guilty of the independent acts set out in separate paragraphs of a petition charging them with contempt of an injunction order, and consolidating sentence without indicating how much of the punishment was imposed for the disobedience in any particular instance, should be reversed if it appears that the defendants have been sentenced on any charge which, in law or in fact, does not constitute a disobedience of the injunction. Gompers v. Bucks Stove, etc., Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 418, 31 S. Ct. 492, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 797.

A punitive sentence appropriate only to a proceeding at law for criminal contempt, where the contempt consisted in doing that which had been prohibited by an injunction, cannot properly be imposed in contempt proceedings which are instituted, entitled, tried, and, up to the moment of sentence, treated, as a part of the original cause in equity. Gompers v. Bucks Stove, etc., Co., (1911) 221 U. S. 418, 31 S. Ct. 492, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 797.

Review.—Writ of error, and not appeal, is the proper mode of reviewing a judgment or order of a federal court finding a person not a party to the suit guilty of contempt in violating a restraining order of that court, and imposing a fine therefor. Bessette v. W. B. Conkey Co., (1903) 194 U. S. 324, 24 S. Ct. 665, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 997.

The Circuit Court of Appeals cannot, in advance of the final decree in the suit, review an order of a federal Circuit Court which adjudges the defendants in such suit guilty of contempt in disobeying an order for the production of certain books and papers for inspection for the benefit of the plaintiff, and imposes a fine or imprisonment in the event of failure to produce such books or papers by a specified date, since this is not a final order rendered in a proceeding criminal in its nature, and as such within the appellate jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of Appeals, under the Act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L. 828, ch. 517), sec. 6, but was intended to secure the rights of the party to the suit for whose benefit the original order was made. Doyle v. London Guarantee, etc., Co., (1906) 204 U. S. 599, 27 S. Ct. 313, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 641.

The judgment or order of a federal Circuit Court, finding a person not a party to the suit guilty of contempt in violating a restraining order of that court, and imposing a fine therefor, is reviewable in the appropriate Circuit Court of Appeals, under the Act of March 3, 1891, 26 Stat. L. 826, ch. 517, sec. 6, giving that court appellate jurisdiction of final decisions in all cases other than those specified in section 5, which provides for a direct review in the Supreme Court, and limits such review in criminal proceedings to convictions of capital and otherwise infamous crimes. Bessette v. W. B. Conkey Co., (1903) 194 U. S. 324, 24 S. Ct. 665, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 997.

Power to grant new trials.—Under this section federal courts have power to grant new trials for reasons for which new trials have been usually granted in the courts of law, or, in the language of the Seventh Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, "no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law." The action of the court is not reviewable. New trials at law are granted when the trial court erred in stating the law, or when the verdict of the jury has no evidence to sustain it, or when the great preponderance of the evidence is against the verdict, or when the verdict is due to passion, prejudice, or partisan feeling. Pringle v. Guild, (1903) 119 Fed. 962. See also Murhard Estate Co. v. Portland, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 194.

Vol. IV, p. 552, sec. 737.

Nonjoinder.—This section is but a legislative affirmation of the rule previously established by the Supreme Court that the nonjoinder of persons who are not inhabitants of the district, but are mere formal parties or even necessary parties whose interests are separable from those before the court, will not prevent the court from proceeding to final trial and adjudication, as between the parties before it, when it can proceed to a decree and do complete and final justice without affecting the rights of others. Minnesota v. Northern Securities Co., (1902) 184 U. S. 190, 22 S. Ct. 308, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 499. But, notwithstanding this statute and the rule, the court cannot proceed without the presence of indispensable parties. It can make no decree affecting the rights of an absent person, and can make no decree between the parties before it, which so far involves or depends upon the rights of an absent person that complete and final justice cannot be done between the parties to the suit without affecting those rights. Shields v. Barrow, (1854) 17 How. 140, 15 U. S. (L. ed.) 158. This is not because the court may not have jurisdiction, but on the broader ground that no court can adjudicate directly upon the rights of a person without his being either actively or constructively before it. Nor should it make a decree which leaves the controversy in such a condition that the final determination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience. McAulay v. Moody, (1911) 185 Fed. 144.

A nonresident heir cannot be regarded as such an indispensable party defendant that his absence will defeat the jurisdiction of a federal court of chancery over a suit brought by an heir against the executor and other heirs, to determine her interest in an alleged lapsed legacy and the consequent increase in the residuary estate, in view of the provisions of this section and of equity rule 47. Waterman v. Canal-Louisiana Bank, etc., Co., (1909) 215 U. S. 33, 30 S. Ct. 10, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 80.

The general rule as to parties in chancery is that all ought to be made parties who are interested in the controversy, in order that there may be an end of litigation. But there are qualifications of this rule arising out of public policy and the necessities of particular cases. The true distinction appears to be as follows: First, when a person will be directly affected by a decree, he is an indispensable party, unless the parties are too numerous to be brought before the court, when the case is subject to a special rule. Secondly, where a person is interested in the controversy, but will not be directly affected by a decree made in his absence, he is not an indispensable party, but he should be made a party, if possible, and the court will not proceed to a decree without him, if he can be reached. Thirdly, where he is not interested in the controversy between the immediate litigants, but has an interest in the subject-matter, which may be conveniently settled in the suit, and thereby prevent further litigation, he may be a party or not, at the option of the complainant. Slater Trust Co.

This section has been re-enacted in section 52 of the Judicial Code, ante, p. 153 of this Supplement.

Vol. IV, p. 557, sec. 1.

Findings of fact.—The rule is well settled in courts of admiralty that the decision of the trial court, which heard the witnesses on questions of fact, will not be disturbed by an appellate court, unless clearly against the weight of evidence. Perriam v. Pacific Coast Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 140; Coastwise Transp. Co. v. Baltimore Steam Packet Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 148 Fed. 837; Earn Line Steamship Co. v. Ennis, (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 633; Royal Exch. Assur. v. Graham, etc., Transp. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 32; Reed v. Weule, (C. C. A. 1910) 176 Fed. 660; The Bailey Gatzert, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 44; The J. G. Gilchrist, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 105.

The finding of a commissioner appointed in an admiralty cause, on a question of fact depending largely on the credit to be given to the various witnesses testifying before him, confirmed by the court, has every reasonable presumption in its favor; and an appellate court is not justified in setting aside or modifying the decree based thereon, unless there clearly appears to have been error or mistake in the finding or the conclusion drawn therefrom. Cahill's Appeal, (C. Costs.—The awarding or withholding of costs in admiralty is a matter in the discretion of the court, which is not subject to review where that is the sole question involved. The Eva D. Rose, (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 101.

Appeals in admiralty to Circuit Court of Appeals.—The ruling of a court of admiralty disallowing a claim filed against the proceeds of a vessel sold in a suit between other parties involves a separate issue, and is not reviewable except on an appeal by the claimant. Henderson v. Kanawha Dock Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 781, citing The John and Winthrop, (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 380.

Where the issues presented by a libel and cross-libel and the answers thereto in an admiralty cause are tried as a single controversy in the District Court, the effect is the same as if the two suits had been formally consolidated, and an appeal from the final decree brings up all questions. The Colorado, (C. C. A. 1910) 184 Fed. 609.

Vol. IV, p. 560, sec. 911.

Application of section.—This section means no more than that when a writ or process issues from a federal court it must be signed by the clerk, and shall be authenticated in the manner therein set out. It is not an ordinance to the effect that no action or proceeding in a federal court shall be instituted except by the issue of process, signed by the clerk, duly sealed, etc. Leas v. Merriman, (1904) 132 Fed. 510.

All writs and processes issuing from a District Court when the office of its judge is vacant shall be tested in the name of its clerk. In re Urban, etc., Realty Title Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 140.

It has been for many years a settled practice in the federal court for this district, after writ and process has issued in obedience to this section, for the clerk to prepare the requisite number of copies thereof, attesting the same as true copies of the original writ and process, and to deliver them to the marshal or his deputy for service. The officer, having made service of such true and at-

within the state are required to follow by this section. Fries-Breslin Co. v. Bergen, (1909) 168 Fed. 360, affirmed (C. C. A.) 170 Fed. 76; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. McCune, (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 991; Smith v. Jones, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 819.

Manner of submitting cases to jury.—This section does not require federal judges to conform to state regulations in the submission of cases and the control of the deliberations of juries; such proceedings being governed by the common law. Liverpool, etc., Ins. Co. v. N. & M. Friedman Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 713.

Nor does it apply to provisions requiring written instructions to be taken by the jury on retiring, or permitting papers read in evidence to be taken by them, or requiring written instructions, or forbidding the separation of the jury, or requiring exceptions to the charge to be made before the jury retires. Knight v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 368.

State statutes and constitutions forbidding judges, in instructing, to express an opinion on the facts do not bind federal courts. Knight v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 368.

Verdicts.—This section applies to the form and effect of verdicts. Knight v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 368.

Motions for new trial.—This section does not apply to motions for new trial. Knight v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 368.

Judgments.—This section applies to the mode of entering and recording judgments, including provisions for entering judgments against one or more defendants. Knight v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 368.

But it applies only to the Circuit and District Courts; it is not the practice of the federal appellate courts in actions at law to render judgment anew on affirmance, but to remand the cause with direction to the court below to proceed according to right and justice. Egan v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 344.

Where the statutes of a state authorize a summary judgment against the sureties on an appeal or supersedeas bond, the Circuit and District Courts of the United States in that state may render such judgment. Egan v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 344.

Vacating or modifying judgments.—In Virginia, etc., Steel, etc., Co. v. Harris, (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 428, it was held that the power conferred on judges by the local law to set aside a judgment after the term at which it was rendered, and within one year, when rendered against a party through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, may be exercised by a federal court sitting in that state.

Proceedings subsequent to judgment.—This section applies to the forms and modes of procedure for procuring judgment, and not to subsequent proceedings. Friedly v. Giddings, (1902) 119 Fed. 438.

Methods of review.—The power and practice of the federal appellate courts are derived exclusively from the Constitution, the Acts of Congress, the common law, the ancient English statutes, and the rules and practice of the courts of the United States, and they are neither controlled nor affected by the statutes of the states or the practice of their courts. Francisco v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 149 Fed. 354; Boatmen's Bank v. Trower Bros. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 804 (citing the earlier cases).

This section has no application to the practice or proceedings of appellate courts or to matters relating to bills of exceptions, motions for new trials, or any other means adopted to secure a review of the judgments or decrees of the Circuit or District Courts. Its effect is limited to the practice and proceedings in the trial courts to secure their judgments. Francisco v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 149 Fed. 354.

It has been held that this section is inapplicable to a subsequently created appellate court for a circuit comprising several states. Shumaker v. Security L., etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 112.

Exceptions and bill of exceptions.—In the courts of the United States the proceedings preparatory to obtaining a review of their rulings, including the questions of when an exception need be taken and how motions and rulings, not in themselves part of the record, may be made such, are not regulated by state statutes, but by the statutes of the United States, and, if they be silent, by the common law and the practice prevailing in those courts. Ghost v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 841.

This section does not apply to bills of exceptions and proceedings on review. Knight v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 368.

Condemnation proceedings.—A district attorney of the United States, authorized to institute and conduct proceedings to condemn land for a public building within a state, has the same power to bind the United States by an agreement to submit the matter of damages to arbitration, in accordance with a provision of a state statute applicable to such actions, as the attorney for an individual litigant would have. Judson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1903) 120 Fed. 637.

In condemnation proceedings under the Act of Aug. 1, 1888, ch. 728, 25 Stat. L. 357 [6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 700, 703], and the Act of Aug. 18, 1890, ch. 797, 26 Stat. L. 315, 316 [6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 704], it has been held that the provision that the proceedings shall be prosecuted in accordance with the laws of the state cannot be construed literally so as to oust the federal court of jurisdiction, where the state statute designates a special tribunal for such proceedings, but only requires a general conformity to the state practice as a whole. U. S. v. Certain Land in New Castle, (1908) 165 Fed. 783. See also U. S. v. Honolulu Plantation Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 122 Fed. 581; U. S. v. Sargent, (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 81.

Vol. IV, p. 577, sec. 915.

Presumption of adoption of state statutes.—Circuit Courts of the United States are not governed by any separate attachment law, but are required to administer the remedy in attachment provided in the laws of the state in which the courts are held. Perez v. Fernandez, (1906) 202 U. S. 80, 26 S. Ct. 561, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 942.

The effect of this section is to make the state statutes in that regard, laws of the United States. Files v. Davis, (1902) 118 Fed. 465.

Jurisdictional questions.—The jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court, as a federal court, is so involved as to sustain a direct writ of error from the federal Supreme Court under the Act of March 3, 1891, sec. 5, in a judgment dismissing the suit on the ground of the invalidity of the attachment and garnishment of the property of the nonresident defendant, and upon the lack of a general appearance by such defendant. Davis v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., (1910) 217 U. S. 157, 30 S. Ct. 463, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 708.

Since common-law actions can only be brought in a federal court in the district in which the defendant is an inhabitant, or in which he is found at the time of the serving of the process, unless he voluntarily appears, an action cannot be maintained by the United States against a nonresident in a federal court by attaching the defendant's property within the jurisdiction, without personal service of summons. U. S. v. Brooke, (1910) 184 Fed. 341.

Motion to quash.—A nonresident defendant over whom personal jurisdiction has not been obtained may appear specially in a suit in a federal Circuit Court for the sole purpose of moving to quash the service of writs of attachment and garnishment upon its property in the district, on the ground that such property was not subject to attachment or garnishment. Davis v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., (1910) 217 U. S. 157, 30 S. Ct. 463, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 708.

Attachments in equity.—This section does not embrace remedies in equity by an independent suit which may have been given by the statutes of a state, but is limited by the phrase "in like causes" to remedies provided in actions at law wherein judgments were recovered. Hudson v. Wood, (1903) 119 Fed. 764.

Vol. IV, p. 580, sec. 916.

Common-law causes.—Where the state law provided that "in a writ of fieri facias on a judgment or decree against one liable to the commonwealth, real estate might be levied on," the right to such levying being given only as against certain public officers, it was held that an execution from a federal court in Virginia may not be levied on real estate there though the judgment is in favor of the United States, since the phrase "in like causes" does not give the government the rights of the state, but, as applicable to Virginia, which is not a code state, means "common-law causes." Clark v. Allen, (1902) 117 Fed. 699.

Only "judgments at law."—This section does not embrace remedies in equity by independent suit which may have been given by the statutes of a state, but is limited by the phrase "in like causes," to remedies provided in actions at law wherein judgments were recovered. Hudson v. Wood, (1903) 119 Fed. 764.

Enforcing judgment.—This section empowers a Circuit Court to use a similar remedy to that provided by a state statute to enforce its judgments, but does not require it to follow the method prescribed by a state statute in serving a writ of scire facias to revive a judgment on a nonresident defendant if it deems such method insufficient. Collin County Nat. Bank v. Hughes, (C. C. A. 1907) 185 Fed. 389.

Where a judgment creditor is only entitled to an execution by leave of court, his right is only established when he obtains an order of court directing that execution issue. General Electric Co. v. Hurd, (1909) 171 Fed. 984.

Supplementary proceedings.—A United States court, proceeding under the laws of the state providing for proceedings supplementary to execution, as authorized by this section, is not affected by a provision of such laws that a witness cannot be compelled to attend in such proceedings at a place without the county of his residence or place of business; but such court may issue subpoenas for witnesses within its district or to compel the attendance of witnesses from other districts who live within one hundred miles, as provided by R. S. 876. Meyer v. Consolidated Ice Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 400.

This section applies to the property and not to the person of the debtor. Friedly v. Giddings, (1902) 119 Fed. 438.

The remedy given to a judgment creditor by a state law, by the arrest and imprisonment of the defendant on a showing of fraudulent removal or concealment of his property, is one "to reach the property of a judgment debtor," within the meaning of this section, and is available in the federal courts. Ex p. Crawford, (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 769, affirming 154 Fed. 761, wherein it was said that a state statute authorizing arrest of a judgment debtor on certain grounds after the return of an execution unsatisfied is to be regarded as a writ, which, although not specifically provided for by Act of Congress, is capable of being adopted as necessary for the full and complete exercise of the jurisdiction of the federal courts, within the meaning of this section. It stands in fact much the same as a capias ad satisfaciendum, of which it may be considered as only another form. Of course, it goes into the federal law, if at all, with all its essential incidents, and the method of procedure marked out with regard to it by the state statute has therefore to be substantially followed.

Subsequently enacted state laws.—This section adopted the remedies established by law in the several states at the time the section became a law, but not the subsequent state enactments regulating such remedies, they being left for adoption by rule as the federal court might deem advisable. General Electric Co. v. Hurd, (1909) 171 Fed. 984.

Vol. IV, p. 583, sec. 917.

Rules have force of law.—The equity rules prescribed by the Supreme Court and the rules promulgated by the Circuit Courts (subject to alteration by the Supreme Court) have the force and effect of law, unless they are inconsistent with the statutes of the United States. American Graphophone Co. v. National Phonograph Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 350; Bryant Bros. Co. v. Robinson, (C. C. A.

A United States court within the state of New York, which has not by general rule adopted the laws of the state providing for proceedings supplementary to execution since Jan. 1, 1878, when this section was enacted, has no power to entertain supplementary proceedings against a corporation judgment debtor, such proceedings not having been authorized by the state laws prior to 1878. Meyer v. Consolidated Ice Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 400.

The admiralty jurisdiction of the court is also a separate and distinct general jurisdiction, in which the practice and proceedings, under this section, are regulated by rules prescribed by the Supreme Court of the United States. Bruce v. Murray, (C. C. A. 1903) 123 Fed. 369.

Vol. IV, p. 585, sec. 918.

This section should be construed in connection with section 914, requiring the practice and proceedings in Circuit Courts to conform, as near as may be, to the practice in the courts of record of the state, any rule of the court to the contrary notwithstanding. Importers', etc., Nat. Bank v. Lyons, (1905) 134 Fed. 510.

Rule regulating special appearance.—The provision of rule 22 of the Circuit Court of the Ninth Circuit that any party appearing specially shall state in the paper which he serves and files that the appearance is special, "and that if the purpose for which such special appearance is made shall not be sanctioned or sustained by the court he will appear generally in the cause," and that if such statements be not made "the appearance shall be deemed and treated as a general appearance," is within the power of the court to prescribe, under this section, and valid. Mahr v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 921.

A rule requiring instructions to be presented to the court at the close of the evidence, and before argument, is within this section. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Hamble, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 644.

Vol. IV, p. 586, sec. 919.

A suit to recover a penalty for the alleged violation of section 3982 cannot be brought by a private prosecutor, but is maintainable only by and in the name of the United States. Williams v. Wells Fargo, etc., Express, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 352.

Vol. IV, p. 587, sec. 921.

"Causes of a like nature," between the same parties, may be consolidated, it appearing reasonable, under this section. Frank v. Geiger, (1903) 121 Fed. 126.

Where separate actions are brought by separate plaintiffs against the same defendants, pending in the same court, for personal injuries sustained in the same accident, depending upon the same evidence, with the only difference in the extent of the injuries to the respective plaintiffs, the causes are properly consolidated for trial. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Norton, (C. C. A. 1905) 141 Fed. 599.

Where the plaintiff in each of two actions was injured in the same accident, and the same evidence, except as to the extent of the injuries, was determinative of both cases, it was a proper exercise of the trial court's discretion to consolidate the cases for trial over defendant's objection relating only to the disparity between the injuries of the two plaintiffs. American Window Glass Co. v. Noe, (C. C. A. 1908) 158 Fed. 777.

A Circuit Court has power in its discretion to consolidate for trial separate actions brought against a railroad company to recover for the death of persons who were killed at the same time and in the same manner. Diggs v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 564.

Action to recover penalties.—A federal Circuit Court may properly consolidate several actions brought by the United States against a carrier to recover the penalty prescribed by the Act of June 29, 1906, for violations of its requirement as to unloading live stock during transit. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1911) 220 U. S. 94, 31 S. Ct. 368, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 384.

Cross-actions.—A Circuit Court may in its discretion consolidate cross-actions between the same parties for breach of the same contracts. American Trust, etc., Bank v. Zeigler Coal Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 34.

Whether one judgment may be given for all or a separate judgment in each case will depend upon the special circumstances. If it is necessary to the due administration of the law and the protection of the rights of the parties that the integrity of the several causes shall be so far preserved as to secure the proper result in each case, to the end that the party aggrieved may not be embarrassed thereby in seeking relief against the judgment, or for any other sufficient reason, the court will direct the proceedings accordingly. The statute is one for convenience in saving expense to the parties and the time of the court. U. S. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 35.

A court of admiralty may properly permit a large number of passengers to join in a single libel in rem against a vessel to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by them severally by reason of the failure to keep the vessel in a cleanly condition during a voyage, and to supply suitable accommodations and a sufficient quantity of wholesome food and provisions. The Oregon, (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 609.

Vol. IV, p. 587, sec. 922.

Waiver of irregularity in service.—Where a United States marshal is the plaintiff in an action, and service of process is effected by his deputy, and no actual injury results and no intentional wrong is charged, if the defendant appears by attorney and files a special appearance to deny jurisdiction, and also files a motion to dismiss for irregular service, and also a demurrer, on one day, and four days later, without having a decision on these defenses, files a general demurrer and a full answer to the merits, held that he has waived the irregularity of process. Barnes v. Western Union Tel. Co., (1908) 129 Fed. 550.

Sureties as parties to suit.—Sureties on a stipulation in admiralty for the release of a libeled vessel do not become parties to the suit in such a sense as to require that they be joined in an appeal by the claimant from the decree entered therein, although such decree is joint in form against the claimant and the stipulators, unless some extraneous question has arisen in the suit involving their rights or obligations. Perriam v. Pacific Coast Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 141.

Bond as substitute for property.—A stipulation for value, given by the claimant for the release of a libeled vessel, pursuant to a rule of the court in admiralty, takes the place of the vessel itself for all purposes of the suit, and is available for the payment of all sums decreed in favor of the libellant against the vessel, including interest and costs, notwithstanding the fact that an additional stipulation for costs has been given, and the amount recoverable thereon, and for which execution may issue, includes interest on the agreed value of the vessel from the date of the stipulation, where it is so conditioned in accordance with the practice of the court. The Mt. Desert, (1911) 186 Fed. 395. See also The Charles E. Falk, (1907) 157 Fed. 782.

Liability of sureties.—This section has always been held to mean that the entry of judgment against the stipulators is a matter of course, and that the stipulators have rendered themselves subject to such entry of judgment by the bare fact that they so stipulated. Perriam v. Pacific Coast Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 144.

Under a stipulation given by a claimant in admiralty conditioned that, if the stipulators fail to pay the amount of any decree against them execution may issue against both claimant and his surety, both are principals and no demand is necessary upon the claimant in order to justify a demand on the surety. The Mt. Desert, (1911) 186 Fed. 396.

Where a stipulation for value, given by the claimant of a libeled vessel, was conditioned for the payment of the amount awarded by final decree of the trial court, "or by any appellate court if an appeal intervene, with interest," the waiving by libellant of further security on an appeal does not release the surety on the stipulation from the further payment of interest thereon, in accordance with its terms, or of the costs of the appellate court. The Mt. Desert, (1911) 186 Fed. 395.

Fees and costs.—Where the claimant of a libeled vessel has prevailed on the trial, and the libel is dismissed, he is entitled to tax as a part of his costs the premium paid by him to a surety company for a bond to obtain the release of the vessel, where it is reasonable in amount. The John D. Dailey, (1907) 158 Fed. 642.

Vol. IV, p. 593, sec. 948.

Discretion as to allowance.—The granting or refusing leave to amend pleadings is ordinarily a matter of discretion, not reviewable on appeal or error in the federal courts; but where it is shown that the court refused to exercise its discretion because of supposed lack of authority, the ruling is reviewable for error. Hernan v. American Bridge Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 930.

Misnomer. — In Bainum v. American Bridge Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 179, it appears that the plaintiff's statement, in an action for personal injury against a foreign corporation, alleged to be a corporation of New Jersey, specifically set out the facts, clearly identifying the defendant, the work in which it was engaged, and the time and place of the injury. There were in fact two corporations, closely connected and having the same name, except that one was "of New Jersey" and the other "of New York." Both had the same resident agent, on whom the process was served, and the same attorneys, who entered appearance for defendant and prepared the case for trial, when it was discovered that the New York corporation was in fact the one doing the work; and it was held that the court had power, under R. S. 948, 954, to permit the plaintiff to amend by substituting the name of the real defendant intended, and that such power would be exercised, especially where objection was not made until such time had elapsed as would bar a new action.

Citizenship. — Where, in a petition for removal, counsel through misinformation erroneously stated the citizenship of the plaintiff, the federal court may permit an amendment after removal accurately stating the fact so as to show that the court has jurisdiction. Wilbur v. Red Jacket Consol. Coal, etc., Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 662.

Mistake in designation of district. — Where a declaration in an action in a federal court, a copy of which was served upon defendants with the summons, was properly entitled, in the district and division of the district in which defendants resided, but through mistake the summons required them to appear in another division of the district, it was held that such fact was not ground for abatement of the suit; but that the court had power in its discretion to permit an amendment of the summons, and its reservice in the amended form. Caraway v. Kentucky Refining Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 189.

Correcting description of cause of action. — The statutes extend the power of the court to allow an amendment which shall correct the description of the cause of action and of the parties at any stage of the case and in respect to any proceeding in it, whether in the process or pleadings, and that it should be exercised in every case where right and justice require it, and the refusal of it will prevent an injured party from obtaining redress, subject, however, to the proviso that the amendment shall work no injury to the other party. Hernan v. American Bridge Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 167 Fed. 937.

Amending date of return day. — Where a writ of summons, dated July 16, 1908, and returnable "on the first Tuesday of October next," for want of opportunity was not served on the defendant until May 10, 1909, and through oversight the return day was not changed, the plaintiff is entitled, under the liberal amendment statutes of New Hampshire, to amend the same by inserting the appropriate return date of service. Stone v. Speare, (1910) 175 Fed. 584.

Power to amend on removal. — A federal court, into which a cause has been removed, has power to permit such amendments of process or pleadings as justice requires and as are permissible under the state statutes, provided they do not offend the federal statutes or decisions on the subject. Stone v. Speare, (1910) 175 Fed. 584.

Vol. IV, p. 594, sec. 953.

Necessity of signing bill of exceptions. — The basis of an assignment of errors concerning matters transpiring in the course of a trial is a bill of exceptions signed by the trial judge. Porter v. Buckley, (C. C. A. 1906) 147 Fed. 141.

A bill of exceptions cannot be considered by an appellate court unless it was duly presented to and allowed by the trial judge during the term at which the trial was had, or within the time as extended by an order made during such term, or where there is a rule of court on the subject during the time so fixed, or an extension granted before its expiration. Oxford, etc., R. Co. v. Union Bank, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 723.

A bill of exceptions not actually signed by the judge must be disregarded. Knight v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 369.

The clerk is without authority to certify up anything, except that made of record by the orders of the court. Rupert v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 87.

Signed at subsequent term. — No bill of exceptions is sufficiently authenticated unless signed by a judge who sat at the trial within the time required by law; and the omission or failure to sign the same cannot be cured by a certificate of the judge that it was allowed, settled, and signed within such time. Oxford, etc., R. Co. v. Union Bank, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 723.

Sealing of the bill of exceptions is no longer necessary; but this does not render the other requisites any the less essential. Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, (1904) 195 U. S. 322, 25 S. Ct. 28, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 219.

On the death of a federal judge, before whom a criminal cause was tried, before a motion for new trial has been passed on, his successor has power, under this section, as amended in 1900 (Act June 5, 1900, 31 Stat. L. 270, ch. 717, sec. 1), to pass upon and overrule such motion where the evidence has been taken and preserved in stenographic notes, and, having such power, he has further power to proceed in the case and to render judgment on the verdict. Meldrum v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 177.

When new trial must be granted. — Where the judge of a Circuit Court died, leaving a pending motion for a new trial undecided, and there was no record from which his successor could fairly pass upon the motion and allow and sign a bill of exception, his only authority under the statute was to grant a new trial. Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Ashe, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 593.

But a party who has not presented to a succeeding judge a bill of exceptions containing a transcript of the evidence, as required by a rule of court, because of his failure to pay the reporter's fees, is not entitled to a new trial as of course. Thorndyke v. Gunnison, (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 137.

It is the duty of the court to exercise its discretion over amendments for the full protection of those who are absent from the record and beyond the jurisdiction of the court. Frank v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 224.

Effect of state statutes.—The federal courts are not bound to follow the state courts in their construction of local statutes regulating the amendment of pleadings in suits at law. Manitowoc Malting Co. v. Fuechtwanger, (1909) 169 Fed. 983.

Scope of section.—This section is not confined to civil cases at law, but extends to and includes suits in equity. Dancel v. United Shoe Machinery Co., (1903) 120 Fed. 839.

The power to amend must not be confounded with the power to create. It presupposes an existing record, which is defective by reason of some clerical error or mistake, or of the omission of some entry which should have been made during the progress of the case, or of the loss of some document originally filed therein. The difference between creating and amending a record is analogous to that between the construction and repair of a piece of personal property. The power to recreate a record, no evidence of which exists, has been the subject of much discussion in the courts, and the weight of authority is decidedly against the existence of such power. Gagnon v. U. S., (1904) 193 U. S. 451, 24 S. Ct. 510, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 745.

Removed cases.—A federal court, into which a cause has been removed, has power to permit such amendments of process or pleadings as justice requires and as are permissible under the state statutes, provided they do not offend the federal statutes or decisions on the subject. Stone v. Speare, (1910) 175 Fed. 584.

Where, in a petition for removal, counsel through misinformation erroneously stated the citizenship of the plaintiff, the federal court may permit an amendment after removal accurately stating the fact so as to show that the court has jurisdiction. Wilbur v. Red Jacket Consol. Coal, etc., Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 662.

In Kinney v. Columbia Sav., etc., Assoc., (1903) 191 U. S. 78, 24 S. Ct. 30, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 103, it was said that a petition and bond for removal are in the nature of process; they constitute the process by which the case is transferred from the state to the federal court, and Congress has made ample provision for the amendment of process.

Leave to amend a petition for removal to a federal court for diverse citizenship so as to show the citizenship of the plaintiffs was, in the exercise of the general power of federal courts, under Rev. Stat. secs. 948, 954, to allow amendments of process, granted after the filing of the removal papers, but before any action taken in the federal court on the merits, where there was a general averment of diverse citizenship, and the citizenship of defendant had been clearly stated, and it appeared from the face of a trust deed, which was the subject-matter in controversy, that the plaintiffs were, at the time of its execution, residents of another state. Kinney v. Columbia Sav., etc., Assoc., (1903) 191 U. S. 78, 24 S. Ct. 30, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 103.

Where a complaint, in an action removed from a state court, was demurred to for want of facts, it cannot be dismissed because, when treated as a bill in equity, it does not contain the address, statement of citizenship, or proper prayer for relief, or because it was erroneously placed on the law docket; such objections being matters of form only. Dancel v. United Shoe Machinery Co., (1903) 120 Fed. 839.

Names of parties.—In Clemmens v. Washington Park Steamboat Co., (1909) 171 Fed. 168, it appears that a ferry company, which was a corporation of New Jersey, operated a line of excursion boats from Philadelphia under the assumed name of the "Washington Park Steamboat Company." A passenger to whom it sold a ticket under such name was injured, and brought suit against the steamboat company. The attorney for the ferry company, who was also a director, accepted service for the defendant, and appeared and defended the case on the merits; the trial resulting in a judgment for the plaintiff. Neither plaintiff nor the court was informed of the true facts until after an attempt to collect the judgment failed, and plaintiff moved to amend the record by substituting the name of the ferry company as defendant. It was held that such company, which was the real defendant, having in fact appeared and defended the suit, and there being no such person as the defendant named, the court had power to permit such amendment, under R. S. 948, 954, authorizing amendments to cure defects of form.

Where the petition misdescribed the defendant as a corporation of New York, instead of New Jersey, it was held that the New Jersey corporation was in fact the defendant, as the petition disclosed, and that, service having been properly made on its agent, the court had power under R. S. 948, 954, to permit plaintiff to amend his petition by correctly stating its place of incorporation. Hernan v. American Bridge Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 930. See also Bainum v. American Bridge Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 180.

Adding additional party plaintiff.—Leave will not be granted to amend the writ, before the appearance of the defendant or the service of the writ and the filing of pleadings in the cause, by inserting the name of a third person as plaintiff suing for the use of the persons originally named as plaintiffs, where such third person is not before the court nor within the jurisdiction, and cannot be served with notice of the application, even though it is proposed to reserve to him the right to object to the order, such an order being, in form at least, an adjudication of the right to so use his name. Frank v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co., (1904) 180 Fed. 224.

Declarations and complaints.—Where a complaint contains any allegation of a ground of recovery, although only inferential, it is within the discretion of the court to permit the defect to be cured by amendment. Great Northern R. Co. v. Herron, (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 49.

Where the plaintiff's declaration, in an action against a corporation on a contract, purported to set out the contract verbatim, and recited that it was signed by the defendant's president and attested by its secretary and corporate seal; but, in copying the contract, there was nothing in the declaration to represent the seal, and when the contract was introduced in evidence it appeared that the corporate seal had been attached as recited in the contract, whereupon plaintiff was granted leave to amend the declaration to conform to the facts, it was held that such amendment was properly allowed in the furtherance of justice. Mathieson Alkali Works v. Mathieson, (C. C. A. 1906) 150 Fed. 241.

A plaintiff, suing as widow, to recover for her husband's wrongful death, may be permitted to amend her declaration to change the relation in which she sues from that of widow to that of administratrix. Hall v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 464.

An amendment of plaintiff's petition, after verdict and judgment thereon, with no further proceedings taken, by inserting the words "and is a citizen of said state and of the United States of America," after the allegation therein that "plaintiff resides in El Paso, in El Paso county, state of Texas," may be allowed. Mexican Cent. R. Co. v. Duthie, (1903) 189 U. S. 76, 23 S. Ct. 610, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 715.

The fact that an amendment of a complaint was allowed by consent, on application by the plaintiff, after he had sold the cause of action and before the substitution of the purchaser, does not invalidate such amendment. Franklin v. Conrad-Stanford Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 737.

A federal court may, in the exercise of judicial discretion, permit an amendment, after trial, of the ad damnum clause of plaintiff's complaint, so as to raise the amount sued for to conform to the proof. Manitowoc Malting Co. v. Fuechtwanger, (1909) 169 Fed. 983.

An amendment to a pleading which sets forth no new cause of action relates back to the filing of the pleading amended, and the case stands as though the amendment had been then filed. Armstrong Cork Co. v. Merchants' Refrigerating Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 184 Fed. 199.

Where the variance between the pleading and the facts which the pleader seeks to prove is so slight that it is obvious that the opposing party could not have been misled by it in the preparation of his case for trial, it is the duty of the court to disregard it or to permit an amendment to conform the pleading to the proof offered. Derham v. Donohue, (C. C. A. 1907) 155 Fed. 385.

Where no objection was made to the declaration until the close of the evidence, and everything that defendant claimed should have been alleged was proved, and the jury found the facts in favor of the plaintiff, a judgment on the verdict will not be set aside for defects in the declaration. Canadian Pac. R. Co. v. Elliott, (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 904. See also Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Voelker, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 522.

Equity rule No. 29, relating to amendments, does not entitle the complainant as of right to amend his bill after a demurrer thereto has been sustained. McKemy v. Supreme Lodge, etc., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 961.

Introducing new cause of action.—Complainant in a suit in equity in a federal court will not be given leave to file a supplemental bill after final hearing and decision on the original bill and a prior supplemental bill, to set up facts to make a new and different case, all of which, so far as appears, were known to complainant months before the hearing and before the filing of the former supplemental bill, and some of them before the filing of the original bill. Healey Ice Mach. Co. v. Green, (1911) 184 Fed. 515.

The rule that the filing of a notice of appearance or of a general pleading, such as an answer, is equivalent to a general appearance for all purposes of the case, is limited in its application by the scope of the action in which such appearance or pleading is filed; and such an appearance does not authorize an amendment of plaintiff's pleading, so as to state a new or different cause of action upon which the defendant could not originally have been sued in that jurisdiction. Western Wheeled Scraper Co. v. Gahagan, (1907) 152 Fed. 648.

An amendment of a declaration changing the beneficiary of the action is in effect the bringing of a new suit. Hall v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 464.

On appeal.—The granting of leave to amend pleadings is discretionary with the trial court, and its action is not reviewable except in case of gross abuse of discretion. Lange v. Union Pac. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 338; Rucker v. Bolles, (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 858; Stillwagon v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 97.

In an action of assumpsit, in which the declaration contained special counts upon a written contract, where the proof showed a breach of the contract by the plaintiff, but also a waiver of such breach by the defendant, which constituted in effect a modification of the contract by consent of parties, a judgment for plaintiff is not reversible because such waiver was not pleaded. Schaeffer Piano Mfg. Co. v. National Fire Extinguisher Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 148 Fed. 159.

Where one of two defendants dies after the submission of a case to an appellate court, which subsequently affirms a decree in favor of the deceased, its failure to make a substitution for the deceased party is not a substantial error or defect, and it may be disregarded and corrected in a higher court on an appeal from the judgment of affirmance. White v. Skelton, (C. C. A. 1906) 149 Fed. 67.

Ground for reversal.—It has been held that it was an abuse of discretion to allow an amendment during the trial, without imposing terms, by way of a continuance or otherwise, which would prevent the possibility of prejudice resulting to defendant. Great Northern R. Co. v. Herron, (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 49.

Vol. IV, p. 601, sec. 955.

Death of defendant.—Where, after the sustaining of a demurrer to a bill to set aside a divorce decree, with leave to amend, complainant elected to stand by her bill, after which defendant died, it was held that it was improper, without revivor, for the court, on suggestion of defendant's alleged surviving wife, who had not previously been a party to the proceedings, to render judgment of dismissal nunc pro tunc as of the day following the expiration of the time allowed the complainant to amend, and, complainant's prayer for appeal having been allowed, to direct service of citation on defendant's administrator and such alleged surviving wife. McNeil v. McNeil, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 289.

A judgment entered against a defendant, convicted under R. S. sec. 1782, which provides that any person violating the same shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned and fined, is wholly penal, and the death of the defendant after judgment and while the case is pending in an appellate court on writ of error operates to abate the entire cause of action, and the fine is not collectible from the defendant's estate. U. S. v. Dunne, (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 254.

Death of plaintiff.—This section applies only to actions at law; nor is there any provision in the equity rules or practice for the compulsory revival of a suit in a Circuit Court at the instance of defendant after the death of the complainant. Brown v. Fletcher, (1904) 140 Fed. 639.

Determination of survivor.—This section does not itself provide what cause of action shall survive, but, in the absence of any other controlling statute, leaves the matter to the common law. Walsh v. New York, etc., R. Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 494.

The plaintiff's right of revivor, on the death of the defendant, is governed by the law of the state where the suit is brought and prosecuted. Spaeth v. Sells, (1909) 176 Fed. 797.

Thus the right of a plaintiff, in an action at law for the infringement of a patent, to a scire facias to revive the action against the executor of a deceased defendant, as provided for by this section, is subject to the limitation imposed by the state statute upon suits against executors, for the purpose of facilitating the settlement of estates. Green v. Barrett, (1903) 123 Fed. 349.

A suit in a federal court may be dismissed on motion for want of jurisdiction on the death of a defendant who is an indispensable party, where such fact plainly appears from the pleadings, and the executors of the decedent cannot be brought in; but if there is doubt on the question, and it appears that the suit may be separable, it should not be so dismissed, nor when there is a possibility of revival against the executors, until after the lapse of a reasonable time. Lawrence v. Southern Pac. Co., (1910) 177 Fed. 547.

Citizenship of representative.—A suit cannot be instituted against executors in a federal court in a state other than the one in which they have taken out letters, where jurisdiction depends on diversity of citizenship, nor can a pending suit against the testator be revived against such executors unless ancillary letters are taken out in the state where the suit is pending. Lawrence v. Southern Pac. Co., (1910) 177 Fed. 547.

Vol. IV, p. 603, sec. 956.

A suggestion on the record, either by plaintiffs or defendants, that some of the plaintiffs are dead, constitutes a substantial compliance with this section. Thomas v. Green County, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 339.

Death of joint tortfeasor.—Where a suit for infringement of a trademark was instituted against two defendants, such infringement constitutes a tort for which both were liable, so that on the death of one the suit did not abate as to the other. Northwestern

Consol. Milling Co. v. Callam, (1910) 177 Fed. 786.

Action by joint owners of bonds.—An action brought in a federal court by plaintiffs, as joint owners of bonds, does not abate by the death of one of the plaintiffs, but under this section the suit may proceed in the name of the survivors upon the suggestion of the death upon the record. Thomas v. Green County, (C. C. A. 1908) 146 Fed. 969.

Vol. IV, p. 604, sec. 961.

A written stipulation is not essential to a waiver of a jury to assess damages on a bond after default under this section. Brock v.

Fuller Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 272, wherein it appears that plaintiff sued on a contractor's bond to secure performance of a written contract. On the trial, defendants' attorney stated that defendants might be defaulted, but that he "would like to be heard on the question of damages," and immediately thereafter suggested that the case be sent to an auditor. This was agreed to, and, though a jury was then present, an auditor was appointed, and no request was made for a jury trial at any time during the term, nor until four months after default, and after defendants had learned that the auditor's report was unfavorable, when they applied for an assessment of damages by a jury, as authorized by this section, and it was held that the finding of the Circuit Court that the request for a jury trial was too late should not be disturbed.

Vol. IV, p. 605, sec. 997.

Assignment of error.—This section does not require filing an assignment of errors before allowance of a writ of error or an appeal. This requirement rests upon rule 11 of the Circuit Court of Appeals, which is the same as Supreme Court rule 34. There are two reasons for this rule. One is that the judge to whom the application for the allowance or issue of a writ of error is presented may be informed what the alleged errors are upon which the petitioner relies, so that he may intelligently decide the question whether or not the writ should be issued. The other is that opposing counsel and the appellate court may be informed by a statement which becomes a part of the record what questions of law are presented for their consideration and determination. Simpson v. Denver First Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 257.

But this section does not necessitate the settlement of a bill of exceptions prior to the filing of the writ and the assignment of errors. Old Nick Williams Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 925.

And it has been held that the failure to file an assignment of errors is not jurisdictional, and may be waived. Old Nick Williams Co. v. U. S., (1910) 215 U. S. 541, 30 S. Ct. 221, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 318.

Examination of transcript for "plain error."

—The option reserved, under Supreme Court rules 21 and 35, of examining the transcript of record on writ of error or appeal, in order that the court may be advised as to whether there has occurred any "plain error" which obviously demands correction, will be exercised where the defendants in error have made no objection to the failure to assign error, under R. S. secs. 997 and 1012, but have submitted the case upon the specifications of error in the brief of the plaintiffs in error. Columbia Heights Realty Co. v. Rudolph, (1910) 217 U. S. 547, 30 S. Ct. 581, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 877.

Essential parts of record.—This section makes an assignment of errors, a prayer for reversal, and a citation to the adverse party, essential parts of the record upon which a review of the rulings of a trial court may be invoked in the appellate courts of the United States. When an appeal is prayed and allowed in open court the prayer for reversal and the citation may be waived. But the assignment of errors is indispensable to the perfection of the appeal. Webber v. Mihills, (C. C. A. 1903) 124 Fed. 64; Lockman v. Lang, (C. C. A. 1903) 128 Fed. 279.

Vol. IV, p. 609, sec. 998.

In proceedings in error in the federal courts, the citation signed by the judge of the court to which the writ is addressed, or any judge or justice of the appellate court, is the notice required by this section. Exploration Mercantile Co. v. Pacific Hardware, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 825.

Vol. IV, p. 610, sec. 999.

Who may sign citation.—A writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to the Supreme Court of the state of Nebraska sufficiently conforms to the requirements of this section where it was signed "John B. Barnes, presiding judge of the Supreme Court of Nebraska, in absence of Sedgwick, C. J., from this state," and the truth of this recital was not challenged. Missouri Valley Land Co. v. Wiese, (1908) 208 U. S. 234, 28 S. Ct. 294, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 466; Missouri Valley Land

Co. v. Wrich, (1908) 208 U. S. 250, 28 S. Ct. 299, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 473.

One's remedy to review a state court judgment in the United States Supreme Court is not exhausted by a refusal of his application to a justice of the state court for a writ of error from the United States Supreme Court; but, on such refusal, an application must be made to a justice of the latter court before the remedy is exhausted. Ex p. Chadwick, (1908) 159 Fed. 576.

Vol. IV, p. 612, sec. 1000.

Necessity of security.—A Circuit Court of Appeals cannot, without statutory authority, permit the prosecution in forma pauperis of a writ of error sued out of the court. Bradford v. Southern R. Co., (1904) 195 U. S. 243, 25 S. Ct. 55, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 178.

Taking and approval of bond.—The required bond may be approved by any judge or justice who is authorized to sign the citation and to allow the writ of error or appeal. It is not essential to its validity that it be approved by the justice or judge who allows the writ of error or appeal or signs the citation. Brown v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co., (C. C. A. 1902) 119 Fed. 148.

Prosecuting to effect.—A party who, on appeal from a decree for the recovery of the possession of real property unless the balance of the purchase price should be paid before Jan. 1, 1899, secures an extension of the time for such payment until Nov. 1, 1899, has so prosecuted his appeal to effect, within the meaning of a supersedeas bond to secure the adverse party from loss in the use and possession of the premises, as to preclude any recovery on such bond for the use and occupation of the property between those dates. Crane v. Buckley, (1906) 203 U. S. 441, 27 S. Ct. 56, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 260.

What damages may include.—There is no doubt that a supersedeas bond, conditioned according to the statute, for prosecuting an appeal with effect and answering all damages and costs, covers not merely compensation for the delay arising from the appeal, but also the amount of the decree appealed from, so far as the latter directs the payment of money by the appellant to the appellee. American Surety Co. v. North Packing, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 810.

Suits by and against receivers of national banks.—This section is applicable to an action brought by a receiver of a national bank. Pepper v. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1903) 125 Fed. 822.

But, on motion therefor, defendants, sued by a nonresident receiver of a national bank, are entitled to require the plaintiff to give security for costs, where such security would

Vol. IV, p. 616, sec. 1004.

A writ of error sued out of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals to a United States District Court should run in the name of the President and be attested by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and by the clerk of the Circuit Court. Long v. Farmers' State Bank, (C. C. A. 1906) 147 Fed. 360.

Under this section writs of error may be issued either by the clerk of the Supreme Court or the clerks of the Circuit Courts. By section 11 of the Court of Appeals Act all of the existing provisions of law regulating methods of review are made applicable to the Circuit Courts of Appeal. Under this, writs of error returnable to this court may be issued from the office of the clerk of the Circuit Court of Appeals or of the clerk of the Cir-

Liability for costs.—The surety on a bond given on appeal from a Circuit Court to the Circuit Court of Appeals, conditioned in effect as required by R. S. secs. 1000, 1012, and rule 13 of the Circuit Court of Appeals, that the appellant should prosecute his appeal to effect and to answer all costs if he should fail to make his plea good, is liable not only for the costs in the appellate court, but also for those in the court below. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Expanded Metal Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 568.

Bond in injunction cases.—A supersedeas bond, given under this section and Supreme Court rule 29, does not suspend the operation of a prohibitory injunction granted by the decree appealed from, but, unless otherwise ordered by the trial judge in allowing the appeal, as authorized by equity rule 93, such injunction remains in full force pending the appeal, and its violation is punishable as a contempt. Hence damages sustained by the appellee by a violation of the injunction pending appeal are not the result of a supersedeas bond, and cannot be recovered in an action thereon. Green Bay, etc., Canal Co. v. Norrie, (1902) 118 Fed. 923.

Judgment on bond.—Where the statutes of a state authorize a summary judgment against the sureties on an appeal or supersedeas bond, the Circuit and District Courts of the United States in that state may render such judgment. Egan v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 344.

be required by the laws of the state, under the conformity statute (R. S. sec. 914), unless the plaintiff by a certificate filed brings himself within the provisions of this section. Schofield v. Palmer, (1904) 134 Fed. 753.

Since a sovereign can be sued only by his own consent, he may prescribe the conditions on which he will be sued. Treat v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 760.

cuit Court in which the judgment was rendered. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Amato, (C. C. A. 1892) 49 Fed. 881. The writ runs in the name of the President and bears the teste of the Chief Justice. It is directed to the judges of the Circuit Court, and commands them to return, with the writ, into this court, a transcript of the record. Such a writ must be served, and it is so served when it is deposited with the clerk of the court in which the judgment was rendered. This deposit of the writ is its service, and the file mark, which it is the duty of the clerk to place thereon, is but evidence to show the facts of service and its date. Kentucky Coal, etc., Co. v. Howes, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 163.

Vol. IV, p. 617, sec. 1005.

Amendment of error as to parties.—Where an appeal was taken by two of three defendants, against whom a joint decree for a sum of money was rendered, and the record fails to show that the third defendant, who made default in the court below, was in any manner joined in the appeal, or notified to join, or severed for failure or refusal to join, the defect is not one of form only, which the Circuit Court of Appeals may permit the appellants to cure by amendment, under this section, but is fatal to jurisdiction of the appeal. Copland v. Waldron, (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 217.

The right to amend a writ of error and citation by adding omitted plaintiffs depends primarily upon whether the record shows enough to authorize the amendment under this section. If it appears from the record that the omission was accidental, the amendment should be allowed. Thomas v. Green County, (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 969. See also Martin v. Burford, (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 555.

The inclusion as plaintiffs in error of persons who were not parties to the action does not vitiate the writ as to those who were parties, but is an error which may be corrected by dismissing the writ as to such persons, or by striking out their names. Thomas v. Green County, (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 969.

Appeal instead of writ of error.—In Kerr v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 159 Fed. 428, it was held that where a judgment on a scire facias on a forfeited recognizance was sought to be reviewed on appeal, instead of on a writ of error, the objection could not be waived by appearance nor cured by amendment.

Defective attestation.—That a writ of error was attested by the judge of the federal District Court, and by the District Court clerk, is a defect which is amendable under this section. Long v. Farmers' State Bank, (C. C. A. 1906) 147 Fed. 360.

Vol. IV, p. 618, sec. 1007.

A supersedeas is a matter of right, and its allowance does not rest in the discretion of court or judge. It is the effect, as a matter of law, of a compliance by the appellant with the provisions of the Acts of Congress. The only function of the judge is to determine whether the security proffered for "damages and costs" is good and sufficient. McCourt v. Singers-Bigger, (C. C. A. 1906) 150 Fed. 102.

A writ of error and supersedeas bond suspends the execution of judgment until the case has been determined. U. S. v. Dunne, (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 256.

Supersedeas in criminal case.—While a writ of error to review a conviction for a non-capital crime, and a supersedeas to stay the execution of the sentence, is a matter of right, an appearance or bail is required to entitle the accused to go at large pending the writ of error. Hardesty v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 269.

When time begins to run.—The judgment of a federal court is not final, so that the jurisdiction of the appellate court may be invoked, while the judgment is still under the control of the trial court through the pendency of a motion for a new trial. Clarke v. Eureka County Bank, (1904) 131 Fed. 145.

In an action at law, in which the judgment is reviewable only by writ of error, unless such writ is issued and served within sixty days, a judge of an appellate court has no power to grant a supersedeas, and the allowance of an appeal by the trial court is without effect. Robinson v. Furber, (1911) 189 Fed. 918.

But under R. S. secs. 1007, 1012, a justice of the Circuit Court of Appeals may, on the application of appellant taking a second appeal after the dismissal of his first appeal, permit him to give a supersedeas bond after the expiration of the sixty days; the dismissal of the first appeal being due to the failure of the clerk of the trial court to send up the record in due season. Sutherland v. Pearce, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 787.

Damaged for violation of injunction.—A supersedeas bond, given under this section and Supreme Court rule 29, does not suspend the operation of a prohibitory injunction granted by the decree appealed from, but, unless otherwise ordered by the trial judge in allowing the appeal, as authorized by equity rule 93, such injunction remains in full force pending the appeal, and its violation is punishable as a contempt. Hence damages sustained by the appellee by a violation of the injunction pending appeal are not the result of the supersedeas bond, and cannot be recovered in an action thereon. Green Bay, etc., Canal Co. v. Norrie, (1902) 118 Fed. 923.

Vol. IV, p. 622, sec. 1008.

Necessity of filing writ.—A writ of error is not "brought" within the meaning of this section until the writ is actually filed or lodged with the clerk of the court which vendered the judgment sought to be reviewed. Kentucky Coal, etc., Co. v. Howes, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 163.

Vol. IV, p. 624, sec. 1011.

What may be reviewed.—Decisions upon the admission and exclusion of evidence, upon questions of law, upon the question whether or not there is any substantial evidence to warrant the finding, and upon the question whether or not the finding supports the judgment, are the only rulings at the trial that may be reviewed. Barnsdall v. Walkemeyer, (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 415.

Upon a writ of error only questions of law apparent on the record can be considered; there can be no inquiry whether there was error in dealing with questions of fact. Behn v. Campbell, (1907) 205 U. S. 403, 27 S. Ct. 502, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 857.

A judgment overruling a demurrer to a plea in abatement, without further order or judgment in the cause, is not subject to review under this section. Cunningham v. Rodgers, (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 835.

What is plea in abatement. — An answer in an action on a judgment in a federal court, setting up a parol agreement between the parties that in consideration of the defendant's consent to the taking of the judgment the plaintiff should take no steps for its enforcement until the termination of another suit which is still pending, is in effect a plea in abatement under the Wisconsin practice, and under this section. Marinette Sawmill Co. v. Scofield, (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 562.

This section is applicable to the Circuit Court of Appeals. — Paul v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 952.

This section has been cited in U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Woodson County, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 150; Mason City, etc., R. Co. v. Boynton, (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 600; Hill v. Walker, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 241; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. (C. C. A. 1910) 176 Fed. 237.

Vol. IV, p. 624, sec. 1012.

Application of section. — This section does not have the effect of making a finding and statement of facts by a Circuit Court in an equity cause conclusive on the appellate court. Hendryx v. Perkins, (C. C. A. 1903) 123 Fed. 268.

In Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Expanded Metal Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 568, it was said: "It is obvious that section 1012 applies the same rules, regulations, and restrictions to appeals as section 1000 applies to writs of error."

This section has been cited in Columbia Heights Realty Co. v. Rudolph, (1910) 217 U. S. 547, 30 S. Ct. 581, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 877; Simpson v. Denver First Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 258; Sutherland v. Pearce, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 789.

This section is not unconstitutional. — U. S. v. New York, etc., R. Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 742.

This section does not authorize the sending up of the whole case, and therefore the court will not consider a case where no final judgment, order, or decree determinative of the merits is rendered. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1909) 215 U. S. 216, 30 S. Ct. 86, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 164.

Fairly construed, this section permits such cases to proceed in the usual way, except for being expedited, until assigned for final hearing before three judges; and the provision that "in the event the judges sitting in such case shall be divided in opinion the case shall be certified to the Supreme Court for review in like manner as if taken there by appeal as hereinafter provided," is effective only where, by reason of such division of opinion, a final decree cannot be entered, since, if entered, an appeal therefrom lies under section 2. Southern Pac. Terminal Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1908) 166 Fed. 134.

Supp. 1909, p. 291. [Act of April 14, 1906.]

This Act is re-enacted in amended form in Judicial Code, sec. 129, ante, title JUDICIARY, p. 195, of this Supplement.

Appeal direct to the Supreme Court, instead of the Circuit Court of Appeals, from a decree granting or denying an interlocutory injunction to restrain enforcement of a state statute on the ground of its unconstitutionality, see Judicial Code, sec. 266, ante, p. 242, of this Supplement.

Nature and purpose of Act. — In this Act the words "in any cause" were substituted in the place of the provision "in a cause in which an appeal from a final decree may be taken under the provisions of this Act to the Circuit Court of Appeals." See the original section and the amendment by the Act of June 6, 1900, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 422, 423, note. The purpose of Congress in substituting the words "in any cause" for the provision referred to was to confer upon the Circuit Court of Appeals jurisdiction to hear appeals from interlocutory orders or decrees granting or continuing injunctions or appointing receivers where constitutional questions were involved. Without this provision there was no appeal from an order or decree of a District or Circuit Court, or judge thereof, granting or continuing an injunction or appointing a receiver, if a constitutional question was alleged in the bill of complaint. The only hearing in a case involving the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States was in the Supreme Court upon an appeal from final decree; and this delay for the entry of a final decree was deemed to be a matter of great hardship in such cases, hence the statute was amended. The court having jurisdiction on appeal from an interlocutory order to determine a constitutional question, it follows that the court has jurisdiction to determine whether the Circuit Court had or had not jurisdiction of the case by reason of the presence or absence of such constitutional question. Louisville v. Cumberland Telephone, etc., Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 725, 728, 84 C. C. A. 151; Seattle Electric Co. v. Seattle, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 365.

In Alabama R. Commission v. Central of Georgia R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 225, reversing a decree for an interlocutory injunction enjoining the enforcement of certain railroad and passenger rates of the state, on the ground that they were confiscatory, the court said: "The litigation is likely to end sooner if no injunction is in force. Its dispatch is greatly dependent upon the conduct of the case by the complainants. They would not be inclined to press the case for speedy decision when they have once secured a preliminary injunction. As long as it stands, it is as good as any other, and experience shows that it often has practically the effect of a permanent injunction. Knowledge of this fact was probably one of the causes for the enactment of the statute allowing appeals from these interlocutory orders. . . . In these cases the preliminary injunctions have been in force for two years. If no injunction had been granted, it is probable that a final decree of the Circuit Court would have been reached in one-fourth of that time."

Review of case on the merits.—In Alabama R. Commission v. Central of Georgia R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 225, a case above cited and described in this note, the court said: "We think that on appeals from orders annulling statutes which are prima facie valid, their invalidity depending on facts to be proved, it is the duty of the appellate court—and a responsibility which it cannot avoid—to examine the whole case on the law and the facts. We do not mean to say that the decision of the lower court is not entitled to great weight, or that as a practical question it may not sometimes be treated as conclusive. But where the usual result of an interlocutory injunction is to enjoin the operation of the law for a long period, and where the dissolution of the injunction is the only means of obtaining a practical test, which may at last be necessary, the ends of justice will be promoted by an examination of the merits by the appellate court. Cases, of course, may occur where the rates are apparently so flagrantly unjust, so in conflict with experience and common knowledge as to what is right, as to seem unfair and probably confiscatory on their face. In such instances, it may be that the sworn bill, with proper averments and with the affidavits of experts as to their opinions, would be sufficient to overcome the prima facie presumption that the rates established by legal authority are valid. But where the rates are not manifestly unfair, where it may be that in their practical enforcement they may not greatly lessen the income and may possibly increase it, it seems to us unreasonable that the law should be suspended on such procedure."

Supp. 1909, p. 292. [Act of March 2, 1907.]

Reason for enactment.—In U. S. v. Bitty, (1908) 208 U. S. 393, 28 S. Ct. 396, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 543, it was said: "If a court of original jurisdiction errs in quashing, setting aside, or dismissing an indictment for an alleged offense against the United States, upon the ground that the statute on which it is based is unconstitutional, or upon the ground that the statute does not embrace the case made by the indictment, there is no mode in which the error can be corrected and the provisions of the statute enforced, except the case be brought here by the United States for review. Hence, that there might be no unnecessary delay in the administration of the criminal law, and that the courts of original jurisdiction may be instructed as to the validity and meaning of the particular criminal statute sought to be enforced—the above Act of 1907 was passed."

"Construction of the statute."—A judgment holding insufficient on demurrer certain counts of an indictment charging wilful misapplication of the funds of a national bank, in violation of R. S. sec. 5209, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 145, because the facts alleged do not constitute a crime under that section, as it should be construed, is reviewable as "based upon the . . . construction of the statute." U. S. v. Heinze, (1910) 218 U. S. 532, 31 S. Ct. 98, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1139.

For the same reason a judgment is reviewable which quashed certain counts of an indictment for violation of the same statute because they possessed the defects found in a prior indictment held not to charge a crime under the statute. U. S. v. Heinze, (1910) 218 U. S. 547, 31 S. Ct. 102, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1145.

The "construction of the statute" is involved, so as to sustain jurisdiction of a writ of error under this section, where an indictment against a national bank officer for making false reports to the Comptroller of the Currency was quashed because such officer was not an agent within the meaning of the federal statute defining the crime. U. S. v. Corbett, (1909) 215 U. S. 233, 30 S. Ct. 81, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 173.

Interpretation is included in the term "construction," as used in this Act. U. S. v. Biggs, (1909) 211 U. S. 507, 29 S. Ct. 181, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 305.

Demurrer to indictment.—The decision of a District Court sustaining a demurrer to an indictment for introducing liquor into the Indian country, is reviewable in the Supreme Court by a writ of error under this Act. U. S. v. Sutton, (1909) 215 U. S. 291, 30 S. Ct. 116, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 200.

A judgment of a federal District Court sustaining a demurrer to an indictment upon two grounds, one of which involves the construction of the federal statute on which the indictment is founded, and the other the sufficiency of such indictment upon general principles of criminal law, is reviewable in the federal Supreme Court on a writ of error, under this Act. U. S. v. Stevenson, (1909) 215 U. S. 190, 30 S. Ct. 35, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 153.

But the various grounds of demurrer to an indictment cannot be considered on a writ of error sued out by the government in a criminal case, under this Act, to review a judgment sustaining a special plea in bar, when the defendant has not been put in jeopardy; but the court has jurisdiction to review only the ruling of the court below on the sufficiency of such plea. U. S. v. Mason, (1909) 213 U. S. 115, 29 S. Ct. 480, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 725.

The sufficiency of an indictment upon general principles of criminal law is not open for review in the federal Supreme Court on a writ of error to a federal District Court under this Act. U. S. v. Stevenson, (1909) 215 U. S. 190, 30 S. Ct. 35, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 153.

A judgment of a federal Circuit Court holding insufficient on demurrer certain counts of an indictment charging wilful misapplication of the funds of a national bank, in violation of R. S. sec. 5209, because the facts alleged did not constitute a crime under that section, as it should be construed, is reviewable in the Supreme Court, under this Act, when based upon the construction of the statute upon which the indictment was founded. U. S. v. Heinze, (1910) 218 U. S. 532, 31 S. Ct. 98, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1139.

Jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court of a writ of error sued out under this Act to review a judgment of a federal District Court quashing an indictment for a conspiracy illegally to acquire coal lands from the United States, because of the opinion that the federal statute did not prohibit the acts complained of, cannot be successfully challenged on the theory that the indictment, and not the statute, was construed. U. S. v. Keitel, (1908) 211 U. S. 370, 29 S. Ct. 123, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 230.

The United States may bring error under this Act to review a judgment of a federal Circuit Court, quashing an indictment for violating the Immigration Act of March 3, 1903. Taylor v. U. S., (1907) 207 U. S. 120, 28 S. Ct. 53, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 130.

Special plea in bar.—The Supreme Court has jurisdiction to review a judgment purporting to dismiss an indictment upon the ground that the statute of limitations was a bar to the prosecution, although the plea filed and heard by consent and stipulation was denominated a plea in abatement. U. S. v. Barber, (1911) 219 U. S. 72, 31 S. Ct. 209, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 99.

The decision of a federal Circuit Court sustaining a special plea in bar to an indictment is reviewable in the Supreme Court under this Act, although the decision may invoke the application, rather than the validity or construction, strictly speaking, of the statute upon which the indictment was founded. U. S. v. Celestine, (1909) 215 U. S. 278, 30 S. Ct. 93, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 195.

On review of a judgment sustaining a plea in bar of the statute of limitations, to an indictment charging a continuing conspiracy, the court is not concerned with the technical sufficiency of redundancy of the indictment or even with any consideration of the nature of the overt acts alleged. U. S. v. Barber, (1911) 219 U. S. 72, 31 S. Ct. 209, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 99, following U. S. v. Kissel, (1910) 218 U. S. 601, 31 S. Ct. 124, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1168.

Construction of indictment.—The action of the court below as to the mere construction of the indictment is not open to review on the writ of error authorized by the Act. U. S. v. Biggs, (1909) 211 U. S. 507, 29 S. Ct. 181, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 305.

Review by certiorari.—Want of power in the federal Supreme Court, under the Act of March 3, 1891, sec. 6, to review by certiorari a judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals, reversing a conviction below, cannot be helped out by this Act. U. S. v. Dickinson, (1909) 213 U. S. 92, 29 S. Ct. 485, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 711.

Supp. 1909, p. 294, sec. 714.

The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia is "a court of the United States" within the meaning of this section. James

v. U. S., (1906) 202 U. S. 401, 26 S. Ct. 685, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1079.

Supp. 1909, p. 294, sec. 3.

Final judgment.—A judgment overruling a demurrer to a plea in abatement is not a final judgment, and therefore is not reviewable under this section. Cunningham v. Rodgers, (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 835, dismissing an appeal, the court also saying: "There is the further objection to the appeal, that the action was at law, and the case could only have been brought to this court upon writ of error," citing Toeg v. Suffert, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 125.

Mode of review.—This Act recognizes a distinction between cases at law and in equity and admiralty, and that a judgment from such court erroneously brought to the Circuit Court of Appeals by appeal, instead of by writ of error, should not be reviewed, though the record contained all the essential elements of a record brought up by writ of error. Price v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 791.

Thus it has been held that a judgment of the United States court for China, overruling a demurrer to a plea in abatement, was not a final judgment, and therefore not reviewable by the Circuit Court of Appeals under this Act. Cunningham v. Rodgers, (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 835.

JURIES.

Vol. IV, p. 737, sec. 800.

Porto Rico.—The competency of grand jurors summoned by the District Court of the United States for the district of Porto Rico after a valid local statute relating to the qualification of jurors went into effect must be tested by that statute, in view of the provision of the Act of April 12, 1900, 31 Stat. L. 85, ch. 191, sec. 14, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 773, that the statutory laws of the United States not locally inapplicable, except as otherwise provided, shall have the same force and effect in Porto Rico as in the United States, and of section 34, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 773, that, in addition to the ordinary jurisdiction of federal District Courts, the District Court of the United States for Porto Rico shall have jurisdiction "in all cases cognizant in the Circuit Courts of the United States, and shall proceed therein in the same manner as a Circuit Court," read in connection with section 800, which declares that jurors to serve in federal courts, in each state respectively, shall have the same qualifications as jurors of the highest court of law in that state at the time when such jurors are summoned. Crowley v. U. S., (1904) 194 U. S. 466, 24 S. Ct. 731, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1075.

Necessity for designating as grand or petit jurors.—Under this section providing that jurors in the federal courts shall be drawn or selected in accordance with the practice in the state courts as nearly as practicable, and section 810, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 744, providing when grand jurors shall be summoned in such courts, construed together, a venire of jurors may be drawn and summoned for a term without designating them as grand or petit jurors, and at the term a grand jury may be selected therefrom, where such is the state practice. U. S. v. Breese, (1909) 172 Fed. 765.

The conditional or qualified right of challenge on behalf of the federal government in a criminal case, which has the effect of setting aside a juror until the panel is exhausted, without assigning any cause, still exists in those states where such practice obtains, notwithstanding the enactment of the Acts of March 3, 1865, 13 Stat. L. 500, ch. 86, and R. S. sec. 819, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 745, giving peremptory challenges to the government, if such practice has, conformably to section 800, been adopted by a court rule in the federal courts. Sawyer v. U. S., (1906) 202 U. S. 150, 26 S. Ct. 575, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 972.

Objection to personal qualifications—how taken.—An objection to the personal qualifications of grand jurors may be taken by plea in abatement, filed after the return of the indictment, but prior to arraignment, and as soon as the facts on which the objection was based were ascertained. Crowley v. U. S., (1904) 194 U. S. 466, 24 S. Ct. 731, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1075.

Vol. IV, p. 741, sec. 802.

Act constitutional.—To the same effect as the original note and citing the cases there set out, Spencer v. U. S., (1909) 169 Fed. 562, 95 C. C. A. 60.

This section was not repealed by Act of June 30, 1879, ch. 52, 21 Stat. L. 43, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 749, relating to the same subject. U. S. v. Merchants', etc., Transp. Co., (1911) 187 Fed. 355.

"Jurors."—The word "jurors," as used in this section, declaring that jurors shall be returned from such parts of the district from time to time as the court shall direct, etc., embraces both grand and petit jurors. Spencer v. U. S., (1909) 169 Fed. 562, 95 C. C. A. 60.

Drawing from part of district.—While a federal court is given discretion by this section to direct the selection of jurors from any part of the district instead of the district at large, such power should only be exercised when there is some reason for it. Thus in a criminal prosecution against a corporation in the district including Chicago, which contains two-thirds of the population of the district, where the case involved in a large way questions of the transportation of commerce, a panel of jurors drawn almost entirely from without the city and composed largely of farmers was set aside, as not best calculated to return a fair and intelligent verdict, and a panel was drawn from the entire district. U. S. v. Standard Oil Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 988.

Where, prior to the return of certain indictments, the district judge appointed a jury commissioner, and directed such commissioner, with the clerk, to place in the box as eligible for jury service the names of 550 persons residing in the eastern division of the district, directing the number to be drawn from each county, it was held that such order was not objectionable as substituting the discretion of the judge for that of the commissioner, nor because the representation provided in the order was not in accordance with the population of such counties. U. S. v. Merchants', etc., Transp. Co., (1911) 187 Fed. 355.

Vol. IV, p. 743, sec. 808.

Waiver of objections.—Objections to competency of grand jury, not made until thirty-five days after service of process, are waived, where the court is open every day, except holidays, during such period. U. S. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1910) 177 Fed. 780.

The objection that the grand jury which returned an indictment was not selected as required by statute can be availed of only by a motion to quash, or by a plea, and is waived by going to trial on the merits. In any event, if matter of record and ground of error, the right to make the objection is lost by the failure to assign it on the prosecution of a writ of error. McInerney v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 147 Fed. 183.

Ex post facto law.—The Arkansas statute (Mansf. Dig. Ark., sec. 3991, Ind. Ter. Annot. Stat. 1899, sec. 2671), which applied to Indian Territory before the statehood of Oklahoma, required a grand jury to be composed of only sixteen men, and while this section provides that a grand jury shall consist of not less than sixteen nor more than twenty-three persons, it was held that so far as this section permitted a grand jury of more than sixteen persons to act upon a charge of crime committed before statehood, it was violative of Const. U. S., art. 1, sec. 9, providing that no ex post facto law shall be passed, and, as to such a charge, a jury of more than sixteen men was not a legally constituted grand jury. U. S. v. London, (1909) 176 Fed. 976.

Applies to Circuit and District Courts only.

—To the same effect as the original note, see U. S. v. Haskell, (1909) 169 Fed. 449.

For another case citing this section, see Lowdon v. U. S., (1906) 149 Fed. 673, 79 C. C. A. 361.

Vol. IV, p. 744, sec. 810.

Purpose of Act.—To the same effect as the original note, see U. S. v. Breese, (1909) 172 Fed. 765.

Presence of judge.—A judge ordering a grand jury need not be present when the order is executed. Ex p. Harlan, (1909) 180 Fed. 119, affirmed (1910) 218 U. S. 442, 31 S. Ct. 44, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1101.

Effect of order.—The making of an order for the drawing and attendance of a grand jury is the exercise of a judicial power, which pertains to both judge and court, and the order does not conclude public or private rights in any way, being nothing more than a mere administrative regulation of internal affairs relating to the organization of the court. Ex p. Harlan, (1909) 180 Fed. 110, affirmed (1910) 218 U. S. 442, 31 S. Ct. 44, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1101.

For another case citing this section, see U. S. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1910) 177 Fed. 780.

Necessity for designating as grand or petit jurors.—See under this title, vol. 4, p. 737, sec. 800.

Vol. IV, p. 744, sec. 811.

Vol. IV, p. 744, sec. 812.

For a case citing this section, see Atwell v. U. S., (1908) 162 Fed. 97, 89 C. C. A. 97, 15 Ann. Cas. 253.

Vol. IV, p. 745, sec. 819.

Ex post facto law.—The provision of this section which limits the number of peremptory challenges of a defendant charged with a misdemeanor in a federal court to three is not invalid as an ex post facto law as applied to a defendant charged with an offense committed in Oklahoma territory, but indicted and tried after the admission of the state, because under the law of the territory he was entitled to a larger number. Hallock v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 417.

Trial of several indictments together.—That a number of indictments against the same defendant under section 5480, R. S., for using the mails to defraud, are by order of the court tried together to the same jury, does not affect the right under section 819 to three peremptory challenges for each indictment. Betts v. U. S., (1904) 132 Fed. 228, 65 C. C. A. 452. Compare Krause v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 442, 78 C. C. A. 642.

Consolidation of actions.—Where separate actions by the same plaintiff are consolidated for trial by order of the court, either on its own motion or on motion of counsel for the plaintiff, in order to avoid waste of time and unnecessary expense, but the causes of action are such that separate verdicts are required, plaintiff and defendants are each entitled to the same number of challenges to jurors as they would be if the cases had been tried separately. Butler v. Evening Post Pub. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 148 Fed. 821.

Territorial courts.—On the trial in a territorial District Court of an indictment charging an offense against the laws of the United States questions relating to the right of the defendants to be tried separately and to challenge jurors peremptorily are to be determined by the laws of the territory. Cochran v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 147 Fed. 206.

Cases in which section applies.—This section in so far as it relates to challenges in capital and other felony cases clearly applies only in cases in which the United States is the prosecutor. Virginia v. Felts, (1904) 133 Fed. 85.

Vol. IV, p. 749, sec. 2.

Prior service.—R. S. sec. 812, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 744, which provides that "no person shall be summoned as a juror in any Circuit or District Court more than once in two years, and it shall be sufficient cause of challenge to any juror called to be sworn in any case that he has been summoned and attended said court as a juror at any term of said court held within two years prior to the time of such challenge," as modified by this Act, by reducing the time to one year, prescribes the rule of procedure in the federal courts to the exclusion of any state statute or rule, and under such provisions it is not ground of challenge to a juror that he has served as a juror within one year unless it was in the same court. Morris v. U. S., (1908) 161 Fed. 672, 88 C. C. A. 532, reversed on other grounds in (1909) 168 Fed. 682, 94 C. C. A. 168.

Neither is prior service a ground for disqualification of a juror unless such service was in the capacity of a petit juror. Boyer-town Nat. Bank v. Schufelt, (1906) 145 Fed. 509, 76 C. C. A. 187.

Appointment of jury commissioner by district judge.—This Act provides that all jurors for the federal courts shall be publicly drawn from a box in which names shall have been placed by the clerk of the court and a commissioner to be appointed by the judge thereof. R. S. sec. 609, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 243, declares that Circuit Courts shall be held by the circuit justices, or by the circuit judge of the circuit, or by the district judge of the district, sitting alone, or by any two of such judges together. It has been held that since a district judge sitting in a Circuit Court has all the powers of a circuit judge, a district judge presiding in the Circuit Court had jurisdiction to appoint a commissioner to select jurors from which a grand jury was to be drawn for such Circuit Court. U. S. v. Miller, (1911) 187 Fed. 369.

Vol. IV, p. 754, sec. 5. [Iowa — residence of jurors.]

Residence of jurors from central division.—This Act does not require that jurors drawn for service in the circuit division of the Southern District of Iowa should be citizens residing in that division, it being sufficient that they reside in the district. Spencer v. U. S., (1909) 169 Fed. 562, 95 C. C. A. 60.

Appointment of special assistants to a district attorney.—The fact that the commission of a special assistant to a district attorney appointed under the authority given by R. S. sec. 363, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 70, is signed by the solicitor-general in the department of justice as "acting attorney-general" does not affect the validity of the appointment; the solicitor-general being empowered by section 347 to exercise the duties of the office of the attorney-general in case of his absence, which will be presumed in support of the regularity of the appointment. U. S. v. Twining, (1904) 132 Fed. 129.

Vol. IV, p. 766, sec. 356.

On question of law only.—The question as to whether or not a citizen of Porto Rico, legally a resident of New York, is eligible for appointment in the Marine Hospital service under a departmental regulation which requires the applicant to be a citizen of the United States, or, if of foreign birth, to furnish proof of American citizenship, does not involve any question of law within the meaning of this section, and is not, therefore, one properly calling for an opinion of the attorney-general. The requirement not being demanded by law, its interpretation may properly be left to the department or bureau responsible for its existence and execution. (1904) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 183.

A statement of the facts in the nature of an agreed case in an action at law should be embodied in the request for an opinion. (1902) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 59; (1902) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 102; (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 378; (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 609.

Must be on matter actually pending.—(1902) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 59; (1902) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 118; (1903) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 556; (1904) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 179; (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 609; (1908) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 37; (1908) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 49.

Question of law must be specifically formulated.—It has been the invariable rule of the department of justice to decline to give an opinion upon any question of law unless it is "specifically formulated." (1902) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 59; (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 378; (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 609.

Questions not arising in department making inquiry.—In (1906) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 584, the attorney-general declined to express an opinion upon the question propounded by the Secretary of the Interior as to whether the preliminary draft of title LXVIII., "Railway and Telegraph Companies," submitted to him by the commission to revise and codify the laws of the United States, correctly embodies the provisions of existing law upon the subject, for the reason that the inquiry did not present a question of law arising in the administration of his department.

Questions of propriety involving executive discretion.—The attorney-general will not express an opinion upon the propriety of the exercise by the head of a department of his official discretion. (1902) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 118; (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 94; (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 524; (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 421; (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 578.

Jurisdiction of attorney-general and comptroller of treasury.—The attorney-general will not express an opinion upon a question involving payment of money which has been decided by the comptroller of the treasury, whose decision, under section 8 of the Act of July 31, 1894, ch. 2, 28 Stat. L. 208, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 384, is conclusive in law. (1904) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 185.

The comptroller of the treasury, rather than the attorney-general, should pass upon the question of the power of refund and payment out of the treasury of duty overpaid on an importation of merchandise. (1902) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 553. See also (1902) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 85; (1906) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 614; (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 431.

Exception.—The authority conferred upon the comptroller of the treasury by section 8 of the Act of July 31, 1894, 28 Stat. L. 208, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 384, to decide questions involving payments to be made from the treasury is complete; but that Act does not establish a rule which is universal and without exception. Congress did not, by that enactment, intend to shorten the reach of sections 354 and 356, R. S., or to repeal pro tanto those sections. Where a question is presented to the attorney-general in accordance with law for decision, and he is of opinion that the nature of the question is general and important in other respects than disbursement, and therefore conceives that it is proper for him to deliver his opinion, it is final and authoritative under the law, and should be so treated by the accounting officers of the treasury, even though the question involves a payment to be made from the treasury. When the comptroller of the treasury waives his right to determine a matter involving disbursements within the scope of his authority under the law, and requests or suggests a ruling by the attorney-general, the attorney-general's opinion should be controlling upon the accounting officers of the treasury, and should be followed by them unless contrary to some authoritative judicial decision. (1904) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 301, followed (1906) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 81. See also (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 609.

Judicial questions.—The attorney-general cannot properly pass upon the question whether the courts in this country have authority to execute letters rogatory issued out of the German patent office, as that is a matter for judicial and not for executive determination. (1902) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 69.

In (1903) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 97, the attorney-general declined to express an opinion as to the liability of the postmaster at Baltimore, Md., for a sum of money paid by him to a former clerk in the Baltimore post-office, and for which no service was performed, for the reason that the question was essentially a judicial one, amounting to an inquiry whether in regular legal proceedings a court and jury would hold that officer liable.

In (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 369, the attorney-general declined to express an opinion upon the question whether a wilful refusal to give true answers to inquiries concerning statistics which, by section 6 of the Permanent Census Act of March 6, 1902, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 737, 32 Stat. L. 52, the Department of Commerce and Labor is authorized to collect, would subject a person to the penalties prescribed by section 22 of the Act of March 3, 1899, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 747, 30 Stat. L. 1020, for the reason that the question is pre-eminently one for judicial and not executive determination.

Matters belonging to department of justice.—In (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 543, the attorney-general declined to express an opinion upon the question whether proceedings by court-martial would bar proceedings in the civil courts for an assault or other crime involved in the offense of hazing, for the reason that it would be of no assistance to those officers in the proper discharge of their duties, and should such action be taken, the matter would peculiarly be one for the consideration of his department. See also (1902) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 59; (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 631.

Questions once definitely answered. — A question once definitely answered by a former attorney-general and left at rest for a long term of years should be reconsidered only in a very exceptional case. (1902) 24 Op. Atty.-Gen. 53.

KIDNAPPING.

Vol. IV, p. 774, sec. 5526.

Constitutionality. — This section was authorized by the provisions of U. S. Const., 13th Amendment, forbidding slavery or involuntary servitude within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction, and granting to Congress the power to enforce the prohibition by appropriate legislation. Clyatt v. U. S., (1905) 197 U. S. 207, 25 S. Ct. 429, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 726.

Scope of statute. — The holding of another in a state of peonage, whether sanctioned or not by municipal or state law, is included in the prohibition against peonage in any state or territory of the United States contained in this section. Clyatt v. U. S., (1905) 197 U. S. 207, 25 S. Ct. 429, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 726.

Peonage defined. — In Clyatt v. U. S., (1905) 197 U. S. 207, 25 S. Ct. 429, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 726, Brewer, J., in defining peonage, said: "Peonage may be defined as a status or condition of compulsory service, based upon the indebtedness of the peon to the master. The basal fact is indebtedness. . . . Peonage is sometimes classified as voluntary or involuntary; but this implies simply a difference in the mode of origin, but none in the character of the servitude. The one exists where the debtor voluntarily contracts to enter the service of his creditor. The other is forced upon the debtor by some provision of law. But peonage, however created, is compulsory service — involuntary servitude. The peon can release himself therefrom, it is true, by the payment of the debt, but otherwise the service is enforced. A clear distinction exists between peonage and the voluntary performance of labor or rendering of services in payment of a debt. In the latter case the debtor, though contracting to pay his indebtedness by labor or service, and subject, like any other contractor, to an action for damages for breach of that contract, can elect at any time to break it, and no law or force compels performance or a continuance of the service."

For other cases defining peonage, see Peonage Cases, (1905) 136 Fed. 707; In re Peonage Charge, (1905) 138 Fed. 686; U. S. v. Clement, (1909) 171 Fed. 974.

Element of offense. — In order to constitute the crime of holding another person in peonage, it is not necessary that the defendant should have acted corruptly. The fact that persons were induced to work for another in payment of debts through fear of prosecution if they refused did not render the master guilty of peonage, unless such fear was caused by threats of prosecution made by him at the time. U. S. v. Clement, (1909) 171 Fed. 974.

State laws punishing breach of labor contract. — A state statute which makes criminal the procurement of money upon a fraudulent contract to perform service and the fraudulent abandonment of the contract after having so procured the money is not a violation of R. S. secs. 1990, 5526, prohibiting involuntary service of labor. Young v. State, (1908) 4 Ga. App. 827, 62 S. E. 558.

In Bailey v. Alabama, (1911) 219 U. S. 219, 31 S. Ct. 145, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 191, it was held that so far as the refusal without just cause to perform the labor called for in a written contract of employment under which the employee has obtained money which was not refunded, or property which was not paid for, is made prima facie evidence of an intent to defraud by Ala. Code 1896, sec. 4730, as amended by Gen. Acts 1903, p. 345, and Gen. Acts 1907, p. 636, and therefore punishable as a criminal offense, such legislation offends against the prohibition of the 13th Amendment to the Federal Constitution against involuntary servitude, except as punishment for crime, and against the provisions forbidding peonage, found in R. S. secs. 1990 and 5526, enacted to secure the enforcement of such amendment — especially since, under the local practice, the accused may not, for the purpose of rebutting the statutory presumption, testify as to his uncommunicated motives, purposes, or intentions. Compare Townsend v. State, (1905) 124 Ga. 69, 52 S. E. 293.

To work out a debt or contract. — If a person desiring to have a servant returned to him to work out a debt causes such servant to be arrested on a warrant procured by the master, and after incarceration the master procures the servant's release on his promise to return to his master's employment to continue to work out a debt, the master is guilty of peonage, prohibited by this section, provided the servant was charged with the crime for the procuring his arrest and incarceration, and to enable the master to extort from the servant a promise to return and work out the debt. In re Peonage Charge, (1905) 138 Fed. 686.

Inducing a person to labor in payment of debts by threats of prosecution may constitute intimidation and amount to peonage, if by reason of the different character of the parties such threats overcome the will of the servant so that the service is involuntary. U. S. v. Clement, (1909) 171 Fed. 974.

Evidence.—Evidence of a prior condition of peonage, to which the persons so held were returned by the act of defendant, is essential to support a conviction under an indictment charging the defendant with returning certain designated persons to a condition of peonage. Clyatt v. U. S., (1905) 197 U. S. 207, 25 S. Ct. 429, 40 U. S. (L. ed.) 726.

LABOR.

Vol. IV, p. 779, sec. 1.

Constitutionality.—The prohibition, under penalty of fine or imprisonment, except in case of extraordinary emergency, against requiring or permitting laborers or mechanics employed upon any of the public works of the United States or of the District of Columbia to work more than eight hours each day is not repugnant to the Federal Constitution. Ellis v. U. S., (1907) 206 U. S. 246, 27 S. Ct. 600, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1047. See also (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 441.

Extraordinary emergency.—The exception in this section of cases of extraordinary emergency was designed to excuse overtime work which must be rendered to avert some sudden unusual emergency, unexpectedly arising and calling for prompt action. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 278.

The building of levees on the banks of the Mississippi river in the Eastern District of Louisiana presents at all times an extraordinary emergency, exempted from operation of the eight-hour law. U. S. v. Garbish, (1910) 180 Fed. 502.

A delay, not entirely unexpected, in obtaining the timber required for the construction of a pier at the Boston navy yard, was held not to create an extraordinary emergency within the meaning of the exception in this Act. Ellis v. U. S., (1907) 206 U. S. 246, 27 S. Ct. 600, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1047.

In U. S. v. Sheridan-Kirk Contract Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 810, it was held that an "extraordinary emergency" in connection with the building of a dam across the Ohio river could not be construed as a continuing emergency, which would suspend the eight-hour law during the entire life of the contract, nor an emergency growing out of the scarcity of labor, nor could it be made to include, not only the time of the happening of a flood, but also the time required to repair the injuries resulting therefrom; but that it is such an unforeseen, sudden, or unexpected emergency as requires immediate action or remedy, and when the emergency passes the privilege ceases.

Intent.—A contractor for a public work of the United States, who intentionally permits laborers employed thereon to work more than eight hours a day, under the mistaken assumption that an extraordinary emergency exists, intentionally violates the provisions of this Act. Ellis v. U. S., (1907) 206 U. S. 246, 27 S. Ct. 600, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1047.

Laborers and mechanics.—Masters, mates, engineers, firemen, crane men, deck hands, and scow men employed on tugs, dredges, and scows used in dredging a harbor channel are not laborers or mechanics within the meaning of this Act. Ellis v. U. S., (1907) 206 U. S. 246, 27 S. Ct. 600, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1047.

In Breakwater Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 112, it appeared that the defendant was a contractor engaged in constructing for the United States jetties near Cape May harbor, extending from the shore into the open sea. The jetties were built up with stone, thrown overboard from barges, which were towed across Delaware bay, anchored, and as needed towed to the jetties and warped along while being discharged. As crews of such barges defendant employed engineers, boatmen, and hookmen, selected for their seafaring experience, who operated the barges and also discharged their cargoes. The work done and the time required to do it depended on tide, wind, and weather, which ordinarily required variable hours of service on the part of the men. The court followed Ellis v. U. S., supra, and held that such men were seamen, with the rights of such, including the right to a lien on the vessel for their wages, and could not be classed as laborers or mechanics, within the meaning of this Act.

Watchman.—In (1908) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 623, it was held that a watchman "whose duty is to watch the entrance of one of the public buildings occupied by the War Department, executing instructions with regard to admitting persons into the building and permitting public property to be taken out of the building, reporting to his chief any violation of law, disturbance of the peace, etc., that may be brought to his attention, or to guard the building and property therein during the night," was not a laborer or mechanic with the meaning of the eight-hour law.

In (1908) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 622, it was held that a watchman employed at Corregidor Island, Philippine Islands, whose duties were "to supervise all arrivals and to see that no one lands on the island without authority, to investigate such matters as the absence from work of native employees, and to make reports of those matters," was not a laborer or mechanic within the meaning of the eight-hour law.

See also (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 604.

Blacksmiths and their helpers, firemen, and pumpmen employed in the Reclamation Service are either mechanics or laborers within the meaning of the eight-hour law. (1906) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 64.

Person caring for office, lawns, etc.—A laborer "whose duty is to perform manual labor in the removal of furniture and office fixtures, cutting grass, washing floors and windows, and general office cleaning," is not a laborer within the meaning of the eight-hour law; such services being more those of a domestic servant than those of a laborer in the usual meaning of the term. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 623.

A hostler "whose duty is to feed, drive, and care for horses, and to clean carriages, harness, and stables," is rather a domestic servant than a laborer. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 623.

A messenger "whose duty is to sweep floors and do general office cleaning, attend to fires, and carry messages," is not a laborer or mechanic within the meaning of the eight-hour law. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 623. See also (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 604.

Method of payment not material.—The words "laborers and mechanics," as used in the eight-hour law, apply to all persons who may fairly come within the description of laborers and mechanics, whether they are paid by the year, by the month, or by the day. (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 465.

Jetty work.—In (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 278, it was held that this Act applied to the jetty work at the mouth of the Columbia river, which was being conducted directly by the government, and that those employed upon that work who came fairly within the meaning of the words "laborers and mechanics" should be restricted to eight hours of effective labor in any one calendar day, irrespective of enforced idleness on other days, except in case of a sudden emergency requiring prompt action.

Skilled workmen.—The eight-hour law includes skilled as well as unskilled workmen; and the employment of persons for a longer period than eight hours in any one day "when a dam is being raised or lowered" and the service is one "requiring skill and training" which "cannot safely be intrusted to inexperienced men," is not an employment in case of an "extraordinary emergency," and is a violation of that statute. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 605.

Panama canal.—This Act applies to the employment of laborers and mechanics in the construction of the Panama canal. It does not apply to the office force of the Isthmian Canal Commission stationed on the Isthmus of Panama, or to any of the employees of the government who are not within the ordinary meaning of the words "laborers and mechanics." (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 441.

Employees of Panama railroad.—This Act does not apply to laborers and mechanics in the employ of the Panama Railroad and Steamship Line, such persons being employed by the corporation and not by the United States. (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 465.

Labor outside regular hours.—Persons employed as lock tenders, lock helpers, lockmen, and in similar employments at the locks of the various canals owned and operated by the government may be called upon to perform service at any hour of the day, and such requirement is legal and proper under the eight-hour law so long as the total service rendered does not exceed eight hours per day. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 605.

Reclamation Act.—There is no conflict between the declaration in section 4 of the Reclamation Act of June 17, 1902, 32 Stat. L. 388, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 1099, that eight hours shall constitute a day's work upon the public works therein specified, and the saving clause in section 1 of this Act which allows more than eight hours' work in one calendar day "in case of extraordinary emergency." (1906) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 64.

"Public works."—Dredging a channel in Boston harbor is not a public work of the United States, within the meaning of this Act. Ellis v. U. S., (1907) 206 U. S. 246, 27 S. Ct. 600, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1047. Compare (1906) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 30.

Irrigation works for the reclamation of arid and semi-arid lands (Act of June 17, 1902, 32 Stat. L. 388, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 1098) perfectly and comprehensively fill the idea of "public works of the United States." (1906) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 64.

Eight hours' effective labor.—This law means eight hours of effective labor. (1906) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 64.

Contractors furnishing supplies to quartermaster.—This Act does not apply to contractors furnishing the Quartermaster's Department with supplies. (1906) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 36.

Construction of naval vessels under contract.—This Act does not apply to vessels under construction for the navy by contract with builders at private establishments. Materials for such vessels, such as armor, guns, and other articles obtained under special contracts, are a fortiori not within the statute. (1906) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 30.

Vol. IV, p. 780, sec. 2.

Jurisdiction.—In a prosecution of government contractors for "unlawfully, intentionally, and knowingly requiring or permitting a laborer or mechanic, employed on public work," to wit, a dam across the Ohio river, to work more than eight hours in a single calendar day, contrary to the provisions of this Act, the offense was not the working overtime by the laborer or mechanic, but was on the part of the contractor in requiring and permitting such overtime work to be done; and hence, where the work was directed, required, or permitted from the Ohio side of the river, the federal court for the Southern District of Ohio had jurisdiction over the offense, notwithstanding some or all of the work may have been performed south of the line which divides the states of Ohio and Kentucky. U. S. v. Sheridan-Kirk Contract Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 809.

Indictment.—The time of the commission of an offense under this Act as laid in the indictment does not confine the proof within the limits of that period, but proof that the offense was committed on or about the dates fixed in the indictment, if confined to dates prior to the finding of the grand jury, is competent to establish the charge. U. S. v. Sheridan-Kirk Contract Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 809.

Information.—This Act makes it a separate offense in the case of each laborer or mechanic so required to work more than eight hours, and a criminal information against a contractor for violation of such provision must set out the names of, or otherwise identify, the persons so alleged to have been unlawfully employed, that the accused may meet the charge intelligently, and be able to plead a conviction or acquittal in bar of any subsequent prosecution. U. S. v. Breakwater Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 78, reversed on other grounds (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 112.

Burden of proof.—The rule which places the burden of proof upon the party who, under the circumstances of the case, is best able to make the proof, requires, in a prosecution for violation of the eight-hour law, that the burden of showing the alleged offense was justified by an extraordinary emergency shall be upon the one interposing such a defense, who from the necessities of the case is possessed of special knowledge with reference thereto. U. S. v. Sheridan-Kirk Contract Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 810.

Defenses.—Where a defendant has been notified by government engineers that he can no longer rely on the construction of the eight-hour law given by that department during the years immediately following the passage of the law, he is not entitled to introduce such construction as a defense. U. S. v. Sheridan-Kirk Contract Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 810.

Vol. IV, p. 784, sec. 3.

Construction of statute.—An arbitration of differences between an interstate carrier and its employees, under this Act, is essentially a common-law arbitration, and rests solely on the written agreement of arbitration entered into by the parties, which limits and determines not only the rights of the parties thereto but also the extent of the powers of the arbitrators, and it is to be construed in accordance with the rules governing the construction of contracts, rather than those applicable to pleadings. In re Southern Pac. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 1001.

Scope of question submitted.—An agreement for arbitration between a railroad company and the Order of Railway Telegraphers provided for the submission, among others, of the question "whether members of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers in the employ of the employer shall legislate for train dispatchers respecting rates of pay and hours of service or otherwise." It was held that such question was not limited to an inquiry as to whether the train dispatchers in the service of the employer had authorized the order or its committee to represent them in the arbitration proceedings, which was merely a matter of agency, but that it covered the broader question as to whether they should be represented generally in their negotiations and dealings with the employer in respect to rates of pay and hours of service by the body of its employees who were members of the order, or should be separately represented, and that the board of arbitration properly admitted evidence offered by the employer to show the nature of their duties, and that their relation to the employer and to its service to the public was different from that of ordinary telegraphers. In re Southern Pac. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 1001.

An agreement for arbitration between a railroad company and the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, whose members employed by the company were working under a schedule agreed to between the parties fixing rates of pay and hours of service, which submitted as one of the questions to be arbitrated "the question of eliminating from the operation of the schedule certain important agencies where the duties of soliciting traffic are paramount," was not ambiguous in respect to such question, which was clearly limited by terms to "agencies where the duties of soliciting traffic are paramount," and could not be broadened by construction to authorize the board of arbitrators to consider and determine whether the schedule shall apply generally to "station agents whose regular duties do not include telegraphic work and whose annual earnings . . . equal or exceed" a certain sum. In re Southern Pac. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 1001.

Vol. IV, p. 786, sec. 4.

Entry of judgment.—In an arbitration proceeding to settle differences between an interstate carrier and its employees, judgment on the award cannot be entered by the court until after the appeal has been determined, or until after the time for taking an appeal has expired. In re Southern Pac. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 1002.

Vol. IV, p. 786, sec. 6.

Construction of agreement.—A written contract inter partes, as an agreement for arbitration stating the questions to be submitted and determined, must primarily be interpreted by its language taken in its ordinary and accepted meaning, and if that language is plain and unambiguous in itself, there is no room for construction, but it will be held to mean precisely what its terms imply. It is only when the language is susceptible of more than one construction that the intent or understanding of the parties may be inquired into, or that evidence of the surrounding circumstances may be resorted to. In re Southern Pac. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 1001.

Vol. IV, p. 787, sec. 10.

Constitutionality.—Personal liberty as well as the right of property are invaded without due process of law, in violation of U. S. Const., Fifth Amendment, by the provisions of section 10, making it a criminal offense against the United States for an agent or officer of an interstate carrier, having full authority in the premises from his principal, to discharge an employee from service to such carrier because of his membership in a labor organization. There is no such connection between interstate commerce and membership in a labor organization as to authorize Congress to make it a crime against the United States for an agent or officer of an interstate carrier, having full authority in the premises from his principal, to discharge an employee from service to such carrier because of such membership on his part. Adair v. U. S., (1908) 208 U. S. 161, 28 S. Ct. 283, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 436, reversing 152 Fed. 737. See also U. S. v. Scott, (1906) 148 Fed. 431; Order of Railroad Telegraphers v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 437.

LARCENY (INCLUDING ROBBERY).

Vol. IV, p. 790, sec. 5456.

Blank checks.—In Keller v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 697, it was held that six blank checks, with stubs attached, each of the value of one cent, the personal property of the United States, constituted "property" the subject of larceny, under this section.

Indictment.—This section does not make the value of the property stolen an element of the offense or a factor in determining its grade or punishment, and therefore it is not necessary that an indictment thereunder shall allege the value. Brown v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 975, 77 C. C. A. 173.

Vol. IV, p. 790, sec. 1.

Clerk of federal court.—The duty of a clerk of a federal District Court to pay over to the United States the surplus fees and emoluments of his office, which his half-yearly return or the audit thereof shows to exist over and above the compensation and allowances authorized by law to be retained by him, is not governed by the federal statutes relating to the embezzlement of "public money" or "money or property of the United States," but such fees and emoluments are received by the clerk, not as money or property belonging to the United States, but as the amount allowed to him for his compensation and office expenses under the statutes defining his rights and duties, and with respect to the amount payable when the return is made, the clerk is not a trustee, but a debtor. U. S. v. Mason, (1910) 218 U. S. 517, 31 S. Ct. 28, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1133.

Indictment.—An indictment under the Act charging a defendant with the embezzlement of money of the United States is bad where it does not allege that he was a clerk or employee of the government, or that the money came lawfully into his possession by virtue of some employment. U. S. v. Allen, (1906) 150 Fed. 152.

An indictment which charges a defendant with stealing money "belonging to" the United States sufficiently avers the ownership of the property stolen. Dimmick v. U. S., (1905) 135 Fed. 257; 70 C. C. A. 141.

LEGAL TENDER.

Vol. IV, p. 794, sec. 3587.

Five-cent pieces.— Under this section and section 3516, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 121, providing that minor coins shall consist of five-cent pieces, three-cent pieces, and one-cent pieces, five-cent pieces are legal tender, so that proof that a defendant stole eighty-five cents in United States five-cent pieces was sufficient to sustain an indictment charging the theft of eighty-five cents lawful current money of the United States of America. Black v. State, (1904) 4 Tex. Crim. 107, 79 S. W. 311.

Payment of street car fare.— The refusal of a conductor, under the rule of the company, to accept five one-cent pieces for fare except in exchange for a five-cent piece to be inserted in the automatic collector by the passenger is not a violation of this section providing that the minor coins of the United States shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding twenty-five cents in one payment, under which five separate pieces are legal tender for a debt of five cents, so as to render the rule unreasonable; such refusal not amounting to a refusal to accept the five coins in payment of the fare within the meaning of the statute. Martin v. Rhode Island Co., (R. I. 1911) 78 Atl. 549.

LIMITATION OF VESSEL OWNERS' LIABILITY.

Vol. IV, p. 837, sec. 4281.

Reasonableness of stipulation.— A condition in bills of lading issued by a steamship company, limiting its liability in case of loss to a specified sum per package unless the value of the goods shall be expressed therein, is not an agreed valuation of the goods, and is invalid to relieve the company from liability for the full loss in case of their loss or injury through negligence, but a limitation to the invoice or declared value is reasonable and enforceable. U. S. Lace Curtain Mills v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 701.

Value of baggage.— A provision printed in a steamship ticket for the carriage of six passengers, limiting the liability of the carrier for loss or damage to baggage to $100, not read by nor called to the attention of the passengers, is unreasonable and void. Weinberger v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, (1906) 146 Fed. 516.

Articles included as passenger's baggage.— The provisions of this section respecting the liability of vessels "as carriers" do not apply to articles carried by a passenger as baggage. La Bourgogne, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 781, affirmed (1908) 210 U. S. 95, 28 S. Ct. 664, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 973.

Hand baggage.— A steamship company issued a passage ticket limiting its liability for loss of the personal effects of passengers to $100, unless the value of the same, in excess of that sum, be declared before the issue of the contract or delivery of the effects to the ship and payment of freight at current rates thereon. Hand baggage was delivered to the company's baggage master at his direction, and on his statement that it would be sent to the passenger's room, but it was never delivered. It was held that the loss, if unexplained, established a prima facie case of negligence for which the company was liable, notwithstanding the failure of the passenger at the time of delivery to declare the value thereof or pay excess freight thereon; such requirement not applying to hand baggage. Holmes v. North German Lloyd Steamship Co., (1906) 184 N. Y. 280, 77 N. E. 21.

Jewelry worn by passenger.— The provision of section 4281 that if any shipper of jewelry, etc., contained in any parcel or package or trunk shall take the same as freight or baggage on any vessel without giving written notice of its character and value, and having the same entered on the bill of lading, the shipowner shall not be liable as carrier, is intended to apply where such goods are received from a shipper by a carrier for transportation in the usual course of business, and does not relieve a shipowner from liability for jewelry worn and carried on board by a woman passenger with the intention of placing it in the custody of the purser, as permitted by the rules of the ship, but which was stolen by an employee of the ship before she had the opportunity to do so. The Minnetonka, (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 509, affirming (1904) 132 Fed. 52.

Any vessel. — As to what vessels are within the statute, see infra, section 4289.

Fire during deviation. — The owner of a vessel which has deviated from her voyage by his order is not relieved from liability for loss of cargo by fire during such deviation by R. S. sec. 4282, which exempts him from liability for fire unless "caused by the design or neglect of such owner." The Indrapura, (1909) 171 Fed. 930.

Agreement to insure cargo. — A contract between carrier and shipper that the carrier should insure the cargo, operates to restore the carrier's common-law liability for loss by fire, abrogated by this section. Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Merchants', etc., Transp. Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 133.

General average. — This section does not exempt the vessel from general average contribution. The Wm. J. Quillan, (1909) 168 Fed. 407; The Wm. J. Quillan, (1910) 175 Fed. 207, reversed on other grounds (C. C. A.) 180 Fed. 681.

Vol. IV, p. 839, sec. 4283.

Valuation of vessel. — See infra, this note, Measure of owner's liability; and infra, this title, section 4285.

Jurisdiction of District Courts in admiralty — Of claims against vessel. — A court of admiralty in which proceedings are instituted by a vessel owner for limitation of liability has exclusive jurisdiction to settle in such proceedings all claims arising out of the matters on which they are based, and an order made therein restraining all persons having claims from prosecuting suits thereon elsewhere is a bar to a subsequent suit on a claim in another court, although brought by an administrator who had not at that time been appointed. Seese v. Monongahela River Consol. Coal, etc., Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 507.

Reducing claim below appraised value of vessel. — Where a District Court has acquired jurisdiction of a proceeding for limitation of liability for a claim for damages on which the owner has been sued in another district, the claimant cannot defeat such jurisdiction by appearing specially and offering or attempting to reduce the amount of his claim below the appraised value of the vessel and her pending freight. The John K. Gilkinson, (1907) 150 Fed. 454.

Where a District Court has obtained jurisdiction of a proceeding for limitation of liability on a claim for which the owner has been sued, the claimant cannot defeat such jurisdiction after the vessel has been appraised by reducing his claim below the appraisal. The John K. Gilkinson, (1907) 150 Fed. 868.

Prior litigation in state court. — Prior litigation in a state court of the question of the liability of a vessel owner growing out of a collision will not deprive the owner of the right to institute proceedings in an admiralty court for a limitation of his liability, however far the prior litigation may have proceeded; and on the institution of such proceedings all matters relating to the petitioner's liability are brought within the jurisdiction of the court of admiralty, which is required by admiralty rule 54, on motion of the petitioner, to make an order restraining the further prosecution of all or any suit or suits against the petitioner in respect of any claim, and has no power to refuse or limit such order. The City of Boston, (1906) 159 Fed. 257.

Action for death by wrongful act as one of limited liability. — Whether an action in a state court against the owner of a vessel for wrongful death is one of limited liability, under R. S. secs. 4283, 4284 et seq., is a question of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, which must be determined by the federal courts. The Lotta, (1907) 150 Fed. 219.

In which district. — Under admiralty rule 57, 9 S. Ct. iii., where the owner of a vessel has been sued on a claim for damages against which he is entitled to a limitation of his liability under the statute, but the vessel has not been libeled, a proceeding for limitation of liability may be brought either in the District Court of the district in which the owner has been sued or in that of the district in which the vessel may be, and an allegation in the petition that the vessel is within the district gives the court jurisdiction. The John K. Gilkinson, (1907) 150 Fed. 454.

A tug which, in pursuit of her business, was frequently within the Southern District of New York, and was there in a regular way at the time of the filing of a petition for limitation of liability by her owner, was within the district for the purpose of giving the court jurisdiction, under admiralty rule 57, although the domicile of the owner was elsewhere. The John K. Gilkinson, (1907) 150 Fed. 868.

Administering state law. — A claim for damages by reason of the death of a person in collision, filed in a proceeding in admiralty for limitation of liability by the administratrix of the deceased, but based on a state statute which gives the right of recovery to the widow, is sufficient to authorize a recovery, where it discloses that the claimant is also the widow of the deceased, and an amendment making the claim in that capacity may properly be allowed. The Saginaw, (1905) 139 Fed. 906.

Proceeding in state court. — A shipowner, by defending and appealing an action in a state court to recover damages for injury to a passenger, does not waive his right to petition a court of admiralty for limitation of liability. In re Starin, (1903) 124 Fed. 101.

"While there can be no doubt that an answer in a state court proceeding often suffices to give an opportunity to present the defense of the limitation of liability provided by the United States statutes, yet it is manifestly useless where anything in the nature of affirmative relief is necessary. If a person, when confronted with a claim, desires to bring all matters connected with his vessel to a definite determination, he must proceed affirmatively, and the only manner in which he can do so is by resorting to a District Court of the United States." The Hoffmans, (1909) 171 Fed. 455, 458.

That the Pennsylvania law forbids a carrier to limit its liability for negligence, while the federal laws limit the liability of the owner of a vessel in the operation of which a person is injured to the amount or value of the interest of the owner in the vessel and freight, does not deprive the state courts of jurisdiction of an injury action against a ferry company, but the company may make its defense of limited liability and have a special finding as to the value of the vessel. Amos v. Delaware River Ferry Co., (1910) 228 Pa. St. 362, 77 Atl. 12.

Stipulation as to proceeding in state court.—A stipulation providing for a proceeding in a state court does not preclude the shipowner from proceeding in a federal court for limitation of liability, unless the stipulation so provides in unmistakable language. The Hoffmans, (1909) 171 Fed. 455.

Effect of judgment in state court.—An action at law was brought in a state court by a passenger against the owner of a vessel to recover damages resulting from a collision. After trial and a verdict in favor of plaintiff, and more than two years after the collision, the defendant instituted proceedings for limitation of liability in a court of admiralty, in which the plaintiff was enjoined from further prosecuting her suit in the state court. On appeal by her from an order denying a motion to dissolve the injunction, the Circuit Court of Appeals reversed such order, holding that under the facts, and by analogy to the practice in courts of equity and bankruptcy, the claimant should be permitted to prosecute her action to judgment for the purpose of liquidating her claim, "subject to the directions subsequently to be given by the District Court with reference to her sharing with other claimants as to any judgment which she may obtain." She subsequently recovered judgment in the state court for the amount of the verdict. It was held that, while the District Court was not absolutely bound by such judgment, it should be accepted as determining the amount of plaintiff's claim, unless the court was satisfied that it was excessive. The City of Boston, (1909) 182 Fed. 174.

When only one claim.—For a full discussion of the right to maintain a proceeding for limitation of liability when there is but one claim, and an extensive review of the authorities, see The Hoffmans, (1909) 171 Fed. 455.

The provision of the statute limiting a vessel owner's liability for damage done without his privity or knowledge to the value of his interest in the vessel and in her freight then pending, and Supreme Court admiralty rules 54 to 57, prescribing procedure to ascertain the value of such interest, etc., relate to a claim or claims growing out of a particular act for which it is sought to hold the owner liable; and in the proceeding to limit the owner's liability, it is these claims only that are pertinent in the first instance, the ultimate disposition of the fund produced by the owner's interest being a matter for subsequent determination; and admiralty may refuse to exercise its jurisdiction to limit liability, where there is and can be only a single claim against a single owner, and when the appraised value of the vessel exceeds many times the sum already adjudged to be due claimant. Delaware River Ferry Co. v. Amos, (1910) 179 Fed. 756.

Contesting liability of vessel.—Where a petition in admiralty to limit the liability of a vessel and cargo for collision, as authorized by admiralty rules 54-57, failed to state the facts and circumstances by reason of which exemption from liability was claimed, as required by rule 56, the petition was sufficient to entitle petitioner to contest the question of fault on the part of its vessel. The Sacramento, (1904) 131 Fed. 373.

A petition for limitation of liability must allege the facts necessary to entitle the petitioner, under the statute, to the relief sought, and a damage claimant contesting the right must take issue by answer, which must be full and explicit and distinct to each separate article and separate allegation, as required by admiralty rule 27. The proof required in support of the petition that any liability incurred was without the privity or knowledge of the petitioner does not reach the subsequent issue of liability of the vessel for individual claims sought to be proved under rule 55, the right to contest which is reserved to the petitioner by rule 56, which issue should be presented by appropriate pleadings conforming to the general practice in admiralty, the claimant being required to allege and prove a cause of action as in an original suit. In re Davidson Steamship Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 411.

Issues on petition and answer.—In a proceeding for limitation of liability the petition and answer on the one hand and the individual claims for damages on the other present distinct issues, which are to be separately adjudicated in the order named. In re Davidson Steamship Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 411.

Suits on claims against owners stayed.—"It is now well settled that proceedings in a United States District Court, under admiralty rule 54 of the Supreme Court, secs. 4283-4285 R. S., Act Cong. June 26, 1884, ch. 121, 23 Stat. L. 53, and sec. 4289 R. S. as amended by Act June 19, 1886, ch. 421, sec. 4, 24 Stat. L. 80, to limit the liability of shipowners for loss or damage to personal goods, supersede all other actions or suits for the same damages in the state or national courts upon all matters properly presented therein, and in the nature of the case, where the jurisdiction of the District Court has attached, it is exclusive. Black v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (1889) 39 Fed. 565; Oregon R., etc., Co. v. Balfour, (1898) 90 Fed. 295, 298, 33 C. C. A. 57. and authorities there cited;

Butler v. Boston, etc., Steamship Co., (1889) 130 U. S. 527, 9 S. Ct. 612, 32 U. S. (L. ed.) 1017." Dowdell v. U. S. District Ct., (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 444, 445.

Enjoining actions on claims. — "A court of admiralty, in which is pending a proceeding for the limitation of the liability of a shipowner, may enjoin the prosecution of suits in state courts against the shipowners. In re Whitelaw, (1896) 71 Fed. 733, and authorities there cited; The Tolchester, (1890) 42 Fed. 180, 185. And in proceedings of this character, which have been designated as 'equity proceedings in admiralty,' to prevent a multiplicity of suits, it has frequently been decided that the powers of an admiralty court are as extensive, and its remedies are as effective, as are those of a court of chancery when its jurisdiction is invoked in an equitable proceeding, and that all persons having claims, whether in rem or in personam, against a ship or its owners, can have their rights determined therein. This principle was clearly recognized by this court in In re Pacific Mail Steamship Co., (1904) 130 U. S. 76, supra; In re Meyer, (1896) 74 Fed. 897; The Annie Faxon, (1896) 75 Fed. 312, 320, 21 C. C. A. 366." Dowdell v. U. S. District Ct., (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 444, 445.

Where there was only a single claimant against a vessel for death alleged to have resulted from negligence, and an action therefor has been brought against the owner in the state court, he is entitled to set up his limited liability as a defense in such court; and the fact that the extent of his liability has been determined in an ex parte proceeding in a federal court does not authorize an injunction restraining the claimant from the prosecution of his action in the state court to recover the amount of such limited liability. The Lotta, (1907) 160 Fed. 219.

Effect of restraining order. — A court of admiralty in which proceedings are instituted by a vessel owner for limitation of liability has exclusive jurisdiction to settle in such proceedings all claims arising out of the matters on which they are based, and an order made therein restraining all persons having claims from prosecuting suits thereon elsewhere is a bar to a subsequent suit on a claim in another court, although brought by an administrator who had not at that time been appointed. Seese v. Monongahela River Consol. Coal, etc., Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 507.

Interrogatories annexed to answer. — Interrogatories annexed to an answer in a proceeding for limitation of liability, which are directed solely to the discovery of assets of the petitioner, are immaterial to the issues, and subject to exception. In re Knickerbocker Steamboat Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 958.

Necessary parties. — On appointment of a commissioner to take proofs on a damage claim filed in a proceeding for limitation of liability by the owner of one of two vessels in collision, after an authoritative determination by the Circuit Court of Appeals that both vessels were in fault, the owner of the other vessel, if not a party, should be brought in by notice, being liable to contribution if the claim is established and enforced. The City of Boston, (1909) 182 Fed. 171.

Time for filing claims. — In a proceeding in admiralty for a limitation of liability, the court has discretionary power to permit the filing of a claim for damages after the expiration of the time fixed in the monition, in a proper case, and such permission will be granted where the claim was forwarded by mail to the clerk on the last day of such time and received before any action was or could have been taken respecting such claims. The City of Boston, (1906) 159 Fed. 257.

Reopening proceeding after final decree. — Where proceedings in a court of admiralty by a shipowner, for limitation of liability, have been terminated, so far as the parties before the court are concerned, by a final decree, the court has no power to reopen the proceedings for the purpose of allowing other claimants, who have not appeared therein, to come into the case and prove their claims. If for any reason the decree is not binding on such claimants, their remedy is by an independent suit. Dowdell v. U. S. District Ct., (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 444.

Consolidation of proceedings. — In The City of Boston, (1909) 182 Fed. 171, a motion to consolidate proceedings to limit the liability of each of two colliding vessels was denied. The court said: "Both these petitions, it is true, grow out of the same collision. The petitioner in this case is a damage claimant in the other. The total damage from the collision is now to be borne, one-half each, by the owners of the two vessels. Notwithstanding these facts, I am not clear that consolidation of the two cases should be ordered. No precedent for such consolidation of two petitions of this kind is found. I am not convinced that the advantages to be gained would outweigh the possible disadvantages. It seems to me that the rights of the parties can be secured as well by continuing the distinction between the two proceedings, and that no loss of time will necessarily be involved."

Waiver of statutory limitation. — The right to petition for limitation of liability is not waived by a provision in a bill of lading that the transportation shall be subject to certain specified conditions. The Hoffmans, (1909) 171 Fed. 455.

Pleading limitation of liability. — A petition for limitation of liability held sufficient to give the court jurisdiction as against a special plea. In re Eastern Dredging Co., (1905) 138 Fed. 942.

Answer to petition — specification of fault of vessel. — In a proceeding by the owner of a vessel for limitation of liability, where the petition alleges generally freedom from fault on the part of claimant, he must allege and offer evidence to prove the same; and it is not sufficient merely to deny such allegation of the petition, but the answer should specify in what the fault consisted. In re Starin, (1909) 173 Fed. 721.

Claimants who pleaded as a defense to a petition for limitation of liability the negligence of petitioner, because of the unseaworthiness of the vessel, but failed to comply with an order requiring them to specify the particulars, will not be permitted to give testimony as to such defense under a general denial, to controvert petitioner's prima facie case. The John H. Starin, (1909) 175 Fed. 527.

"Privity or knowledge."—A steamship company, which establishes rules and regulations requiring the masters of its vessels to maintain only the moderate speed required by the international rules in case of fog, and has not knowingly tolerated or encouraged the violation of such rules or neglected their enforcement, and which has exercised due care in securing officers of experience and ability, is not debarred from the right to a limitation of liability for damages caused by a collision for which its vessel was in fault by reason of maintaining excessive speed in a fog, on the ground that the collision occurred with its privity or knowledge. La Bourgogne, (C. C. A. 1907) 139 Fed. 433, affirmed (1908) 210 U. S. 95, 28 S. Ct. 664, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 973.

An owner who, after a general inspection, purchases a vessel from a shipbuilder of recognized standing and reputation, who equips her with machinery, means, and appliances which are suitable and sufficient, if properly used, may limit his liability for injuries to a stevedore, occasioned by the negligent use of such appliances by his employees. The Harry Hudson Smith, (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 724, affirming 136 Fed. 271.

The owner of a vessel whose cargo was injured by fire while the vessel was in dry dock by the owner's order under circumstances constituting a deviation cannot claim exemption from liability on the ground that the loss was without his "privity or knowledge." The Indrapura, (1909) 171 Fed. 929.

When the owner is a corporation.—In a suit by a corporation for limitation of liability as owner of a vessel for a loss due to unseaworthiness, the privity of libellant with its condition is measured by that of its managing officers. Oregon Round Lumber Co. v. Portland, etc., Steamship Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 912.

Where a judgment was recovered in a state court against a corporation for the death of a person killed on a derrick scow owned by the defendant, by the breaking of a part of the derrick, the court finding that the part was obviously defective on inspection, but that no inspection or repair was made, that the derrick was being used at the time in the raising of a sunken vessel under the personal direction of the defendant's president, who was on board, and that the defendant was chargeable with negligence causing or contributing to the death, the corporation cannot maintain a petition for limitation of liability against such judgment on the ground that the injury was occasioned without its privity or knowledge, through the fault or negligence of the master of the scow. The Capt. Jack, (1909) 169 Fed. 455.

Mere negligence.—Mere negligence, of itself, does not necessarily establish the existence on the part of the owner of a vessel of "privity or knowledge," so as to preclude the shipowners from limiting their liability. Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, (1908) 210 U. S. 95, 28 S. Ct. 664, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 973.

Negligence of agent.—A shipowner, who has provided a suitable person as his agent to inspect or provide for the proper equipment of the vessel, is not deprived of the benefit of the statute limiting liability by proof of negligence of such agent in failing to provide such equipment or to maintain it in good condition of which the owner had no knowledge or notice. The Tommy, (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 570.

Failure to furnish equipment.—The owner of a barge is not entitled to a limitation of liability for the death of an employee engaged in discharging a cargo of rails, which resulted from the fact that the vessel lacked the necessary equipment for handling the rails and the master borrowed and used a set of tongs which were worn and unfit for use, although warned of their defective condition; it not appearing that such owner had delegated power to any competent person to provide the vessel with proper equipment to render her seaworthy for the service in which she was engaged. The Tommy, (1905) 142 Fed. 1034, affirmed (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 570.

Failure to have survey made.—A barge leased by libellant corporation to one of the respondents to be used in coaling a vessel in port, while being unloaded alongside the vessel capsized, and the cargo was lost and one person drowned. The immediate cause of the capsizing was the unusual quantity of water in the hold, which had come in during the latter part of the time she was being loaded. The evidence tended to show that she was loaded and was being unloaded in the usual and proper manner. She was an old vessel, and had been twice extensively overhauled and repaired, the last time some five years before. The superintendent and the manager of the libellant had both been through the hold only a few days previously, but without lights; and it did not appear that they made more than a casual examination, nor had she been surveyed by any one having skill, and there was evidence that some of her interior timbers were broken. It was held that the sinking was attributable to her unseaworthiness, which was not without the privity of libellant, and that it was not entitled to a limitation of liability. Oregon Round Lumber Co. v. Portland, etc., Steamship Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 912. See also Braker v. F. W. Jarvis Co., (1908) 166 Fed. 987.

Negligence of watchman in permitting vessel to go adrift.—Where the precautions taken by the petitioner to secure and care for the vessel were sufficient, and it appeared that none of its managing officers had knowledge of her going adrift or of the negligence of the watchman, it was not chargeable with privity or knowledge which precluded it from limiting its liability. In re Eastern Dredging Co., (1906) 159 Fed. 541.

Vessel going adrift in storm of unusual violence.—A steamer owned by petitioners was placed by them on the beach, where she had been for several weeks, and had been partially broken up and her machinery removed, when during a storm and high tide at night she floated, broke from her moorings, and drifted across the bay. She did not float at ordinary high tide, and lay in a hollow, with a bank between her and the sea. She was made fast by five hawsers, three of which parted, and the others slipped from their fastenings. A watchman was on board. The storm and height of the tide were extraordinary, and exceeded any that had been known for several years, and many other vessels dragged their anchors or broke from their moorings. The direction of the wind at high water was such as to force the vessel off shore, but in most storms occurring at that time of year the wind blows on shore. The court held (1) that there was no absence of reasonable care or skill on the part of petitioners, which would charge them with privity or knowledge, such as to prevent them from limiting their liability; and (2) that the breaking away of the steamer was due to inevitable accident or vis major, and she could not be held liable for injuries to other vessels into which she may have drifted. The C. H. Northam, (1909) 181 Fed. 986.

Hearing and determination of question. — In a proceeding by the owner of a vessel for limitation of liability on account of a collision, where an answer is filed by the owner of the other vessel setting up a claim for damages, the question of the knowledge or privity of the petitioner, though jurisdictional, and the question of liability for the collision, where both are put in issue by the pleadings and are to be determined largely upon the same evidence, may properly be heard at the same time as a matter of convenience, and the court is not required to hear and dispose of the jurisdictional question separately. In re Eastern Dredging Co., (1906) 159 Fed. 541.

Unseaworthiness of vessel — Proper equipment in general. — "The right of a shipowner to limit its liability is dependent upon his want of complicity in the acts causing the disaster, and the burden of proof rests upon him to show affirmatively that he has properly officered and equipped the vessel for the contemplated service." McGill v. Michigan Steamship Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 788, 795, reversing (1904) 133 Fed. 577. Certiorari denied (1906) 203 U. S. 593, 27 S. Ct. 782, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 332.

Failure to comply with inspection laws. — "It is well settled that the owner of a vessel is not entitled to limit his liability arising from the unseaworthiness of a vessel. If the libellant was ignorant of the condition of the vessel, it was because of a negligent examination, as in The Republic, (1894) 61 Fed. 109." Braker v. F. W. Jarvis Co., (1908) 166 Fed. 987, 988.

Failure of owner's agent to ascertain condition. — A contention on the part of the respondent company that its liability should be limited to the value of the boats, not sustained because the responsible agent of the company neglected to avail himself of an opportunity to ascertain the condition of the boats. Sanbern v. Wright, etc., Lighterage Co., (1909) 171 Fed. 449, affirmed (1910) 179 Fed. 1021.

Loss of vessel at sea by striking submerged obstruction. — Evidence considered, and held to entitle the owner of the Danish steamship Norge to a limitation of liability on account of her loss at sea while on a voyage from Copenhagen to New York, through striking a derelict or unknown obstruction under the surface of the water to the southward of Rockall Rock, by which she was so injured that she sank in twenty minutes, and a number of persons lost their lives; it being shown that she was seaworthy and properly manned and equipped, that she was on an approved route with a lookout properly stationed, and that there was no fault or negligence in her management. Claims made by representatives of persons who lost their lives by the disaster also dismissed. The Norge, (1907) 156 Fed. 845.

Cases of personal injury and death. — This section applies to cases of personal injury and death as well as to cases of loss of or injury to property. The Southside, (1907) 155 Fed. 364.

Passenger falling on gangplank. — Conflicting evidence considered, and held insufficient to sustain the burden resting upon a passenger to prove, in a proceeding for limitation of liability, that the injury for which she claimed damages, and which resulted from her falling while passing over the gangplank of petitioner's barge, was due to the wet and unfit condition of such gangplank. In re Starin, (1906) 151 Fed. 274.

Loss arising from a collision — Both vessels having same ownership. — Where, after collision, the corporation owning both boats filed a petition to limit its liability with reference to the boat lost only, and did not offer to surrender the colliding boat, an interlocutory decree that the owner of the boat lost was entitled to limit its liability to the appraised value of such boat with its freight pending was no bar to libellant's subsequent action against the owner for damages for the death of a passenger in such collision, in which it was held that both boats were at fault, though libellant had appeared and presented a claim for such damages in the limitation proceeding. Hall v. North Pac. Coast R. Co., (1904) 134 Fed. 309.

Measure of owner's liability. — See infra, section 4285.

In a proceeding for limitation of liability arising out of an accident which occurred more than two years before the proceeding, in appraising the value of the vessel at the time of the accident, deductions from her present value on account of additions made since the accident should also be made at their present value, and not at their cost. The Captain Jack, (1908) 162 Fed. 808.

Hoisting apparatus as part of vessel. — A traveling steam hoist or derrick, mounted on a fuel scow specially designed to be used with such a hoist, and from which, although removable, it had been removed but once in fourteen years, is a part of the vessel, within the meaning of the limitation of liability statute. The Buffalo, (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 815, affirming (1906) 148 Fed. 331.

Tug and scow used together.—Where a contractor for raising a sunken vessel employed in the work an outfit which it owned, consisting of a scow on which was mounted a derrick, and a tug to supply motive power, in order to maintain a petition for limitation of liability for the killing of a person by the breaking of a part of the derrick during the work the contractor was required to surrender the entire outfit, including the tug. The Capt. Jack, (1909) 169 Fed. 455.

Dismantled ship.—Where a vessel, at the time of the commission of injuries for which her owners seek limitation of liability, had been so far dismantled as to have no market value as a vessel, for the purpose of fixing the amount of the stipulation to be given by petitioners, the net value of the materials in her after she is broken up may properly be taken; but in such computation the value of a dummy engine placed on board for use in removing her machinery, and which was no part of her equipment, should be excluded. The C. H. Northam, (1909) 181 Fed. 985.

"Freight then pending."—By the terms "freight pending" and "freight for the voyage," as used in this section, is meant the earnings of the voyage, whether for the carriage of passengers or merchandise, and where passage or freight money is prepaid under contracts by which it becomes the absolute property of the shipowner whether the voyage is completed or not, it must be regarded as earned, although the vessel is lost, and must be surrendered by the owner to entitle him to a limitation of liability under the statute for claims growing out of such loss. La Bourgogne, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 433, affirmed (1908) 210 U. S. 95, 28 S. Ct. 664, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 973.

"Pending" freight is limited to that due to or to be earned by the particular vessel through whose fault the loss occurred, and the fact that goods when lost or injured were being transported under through bills of lading on different vessels of the same owner does not require a surrender of the freight earned by a different vessel in the course of such shipment. Ralli v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 286.

Vessel sunk before completion of loading.—Where a lighter sank at a pier while being loaded, injuring a large part of her cargo, the fact that the uninjured cargo was then transferred by her owner to another vessel, and that such lighter did not deliver any part of it, does not relieve the owner in proceedings for limitation of his liability from the necessity of surrendering as "pending freight" the freight which she would have earned if she had carried the cargo. Ralli v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 286.

Earnings in wrecking service.—Where, at the time of an injury which gave rise to proceedings for limitation of liability, the vessel surrendered was employed in raising a sunken vessel under a contract by which the petitioner received a stated sum for the service, such sum may properly be considered as "freight pending" within the meaning of the statute, which must also be surrendered, and no deduction can be made therefrom on account of other vessels or appliances also used in the service, but which the petitioner did not surrender. The Captain Jack, (1908) 162 Fed. 808.

Interest and costs.—Where a damage claimant, in proceedings by a vessel owner for limitation of liability on account of a collision, had instituted an action in a state court, and obtained a verdict therein before the commencement of the limitation proceedings, on which she was subsequently permitted to take judgment, and which was accepted by the court of admiralty as a liquidation of her claim, she was also entitled to interest on the amount of the verdict from the time of its rendition. The City of Boston, (1909) 182 Fed. 174.

Scope of proceeding—claims provable.—In a proceeding by a vessel owner for limitation of liability growing out of the sinking of the vessel in a collision, although she is exonerated from fault for the collision, a claim for injury to a passenger resulting from the alleged negligence of the vessel after the collision is within the scope of the proceedings and may be proved therein. The City of Boston, (1907) 159 Fed. 261.

Effect of decision—adjudication as to fault in collision case.—Where the question of fault for a collision between two vessels was determined in a proceeding by the owner of one of the vessels for a limitation of liability, in which proceeding all damage claimants were cited to appear and had the opportunity to be heard, the decision on such question is conclusive on such a claimant although he did not appear. The City of Boston, (1907) 159 Fed. 261.

Appeals.—A decree in admiralty in proceedings for limitation of liability adjudging the rights of the parties and referring the cause to a commissioner to take testimony on claims for damages is reviewable on an appeal taken after the entry of a final decree on the commissioner's report, although the time for taking an appeal from the first decree had expired, such decree being in its nature interlocutory. La Bourgogne, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 433, affirmed (1908) 210 U. S. 95, 28 S. Ct. 664, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 973.

This section was not repealed by the Hepburn Act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, ch. 104, 24 Stat. L. 379, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 809). The Hoffmanns, (1909) 171 Fed. 455.

"Appropriate proceedings."—In construing the phrase "appropriate proceedings," as used in this section, Seaman, J., said: "With no precedents interpreting the rules as to the practice upon such issue [liability of the vessel], I am of opinion that they [the provisions of the statute] intend the appropriate judicial hearing of the controversy over liability, with the issues presented upon distinct allegations of fact for and against the claim; that claimant must state, as the fundamental requisite of apportionment and recovery for damages arising out of the collision, a prima facie case of liability on the part of the petitioner's vessel, such liability being expressly reserved for contest; and that the petitioner becomes respondent in respect of such issue, and may either answer the claimant's allegations by counter statement of facts, consistent with the petition, or have the averments of the petition thereupon adopted for the purpose of the issue. Unless the rules intend that the fact of collision, followed by the petition to limit liability, creates a presumption of liability which the petitioner must overcome, the contention is untenable that the claimant may rest its claim upon specification of damages sustained and averment that the injuries occurred without fault on its part. Such departure from the general doctrine cannot be upheld under my understanding of the letter or spirit of the rules." In re Davidson Steamship Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 411, 413.

steamship service between Havre and New York, the vessels to be built in France and to be of a character, size, speed, and equipment specified, and subject to the use of the government in case of war or other extraordinary political circumstances, and to transport gratuitously all mails and specie for the use of the state. In such case it is impossible to determine what part of subsidy is to be considered as compensation to any single vessel for transportation of the mails on a single trip. La Bourgogne, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 433, affirmed (1908) 210 U. S. 95, 28 S. Ct. 664, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 973.

"Voyage" defined.—The earnings of the voyage which a shipowner is required by the statute to surrender in order to obtain a limitation of liability for losses occurring on such voyage are those only of the particular voyage which exposed the passengers or property to risk; and where a steamship was engaged in making regular trips across the Atlantic from Havre to New York and return, discharging her passengers and cargo at each terminal port, each of the trips between such ports constitutes a voyage, within the meaning of the statute, and in proceedings for limitation of liability for claims arising out of the sinking of the ship in collision while on her way from New York to Havre the owner is not required to surrender the earnings of the preceding trip from Havre to New York. La Bourgogne, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 433, affirming (1902) 117 Fed. 264, affirmed (1908) 210 U. S. 95, 28 S. Ct. 664, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 973.

See supra, p. 1466, under section 4283, Measure of owner's liability.

This section was not repealed by the Hepburn Act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, ch. 104, 24 Stat. L. 379, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 809). The Hoffmans, (1909) 171 Fed. 455.

Injury by mutual fault of vessels owned by defendant.—The purpose of proceedings for limitation of liability for a collision is to exempt the petitioner from all personal liability on account of the collision, on whatever ground it may rest; and where the petition is for the limitation of liability as owner of a vessel sunk, but it is found on the hearing, on appropriate allegations in the answer, that petitioner was also owner of the other vessel concerned, and that both were in fault for the collision, it is a condition precedent to the granting of the relief sought that both vessels and their pending freight be surrendered. The San Rafael, (C. C. A. 1905) 141 Fed. 270, reversing (1904) 134 Fed. 749, certiorari denied (1906) 200 U. S. 619, 26 S. Ct. 756, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 623.

This section was not repealed by the Hepburn Act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, ch. 104, 24 Stat. L. 379, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 809). The Hoffmans, (1909) 171 Fed. 455.

Option to surrender vessel or to pay appraised value.—This section and section 4283 clearly give the owner of any vessel the right to personal exemption from liability for any damage occasioned by such vessel without his privity or knowledge by transferring her and her pending freight to a trustee to be appointed by a court of admiralty, and although admiralty rule 54, prescribing the procedure under said sections, permits him at his option to retain the vessel by having her appraised and paying her appraised value and pending freight into court or giving a stipulation therefor, he still has the right before an appraisal made on his petition has been accepted, or any order has been made thereon, to dismiss that part of his petition, and, instead, to ask for the appointment of a trustee to whom he may transfer the vessel and her freight. Ohio Transp. Co. v. Davidson Steamship Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 148 Fed. 185, certiorari denied 203 U. S. 593, 27 S. Ct. 782, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 334.

Control of vessel.—Where a charter-party transfers to the charterer the entire command, possession, and control of the vessel, the charterer is owner for the service stipalated for; but where a charter-party is merely an agreement for the use of the vessel, the general owner at the same time retaining command, possession, and control over her navigation, the charterer is a contractor for the specific service, and the responsibilities of the owner are not changed. Grimberg v. Columbia Packers' Assoc., (1905) 47 Ore. 257, 83 Pac. 194.

Vol. IV, p. 851, sec. 4287.

This section was not repealed by the Hepburn Act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, ch. 104, 24 Stat. L. 379, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 809). The Hoffmans, (1909) 171 Fed. 455.

This section was not repealed by the Hepburn Act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, ch. 104, 24 Stat. L. 379, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 809). The Hoffmans, (1909) 171 Fed. 455.

Ferry boats.—A New York corporation operating a ferry for the carriage of passengers across the East river between Manhattan and Brooklyn held entitled to a limitation of its liability for the death of a passenger to the value of the boat on which he was such passenger and its freight. The Southside, (1907) 155 Fed. 364.

Mud scows.—A scow 110 feet long, employed in carrying mud in Boston harbor and adjacent waters, or other waters subject to the jurisdiction of admiralty courts, is a "vessel" for the purposes of admiralty jurisdiction and the maritime law, and her owner may maintain proceedings for limitation of liability on account of collision. In re Eastern Dredging Co., (1905) 138 Fed. 942.

Ship taken ashore to be dismantled.—A steamer, which had been taken on shore by her owners for the purpose of being dismantled, and from which the masts and engines had been removed, so long as the dismantling process had not proceeded so far as to render her wholly incapable of being navigated as a tow or otherwise, continued to be a "vessel" within the meaning of this section, and her owners could maintain proceedings for a limitation of liability for damage done by her, where she floated and went adrift in a storm without their knowledge. The C. H. Northam, (1909) 181 Fed. 983.

Vol. IV, p. 852, sec. 18.

Direct personal contracts.—This section is to be construed in connection with the Limited Liability Act of 1851 (R. S. sec. 4283, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 839), and does not apply to personal contracts, so as to exempt a part owner from full liability for supplies purchased by his authority, or with his knowledge and consent. Rudolf v. Brown, (1905) 137 Fed. 106; Great Lakes Towing Co. v. Mill Transp. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 155 Fed. 11; O. S. Richardson Fueling Co. v. Seymour, (1908) 235 Ill. 319, 85 N. E. 496.

In Great Lakes Towing Co. v. Mill Transp. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 155 Fed. 11, a towing company entered into a contract with the managing agent of petitioner, which was the owner of certain vessels on the Great Lakes, by which it agreed to perform all towing and wrecking service required by such vessels during the season at certain stated prices. One of petitioner's vessels having stranded, the towing company was called on pursuant to said contract, and sent a tug with wrecking apparatus to the assistance of such vessel, where it spent several days in pumping and attempting to get her afloat, but unsuccessfully, and she was lost. It was held that the petitioner was not entitled to a limitation of liability for the services so rendered by the towing company under its contract, to the value of the salvage recovered from the wreck.

Vol. IV, p. 854, sec. 1.

Construction in favor of validity of exemption.—Exemptions contained in bills of lading are never construed to cover the negligence or default of the carrier unless that is expressly stipulated for. The Toronto, (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 634, affirming (1908) 168 Fed. 386.

Vessels plying between domestic ports.—This section applies to any shipment "from ports of the United States," whether to a foreign or domestic port, and is broad enough to render void a clause of a bill of lading by which the shipper waives any lien upon the vessel for any breach thereof, where it is attempted to set up such clause as a defense to a libel in rem to recover for loss or damage to cargo arising from negligence of the carrier. The Tampico, (1907) 151 Fed. 689.

Private carriers.—Under a contract between a lighterage company and a manufacturer, by which the company agreed to transport property of the manufacturer in New York harbor and vicinity, and for such purposes furnished it the full capacity of lighters or barges when such transportation was required, as between the parties the company was a private and not a public carrier, and a provision of the contract, by which in consideration of the making of a lower rate the shipper agreed to exempt the carrier from liability for loss or injury to cargoes from negligence, is not within the statute, but is valid and enforceable. The Maine, (1908) 161 Fed. 401.

Exemption authorized by foreign law.—A provision in a contract of affreightment exempting a carrier by sea from liability for loss of or damage to cargo "occasioned by negligence, default, or error of judgment of the pilot, master, or mariners," may be enforced in a court of the United States where the contract was made in a country by whose laws such stipulation was legal and no part of it was to be performed in the United States, and where it related to the transportation of property on a foreign vessel on a voyage which did not include a port of the United States. The Fri, (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 333, reversing (1905) 140 Fed. 123, certiorari denied (1908) 210 U. S. 431, 28 S. Ct. 761, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1135.

Limitation of value of package.—It is competent for a steamship company as a carrier of goods to limit its liability in case of loss, even as against its own negligence, by a provision in the bills of lading that it is "not accountable for any sum exceeding $100 per package for goods of whatever description, . . . unless the value of such be herein expressed and freight as may be agreed paid thereon," where such valuation is the basis on which freight is charged and was fully known to the shipper. Hohl v. Norddeutscher Lloyd, (C. C. A. 1910) 175 Fed. 544.

Negligence in stowage.—Where stevedores, in loading a cargo of licorice root under the direction and control of the master, broke open a large number of the bales and stowed the root in unusual places, where it received injury, it was held that a notation, placed on the bill of lading at the insistence of the master, stating that the ship was not responsible for broken or cut bales, was void as the insertion in the bill of lading of a clause relieving the ship from liability for damages "arising from negligence, fault, or failure in proper loading stowage," within the meaning of the Act. Bethel v. Mellor, etc., Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 129.

Where, during the unloading of a barge in the usual manner, which caused an uneven keel for a few hours, she sprang a leak, and the remaining cargo was damaged by water, such damage was not caused by fault or error in the management of the vessel, but from negligence, fault, or failure in proper loading for which the vessel is liable. Donaldson v. J. W. Perry Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 643.

During the voyage of a steamship across the Atlantic burlap bags containing walnuts, stowed with other cargo in the hold, which was without partitions, were torn, apparently by wooden cases containing other cargo which were thrown around by the pitching of the vessel, and the walnuts were lost or damaged. The voyage was rough, but no more so than should reasonably have been anticipated at the season. It was held that the loss was not due to perils of the sea, within the exceptions in the bills of lading, but to negligent stowage, for which the vessel was liable; due care requiring that the bags should have been kept separate from the other cargo which was likely to injure them. The Trignac, (1909) 169 Fed. 682.

A steamship held liable for damage to a cargo of olives shipped in casks, on the ground of negligent stowage, on evidence showing that cargo of such weight was stowed on top of the casks as to flatten the staves of some, causing the brine to leak out, and consequent damage to the olives. The Soyo Maru, (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 921.

A ship is responsible for proper stowage of her cargo, although the charter-party gave a representative of the charterer the right to select the stevedores for loading, which fact did not deprive the master of his authority to control the manner of stowage, nor affect the warranty of seaworthiness, which includes proper stowage. Knorr v. Pacific Creosoting Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 856.

Excessive leakage of oil.—The mere fact that a large quantity of coconut oil had leaked from the casks during the voyage does not show improper stowage. The Oceana, (1909) 171 Fed. 172; The Neidenfels, (1909) 174 Fed. 293.

Employment of charterer's stevedores.—A provision of a charter-party that the master shall employ the charterer's stevedores at ports of loading, and discharge and pay them stated compensation, "the stevedores to be wholly under the direction and control of the master," does not affect the liability of the ship or owners for improper stowage. Bethel v. Mellor, etc., Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 129.

Hasty and inconsiderate unloading.—Damage to cargo from the sinking of a ship after arriving in port, due to hurried and imprudent unloading, which brought the centre of gravity of the ship too high for safety, does not result from "faults or errors in navigation or in the management of said vessel," but arises from "negligence, fault, or failure in proper loading, storage, custody, care, or proper delivery" of merchandise. The Germanic, (1905) 196 U. S. 589, 25 S. Ct. 317, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 610, affirming (C. C. A. 1903) 124 Fed. 1.

Cargo stowed without dunnage.—A vessel is liable for damage to a cargo of coffee resulting from its having been by the master's orders stowed on the bottom of a hold without dunnage, and from a leaky water tank. Dowgate Steamship Co. v. Arbuckle, (1907) 158 Fed. 179.

Proper care of cargo.—The action of the master of a vessel in permitting whale oil, which leaked from barrels, to remain in the bilges, with the object of saving it at the end of the voyage, did not pertain to the "management of the vessel;" but injury to other cargo from such oil arose from "failure in proper care of the cargo." The Persiana, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 396, reversing (1907) 156 Fed. 1019.

Loss by thieves.—An exemption in a bill of lading of liability for loss of cargo by theft does not relieve the vessel, where there was negligence on her part which contributed to or facilitated the theft. The Ghazee, (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 368. See also The Seneca, (1908) 163 Fed. 591.

Grounding of vessel while loading.—A provision of a contract for the carriage of a cargo of flour on a barge by which the shipper assumed the risks of carriage did not relieve the barge owner from liability for a loss of flour by reason of its negligence or that of its agent in failing to properly care for the barge while being loaded. Stockton Milling Co. v. California Nav., etc., Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 356.

Shortage in weight.—A ship is relieved from liability for a shortage in weight of a shipment of vegetable fibre in bales under a bill of lading containing the clause, "Not responsible for weight, nor quality, nor for loose bales," where it shows that all the bales shipped were delivered. The La Kroma, (1905) 138 Fed. 936.

Evidence.—In an action to recover for damage to cargo from leakage of the vessel, evidence that directions as to the manner of loading were given the agents of the vessel by libellant, which directions were not followed, was competent. Donaldson v. J. W. Perry Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 643.

Stipulation limiting time for making claim.—A stipulation in a bill of lading for goods carried by ship, that all claims for damages against the steamship company or its stockholders must be presented within thirty days, applies to a libel against the ship itself, as well as to claims in personam against the owners, and such stipulation is not unreasonable as applied to a loss which was known to the consignors more than three weeks before the expiration of the stipulated time, since the enforcement of the stipulation in such a case would not work a manifest injustice. The Queen of the Pacific, (1901) 180 U. S. 49, 21 S. Ct. 278, 45 U. S. (L. ed.) 419, reversing (C. C. A. 1899) 94 Fed. 180. See also The Niceto, (1905) 134 Fed. 655.

Vol. IV, p. 856, sec. 2.

Does the Act apply to passengers and baggage?—A notice or memorandum printed on the back of a steamship ticket purporting to limit the liability of the carrier for loss of baggage, not referred to in the body of the ticket nor called to the attention of the purchaser, is simply a notice, and forms no part of the contract. La Bourgogne, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 781, affirmed (1908) 210 U. S. 95, 28 S. Ct. 664, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 973.

Application to charter-party.—The provision of this section relates to contracts between carrier and shipper, and does not apply to a charter-party by which a ship is demised. Golcar Steamship Co. v. Tweedie Trading Co., (1906) 146 Fed. 563.

Leakage of sea water through valve.—A ship cannot by bill of lading exempt herself from liability for damage to cargo from sea water, as a peril of the seas, where such water entered because of the obstruction of a valve, due to the failure to exercise due diligence in the equipment of the ship at the beginning of the voyage. The Brilliant, (1905) 138 Fed. 743, affirmed (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 1022.

Vol. IV, p. 857, sec. 3.

IN GENERAL.

The purpose of the Act is, according to the interpretation given to it by the Supreme Court, to enable the owner to stipulate in contravention of the implied warranty, providing he has used due diligence, proper care, and reasonable foresight to make his vessel in all respects seaworthy and fit for the voyage undertaken. The Indrapura, (1910) 178 Fed. 593.

Prospective operation.—Stipulations in a bill of lading exempting the vessel from liability for loss or injury to cargo are to be construed as operating prospectively, and not as relieving her from liability for unseaworthiness at the beginning of the voyage, unless so expressed in clear and explicit language. The Indrapura, (1910) 178 Fed. 591.

Foreign vessels.—The third section of the Harter Act (27 Stat. L. 445), which is expressly applicable to "any vessel transporting merchandise or property to or from any port of the United States," includes a foreign vessel carrying cargo from a foreign to an American port. The Chattahoochee, (1899) 173 U. S. 540, 19 S. Ct. 491, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 801, affirming (C. C. A. 1896) 74 Fed. 899, (1905) 196 U. S. 589, 25 S. Ct. 317, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 910, affirming (C. C. A. 1903) 124 Fed. 1,

Loss of goods in loading—delivery to vessel in open sea.—Where, in loading a cargo of mahogany logs, the ship was obliged to lie three miles off shore in the open sea, the logs being delivered in rafts, which were made fast to the ship, and bills of lading then given for the same, the vessel is not liable for logs which broke away from the rafts and were lost before they were loaded, when reasonable diligence was exercised in the loading, and the loss arose either from unusual weather conditions, making a case of perils of the sea within the exceptions in the bills of lading, or because they were insufficiently secured in the rafts through the negligence of the shipper. Munson Steamship Line v. Steiger, (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 772.

Collision.—In a case of collision by mutual fault, resulting in the total loss of one vessel and her cargo, the provision of the statute which exempts the owner of a seaworthy vessel from responsibility for loss of or damage to cargo occurring through faults or errors of navigation or management, does not prevent the other vessel, which alone is sued by the cargo owners for the full amount of their loss, from recouping one-half the amount awarded from the half damages awarded to the owners of the lost vessel.

Personal injuries.—The liability of a ship for personal injuries to passengers and members of the crew is not within the provision of the Act. The Hamilton, (1907) 207 U. S. 398, 28 S. Ct. 133, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 264.

Reduction in freight.—Where a cargo owner is allowed as damages against the vessel for loss of cargo its full value at the port of delivery, he is not entitled to a reduction in freight on account of the loss. Carolina Portland Cement Co. v. Anderson, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 145.

"Inherent defect, quality, or vice of thing carried."—See infra, p. 1474, Injury Due to Stopping for Repairs. A canal boat brought a cargo of hay from Quebec to New York, where it arrived in good condition. It was loaded by the consignor, and was to be unloaded by libelants, who had become owners of the bills of lading. On arriving in New York the boat and cargo were seized by libelants under process from the state court in a suit against the consignor, and held on demurrage for some thirty days, when the suit was dismissed, and the cargo was unloaded. During such time the weather was damp, and the hay in the hold became musty. The vessel was seaworthy, having no more leakage than was usual in that class of boats, and it was held that the injury arose from an "inherent defect, quality, or vice of the thing carried." The M. C. Currie, (1904) 132 Fed. 125.

Damage to a cargo of sugar shipped in bags from a Cuban port to New York held to have been due to the sweating of the cargo and ship, for which the vessel was not liable, and not to any lack of care in stowing. The Niceto, (1905) 134 Fed. 655.

A loss through leakage of wood oil shipped from China to New York in ordinary barrels held not to have been due to improper stowage but to the insufficiency of the packages, for which the carrier was not liable under the terms of the bill of lading, it being shown that such oil has a tendency to shrink the barrels and cause leakage unless they are specially prepared. The Claverburn, (1906) 147 Fed. 850.

"Dangers of the sea."—If the jettison of cargo or damage thereto is rendered necessary by or is due to any fault or breach of contract on the part of the owner or master of the vessel, the loss must be attributed to that cause, rather than to the sea peril, although that may enter into the case. Corsar v. J. D. Spreckels, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 141 Fed. 260.

Damage to cargo caused by sea water which entered through a hatch during a voyage across the Atlantic by a new steamer held not due to the unseaworthiness of the vessel or any defect in the hatch covers, but to perils of the sea, for which the vessel and owners were not liable under the bill of lading; it being shown that the tarpaulin hatch covers were new and sufficient and properly secured, but that the one above libelant's goods was injured by a cut through the break-joint of a derrick at night during a very severe storm. Gough v. Hamburg Amerikanische Packetfahrt Aktiengesellschaft, (1907) 158 Fed. 174.

A shipowner is not exonerated from liability for a failure to deliver cargo on the ground that it was lost through perils of the sea, where it was stowed on the deck, and there is no proof that the place or manner of stowage was sanctioned by general usage, or that they did not contribute to the loss. The Gualala, (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 402.

The fact alone that damage to cargo was caused by sea water, without any evidence as to how the water entered the ship, is not sufficient to relieve the vessel from liability on the ground that the damage resulted from sea perils within an exception in the bill of lading, nor is it sufficient to show, in addition, that the ship encountered stormy weather on the voyage, which was no worse than should have been anticipated. The Medea, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 781, reversing (1909) 173 Fed. 498.

Straining due to unusually heavy seas.—Where it is shown that a wooden vessel was seaworthy at the inception of her voyage, that the cargo was properly stowed and protected, that she was properly provided with pumps and the same were properly worked, that her hatches were properly secured, and that she encountered on her voyage heavy seas of unusual violence adequate to strain her seams and cause her to take in an unusual quantity of water, damage to her cargo therefrom, which it is not shown could have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary skill and care, is within the exception of "dangers of the sea" in the bill of lading, for which she is not liable. Cook v. Southeastern Lime, etc., Co., (1906) 146 Fed. 101.

Rolling and pitching of vessel.—A quantity of arsenic was stowed in the same hold with olive oil, but where the slant of the deck was downward from the arsenic toward the oil, and with a dunnage of about four inches. It was shown that the method of stowing the arsenic was usual, and that there was apparently no danger to it under ordinary circumstances. It was also shown that the voyage across the Atlantic was very rough, and that the vessel rolled and pitched to an unusual extent, and when she arrived at New York some of the arsenic was found to have been injured from leakage of the oil. It was held that under such evidence the damage must be attributed to perils of the sea, for which the vessel was not liable. The Langfond, (1906) 143 Fed. 150.

Liability for deviation.—Deviation is a term of art, belonging in the main to the law of marine insurance and to be interpreted by that law; but the rule as to deviation is applicable to a shipper as well as to an insurer, and any deviation from the course of navigation which experience and usage have prescribed as the safest and most expeditious mode of proceeding from one voyage terminus to the other will cast subsequent loss of or injury to either ship or cargo on the shipowner, without any reference to the question whether it had any bearing on the particular loss complained of. The Citta Di Messina, (1909) 169 Fed. 472.

Delay of a vessel, even on the route prescribed by a policy or bill of lading, may amount to deviation. The Citta Di Messina, (1909) 169 Fed. 472.

General average.—Although the Act relieves a shipowner from liability for the negligence of his servants in the navigation and management of the vessel, it does not, either expressly or by implication, render valid a contract which entitles him to share in a general average made necessary by such negligence, and a stipulation therefor in a bill of lading is void. New York, etc., Mail Steamship Co. v. Ansonia Clock Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 894.

Where the owner of a vessel has conformed to the provisions of the Act by exercising due diligence to make his vessel seaworthy and properly manned, equipped, and supplied, although she was stranded through a fault in navigation, he is entitled to have expenditures made by him for salvage of the vessel and cargo taken into a general average adjustment in a suit brought by cargo owners to enforce a general average contribution from the vessel on account of cargo jettisoned for his protection against liability, although not entitled to an affirmative decree for the recovery of any balance due him on such adjustment. The Jason, (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 414, affirming (1908) 162 Fed. 58.

This section is not to be construed so broadly as to entitle a vessel owner to collect a general average contribution from the cargo owners on account of expenditures incurred for the salvage of vessel and cargo after stranding through faults and negligence in navigation, and a provision in the bills of lading giving it such right is invalid. The Jason, (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 414, affirming (1908) 162 Fed. 58.

Costs.—In a proceeding for limitation of liability, where there is an appraisal, and a stipulation for value given, the petitioner is entitled to a single docket fee, and may deduct from the fund the expenses of administration, but this may not include the cost of procuring the stipulation, nor the expense of giving the same, nor of the appraisal; each person claiming damages, and recovering the same, is entitled to a separate proctor's fee, payable herein by the stipulators for costs, and not out of the fund. In re Excelsior Coal Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 271, affirmed (C. C. A.) 142 Fed. 724.

PROPERLY MANNED AND EQUIPPED.

Failure to maintain watch at night on vessel at pier.—Where the owner of a vessel, while in her home port, permitted all of her crew to leave for the night, except the fireman, cook, and a deck hand, and permitted them to sleep without maintaining a proper watch, and the fires to be banked so that no steam was available to work the pumps in case of an emergency, he was guilty of negligence, rendering the vessel liable for loss of cargo by the sinking of the vessel from injuries caused by an ice jam. The Valentin, (1904) 131 Fed. 352.

SEAWORTHY VESSEL.

In general.—Due diligence to make a vessel in all respects seaworthy within the meaning of this section is not required merely on the part of the owner himself, nor in respect to construction only, but it is also required on the part of those to whom the owner has intrusted the duty, and in respect to inspection, maintenance, and repair, as well as construction. The Ninfa, (1907) 156 Fed. 512.

Private carrier.—The obligation to furnish a seaworthy vessel is not affected by the fact that the owner is a private carrier. Braker v. F. W. Jarvis Co., (1908) 166 Fed. 987.

Voyage charter.—There is no difference between a time charter and a voyage charter in respect to the liability of the vessel to the charterer for unseaworthiness. Dene Shipping Co. v. Tweedie Trading Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 143 Fed. 854, certiorari denied (1906) 202 U. S. 622, 26 S. Ct. 767, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1175.

Fitting vessel for particular cargo.—Asphalt is "lawful cargo," under a charter which includes the West Indies; and it is the duty of the owner, in order to render the vessel seaworthy, to fit her for the proper carriage of such cargo by lining, where her construction is such as to require it. Dene Shipping Co. v. Tweedie Trading Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 143 Fed. 854, certiorari denied (1906) 202 U. S. 622, 26 S. Ct. 767, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1175.

Liability for unseaworthiness.—This section, as construed by the Supreme Court, does not exempt the vessel or owner from liability for the consequences of unseaworthiness, even though due diligence was exercised to make her seaworthy. The Ninfa, (1907) 156 Fed. 512.

Seaworthiness defined.—The term "seaworthy," as now construed, has relation to the article carried and the different compartments of the ship and their particular use, as well as to the navigability of the vessel. The Indrapura, (1910) 178 Fed. 591.

Implied warranty of seaworthiness.—In every contract for the carriage of goods by sea, in the absence of agreement otherwise, there is an absolute implied warranty by the carrier that the ship is seaworthy at the time of the beginning of her voyage, and reasonably fit to encounter the ordinary perils that may be expected, and her liability for loss or injury to cargo from a breach of such warranty is not affected by the statute. The Indrapura, (1910) 178 Fed. 591.

Losses before commencement of voyage.—The Act applies to the vessel only after the voyage has commenced, and cannot be invoked by an owner to relieve him from liability for cargo lost while the vessel was loading, through the negligence of those in charge in permitting her to settle on the bottom and list until deck cargo fell overboard. Steamship Wellesley Co. v. Hooper, (C. C. A. 1911) 195 Fed. 733.

Injury due to stopping for repairs.—Injury to a cargo of oats shipped from Chicago to Buffalo from becoming wet and heated between the time it was loaded and the time of delivery (which was over a month) owing to the vessel being delayed for repairs after loading, was held, under the evidence, to have been due to her having been unseaworthy and not in good condition for the carriage of such cargo when the voyage was begun, owing to her defective decks and the careless handling of the pump during her detention, by reason of which water leaked through into the hold. The Gordon Campbell, (1905) 141 Fed. 435.

Failure to inspect vessel.—One to whom a decree in admiralty directs the payment of a fund is presumptively a party to the suit, or in court as a claimant of the fund, and evidence is required to rebut such presumption, where a denial of the fact is made a basis for impeaching the decree. The Indrani, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 914.

Defective pipe from engine room to trimming tank.—The placing of the filling pipe extending from the engine room of a steamer to a trimming tank in the forepeak upon the floor of the intermediate hold, boxed in, and extending through the collision bulkhead, held not a faulty construction which rendered the vessel unseaworthy as to cargo carried in such hold, where the evidence showed that many contemporary vessels were so constructed and rated A1 by Lloyds. But the omission to fit such pipe with a valve or stopcock within the forepeak, or where it passed from the hold, to prevent the flooding of the hold in case of a break in the pipe, rendered her unseaworthy as to such cargo and liable for its injury from the flooding of the hold in consequence of the breaking of the pipe through some fault of construction. The Indrapura, (1910) 178 Fed. 591.

Failure to protect valves in ballast tank.—Failure to protect a valve in the pipe by which water could be run into a ballast tank, also usable for cargo, so that a stick got into the valve, in consequence of which water leaked through the valve into the tank and damaged cargo stored therein, was a failure to exercise due diligence in equipment to make the ship seaworthy at the beginning of the voyage, and which rendered her liable for the damage. The Brilliant, (1905) 138 Fed. 743, affirmed (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 1022.

Sudden leaks and defective pumps.—Proof that a vessel within a few hours after leaving port, and before encountering any peril of the sea, sprang a leak from defective butts in her bottom, and that, in addition, her steam pump was not in good working order, and broke down when put in use, raises a presumption that she was unseaworthy at the beginning of the voyage, which is not rebutted by evidence merely of previous diligence, and, in the absence of a stipulation therefor in the bill of lading, the owner is not exempted from liability for damage to cargo caused by such leakage. Carolina Portland Cement Co. v. Anderson, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 145.

Sudden leak while loading.—Where a barge, being on uneven keel for a few hours, due to unloading in the usual manner, sprang a leak and the remaining cargo was damaged by water, such damage was not caused by fault or error in the management of the vessel, but from negligence, fault, or failure in proper loading within section 1, for which the vessel was liable. Donaldson v. J. W. Perry Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 643.

Defective feed pipe.—A cargo of grain carried by a steamer from a Lake Superior port to Buffalo was found on arrival to have been damaged by water escaping from a crack in the main feed pipe running through the cargo space between the boiler and engine. Such construction was not unusual, and the vessel had an A1 rating, but had been built for eleven years, during which time the pipe had not been renewed, and had not been thoroughly inspected for more than a year, being covered with asbestos and inclosed in a box, which had not been removed in that time. Rough weather was encountered on the voyage, but not worse than was to be expected at the season. It was held that the evidence was not sufficient to sustain the burden of proof resting on the vessel to show that the damage resulted from a danger of navigation within the exception of the bill of lading, rather than from a defect in the pipe which rendered her unseaworthy at the beginning of the voyage. The Rappahannock, (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 291, reversing (1909) 173 Fed. 829.

Insufficient coal for voyage as unseaworthiness.—British, etc., Marine Ins. Co. v. Kilgour Steamship Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 174.

Beginning voyage with port negligently left open.—If a ship starts on a voyage with a port negligently left open, causing damage to cargo, her owners are liable for failing to provide a ship seaworthy at the beginning of the voyage, and are not protected by this section 3, on the ground that the fault was one in navigation or the management of the vessel, although proper appliances for closing the ports were furnished; and this rule is especially applicable where the ports were so located as to be submerged when the vessel was fully loaded. The Tenedos, (1905) 137 Fed. 443, affirmed (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 1022.

Overloading causing unseaworthiness.—A barge which sank at a dock, after loading a cargo of bricks, held liable for the damage to the cargo on the ground of unseaworthiness due to overloading. The G. B. Boren, (1904) 132 Fed. 887.

Weakness from long use.—A barge held liable in damages for dumping a large part of her cargo of copper ore which she was discharging from a steamship, and for injury to the ship, on the ground of unseaworthiness, due to weakness from long use in the same business, which caused her to careen after she had taken on her load, although the weather was calm and the water smooth. The Willie, (1904) 134 Fed. 759.

Inability to carry load without straining and causing leakage.—Damage to a cargo of hay from water held, under the evidence, to have been due to leakage, owing to the inability of the vessel to carry the cargo for which she was chartered without straining, which rendered her unseaworthy. The William Power, (1904) 131 Fed. 136.

Unexplained sinking of vessel.—The sinking of a vessel while being properly handled, without undue stress of weather or other known external cause, was presumptively due to unseaworthiness. Oregon Round Lumber Co. v. Portland, etc., Steamship Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 912; Sanbern v. Wright, etc., Lighterage Co., (1909) 171 Fed. 449, affirmed (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 1021.

Manner of stowing cargo.—The requirement of seaworthiness at the beginning of a voyage includes not only seaworthiness in hull and equipment, but also in the stowage of the cargo. Corsar v. J. D. Spreckels, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 141 Fed. 260; The Medea, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 781, reversing (1909) 173 Fed. 498.

A ship is not seaworthy when from her improper loading she is rendered unfit to encounter the ordinary perils of navigation which could reasonably have been anticipated on the projected voyage. Steamship Wellesley Co. v. Hooper, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 733.

A ship is responsible for the proper stowage of her cargo, although the charter-party gives the charterer the option of appointing the stevedores, to be paid by the owners, where it also provides that they shall be under the direction of the master and the owners responsible for all risks of loading and stowage. Corsar v. J. D. Spreckels, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 141 Fed. 260.

Liquid and dry cargoes.—On a libel for damage to a shipment of green goatskins, evidence held to justify a finding that the injury was caused by brine leaking from citron barrels negligently stowed near the skins. Lazarus v. Barber, (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 534.

Effect on appeal of findings below.—The concurrent findings of the two lower courts that a vessel was inspected at the beginning of the voyage, and found to be seaworthy and fit to carry the cargo which she had undertaken to transport, will ordinarily not be disturbed by the federal Supreme Court on appeal. The Wilderoft, (1906) 201 U. S. 378, 26 S. Ct. 467, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 794.

NAVIGATION OR MANAGEMENT OF THE SHIP.

Exemption applicable only after voyage has commenced.—This section applies to a vessel only after the voyage has commenced, and cannot be invoked by an owner to relieve him from liability for loss of cargo through the careening and sinking of a vessel at the pier before she was fully loaded, due to the negligence of a watchman in failing to adjust her lines to permit her to drop with the tide. Ralli v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 286.

Leaving port in disregard of storm signals.—The navigation and management of a vessel includes the determination of the time and manner of leaving port, which is the prerogative of the master; and under said section, where a vessel was seaworthy and in all respects properly manned, equipped, and supplied, the owners are not liable for a loss or damage to cargo due to a peril of the seas, even though the exposure to such peril was through the fault of the master in failing to ascertain or heed the warnings of the weather bureau before starting on the voyage. Hanson v. Haywood Bros., etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 401.

Changing course on account of stress of weather—failure to put into port for repairs.—A ship bound from Antwerp to San Francisco with a cargo of cement encountered such rough weather in attempting to round Cape Horn and was subjected to such strain that her deck seams opened and a part of the cargo was damaged by water. She finally abandoned the attempt and completed the voyage by way of the Cape of Good Hope and Australia. At the time of her change of course she was 370 miles distant from Port Stanley, where she could have been repaired; but she did not put in for repairs, and before she reached Australia the cargo received further damage by reason of the open seams. Held that the change of course and also the determination of the master to proceed without putting in for repairs were matters pertaining to the "navigation and management of the vessel," and not to the custody, care, or proper delivery of the cargo, and that, assuming the vessel to have been in all respects seaworthy, and properly manned, equipped, and supplied at the beginning of the voyage, she was exempted by the Act from liability for the damage caused or contributed to by the failure to repair. Corsar v. J. D. Spreckels, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 141 Fed. 260.

Sea valve left open during voyage.—Damage to a cargo of molasses, through its dilution by sea water while being pumped out at the port of destination, held to have been due to a sea valve connecting with one of the pumps having been left partially open, which was a fault in the management of the vessel, it being affirmatively shown that the valve was in good condition and that it was properly closed when the cargo was loaded and at the commencement of the voyage. Sun Co. v. Healy, (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 48.

Allowing leaking oil to remain in bilges.—The action of the master of a vessel in permitting whale oil, which leaked from barrels, to remain in the bilges, with the object of saving it at the end of the voyage, did not pertain to the "management of the vessel." The Persiana, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 390, reversing (1907) 156 Fed. 1019.

Failure of master to protect cargo.—The owner of a scow chartered by the day, with a man in charge, is liable to the charterer for loss of her cargo of stone by her careening while she lay in an exposed position at the end of a pier where she was left by a tug, through the neglect of her master to haul her into the slip, where she would have been protected, which he could have done without difficulty. Rodgers v. Bouker Contracting Co., (1904) 134 Fed. 702.

Injury to cargo while unloading.—Damage to cargo from the sinking of a ship after arriving in port, due to hurried and imprudent unloading, which brought the centre of gravity of the ship too high for safety, does not result from "faults or errors in navigation or in the management of said vessel." The Germanic, (1905) 196 U. S. 589, 25 S. Ct. 317, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 610, affirming (C. C. A. 1903) 124 Fed. 1.

Acts for benefit of ship.—Tipping a vessel by the head while discharging cargo, for the purpose of examining her propeller, and having nothing to do with the discharge of the cargo, was an act of management of the ship. The Indrani, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 914.

Failure to close ventilators, etc., in rough weather.—"If there was any negligence in the management of the ship on the voyage in failing to cover the ventilators, or remove them and stop the tubes in rough weather, or in failing to keep the scuppers clear, the owner is exempted from liability by the Harter Act (Act Feb. 13, 1893, ch. 105, 27 Stat. L. 445), having used due diligence to make the ship seaworthy at the outset of the voyage." The Hudson, (1909) 172 Fed. 1005, 1007, 1008.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

Seaworthy vessel.—The burden of proving that a vessel was seaworthy at the time of beginning the voyage, or that due diligence had been used to make her so, rests upon the shipowner claiming the benefit of the exemption against errors of management or navigation, whether or not there is any evidence to the contrary. The Wildcroft, (1906) 201 U. S. 378, 26 S. Ct. 467, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 794; Bradley v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 350, affirming (1906) 145 Fed. 569; The Ninfa, (1907) 156 Fed. 512.

Where disaster overtakes a vessel at the beginning of her voyage, without stress of weather or other adequate cause appearing, the presumption is that she was unseaworthy when the voyage commenced, and the burden rests on the owner, to avoid liability for cargo lost or injured, to overcome such presumption by showing affirmatively that the ship was seaworthy. Steamship Wellesley Co. v. Hooper, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 733.

"The burden was clearly upon the defendant to prove that it had exercised 'due diligence to make the vessel in all respects seaworthy and properly manned, equipped, and supplied' at the time of the commencement of the voyage." Levy v. Gibson Line of Steamers, (1908) 130 Ga. 581, 61 S. E. 484, 485.

Cause of damage in general.—Where the evidence shows that a ship received goods on board in good condition, and delivered them damaged, it has the burden of proving that the damage was due to a risk excepted in the bill of lading, although, if it is manifestly so, as from breakage or decay, which are excepted generally, the ship need not show the cause of the breakage or decay, but the cargo owner can only recover by proof of negligence. The Patria, (C. C. A. 1904) 132 Fed. 971, affirming (1903) 125 Fed. 425.

A ship has the burden of explaining the cause of damage to cargo shown to have been received in good condition, to relieve itself from liability for such damage. The La Kroma, (1905) 138 Fed. 936.

A decree dismissing a libel to recover for damage to cargo affirmed where the evidence left it uncertain whether the damage was caused by sea water or by sweat and heat, and the bill of lading exempted the vessel from liability for injury caused by perils of the sea or from sweat or decay. The Folmina, (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 364.

Loading of vessel.—"The established rule is that where the evidence shows that the damage was occasioned by one of the causes for which the vessel was exempted from liability, in the absence of some fault, such as negligent stowage, the burden is upon the libellant to show that it might have been prevented by reasonable skill and diligence on the part of those employed by the vessel." Lazarus v. Barber, (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 534, 536.

Dangers of navigation.—The burden rests upon a lake carrier who, having agreed to deliver in good condition, "the dangers of navigation excepted," delivers cargo water-damaged, to show that the damage was caused by a danger of navigation. The Rappahannock, (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 291, reversing (1909) 173 Fed. 829.

Damage by sea water.—A carrier by water is charged with the burden of proving that damage to a cargo from sea water was occasioned by the perils of the sea within an exception in the bill of lading against dangers and accidents of the seas. The Folmina, (1909) 212 U. S. 354, 29 S. Ct. 363, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 546. On certificate from the Circuit Court of Appeals, (1907) 153 Fed. 364.

Damage from excepted risk.—A vessel owner who receives goods in good condition, as evidenced by the bill of lading, and delivers them damaged, has the burden of proof to establish that the damage arose from an excepted risk. The Presque Isle, (1905) 140 Fed. 202.

Vol. IV, p. 863, sec. 5.

Violation as indictable offense.—The provisions of this section make it a criminal statute; and one violating either of such provisions is subject to indictment and prosecution therefor. U. S. v. Cobb, (1906) 163 Fed. 791.

Indictment—authority to sign bill of lading in defendant's name.—An indictment for issuing a bill of lading containing provisions in violation of the Act, which avers that such bill was issued by defendant, and sets out a copy of such bill, from which it appears that defendant's name was signed thereto "per" another, need not allege that the bill of lading was so signed by defendant's authority, which is a matter of proof. U. S. v. Cobb, (1906) 163 Fed. 791.

LOTTERIES.

Vol. IV, p. 869, sec. 1.

The three necessary elements of a "lottery" are the furnishing of a consideration, the offering of a prize, and the distribution of the prize by chance rather than entirely upon a basis of merit. Brooklyn Daily Eagle v. Voorhies, (1910) 181 Fed. 580.

Prize coupons in food packages.—In U. S. v. Jefferson, (1905) 134 Fed. 299, it appeared that the defendant, to induce the sale of a cereal called "Mother's Oats," placed in each package a coupon on which one of the letters which spelled the word "Mother's" was printed, and offered premiums to persons holding coupons which would spell the word "Mother's," the letter "o" being placed on only one coupon in five hundred. It was held that such scheme was a lottery, within this Act.

MEDALS.

Vol. X, p. 222, sec. 1.

Retention of old medals.—It is optional with the holder of a medal whether he shall surrender his old medal for the new. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 529.

It is not within the authority of the Secretary of War, in replacing the medals issued to officers and privates for gallantry in action, to allow a particular gantee, who is entitled to a new medal, to receive it and at the same time retain the old medal in his possession. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 529.

The word "replace," as used in this section, implies the loss, destruction, or surrender of the old medal. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 529.

MINERAL LANDS, MINES, AND MINING.

Vol. V, p. 4, sec. 2318.

Fraudulent purchase as agricultural land. — Of similar effect to the original note, see Murray v. White, (1911) 42 Mont. 423, 113 Pac. 754.

Lands valuable for minerals. — It is not enough to render lands valuable for minerals that there is some trace of minerals, but there must be minerals in such quantities as to justify the expenditure of effort to extract them; but it is not necessary that minerals of sufficient amount and value to allow immediate profitable working be shown to exist in the land, and it is enough if the vein or deposit has a present or prospective commercial value. Madison v. Octave Oil Co., (1908) 154 Cal. 768, 99 Pac. 176.

Sufficiency of evidence to prove lands were mineral lands. — See Madison v. Octave Oil Co., (1908) 154 Cal. 768, 99 Pac. 176.

This section was cited in Montello Salt Co. v. Utah, (1911) 221 U. S. 452, 31 S. Ct. 706, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 810.

Vol. V, p. 4, sec. 2319.

Rights of aliens. — To the same effect as the original note, see Shea v. Nilima, (1904) 133 Fed. 209, 66 C. C. A. 263; Holdt v. Hazard, (1909) 10 Cal. App. 440, 102 Pac. 540.

Gypsum is a mineral, and lands containing it are mineral lands, within the federal statutes. Madison v. Octave Oil Co., (1908) 154 Cal. 768, 99 Pac. 176.

Location of lode claim after patent for placer claim. — Under this and the following sections providing for the disposition of lode or vein mining claims and placer deposits, a vein known to exist within the boundaries of a placer claim at the date of an application for a patent, and not included in the application, may be located by an adverse claimant after the issuance of the patent. Mutchmor v. McCarty, (1906) 149 Cal. 603, 87 Pac. 85.

Necessity for appropriation of surface ground belonging to United States. — In order to make a valid mining location under this section, providing that all mineral deposits in mineral lands belonging to the United States, and the lands containing the same, shall be open to entry, etc., surface ground, including the vein or lode, must be appropriated, and such surface must be the property of the United States. Traphagen v. Kirk, (1904) 30 Mont. 562, 77 Pac. 58.

Vol. V, p. 8, sec. 2320.

Vein or lode — Definition. — The definition of a vein must be considered with reference to the formations and characteristics of the particular district in which the vein is located. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

The words "vein," "lode," and "ledge" are used as synonymous terms. Noyes v. Clifford, (1908) 37 Mont. 138, 94 Pac. 843.

Mineralization. — In the absence of defined walls and of mineralization appreciably greater than that contained in the general mass of the mountain, broken, strained, and fissured material, or crushed and brecciated matter, characteristic of the district, cannot be held to constitute a vein or lode, under the statute. In such case the limits of fracturing do not constitute the limits of the vein, and even if there be found an occasional vugg or fragment of ore, yet, where it is disconnected from any ore body, and so intermingled with the surrounding country rock that it cannot be regarded as continuous, it does not mark the line of the vein or lode, within the meaning of the law. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

Where a vein, located in sedimentary beds of rock, is formed by replacement, and the mineralization ceases within a short distance of the ore body or ore channel, the limits of the deposition of ore are the limits of the vein; and this is so whether the vein be considered laterally or with reference to the apex. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

Boundaries ill-defined. — Where the boundaries of what is claimed to be a vein are not well, or not at all, defined, either at the surface or at depth, the value of the material must be so in excess of the country rock as to differentiate it from such rock; else the material cannot be held to constitute a vein. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

Sedimentary rock. — The mere fact that sedimentary rock is broken, crushed, seamed, stained, and fissured does neither constitute such material a vein nor an apex of a vein, where no hanging wall nor foot wall appears, where the mineralization of such crushed material is not appreciably greater than that existing generally throughout the sedimentary area, and where the same kind of crushed and brecciated material exists elsewhere and generally within that area. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

Values of filling. — What values the filling or material of a fissure should contain to constitute it a vein, within the meaning of the Act of Congress, must necessarily depend upon the characteristics of the district or country in which the vein or lode, in any particular instance claimed to exist, is located, and upon the character, as to boundaries, of the vein itself. Values, therefore, of the filling of the vein must be considered with special reference to the district where the vein or lode is found. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

Mineral value. — Rock or matter of any kind, in order to constitute a vein or lode within the meaning of the statute, must be metalliferous and contain such mineral value as will distinguish it from the country rock, especially where no well-defined walls appear. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

Evidence. — Under the Acts of Congress the essential elements of a vein are mineral or mineral-bearing rock and boundaries, and, in case of controversy, where one of these elements is well established, very slight evidence may be accepted as to the existence of the other. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

Complete possessory title. — To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note, see Sharkey v. Candiani, (1906) 48 Ore. 112, 85 Pac. 219.

Discovery of vein or lode. — To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note, see Lockhart v. Farrell, (1906) 31 Utah 155, 86 Pac. 1077.

The discovery is the source of title to a mining claim, and vests in the discoverer a prior right to complete the location within a reasonable time. McCleary v. Broaddus, (1910) 14 Cal. App. 60, 111 Pac. 125.

A location of a mining claim based on a discovery within the limits of an existing and valid location is void. Lockhart v. Farrell, (1906) 31 Utah 155, 86 Pac. 1077.

What may constitute a sufficient discovery to warrant a location of a mining claim may be wholly inadequate to justify the locator in claiming or exercising rights reserved by the statute. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

What constitutes a discovery that will validate a location is a very different thing from what constitutes an apex to which attaches the statutory right to invade the possession of and appropriate the property which is presumed to belong to the adjoining owner. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

Evidence that there were seams of minerals on a claim without any showing as to what the minerals were was insufficient to establish a discovery of valuable minerals within the lines of the claim essential to the valid location of a mining claim. Harper v. Hill, (Cal. 1911) 113 Pac. 162.

In Lange v. Robinson, (1906) 148 Fed. 799, 79 C. C. A. 1, it appeared that the plaintiff located certain gold placer mining claims along a creek in Alaska, and before doing so washed on each a few pans of the sediment deposited along the sides of the creek, and in each found small particles or colors of gold. Placer gold in paying quantities had been found on the bed rock on a tributary to the creek, and within a mile of such locations, and the bed rock at the place of the location was from 125 to 150 feet below the surface. The plaintiff and other experienced miners testified that the gold found was sufficient to reasonably justify the investment of money to sink shafts. It was held that there was a sufficient discovery to support the locations as against another mineral claimant.

Subsequent discoveries may validate earlier locations. — The discovery of the vein or lode before any other steps are taken to perfect the location is not required by the provision of this section that "no location of a mining claim shall be made until the discovery of the vein or lode within the limits of the claim located," which means nothing more than that no location shall be considered complete until there has been a discovery. Creede, etc., Min., etc., Co. v. Uinta Tunnel Min., etc., Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 337, 25 S. Ct. 266, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 501.

To the same effect as the original note, see Sharkey v. Candiani, (1906) 48 Ore. 112, 85 Pac. 219.

Location certificates as evidence of discovery. — Where the validity of a location had been unchallenged for more than five years up to the commencement of ejectment, and the original locators were absent from the country, the certificate of location created a presumption of discovery of mineral and of a valid location, especially on an application for a preliminary injunction depending on affidavits in which plaintiff appeared as a subsequent locator and attached the title of the prior locator and that of his successor in interest. Vogel v. Warsing, (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 949.

Willing to spend time and money in developing. — To the same effect as the original note, see Murray v. White, (1911) 42 Mont. 423, 113 Pac. 754.

Even as between rival mineral claimants to petroleum lands, there must have been such a discovery, in order to sustain a location, as would justify a prudent person in the expenditure of money and labor in exploitation for petroleum. Chrisman v. Miller, (1905) 197 U. S. 313, 25 S. Ct. 468, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 770.

An instruction that, to constitute a discovery of gold sufficient to support a location of a gold placer mining claim as against an adverse mineral locator, the gold found must be of such character and quantity and found under such circumstances as to justify a man of ordinary prudence in the expenditure of time and money in the development of the property, is not erroneous; the word "development" as so used being the equivalent of "exploration." Charlton v. Kelly, (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 433.

In an action to recover certain land which was a part of the public domain, plaintiff claimed under a placer mining location. The court charged that it was essential to the validity of such location that the discovery of mineral thereon was such that an ordinarily prudent man, not necessarily a miner, would be justified in expending his time and labor in developing the property, but in the same connection declared that it was essential to a recovery by plaintiffs that they prove with reasonable clearness that for the labor and capital expended in working the ground it would yield a reasonable profit. It was held that the latter instruction was erroneous and in conflict with the correct rule previously charged. Cascaden v. Bartolis, (1906) 146 Fed. 739, 77 C. C. A. 496.

Conclusiveness of patent. — An entry of a lode mining claim, sustained by a patent, though conclusive evidence that at the time of entry there had been a valid location, does not preclude the owner of a tunnel site located across the lode, who claims that his location was prior to any discovery, notwithstanding the provision of this section that "no location of a mining claim shall be made until the discovery of the vein or lode within the limits of the claim located," which means nothing more than that no location shall be considered complete until there has been a discovery. Creede, etc., Min., etc., Co. v. Uinta Tunnel Min., etc., Co., (1905) 196 U. S. 337, 25 S. Ct. 266, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 501.

Object of statute. — The object of the law in requiring a discovery to precede the location of a mining claim is to insure good faith on the part of the locator and prevent frauds upon the government; and to constitute a discovery which will support the location of a gold placer claim as against another mineral claimant it is not necessary that gold should have been found thereon in paying quantity, but there must have been such a discovery of gold as gives reasonable evidence that the ground is valuable for placer mining, taking into consideration its character, location, and surroundings. Lange v. Robinson, (1906) 148 Fed. 799, 79 C. C. A. 1.

Evidence. — Upon an issue as to whether there was a sufficient discovery of mineral in a mining claim to meet the requirement of the statute and support a location, where there was evidence that gold had actually been found within the limits of the claim, sufficient to warrant the submission of the case to the jury to determine whether the discovery was sufficient within the rule which requires it to be such as to justify an ordinarily prudent man, not necessarily a miner, in expending his time and money in the development of the property, the locator was entitled to supplement such evidence by showing the situation, character, and value, and mineralogical conditions of adjacent claims, and to prove by the opinions of experienced miners, based upon the facts, that the discovery was sufficient to justify him in developing the claim. Cascaden v. Bartolis, (C. C. A. 1906) 162 Fed. 267, 15 Ann. Cas. 625.

"Three hundred feet on each side." — In McElligott v. Krogh, (1907) 151 Cal. 126, 90 Pac. 823, it was held that though locators did not place a monument at an intervening point on the line between the end monuments, as under their mistaken belief as to the accuracy of the location of the end monuments there could be no necessity for it, yet they were entitled to have a line established on the correction of the location of one of the end monuments, which would include the corrected corner, that point, and the original corner not corrected, where no part of such line was more than 300 feet from the middle of the vein. On the correction of this corner, the court was not required to fix the boundary line as a straight line between the corner corrected and the original corner not corrected.

Excess may be rejected. — Where a mining location made in good faith includes within its boundaries more than this section permits, being 300 feet on each side of the middle of the vein at the surface, it is void only to the extent of the excess. McElligott v. Krogh, (1907) 151 Cal. 126, 90 Pac. 823.

The rule that where a locator has marked his corners so that the side lines lie more than 300 feet from the apex of the vein as located at the time, or otherwise marks a claim larger than allowed by statute, he cannot claim the excess as against a subsequent locator of adjoining ground, does not apply to a case where a claim of the statutory size was originally located in good faith, but by a mistake as to the actual location of the vein as evidenced by subsequent exploitation the side lines were not each 300 feet distant from the centre thereof. Harper v. Hill, (Cal. 1911) 113 Pac. 163.

Inaccuracy in location of vein. — Since the grant of the exclusive right to possession of the ground included within the lines of a location is a present grant, taking effect from the date of the location, a locator, having established his side lines in good faith, is protected against subsequent locators on the land included within the lines as originally located, though it may be subsequently determined by reason of an inaccuracy in the location of the vein or lode when the claim was located that the side lines at the end were more than 300 feet distant from the centre thereof. Harper v. Hill, (Cal. 1911) 113 Pac. 163.

Overlapping claims. — Where the locators of two association claims, which overlap, are sinking shafts at the same time, the first to discover mineral has priority of right, although the location was staked after the other, if it was made openly and peaceably. Hanson v. Craig, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 63.

Where the discovery of mineral-bearing vein is made on land subject to location, that the corners were not placed on unappropriated land subject to location does not render the location entirely void, but it is valid to the extent that such location is within the marked boundaries and on unappropriated land. McElligott v. Krogh, (1907) 151 Cal. 126, 90 Pac. 823.

Conflicting lode claimants.—It is the object and policy of the law to encourage the prospector and miner in their efforts to discover mineral, and therefore, as between conflicting lode claimants, the law is liberally construed in favor of the senior location; but where one claims what, prima facie, belongs to another, because of the apex in the claimant's location, a more rigid rule of construction against the claimant prevails. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

Asphaltum in lodes or veins in rock in place may be entered and patented by means of lode mining claims under this section, and it may not be secured by means of placer claims under section 2329, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 42. Webb v. American Asphaltum Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 203.

Distinction between lode and placer claims.—The distinguishing test which determines whether or not a valuable mineral deposit may be secured by a lode claim or by a placer claim is the form and character of the deposit. If it is in a vein or lode in rock in place, it may be secured by a lode claim, and it may not be by a placer claim. If it is not in a vein or lode in rock in place, it may be secured by a placer claim, and may not be by a lode claim. Webb v. American Asphaltum Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 203.

The words "other valuable deposits" in the clause "mining claims upon veins or lodes of quartz, or other rock in place bearing gold, silver, cinnabar, lead, tin, copper, or other valuable deposits," in this section, include nonmetalliferous as well as metalliferous deposits. Webb v. American Asphaltum Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 203.

Effect of amended location.—An amended location of a lode mining claim, made because of an error as to the course of the vein when the original location was made, in consequence of which the original side lines became end lines, did not operate as an abandonment of all rights under the original location, where it is expressly stated in the new location notice that such was not the intention; and where the end lines of the amended location do not entirely coincide with the side lines of the original claim, it was not error for the court, in determining collateral rights as against an intervening locator, to draw vertical planes through the side lines of the original claim, which became end lines by operation of law, owing to the course of the vein, and through the end lines of the amended claim, extending both in the direction of the dip of the vein, and to award to the claim extralateral rights in so much of the vein on its dip as lay within both of such extensions; treating as abandoned only so much of the original claim, with its planes so extended, as lay without the extended end-line planes of the amended claim. Empire State-Idaho Min., etc., Co. v. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 591, 66 C. C. A. 99.

Rights under prior Act.—Rights in mining property entitled to protection under the Act of May 10, 1872, as previously acquired under existing laws, existed where a lode mining location had been made at the time of the passage of that Act, and the proceedings under the Act of July 26, 1866, had then so far advanced as to exclude adverse claims. East Cent. Eureka Min. Co. v. Central Eureka Min. Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 266, 27 S. Ct. 259, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 476.

Waiver.—An election by the grantee of a patent for a lode mining claim to abandon rights acquired under the Act of July 26, 1866, cannot be imported from the fact that such patent, in addition to granting such rights, also purports to grant all that would have been acquired by a location under this section. East Cent. Eureka Min. Co. v. Central Eureka Min. Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 266, 27 S. Ct. 258, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 476.

Parallelism of end lines.—The requirement of parallelism of end lines of lode mining locations which is made by this section cannot be deemed to apply where the location had been made at the time of the passage of that Act, and the proceedings under the Act of July 26, 1866, had then so far advanced as to exclude adverse claims, in view of the various provisions of the later Act for the protection of all rights previously acquired under existing laws, and of the provision of section 2322 that prior locators shall have "the exclusive right of possession and enjoyment of all the surface included within the lines of their locations, and of all veins, lodes, and ledges throughout their entire depth, the top or apex of which lies inside of such surface lines extended downward vertically, although such veins, lodes, or ledges may so far depart from a perpendicular in their course downward as to extend outside the vertical side lines of such surface locations." East Cent. Eureka Min. Co. v. Central Eureka Min. Co., (1907) 204 U. S. 266, 27 S. Ct. 259, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 476.

Strike.—The course of the vein longitudinally, as it passes through the country, is its strike; and where the dip of the vein is vertical, or practically vertical, the line of its ore bodies may mark the line of its strike. In determining the location and strike of a vein, the geological features of the adjacent country, so far as in evidence, will be considered by the court. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

Proof of citizenship.—Where, in an action in support of an adverse claim to a mining location, it was admitted on the trial that, as far as the defendant was concerned, plaintiffs were citizens of the United States when they made their purported location, and a certified copy of the notice of plaintiffs' location was introduced in evidence, with an affidavit of assessment work for the year 1902, which contained evidence showing that each of the plaintiffs was a citizen of the United States at the time of locating the ground in dispute, the proof of citizenship was prima facie sufficient under this section. Stolp v. Treasury Gold Min. Co., (1905) 38 Wash. 619, 80 Pac. 817.

Corporation.—Where, in an action on an adverse by a corporation against an application for a patent to a mining claim, the complaint alleged that the plaintiff was a corporation organized under the laws of the state, and the answer admitted the allegation, it was not necessary to prove the citizenship of plaintiff's stockholders. Jackson v. White Cloud Gold Min., etc., Co., (1906) 36 Colo. 122, 85 Pac. 639.

Vol. V, p. 13, sec. 2322.

Exclusive right of possession.—To the same effect as the original note, Worthen v. Sidway, (1904) 72 Ark. 215, 79 S. W. 777.

The rights of one entering upon the public domain and locating and working a mineral claim are of as high order as those of a settler, each of whom is in possession under rights initiated which may by the observation of precedent conditions ripen into the right to a final patent. Southern California R. Co. v. O'Donnell, (1906) 3 Cal. App. 382, 85 Pac. 932.

The phrase "exclusive right of possession and enjoyment," as used in this section, means enjoyment of the surface for mining purposes alone, and hence the location of a mining claim within a forest reserve did not operate to withdraw the land embraced therein from the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture, nor give to locators having acquired a possessory interest only any authority to use the surface for the erection and maintenance of a saloon without a permit from the Secretary of Agriculture. U. S. v. Rizzinelli, (1910) 182 Fed. 675.

An interest in real property.—To the same effect as the original note, see Worthen v. Sidway, (1904) 72 Ark. 215, 79 S. W. 777.

Unpatented lode mining claims are "real property," and as such are subject to the lien of a judgment recovered against their owner when docketed pursuant to a statute making a docketed judgment a lien upon the judgment debtor's real property, the term being defined by a statute in force when the judgment was rendered and docketed as coextensive with lands, tenements, and hereditaments. Bradford v. Morrison, (1909) 212 U. S. 394, 29 S. Ct. 349, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 564.

Apex partly within and partly without.—Where the apex of a vein is of such width as to extend beyond the side line of a claim onto a junior claim, the extralateral rights therein belong to the senior claim, within its extended end-line planes. Empire State-Idaho Min., etc., Co. v. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 591, 66 C. C. A. 99.

The senior location takes the entire width of the vein on its dip, where the apex of such vein is partly within two or more adjacent lode mining claims. Lawson v. U. S. Mining Co., (1907) 207 U. S. 1, 28 S. Ct. 15, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 65.

Side and end lines.—Where the apex of a vein crosses what were originally intended as the side lines of a lode claim, and they are parallel, they become, by operation of law, the end lines. Empire Milling, etc., Co. v.

Tombstone Mill, etc., Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 339; Last Chance Min. Co. v. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 579, 66 C. C. A. 299.

Where the vein within a mining claim ran in a northerly and southerly direction, and the location was crosswise of the vein, the side lines were really end lines, considering the direction of the lode on the surface, and the rights of the locators were restricted to the area within the side lines three hundred feet on each side of the vein or lode. Southern California R. Co. v. O'Donnell, (1906) 3 Cal. App. 382, 85 Pac. 932.

Extralateral rights.—The ownership and possession of the surface of a lode mining claim carries with it the ownership and possession of the lode which has its apex therein to the full extent of the extralateral right given by the statute to the owner of the claim. Last Chance Min. Co. v. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 579, 66 C. C. A. 299.

The fact that a vein or lode is of such width on the surface as to extend beyond the side line of a claim located thereon does not affect the extralateral rights of such claim as against a junior location. Last Chance Min. Co. v. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 579.

The owner of a lode mining claim has the right to the ore beneath the surface of his claim in a vein not having its apex there, subject only to the right of the owner of the claim where such vein apexes to follow it downward on its dip. Mammoth Min. Co. v. Grand Cent. Min. Co., (1909) 213 U. S. 72, 29 S. Ct. 413, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 702. Compare McElligott v. Krogh, (1907) 151 Cal. 126, 90 Pac. 823.

The right given by the location of a lode mining claim in that portion of the vein lying within its surface boundaries and that portion lying beyond them in which the statute gives the owner extralateral rights is integral, and no adverse right can be acquired by the locator of another claim in respect to the latter portion that could not in respect to the former. Last Chance Min. Co. v. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 579, 66 C. C. A. 299.

In order to entitle the owner of a mining claim to extralateral rights, it is not sufficient that the vein he seeks to follow outside the boundaries of his claim consists of rock sufficiently mineralized so that a miner can follow it with a reasonable expectation of finding ore; but it is necessary that there should be a ledge or body of mineral or mineral-bearing rock of such value as will distinguish it from the country rock or from the general mass of the mountain. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

The right of the owner to pursue a vein apexing within the surface boundaries of his lode mining claim on its dip downward outside the vertical side lines of such claim, which is given by this section, cannot be deemed to include the right to run a horizontal tunnel from his claim into an adjoining patented lode claim, for the purpose of reaching the vein in its descent through such adjoining claim, in view of the provisions of R. S. sec. 2319, that all valuable mineral deposits in lands belonging to the United States are open to exploration and purchase, and the lands in which they are found to occupation and purchase, and of R. S. sec. 2325, that a patent for any land claimed and located for valuable deposits may be obtained when properly claimed and located. St. Louis Min., etc., Co. v. Montana Min. Co., (1904) 194 U. S. 235, 24 S. Ct. 654, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 953, affirming (1902) 113 Fed. 900, 51 C. C. A. 530, set out in the original note.

Agreed boundary between overlapping claims. — An oral agreement between the owners of two overlapping lode mining claims, located on the same day, in accordance with which a monument was built, which it was agreed should be a point on the line between the claims, cannot affect the extralateral rights appertaining to one of the claims which has passed into the hands of other owners, having no knowledge of such agreement, as against third parties owning junior claims, and having no interest in the other claim or privity with the agreement. Empire State-Idaho Min., etc., Co. v. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 591.

Course of vein. — Where the end lines of a lode claim cross the surface outcropping of a vein, they determine the extralateral right of the claim, without regard to the angle at which they cross the general course of the vein; its course for that purpose being fixed by the course of the apex on the surface of the claim. Last Chance Min. Co. v. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 579.

Where a person owns a mining claim having an apex of a vein within its limits extending through the claim lengthwise, he has, by virtue of the extralateral rights reserved under the statute, a right to follow the vein between vertical planes drawn downward through the end lines of the location, from the apex, on the dip, to the deep, although such vein may so far depart from a perpendicular, in its course downward, as to extend outside of the vertical side lines of the surface of the location into ground belonging to the adjoining owner. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

Burden of proof. — Where the defendant, who was the owner of a lode claim, claimed ore underlying plaintiff's adjoining claim by virtue of extralateral rights, the defendant was bound to show, not only that the apex and strike of the vein were within the boundaries of defendant's claim, but that between planes drawn vertically downward through the end line of plaintiff's claim and a certain parallel line the vein from its apex on its dip was continuous, that the continuity extended to and through plaintiff's ground, and that the ore bodies claimed formed a part of such vein. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

Jury trial. — In a suit to determine extralateral mining rights, the parties are not entitled, as matter of right, to a trial by jury. Hickey v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., (1905) 33 Mont. 46, 81 Pac. 806.

Conflicting locations. — An attempted location of a mining claim on land which has been subjected to a previous location, made in accordance with law and kept in force by the necessary assessment work, confers no rights on the locator. Anderson v. Caughey, (1906) 3 Cal. App. 22, 84 Pac. 223.

Lode location on placer claim. — Where the defendant claimed the right to a lode location within the limits of plaintiff's placer location, as excepted from plaintiff's patent, affidavits of representation work done on defendant's alleged lode claim from year to year after the location was made were admissible to show defendant's good faith and belief that the same warranted expenditure to develop it. Noyes v. Clifford, (1908) 37 Mont. 138, 94 Pac. 843.

Presumption. — The locator of a lode claim is presumed to own all the ore within planes drawn vertically downward to the deep through the boundary lines of such claim, as well as the surface and everything appurtenant to the claim, which presumption continues until some other locator establishes that such deposits belong to another lode having its apex in his ground, so that he is entitled to extralateral rights reserved by this section. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

Effect of patent. — The owner of a fee in a patented lode mining claim is presumed to be in possession of the surface included within the lines of the location, and the burden of proof rests on one claiming any part thereof by adverse possession. Original Consol. Min. Co. v. Abbott, (1908) 167 Fed. 681.

Descent of possessory right in unpatented claim. — The possessory right of a locator of a mining claim, who has not applied for a patent nor done anything to obtain title other than to do the required assessment work, is property, and upon his death passes to his heirs by descent, and not directly as the designated donees or beneficiaries of the United States under the mining laws, and hence such rights may be administered upon and sold as other property by his executor or administrator. O'Connell v. Pinnacle Gold Mines Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 854, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 106.

Establishing line on older claim. — The locator of a lode mining claim has the legal right to lay an end line of his claim on the surface of a prior claim, in the absence of objection by the owner; and, as against the government and subsequent locators, such location carries precisely the same rights, both surface and extralateral, as it would if all its lines were laid on unappropriated ground. Empire State-Idaho Min., etc., Co. v. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 591.

I. IN GENERAL.

Order of steps to complete locations.—When every act necessary to complete a mining location has been performed before an adverse claim has accrued, the order in which the acts have been performed is immaterial. McCleary v. Broadus, (1910) 14 Cal. App. 60, 111 Pac. 125; Healey v. Rupp, (1906) 37 Colo. 25, 86 Pac. 1015.

Forfeiting of location.—Every reasonable doubt will be solved in favor of the validity of a mining claim as against the assertion of a forfeiture. Thornton v. Kaufman, (1910) 40 Mont. 282, 106 Pac. 361.

Abandonment of interest by co-owner.—Where a person interested with others in the location of a mining claim abandons his interest in the claim it does not revert to the government, as the other cotenants may acquire the entire claim by compliance with the statute. Worthen v. Sidway, (1904) 72 Ark. 215, 79 S. W. 777.

Presumption from possession.—Possession and improvement alone give no value to a mining claim, but raise a prima facie presumption that the possession is rightful, and prevent the land being subject to original location as wild and unimproved land. Ware v. White, (1907) 81 Ark. 220, 108 S. W. 831.

Conclusiveness of prior entry and patent.—Priority of entry and patent does not conclusively establish seniority of location, so as to give the holder of a lode mining claim under such patent the right to the entire width of the vein on its dip, where part of the apex of such vein is within such claim and part within an adjoining claim. Lawson v. U. S. Mining Co., (1907) 207 U. S. 1, 28 S. Ct. 15, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 65.

Government recognition of validity of location.—Acceptance by the government of lode mining location notices given before the Act of July 26, 1866, 14 Stat. L. 251, ch. 262, recognizing the rights of locators who have proceeded in conformity to local customs or rules, and the issue of patents thereon, is a recognition by the Land Department of the conformity of the proceedings to the local rules and customs of the district, and such ruling is not open to challenge by third parties claiming rights arising subsequently to the notices. Lawson v. U. S. Mining Co., (1907) 207 U. S. 1, 28 S. Ct. 15, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 65.

Rights under occupancy without location.—Where the person in possession and occupancy of mineral lands does not claim government title under the land laws, his rights are those of a mere licensee of the government, and he must give way at the instance of one who makes a valid entry of the land under the public land laws; but, until a valid entry is made, only the government can complain of his occupancy. Zeiger v. Dowdy, (1911) 13 Ariz. 331, 114 Pac. 565.

The right of the state to pass acts supplementary.—Of similar effect to the original note, see Butte City Water Co. v. Baker, (1905) 196 U. S. 119, 25 S. Ct. 211, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 409.

II. LOCATION MUST BE DISTINCTLY MARKED.

In general.—See Phillips v. Smith, (1908) 11 Ariz. 309, 95 Pac. 91; McCleary v. Broadus, (1910) 14 Cal. App. 60, 111 Pac. 125.

Evidence.—See McCleary v. Broadus, (1910) 14 Cal. App. 60, 111 Pac. 125.

Stating courses and distances.—To the same effect as the original note, see Mutchmor v. McCarty, (1906) 149 Cal. 603, 87 Pac. 85.

No particular method of marking is required, and what is sufficient may depend on the topography of the ground; it being a question of fact in each case whether the lines are so marked that they can be readily traced by a person making a reasonable effort to do so. Charlton v. Kelly, (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 433, 13 Ann. Cas. 518.

Marking out ground.—Where the boundaries of a mining claim were not marked on the ground, the location was invalid. Harper v. Hill, (Cal. 1911) 113 Pac. 162.

Requirement mandatory.—The provision of this section that location of mining claims shall be distinctly marked on the ground so that the boundaries can be readily traced, and the location notice filed shall contain a description of the property by which it can be identified, is mandatory, and must be complied with in order to secure a valid location. Ware v. White, (1907) 81 Ark. 220, 108 S. W. 831.

Sufficiently marked.—Where notices were posted upon each mineral claim located on public domain, designating the place of posting as the starting point, which notices contained calls and distances to certain stakes at the four corners of each claim, the area of which was 600 feet by 1,500 feet, and the stakes thus called for were set and in some cases stones piled around them, there was a sufficient marking of the claims. Holdt v. Hazard, (1909) 10 Cal. App. 440, 102 Pac. 540.

Two recorded notices of mining locations, each contained the name of the claim, the signature of the locator, the date of location and of record, and the county and mining district where located. One of them described the claim as commencing at discovery, and running 750 feet in a northeasterly direction and 750 feet in a southwesterly direction, "marking the exterior ends by lawful stakes, 1, 2, 3, and 4, a claim 300 feet on each side of the centre." The other was described as commencing at discovery, and claiming 300 feet on each side of the centre of the vein, together with all dips, spurs, angles, and variations, running in a southwesterly direction, and 750 feet in a northeasterly direction from discovery, "marked by lawful stakes on both ends and corners 1, 2, 3, and 4." There was proof that the descriptions and markings indicated in each case were true; that a stake and notice were posted at each discovery, and that a stake three or four inches in diameter and four to four and one-half feet high was marked and set up in each corner, except that at one corner a stump was marked; and that surveys for patents were made, covering the ground practically as originally located and staked. It was held that such notices substantially complied with this section, requiring the locations to be distinctly marked on the ground so that their boundaries can be readily traced, and were not void for uncertainty of description. Bonanza Consol. Min. Co. v. Golden Head Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 159, 80 Pac. 736.

State laws.—The requirements of a state statute that before filing a location certificate the discoverer shall locate his claim by posting a notice on such claim, and marking the surface boundaries with substantial posts at each angle of the claim, are not invalid as in conflict with the federal statute, but merely add to its general terms, as by inference it had the right to do by R. S. secs. 2322, 2324. Saxton v. Perry, (1910) 47 Colo. 263, 107 Pac. 281. Of similar effect, see Wright v. Lyons, (1904) 45 Ore. 167, 77 Pac. 81.

Estoppel.—Where certain of plaintiffs in possession of mining claims were experienced miners, and knew the method generally adopted of marking on the ground the boundaries of mining claims, of which defendant was ignorant, and for eighteen months saw defendant working on an adjoining and conflicting claim, congratulated him on his progress, and made no objections until he had expended about $8,000 and discovered valuable ore, when it was found he was trespassing on plaintiffs' claims, it was held that an estoppel might arise; the means of information not being equal to the respective parties to prevent plaintiffs from asserting their right to the premises in conflict on the ground of abandonment. Sharkey v. Candiani, (1906) 48 Ore. 112, 85 Pac. 219.

Amendment of location.—Where one has possession of a mining claim and has done the actual physical work required, such work being there as evidence of possession, and there are no intervening rights, he may amend his location and thereby perfect his entry, and his right cannot be defeated by one who has made no peaceful entry and possession of the land, nor done any work thereon. Ware v. White, (1907) 81 Ark. 220, 108 S. W. 831.

III. NATURAL OBJECT OR PERMANENT MONUMENT.

In general.—The natural objects or permanent monuments referred to in this section may be on the ground located, or off, as the case may be. Bismarck Mountain Gold Min. Co. v. North Sunbeam Gold Co., (1908) 14 Idaho 516, 95 Pac. 14.

The object of the law in requiring the location of mining claims to be made with reference to some natural object or permanent monument is for the purpose of directing attention, in a general way, to the vicinity or locality in which the mining claim was to be found. Bismarck Mountain Gold Min. Co. v. North Sunbeam Gold Co., (1908) 14 Idaho 516, 95 Pac. 14.

Reference to "discovery claim."—Where it was shown that under the system of locating placer mining claims in Alaska the one first discovered upon a gulch or creek is generally called "discovery claim," and other claims are numbered from such claim up or down the gulch or stream, and that it is customary in a certain locality to give to side or bench claims the same numbers as those upon the creek, with the addition of a letter of the alphabet, as "A," "B," or "C," to designate the tiers back from the creek claims, it was held that recorded notice of location of a claim in such locality, which describes it as "13 A, below discovery, on Cleary creek," is sufficient under this section. Smith v. Cascaden, (1906) 148 Fed. 792, 78 C. C. A. 458.

Question of fact.—The sufficiency of the location of a mining claim, with reference to natural objects or permanent monuments, is a mere question of fact. Bonanza Consol. Min. Co. v. Golden Head Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 159, 80 Pac. 736.

Conclusiveness of certificate.—A reference to a natural object or permanent monument in a mining location certificate is not conclusive that the law has been complied with requiring such a reference to natural objects or permanent monuments as will identify the claim, but evidence is admissible that one could not take the description therein, and, by referring to the natural objects or permanent monuments therein mentioned, find the premises claimed. Londonderry Min. Co. v. United Gold Mines Co., (1906) 38 Colo. 480, 88 Pac. 455.

IV. NOTICE OF LOCATION.

Liberal construction.—Where it appears that the location of a mining claim is made in good faith, the court will not hold the locator to a very strict compliance with the law in respect to his location notice; and if by any reasonable construction, in view of the surrounding circumstances, the language employed in the description will impart notice to subsequent locators, it is sufficient. Bismarck Mountain Gold Min. Co. v. North Sunbeam Gold Co., (1908) 14 Idaho 516, 95 Pac. 14.

The object and purpose of a location notice is to give notice to subsequent locators; and if there be a defect in the notice, and the subsequent locator has actual notice of the prior location, he will be bound thereby, at least so far as defects are concerned. Bismarck Mountain Gold Min. Co. v. North Sunbeam Gold Co., (1908) 14 Idaho 516, 95 Pac. 14.

Error in notice.—An error in the location notice of a mining claim in its reference to the location of a permanent monument is not material in an action between the locators and a subsequent locator, where the claim was properly marked by stakes, and especially where the subsequent locator never saw the notice and could not have been misled thereby. Sturtevant v. Vogel, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 448.

Mistake in date.—Where the location of a mining claim in controversy by defendant's grantor was in fact made before plaintiff's entry on the land, the location notice being there visible and the boundaries of the claim properly marked, the defendants were not bound by an erroneous date in the location notice, the date recited in the location being only prima facie evidence of the actual date of the location. Webb v. Carlon, (1906) 148 Cal. 555, 83 Pac. 998.

Who may raise objection.—One who attempts to relocate a mining claim on the theory that the required amount of annual assessment work has not been done, with full knowledge of the location and boundaries of the claim, cannot assert a forfeiture of title for failure, on the part of the original locators, to comply with the mining rules respecting notices of location. Yosemite Gold Min., etc., Co. v. Emerson, (1908) 208 U. S. 25, 28 S. Ct. 196, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 374.

Effect of notice as evidence.—The location notice or certificate, when recorded, is prima facie evidence of all the facts the statute requires it to contain, and which are therein sufficiently set forth; and the affidavit of the locator attached to the notice, setting forth the fact that the ground was unoccupied mineral land of the United States at the time of his location, when introduced in evidence in an adverse suit, makes a prima facie case of such fact. Such notices are prima facie evidence of all the facts required by the statute to be stated therein which are, in fact, sufficiently stated therein. Bismarck Mountain Gold Min. Co. v. North Sunbeam Gold Co., (1908) 14 Idaho 516, 95 Pac. 14.

Sufficient notices.—Ordinarily a notice of the location of a mining claim which does not sufficiently mark the boundaries of the claim is sufficient to hold the claim for a reasonable time in which to mark the boundaries, in the absence of an adverse prior discovery and a prior marking of boundaries. McCleary v. Broadus, (1910) 14 Cal. App. 60, 111 Pac. 125.

Where a mining claim location notice described the claim by metes and bounds and with reference to stakes set in the land, adding that the claim lay "about a mile from Anvil Mountain in a southeasterly direction," the notice was not defective for failure to point out a particular portion of Anvil Mountain as the beginning point. Vogel v. Waring, (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 949. See also Bismarck Mountain Gold Min. Co. v. North Sunbeam Gold Co., (1908) 14 Idaho 516, 95 Pac. 14.

Follow local statutes.—Of similar effect to the first paragraph of the original note, Anderson v. Caughey, (1906) 3 Cal. App. 22, 84 Pac. 223; McCleary v. Broadus, (1910) 14 Cal. App. 60, 111 Pac. 125.

Posting notice.—See Bismarck Mountain Gold Min. Co. v. North Sunbeam Gold Co., (1908) 14 Idaho 516, 95 Pac. 14.

V. ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS' WORTH OF LABOR OR IMPROVEMENTS.

Locator prevented from performing work.—Where the defendants wrongfully held possession of a mining claim adversely to the plaintiff, who had made a prior location thereon, and prevented him from performing the required assessment work thereon, it was held that they could not set up his failure to do the work to support their title as against him. Field v. Tanner, (1904) 32 Colo. 278, 75 Pac. 916.

Valuation of work.—Where, in an action in support of an adverse claim to a mining location, qualified witnesses for the plaintiffs testified that the reasonable value of assessment work done by plaintiffs for the year 1902 was at least $100, it was held that such proof was not nullified by other evidence that the work was done in seven and one-half days by three men, working together; that the going wages for such work was five dollars per day per man; and that miner's wages were $3.50 per day. Stolp v. Treasury Gold Min. Co., (1905) 38 Wash. 619, 80 Pac. 817.

Discretion as to method of work.—Where a mining locator does work in good faith for the purpose of developing a mine, in strict compliance with the statute, a court cannot substitute its own judgment as to the wisdom and expediency of the method employed in the development in place of the owner's. Gear v. Ford, (1906) 4 Cal. App. 556, 88 Pac. 600.

Work contributed gratuitously to the improvement of a mining claim by one who has no enforceable interest therein is properly computed in determining whether the requisite assessment work has been done or not. Anderson v. Caughey, (1906) 3 Cal. App. 22, 84 Pac. 223.

Character of work required.—This section does not specify the kind of labor, and labor expended in extracting ore from the claim is within the requirement. It is only when labor is performed without the boundaries of the claim that its character becomes material, and in that case it must tend to the development or improvement of the claim or it will not count. Wailles v. Davies, (1907) 158 Fed. 607, affirmed (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 397.

Possession for the statutory period, under R. S. sec. 2332, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 44, does not relieve the possessor from doing the annual assessment work required by this section, and upon his failure to do such work in any one year the land becomes subject to relocation, notwithstanding he may have occupied it for more than the statutory period preceding such relocation. Upton v. Santa Rita Min. Co., (1907) 14 N. M. 96, 89 Pac. 275.

Resumption of work.—The government or a subsequent locator under a valid location is the only one who can complain of a failure on the part of a locator to do the necessary annual work required by this section, and a subsequent locator is not in a position to make complaint until he has completed a valid location, and if prior to the completion of such subsequent location the original locator has resumed work on his claim in good faith, his previous delinquency is not a matter of consequence. Thornton v. Kaufman, (1910) 40 Mont. 282, 106 Pac. 361.

The word "improvement" means such an artificial change of the physical conditions of the earth in, on, or so reasonably near a mining claim as to evidence a design to discover mineral therein, or to facilitate its extraction, and in all cases the alteration must be reasonably permanent in character. Fredricks v. Klauser, (1908) 52 Ore. 110, 96 Pac. 679.

Equity maxim not applicable.—In the development of a mining claim, the maxim that equity regards as done what was intended has no application, and material taken to a mining claim and not used cannot be reckoned as an improvement of the claim. Fredricks v. Klauser, (1908) 52 Ore. 110, 96 Pac. 679.

When several claims are held in common.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note, see Big Three Min., etc., Co. v. Hamilton, (1910) 157 Cal. 130, 107 Pac. 301; Fredricks v. Klauser, (1908) 52 Ore. 110, 96 Pac. 679.

One who does the assessment work on an association placer mining claim for which he is paid by one of the part owners has no right to enforce a forfeiture of the interest of another part owner for failure to contribute. Knickerbocker v. Halla, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 172.

Where sufficient annual assessment work is done on a particular claim to represent such claim, and contention is made by a junior locator that the work was done for the purpose of representing several claims, and for that reason was insufficient to represent the particular claim, in determining the sufficiency of the work the court will apply the labor shown to have been done to the particular claim upon which the work was done. Swanson v. Kettler, (1910) 17 Idaho 321, 105 Pac. 1059.

Improvements placed upon one of a group of contiguous claims for the purpose of aiding in the development of all and tending to such result may be considered in determining whether the annual labor for a given year has been done upon any one of such group. Before, however, such testimony can be considered in aid of any one claim, there must be sufficient testimony as to the other claims to enable the jury to determine what proportion of such benefit is referable to the claim in question. Upton v. Santa Rita Min. Co., (1907) 14 N. M. 96, 89 Pac. 275.

Actual possession.—After a valid mining location is made, the locator need not keep actual possession of the claim, but his right of possession continues until he in fact abandons or forfeits it by failure to do the work required by law. Gear v. Ford, (1906) 4 Cal. App. 556, 88 Pac. 600; Holdt v. Hazard, (1909) 10 Cal. App. 440, 102 Pac. 540.

The burden of proof to establish a forfeiture.—To the same effect as the original note, see Wailles v. Davies, (1907) 158 Fed. 667, affirmed (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 397; Gear v. Ford, (1906) 4 Cal. App. 556, 88 Pac. 601.

Quantum of proof to establish forfeiture.—To the same effect as the original note, see Gear v. Ford, (1906) 4 Cal. App. 556, 88 Pac. 600.

Evidence.—A forfeiture of a mining claim for failure to do annual work can be established only upon clear and convincing proof of such default proved against the former owner by the party assailing his title. Upton v. Santa Rita Min. Co., (1907) 14 N. M. 96, 89 Pac. 275. For other cases as to sufficiency of evidence, see New York, etc., First Nat. Gold Min. Co. v. Altwater, (C. C. A. 1906) 149 Fed. 393. See also McCleary v. Broadus, (1910) 14 Cal. App. 60, 111 Pac. 125; Bismarck Mountain Gold Min. Co. v. North Sunbeam Gold Co., (1908) 14 Idaho 516, 95 Pac. 14.

Question for jury.—Whether a prior location was forfeited as against an adverse location, and whether work was done for the purpose of developing the claim or was adapted to that purpose, are questions of fact. Gear v. Ford, (1906) 4 Cal. App. 556, 88 Pac. 600.

Whether work done on a mining claim is such as to benefit or develop other claims and so satisfy the requirement as to development of such claims is a question of fact. Big Three Min., etc., Co. v. Hamilton, (1910) 157 Cal. 130, 107 Pac. 301.

Work done by stockholder of corporation.—A stockholder in a mining company has such a beneficial interest in the corporate property that any mining work done by him on unpatented claims of the company must be counted as representation work, and if sufficient in amount, and done at the proper time, will prevent a forfeiture of the claims. Wailles v. Davies, (1907) 158 Fed. 667, affirmed (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 397.

Illustrations.—The price paid for tools used in the development work of a mining claim cannot be considered as development work, although a reasonable compensation for their use may be so considered. Fredricks v. Klauser, (1908) 52 Ore. 110, 96 Pac. 679.

Service of watchman.—Where the original locator of a mining claim suspended work from 1900 until 1904, when an adverse location was made, it was held that money expended by her in employing a watchman for the premises was not a compliance with this section, requiring not less than one hundred dollars' worth of work to be performed or improvements made during each year. Gear v. Ford, (1906) 4 Cal. App. 556, 88 Pac. 600.

Where there was no machinery or fixtures at a mining claim which necessitated the employment of a watchman after the development work ceased, it was held that the worth of the actual labor of an employee in making an honest effort to discover minerals on the claim was the only credit to which the locator was entitled, but credit should be allowed for the actual labor which the employee performed. Fredricks v. Klauser, (1908) 52 Ore. 110, 96 Pac. 679.

Cutlery, dishes, tinware, groceries, provisions, tobacco, and bedclothing do not constitute an improvement of a mining claim, though candles included in the items and used at a tunnel on the claim may be credited as an expenditure. Fredricks v. Klauser, (1908) 52 Ore. 110, 96 Pac. 679.

Drainage. — Work done on a mining claim to withdraw water from the mine so that it could be examined by a prospective purchaser, not operating to develop or improve the mine, or to enable the co-owners performing the work to work the mine, was not assessment work required by this section to preserve the co-owners' right to the claim. Evalina Gold Min. Co. v. Yosemite Gold Min., etc., Co., (1911) 15 Cal. App. 714, 115 Pac. 946.

Iron rails for tunnel. — A locator of a mining claim procured iron rails, a part of which were used in laying a track in a tunnel on the claim, and the remaining rails were taken to another mine, under an agreement that they should be returned on demand. The cost of hauling the rails used on the claim could not be segregated from the payment made. It was held that the value of the rails used on the claim must be estimated in determining the worth of the development work performed. The worth of rails laid on ties in a tunnel on a mining claim will be estimated in determining the value of the development work on the claim, but the payment for the rails will be disregarded. Fredricks v. Klauser, (1908) 52 Ore. 110, 96 Pac. 679.

The value of powder, fuse, candles, etc., used in development work of a mining claim will be estimated in determining the worth of the work. Fredricks v. Klauser, (1908) 52 Ore. 110, 96 Pac. 679.

The reasonable value of meals furnished men employed in doing development work on a mining claim, who received board in addition to their wages, should augment the earnings of the men employed, but the money expended in transporting the supplies is not a proper charge for development work. Fredricks v. Klauser, (1908) 52 Ore. 110, 96 Pac. 679.

Services and cost of horses. — While the reasonable compensation for the daily services of horses used in development work of a mining claim may be treated as labor performed in the development, the sum paid for the purchase of horses cannot be so viewed. Fredricks v. Klauser, (1908) 52 Ore. 110, 96 Pac. 679.

VI. FORFEITURE OF INTEREST FOR FAILURE TO CONTRIBUTE TO ASSESSMENT WORK.

Constitutionality. — The provision for the extinguishment of the interest of a co-owner in a mining claim for his failure to contribute to the assessment work required thereby is constitutional and valid. Van Sice v. Ibex Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 895.

Effect of deed to corporation. — The fact that after the owners of a part interest in a mining claim had done the assessment work thereon for a particular year they conveyed the claim to a corporation, taking in payment substantially all of its capital stock, which they retained, did not preclude the forfeiture of the interest of their co-owner for failure to contribute to the work by a notice given in accordance with this section and signed both by them and by the corporation, and the vesting of such interest in the corporation by virtue of their deed, which purported to convey the entire claim. Badger Gold Min., etc., Co. v. Stockton Gold, etc., Min. Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 838.

Tender of contribution to assessment work. — A part owner of a mining claim who holds an option to purchase the interest of a co-owner has the right to tender the contribution of the latter to the cost of assessment work to avoid a forfeiture. A part owner of a mining claim has implied authority to make a tender of the amount due from a co-owner as a contribution to the cost of assessment work to avoid a forfeiture. Knickerbocker v. Halla, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 172.

Mining property situated in foreign country. — The provisions of this section respecting the rights of co-owners of mining claims where some of such owners have done all the assessment work thereon have no application to mining property situated in a foreign country. Gaines v. Chew, (1909) 167 Fed. 630.

Abandonment. — The abandonment of a mining claim, the legal title to which is in the United States, by a part owner, does not vest any right or title to his interest in his co-owner. Badger Gold Min., etc., Co. v. Stockton Gold, etc., Min. Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 838.

Parties to give notice. — The beneficial owners of part interests in a mining claim are the proper parties to give the notice to a co-owner, to forfeit his interest for a failure to contribute to assessment work, although they have conveyed their interests in trust. Van Sice v. Ibex Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 895.

Personal responsibility after default. — Under this section where a co-owner of a mining claim fails to do his assessment work or fails to contribute his portion of the expenditure required in doing such work, his co-owners who have performed the labor may give such delinquent personal notice in writing or by publication, as provided in said statute, and if at the expiration of ninety days such delinquent should fail or refuse to contribute his proportion of such expenditure, his interest in the claim shall become the property of his co-owners who made such expenditures, and the defaulting co-owner is not personally responsible for any part of the assessment work, under the provisions of said section. McDaniel v. Moore, (1910) 19 Idaho 43, 112 Pac. 317.

Notice to co-owner.—A published notice of forfeiture is invalid as to a co-owner whose name does not appear therein. Ballard v. Golob, (1905) 34 Colo. 417, 83 Pac. 376.

Notice to grantee of co-owner.—Where notice to contribute for annual assessment work was addressed personally to the individuals supposed to be the co-owners in default and was personally served on them, and was delivered immediately to their grantee under a prior unrecorded deed, it was sufficient to forfeit the rights of their grantee, the co-owners serving the notice having neither actual nor constructive notice of the conveyance. Evalina Gold Min. Co. v. Yosemite Gold Min., etc., Co., (1911) 15 Cal. App. 714, 115 Pac. 947.

Waiver of prior personal notice.—The publication of notice to a part owner of a mining claim to contribute to the cost of doing the assessment work thereon for the previous year under penalty of forfeiture of his interest under this section is a waiver of a prior personal notice, and the delinquent may make his contribution at any time within ninety days from such notice by publication. Knickerbocker v. Halla, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 172.

VII. ALL RECORDS OF MINING CLAIMS.

Recording location notice.—This section does not require the recording of location notices, but leaves that subject open to legislation by the states or to regulation by the miners. Sturtevant v. Vogel, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 448.

Presumptions as to local customs.—In the absence of proof of a local custom of miners requiring a notice of location of a mining claim to be posted or recorded, it must be presumed that the United States law, which does not require such posting or recording, was in force in the mining district in question at the time in question. Anderson v. Caughey, (1906) 3 Cal. App. 22, 84 Pac. 223.

Accuracy of description on recorded notice.—In Mitchell v. Hutchinson, (1904) 142 Cal. 404, 76 Pac. 55, it appeared that a description of a location omitted the last course and distance; describing the next to the last distance as running to the place of beginning, instead of to the last monument. In a subsequent action to quiet title to the claim, it appeared that a straight line from the next to the last monument to the place of beginning would include all the land in controversy, and that if the course and distance last given in the recorded description were followed it would reach the monument described, from which a straight line to the place of beginning furnished an exact description. It was held that the inaccuracy in the description in the recorded notice did not render the location invalid, but that the description was sufficient under the statute.

VIII. SHALL BE OPEN TO RELOCATION.

In general.—A relocater of a mining claim is not a discoverer of the mineral contained therein, but an appropriator thereof, and cannot hold the ground except on proof that the original locator had abandoned or forfeited his right by failure to comply with the mining laws. Zerres v. Vanina, (1905) 134 Fed. 610, affirmed (C. C. A. 1907) 150 Fed. 564.

A claim of mining lands under a relocation is an implied admission of the validity of the location, but one who has attempted a relocation and then expressly renounced any claim under it, but who yet claims an interest in some other right which would entitle him to show that he never attempted such relocation, is not necessarily precluded from showing that the original locator never made a location, but is, in fact, perpetrating a fraud upon the government. Zeiger v. Dowdy, (1911) 13 Ariz. 331, 114 Pac. 565.

Where the plaintiff's alleged lode claims were mostly reclamations of abandoned claims and he failed to show actual possession prior to the commencement of the action, the doing of the requisite assessment work, or that there existed within the described boundaries of any of the claims a vein or deposit of ore sufficiently valuable to pay the cost of extraction or the cost of reduction, it was held that the claims were invalid. Mutchmor v. McCarty, (1906) 149 Cal. 603, 87 Pac. 85.

An entry upon a mining claim before the owner of it is in default. —To the same effect as the second paragraph of the original note, see Swanson v. Kettler, (1910) 17 Idaho 321, 105 Pac. 1059; Lockhart v. Farrell, (1906) 31 Utah 155, 86 Pac. 1077; Slothower v. Hunter, (1906) 15 Wyo. 189, 88 Pac. 36.

A junior location made on ground covered by a valid existing senior location will not prevail over a relocation on the same ground, made after a failure to do the work on the senior location. Nash v. McNamara, (1908) 30 Nev. 114, 93 Pac. 405.

In Malone v. Jackson, (1905) 137 Fed. 878, 70 C. C. A. 216, it appeared that the plaintiff located the mining claim in controversy on Jan. 1, 1899, which had been previously located in December, 1898. The plaintiff remained in actual possession from 1900 to 1902, but made no relocation of the claim after Jan. 1, 1900, when the original locator's rights expired for failure to do required assessment work, and on Jan. 1, 1902, defendant entered peaceably and relocated the claim. It was held that the defendant's relocation gave him the exclusive right of possession for one year from the date of his location.

Resumption of work before relocation perfected.—To the same effect as the original note, see Worthen v. Sidway, (1904) 72 Ark. 215, 79 S. W. 777; Thornton v. Kaufman, (1910) 40 Mont. 282, 106 Pac. 361.

While locator in actual possession.—For the purpose of relocation of a mining claim, the land must be subject to location, and there can be no relocation where the claim is in the actual possession of persons who have done the requisite amount of assessment work under an insufficient location. Ware v. White, (1907) 81 Ark. 220, 108 S. W. 831.

A mere failure to comply with the statutory requirement does not terminate the right of the locator, but the sole effect of the failure is to throw the land open to location by others, and, in the absence of such other location, the original claimant's right to resume work and to hold his claim remains, and the estate of the original claimant is not divested until there has been a peaceable entry for the purpose of relocation. Madison v. Octave Oil Co., (1908) 154 Cal. 768, 99 Pac. 176.

Relocation in night when original locators not working.—Where the locators of a claim were at work thereon on the 31st of December, and that night left their tools in the cut, intending to resume work the next morning at the usual time, which they did, their possession and work were in law continuous, and one who made a relocation in the night, during their absence, was a trespasser, and acquired no rights by the relocation. Willitt v. Baker, (1904) 133 Fed. 937.

Amendment of relocation certificate.—Where the defendants, claiming a forfeiture of a location by the plaintiff of a mining claim, relocated thereon, defects in their location certificate could not be cured, as against him, by filing amended certificates after he had re-entered the claim. Field v. Tanner, (1904) 32 Colo. 278, 75 Pac. 916.

Time of relocation.—In Malone v. Jackson, (1905) 137 Fed. 878, 70 C. C. A. 216, it was held that where a claim was located on Dec.

6, 1898, it was not subject to relocation for the locator's failure to do the required work until after Dec. 31, 1899.

The burden of proof to establish a forfeiture.—One basing a relocation of a mining claim on the existence of a forfeiture of the original location by reason of neglect to make the required improvement has the burden of establishing the forfeiture, which is prima facie done by proof that no labor was performed within the limits of the original claim during a specified year, and the burden then shifts to the original locator to show that work performed on an adjacent claim inured to the benefit of the claim in controversy. Fredricks v. Klauser, (1908) 52 Ore. 110, 96 Pac. 679.

Abandonment.—A senior locator, possessed of a paramount right in mineral land for which a patent is sought, may abandon such right, and thereby render the ground covered by such location subject to relocation before the expiration of the period prescribed by statute, within which the annual labor must be performed. Swanson v. Kettler, (1909) 17 Idaho 321, 105 Pac. 1059.

Relocation of patented claims.—Where the validity of mining claims is established by a patent therefor, until abandonment thereof by the patentees, so as to render the premises a part of the unappropriated public domain, no location can be made thereon by other parties. Sharkey v. Candiani, (1906) 48 Ore. 112, 85 Pac. 219.

Vol. V, p. 21. [Moneys expended on tunnels for mining purposes to be deemed expended on lode.]

Assessment work.—Under this Act and section 2324, Rev. Stat., supra, of which it is an amendment, work done in a tunnel may be applied as assessment work on a mining location, though the person doing the work does not own a continuous strip of territory from the portal of the tunnel to the boundary of such location. Hain v. Mattes, (1905) 34 Colo. 345, 83 Pac. 127.

Vol. V, p. 21, sec. 1.

Filing of notice.—The filing of the notice required by this Act is equivalent to the actual performance of the assessment work so as to revive the claimant's rights, forfeited by failure to do the assessment work for the preceding year, where no one else has located there in the meantime. Field v. Tanner, (1904) 32 Colo. 278, 75 Pac. 916.

Vol. V, p. 31, sec. 2325.

Notice.—The notices required to be given by an applicant for a patent for a mining claim are in effect a summons to all adverse claimants who are required to assert their right by filing an adverse within the sixty days' publication of notice as provided by this section. Healey v. Rupp, (1906) 37 Colo. 25, 86 Pac. 1015.

Jurisdiction of land department.—The jurisdiction of the Land Office on the filing of an application for a patent to public mineral lands is exclusive, and can be stayed only by the filing of an adverse claim, as provided by R. S. 2326, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 35.

Warnekros v. Cowan, (1910) 13 Ariz. 42, 109 Pac. 238.

Cancellation of entry on motion of commissioner of land office.—The provision of this section that if no adverse claim shall have been filed with the register and receiver of the land office at the expiration of sixty days from the date of publication of an application for a patent to a mining claim, it shall be assumed that the applicant is entitled to a patent, when construed in connection with other sections in pari materia, does not prevent the Commissioner of the General Land Office from canceling an entry, of his own motion, for failure of the applicant to comply with some statute or rule of the department, even though no adverse claim is filed. Mineral Farm Min. Co. v. Barrick, (1905) 33 Colo. 410, 80 Pac. 1055.

Controversies between co-owners.—The provision for the filing of adverse claims on the application for a patent to a mining claim has reference to adverse claims arising from independent and conflicting locations, and not to a controversy between co-owners or others claiming under the same location; and the fact that one owner did not adverse the application of his co-owner does not affect his right to establish and enforce a trust in the patented claim. Stevens v. Grand Cent. Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 28.

Presumptions.—On an application for a patent to a mining claim located by the applicant, the land office, in the absence of the filing of an adverse claim, will indulge the presumption that no conflicting claims exist to the premises described in the application, but when an adverse claim is filed, the presumption does not arise. Lockhart v. Farrell, (1906) 31 Utah 155, 86 Pac. 1077.

Conclusiveness of patent.—The issuance of a patent for a mining claim is conclusive evidence of the sufficiency of the steps taken by the locator as against one claiming adverse rights. Last Chance Min. Co. v. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 131 Fed. 579; Sharkey v. Candiani, (1906) 48 Ore. 112, 85 Pac. 219.

It is a common and approved practice to obtain patents from the government to mining claims in the names of the original locators, without regard to intervening changes in right or ownership, and the fact that a corporation grantee of certain owners proceeded upon an application made by prior owners, and obtained a patent running to them or their heirs and assigns, did not estop it from asserting that the interest of one of such patentees had been forfeited under the statute and vested in its grantors prior to the patent. Van Sice v. Ibox Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 895.

Where an application for a patent was made by the owner of one of two overlapping claims, the issuance of a patent to him including the area within the overlapping boundaries is necessarily a determination that at the time of the proceedings such area was a part of that claim; but it does not necessarily determine the priority of location, and, where it does not appear that such question was put in issue and actually decided in the course of the patent proceedings, the owner of the other claim is not estopped from asserting the priority of his claim in a subsequent controversy respecting extralateral rights, which were not involved in the proceedings for a patent. U. S. Mining Co. v. Lawson, (1904) 134 Fed. 769, 67 C. C. A. 587, affirmed (1907) 207 U. S. 1, 28 S. Ct. 15, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 65.

A patent to a mining claim raises the conclusive presumption that there is an apex of a vein within the patented ground, but there is no presumption that such vein embraces ore without the side lines of the claim, or that the vein presumed is the one in dispute. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 20 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

The claimant of a tunnel site is not required to file an adverse claim. — Creede, etc., Min., etc., Co. v. Uinta Tunnel Min., etc., Co., (1905) 106 U. S. 337, 25 S. Ct. 266, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 501, affirming (C. C. A. 1902) 119 Fed. 164, cited in the original note.

Vol. V, p. 35, sec. 910.

Right of possession.—Where, prior to the time the plaintiff's grantor staked out a placer claim on public land, the defendants had taken steps to appropriate the same land as a lode claim, and there was some evidence of mineral bearing rock on the surface, but an entire absence of proof that there was not a vein of metallic ore, such as might be located only as a vein or lode claim, it was held that the defendants' right to possession was superior to that acquired by the plaintiff. Bevis v. Markland, (1904) 130 Fed. 226.

Issues.—Where neither party to a suit to recover possession of land held under conflicting mining claims had acquired a perfect right to a conveyance from the United States, and the requirements of the statutes providing for adverse proceedings and suits for the determination of questions respecting conflicting claims had not been complied with, the only issue determinable in such suit was the right of possession. Bevis v. Markland, (1904) 130 Fed. 226.

Burden of proof.—Where the plaintiff and the defendants claimed land covered by conflicting mining claims, and the defendants had not molested the plaintiff, or interfered with his possession or that of his grantor, otherwise than by continuing to hold possession in the same manner as before the attempted laying out of plaintiff's claim, the burden was on the plaintiff to prove that defendants were mere intruders, having no color of title or right to possession. Bevis v. Markland, (1904) 130 Fed. 226.

This section was cited in O'Connell v. Pinacle Gold Mines Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 106, affirmed (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 854; Reed v. Munn, (1906) 148 Fed. 737, 80 C. C. A. 215.

Vol. V, p. 35, sec. 2326.

Suits arising under laws of United States.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note, see Willitt v. Baker, (1904) 133 Fed. 937.

The mere fact that the suit was brought under this section to try adverse rights to a mining claim does not necessarily involve a federal question so as to authorize a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States to a state court. McMillen v. Ferrum Min. Co., (1905) 197 U. S. 343, 25 S. Ct. 533, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 784.

The purpose of a suit in support of an adverse to a mining location is to determine for the information of the officers of the land department, which, if either of the parties thereto, is entitled to a patent to the premises in dispute. Healey v. Rupp, (1906) 37 Colo. 25, 86 Pac. 1015.

Jurisdiction.—Where a state statute authorizes a suit to quiet title regardless of possession, a federal court of equity in such state is a court of competent jurisdiction, in which a suit in support of an adverse claim to mining ground may be maintained under this section when it appears that neither of the parties is in possession. Willitt v. Baker, (1904) 133 Fed. 937.

Controversies as to character of land.—This section confers jurisdiction on the courts only of suits between adverse mining claimants to the same mineral land, but does not confer jurisdiction to determine the character of the land involved as mineral or nonmineral, that question being for the Land Department. Wright v. Hartville, (1905) 13 Wyo. 497, 81 Pac. 649, 82 Pac. 450.

A complaint affirmatively showing the filing by the defendant of an application for patent, there being no allegation that the plaintiff had filed an adverse claim, is subject to a special demurrer to the jurisdiction of the trial court; the subject-matter of the action being within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Land Office. Warnekros v. Cowan, (1910) 13 Ariz. 42, 108 Pac. 238.

In an action for damages for encroaching on the plaintiff's mining claim, the defendant answered that the plaintiff had made application for a patent on his mine, and that the defendant had filed its protest against the issuance of a patent, and the Land Department had ordered a hearing. It was held that under this section the court had jurisdiction of the action; for, if the protest was not an adverse claim within the statute, there was no controversy to be settled by the Land Department, and, if it was an adverse claim, the court had jurisdiction to decide the controversy. Lightner Min. Co. v. Superior Ct., (1911) 14 Cal. App. 642, 112 Pac. 909.

"Within thirty days after filing his claim."

—A complaint which states no cause of action, filed within thirty days, does not cause an amended complaint filed after the expiration of thirty days to relate back to the time of filing the original complaint, but the amended complaint is too late. Keppler v. Becker, (1905) 9 Ariz. 234, 80 Pac. 334. Contra, Woody v. Hinds, (1904) 30 Mont. 189, 76 Pac. 1.

What constitutes the commencement of an action.—See Harris v. Helena Gold Min. Co., (1907) 29 Nev. 506, 92 Pac. 1.

The form of an action.—An adverse suit under this section to determine the right of possession of a mining claim on government land, praying that defendants be ejected, the answer presenting no equitable defense, was a law action, and contained no elements of equity jurisdiction. Ware v. White, (1907) 81 Ark. 220, 108 S. W. 831.

Following state practice.—Since this section does not prescribe the form of action, the character of the suit to be brought thereunder depends on state practice. Mares v. Dillon, (1904) 30 Mont. 117, 75 Pac. 963.

An ordinary declaration in ejectment.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note and re-affirming the case there cited, Upton v. Santa Rita Min. Co., (1907) 14 N. M. 96, 89 Pac. 275.

Allegations of complaint — Time adverse claim filed and suit brought.—A complaint in an action to contest an adverse claim in patent proceedings, which fails to allege that the adverse claim was filed in the proper Land Office within the sixty days allowed by the statute, is defective. Thornton v. Kaufman, (1907) 35 Mont. 181, 88 Pac. 796.

That suit is an adverse suit.—In an adverse suit the rules governing ordinary ejectment suits are modified by the Act of March 3, 1881, ch. 140, 21 Stat. L. 305, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 36, which requires that the defendant, no less than the plaintiff, shall recover on the strength of his own title. In order, therefore, that the court may be advised of the nature of the suit so as to apply these exceptional rules, there should, in addition to the ordinary allegations in ejectment, be appropriate allegations showing the fact that such suit is designed as an adverse suit. Upton v. Santa Rita Min. Co., (1907) 14 N. M. 96, 89 Pac. 275.

The complaint should describe the land.—The complaint must contain a definite description of the area in conflict in order to support the judgment, which must designate the part, if any, of the area in conflict, that might belong to each of the adverse claimants. Smith v. Imperial Copper Co., (1907) 11 Ariz. 193, 89 Pac. 510.

For other cases see Keppler v. Becker, (1905) 9 Ariz. 234, 80 Pac. 334; Woody v. Hinds, (1904) 30 Mont. 189, 76 Pac. 1. See Tonopah Fraction Min. Co. v. Douglass, (1903) 123 Fed. 936.

Amended complaint.—In Davidson v. Fraser, (1906) 36 Colo. 1, 84 Pac. 695, it was held that though an amended complaint in ejectment, in support of an adverse to a mining location, was inartificial, in that it contained averments in support of an adverse between hostile locations, instead of limiting the allegations to a statement that plaintiff had been ousted from his interest in the premises in controversy by a co-owner, on which he relied to maintain his action, it was not for that reason objectionable, because the original complaint only embraced parts of the claim which did not conflict with another claim, while the amended complaint limited the ground in controversy to the conflict between the two.

Each party must rely upon the strength of his own title.—In a suit brought under this section by an adverse claimant to determine the right to the possession of a mining location, each party must show affirmatively his title, and the court, on finding that one party is entitled to the possession of a claim as located by him, which includes a part of a claim of the adverse party, must find on the issues of possession and the right to patent the other part of the claim of the adverse party. Slothower v. Hunter, (1906) 15 Wyo. 189, 88 Pac. 36.

In a suit brought under this section by an adverse claimant to determine the right to the possession of a mining claim, the title of each party is brought in question; and, to entitle the defendant to a judgment or decree establishing his title, even where the plaintiff's case fails, he must prove that he did the assessment work for each year as required by the statute. Willitt v. Baker, (1904) 133 Fed. 937.

In an action in support of an adverse to a mining location it was held that plaintiff was not entitled to recover, in the absence of evidence that the ground he sought to locate was unoccupied and unappropriated public mineral domain, subject to location prior to his attempted location. McWilliams v. Winslow, (1905) 34 Colo. 341, 82 Pac. 538.

Evidence — Proceedings in Land Office. — In a suit to quiet title to a mining claim in support of an adverse claim filed in the United States Land Office, the proceedings in the Land Office are immaterial unless they show title or right of possession in one of the parties. Bernard v. Parmelee, (1907) 6 Cal. App. 537, 92 Pac. 658.

Sufficiency. — In an action in support of an adverse claim to a mining location, the plaintiffs are not required to prove that they have performed sufficient work to entitle them to a patent; the object of the litigation being merely to defeat the defendant's application for a patent by showing that it was not in possession of the property, and was not entitled to possession thereof. Stolp v. Treasury Gold Min. Co., (1905) 38 Wash. 619, 80 Pac. 817.

For other cases see Porter v. Tonopah North Star Tunnel, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 385; Slothower v. Hunter, (1906) 15 Wyo. 189, 88 Pac. 36.

Verdict. — In a suit under this section a verdict in the form, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty," was held to be sufficient to answer all the purposes of the proceeding. Upton v. Santa Rita Min. Co., (1907) 14 N. M. 96, 89 Pac. 275.

Special findings. — In a suit under this section the parties are, upon proper request, entitled to special findings upon questions relevant to the cause; but, in the absence of such request, it is not error for the court to fail to require findings of the jury. Upton v. Santa Rita Min. Co., (1907) 14 N. M. 96, 89 Pac. 275.

Controversies between co-owners. — The provisions of this and the preceding section for the issuance of patents for mineral lands and the prosecution of adverse claims to mining locations, apply only to adverse claims arising out of independent conflicting locations of the same ground, and not to controversies between co-owners claiming under the same location. Davidson v. Fraser, (1906) 36 Colo. 1, 84 Pac. 695; Allen v. Blanche Gold Min. Co., (1909) 46 Colo. 199, 102 Pac. 1072.

Burden of proof. — In Lockhart v. Farrell, (1906) 31 Utah 155, 86 Pac. 1077, it appeared that the defendant located a mining claim, and applied for a patent thereto. The plaintiff adverse the application, claiming the right to the possession of the same as claimant, and brought an action pursuant to this section to adjudicate the adverse claims. It was held that as the court was entitled to presume that the defendant's location, prior in time, had prima facie the better right, the plaintiff had the burden of rebutting the presumption by showing the invalidity of the prior location.

Parties. — A part owner of a mining claim, who joins with the other owners in filing an adverse claim under this section, but afterwards becomes vested by conveyances with title to the interests of the others, may maintain the suit required by said section in support of the adverse claim in his own name. Willitt v. Baker, (1904) 133 Fed. 937.

The government is not a party to a suit to determine an adverse claim, except in so far as it has agreed to accept the judgment therein rendered as conclusive of the right of possession as between the contending claimants; and such judgment is not conclusive on a subsequent patentee from the government of land embraced therein, who was not a party, or privy to a party, to the suit in which the judgment was rendered. Butte Land, etc., Co. v. Merriman, (1905) 32 Mont. 402, 80 Pac. 675.

Limiting issues by stipulation. — A stipulation in an adverse suit that the parties waive all other points raised by the pleadings and submit the sole issue whether plaintiffs under their location resumed work on the claim, after forfeitures, before defendant's location, is valid, and dispenses with proof of other matters. Giberson v. Wilson, (1906) 79 Ark. 581, 96 S. W. 137.

Adverse claim by third locator. — In an application for a patent by a junior locator, upon failure of the senior locator to adverse, it will be presumed that there was no senior location, and that at the time the junior location was made the ground was open to entry under the mineral laws of the United States; but where it also appears that there is a third location made subsequent to the junior location, such third locator may adverse the application for patent by the junior locator, and show that the junior location is void because at the time it was made the ground was not open to location under the mineral laws of the United States. Swanson v. Kettler, (1910) 17 Idaho 321, 105 Pac. 1059.

Necessity for trial de novo on appeal. — Where, in a suit brought under this section, by an adverse claimant to determine the right to the possession of a mining claim, there is no conflict in the evidence, and the possession and right to a patent are supported by evidence so that a contrary decree would be unsupported by the evidence, the case, on the failure of the court to find on the issues of possession and the right to patent, need not be tried de novo on such issues. Slothower v. Hunter, (1906) 15 Wyo. 189, 88 Pac. 36.

Matters determined.—In the absence of the record of an adverse suit, there is no presumption that subterranean rights under lode mining locations were therein considered and determined. Lawson v. U. S. Mining Co., (1907) 207 U. S. 1, 28 S. Ct. 15, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 65.

Effect of forfeiture of senior location.—The area of conflict between two mining locations does not, upon the forfeiture of the senior location, become unoccupied mineral lands of the United States, so as to enable a relocater of the forfeited location to adverse successfully the application for a patent by the junior locator, since the latter's right, under this section, to a patent, which would exist in case of the failure of the owner of a subexisting senior location either to adverse the application or to prosecute such adverse if one was made, must also arise from the forfeiture of the claim of the senior locator to adverse successfully after the forfeiture is complete. Lavagnino v. Uhlig, (1905) 199 U. S. 443, 25 S. Ct. 716, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1119.

Subsequent discovery.—The rights of an adverse claimant to a mining location are limited to those existing at the time of the filing of his adverse so that he is not entitled to urge a subsequent discovery for the purpose of preventing the issuance of a patent to the applicant. Healey v. Rupp, (1906) 37 Colo. 25, 86 Pac. 1015.

Vol. V, p. 36. [Findings by jury—costs.]

Equity actions.—This Act does not require that the findings should be by a jury, where the suit to determine the adverse claim is in equity. Mares v. Dillon, (1904) 30 Mont. 117, 75 Pac. 963.

Nonsuit.—To the same effect as the original note and following the Colorado case there cited. McWilliams v. Winslow, (1905) 34 Colo. 341, 82 Pac. 538.

For other cases see Brown v. Gurney, (1906) 201 U. S. 184, 26 S. Ct. 509, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 717; Connolly v. Hughes, (1902) 18 Colo. App. 372, 71 Pac. 681.

Discovery.—It is essential, under sections 2329, 2330, to the validity of a mining claim that the ground be mineral in character, and that a discovery of mineral within the confines of the claim be made. Zeiger v. Dowdy, (1911) 13 Ariz. 331, 114 Pac. 565.

Marking boundaries.—Under Rev. Stat. sec. 2324, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 19, requiring that the location of mining claims must be distinctly marked on the ground, so that their boundaries can be readily traced, and this section, directing that placer claims shall be subject to entry and patent under like conditions, but where the lands have been previously surveyed by the United States the entry in its exterior limits shall conform to the legal subdivision of the public lands, an attempted location of a placer mining claim by posting a notice on a tree, claiming the exclusive right to prospect on a certain quarter section, without any effort to distinctly mark the location on the ground, is insufficient, and no rights are acquired thereby. Worthen v. Sidway, (1904) 72 Ark. 215, 79 S. W. 777.

Building sand a "mineral."—Under this section by which claims usually called placers, including all forms of deposits excepting veins of quartz or other rock in place, shall be subject to entry, building sand is a mineral; and hence land more valuable for the building sand it contains than for agriculture is mineral land, subject to placer locations. Loney v. Scott, (Ore. 1910) 112 Pac. 172.

Sufficient conformation to public survey.—Under this section and section 2331, requiring placer claims to conform to the lines of the public survey, they are required to so conform only where it is reasonably practicable, and otherwise it is sufficient if they conform as near as is reasonably practicable. Mitchell v. Hutchinson, (1904) 142 Cal. 404, 76 Pac. 55.

Distinction between lode and placer claims.—See under this title, vol. 5, p. 8, sec. 2320.

Asphaltum in lodes or veins.—See under this title, vol. 5, p. 8, sec. 2320.

Vol. V, p. 42, sec. 2330.

Manner of location.—An association placer mining claim cannot be located over other prior claims, so as to include within its boundaries and appropriate a number of unlocated and noncontiguous fractions lying between such prior claims. Stenfjeld v. Espe, (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 825.

Excessive location.—A placer mining claim located in good faith is not wholly void because it exceeds twenty acres, but is void only as to the excess, which may be rejected from any portion the owner may select; and until he has been advised of the excess, and has had a reasonable time to make his selection, his possession extends to the entire claim, and another who goes upon it and makes a location of any part is a trespasser, and his location a nullity and void for any purpose. Jones v. Wild Goose Min., etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 95.

Interest of each individual in association.—Any scheme or device whereby one individual is to acquire more than twenty acres constitutes a fraud on the law, and consequently a fraud on the government, rendering the entire location invalid, so that where a partnership, consisting of five persons, attempted to locate a single claim covering one hundred acres, and formed a joint-stock association, by which two of the members acquired only a nominal interest, one less than a fifth, one more than a fifth, and one more than half, the location was void. Nome, etc., Co. v. Snyder, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 385. Of similar effect see Cook v. Klonos, (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 529, modified (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 700.

Relocation.—Where locators of a placer mine are at most in constructive possession only, their location must be valid, to be effectual against one who seeks to relocate the ground. Saxton v. Perry, (1910) 47 Colo. 263, 107 Pac. 281.

Vol. V, p. 43, sec. 2331.

Marking boundaries.—This section does not dispense with the requirement of section 2324, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 19, directing that the location of mining claims must be distinctly marked on the ground, so that its boundaries can be readily traced. Worthen v. Sidway, (1904) 72 Ark. 215, 79 S. W. 777.

In Kern Oil Co. v. Crawford, (1903) 143 Cal. 298, 76 Pac. 1111, it appeared that plaintiff's grantors entered on a quarter section of land, with intent to locate a placer mining claim. They posted notice on the land, claiming such quarter section, and, after due preliminary steps, caused survey to be made, and set up stakes at the supposed corners, marked "N. E. corner section 32" and "S. E. corner section 32," and set laths between them to mark the line. These stakes were in reality some distance west of the true line. On the strip between the true line and that marked by the grantors, defendant afterwards entered. It was held that the notice and stakes posted by plaintiff's grantors were sufficient to notify the defendant that the plaintiff's claim extended to the whole quarter section, so that she acquired no title to the strip erroneously omitted from the boundaries.

State laws.—A state law requiring boundary stakes at the angle of a placer mine does not conflict with this section, providing that where placer claims are on surveyed lands, and conform to the legal subdivisions, no further survey or plat shall be required, since the latter refers only to the plat and survey required to be filed on applications for patent, and has no reference to location. Saxton v. Perry, (1910) 47 Colo. 263, 107 Pac. 281.

Construction of statute.—This section is to be construed in connection with the other federal mining statutes. When so construed, its effect is simply to declare that possession for the statutory period is the equivalent of a valid location. Upton v. Santa Rita Min. Co., (1907) 14 N. M. 96, 89 Pac. 275.

Possession for the statutory period.—See under this title, vol. 5, p. 19, sec. 2324.

Vol. V, p. 45, sec. 2333.

Vein or lode.—A "vein or lode" within this section is a body of mineral or mineral bearing rock within defined boundaries in the general mass of the mountain, and a "known vein or lode" is one clearly ascertained, and of such extent as to render the land more valuable on that account and justify its exploitation and development. Noyes v. Clifford, (1908) 37 Mont. 138, 94 Pac. 842.

Veins or lodes are lines or aggregations of metal imbedded in quartz or other rock in place, consisting of a strip of mineral bearing rock within defined boundaries in the general mass of the mountain, which must be continuous and without interruption, bounded by country rock mineralized to no greater extent than the general condition of the vicinity. Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., (1905) 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648.

"Known vein" is not synonymous with a "located vein."—To the same effect as the original note see Mutchmor v. McCarty, (1906) 149 Cal. 603, 87 Pac. 85.

A quartz vein which contains so small a portion of gold, silver, etc., as to be of no value for mining purposes, is not a known vein, within this section providing for the disposition of mining claims. Mutchmor v. McCarty, (1906) 149 Cal. 603, 87 Pac. 85.

The terms "vein" and "lode" are synonymous, and the same definition of such terms as used in R. S. sec. 2320, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 8, must be applied to them in this section. Noyes v. Clifford, (1908) 37 Mont. 138, 94 Pac. 842.

Exception of lode or vein.—If the lode or vein within the limits of a placer location is excepted from the patent to the placer claim, such lode or vein and twenty-five feet on either side thereof are open to exploitation and location by any citizen of the United States, for which purpose he is entitled to enter into possession thereof. Noyes v. Clifford, (1908) 37 Mont. 138, 94 Pac. 843.

Evidence.—Where the defendant claimed that a lode or vein within the limits of a placer location was excepted from the patent to the placer, evidence of the character, extent, and value of the contents of the vein at any time before or after the beginning of the patent proceedings for the placer was competent on the issue whether it was such a vein as would justify a location and the expenditure of labor and money to develop and utilize it; evidence of what it contained at the date of the location being relevant to the question of its contents at the date of the application for the patent. Noyes v. Clifford, (1908) 37 Mont. 138, 94 Pac. 842.

Expert opinion. — On an issue whether a lode or vein within the limits of plaintiff's placer location was of sufficient value to justify exploitation and development so as to except it from the terms of the plaintiff's placer patent, the opinion of an expert based on his experience and observation of the conditions in the district that the prospects of the vein were good and that it carried some mineral values was admissible as bearing on the contents of the vein at the time the application of plaintiff's patent was made. Noyes v. Clifford, (1908) 37 Mont. 138, 94 Pac. 843.

Question of fact. — It is a question for the jury whether a vein or lode within the limits of a placer location was excepted from the patent to the holder, and therefore subject to defendant's location, whether such vein was "known" at the date of plaintiff's application for patent as a clearly ascertained vein, and whether it contained such mineral as made the ground more valuable on that account and justified expenditure. Noyes v. Clifford, (1908) 37 Mont. 138, 94 Pac. 842.

Right to possession. — In Loney v. Scott, (Ore. 1910) 112 Pac. 172, it appeared that the plaintiffs made placer locations upon public lands while they were withdrawn from entry and gave the notices as required by law. After the reopening of the land to entry, the defendant's grantor, a railroad company, obtained a patent to the land as lieu land under its land grant, defendant making the nonmineral affidavit, which showed the land to be in fact mineral in character and that it was claimed under placer filings, and after conveyance to him the defendant sued the placer claimants for possession. It was held that the possession of the plaintiffs as placer claimants at the time of the application of the defendant for a patent was sufficient to defeat defendant's action for possession, and that plaintiffs might enjoin defendant's action.

Vol. V, p. 47. [Entry of petroleum or other mineral oil lands under placer claims laws.]

Necessity for actual discovery of oil. — To constitute a valid location of an oil claim the locator must have actually discovered oil within the limits of the claim. Where no discovery of oil is made under an oil claim, the locator is not in the actual bona fide possession of the claim, and therefore the same is open to peaceable entry by others. Miller v. Chrisman, (1903) 140 Cal. 440, 73 Pac. 1083, 74 Pac. 444; McLemore v. Express Oil Co., (1910) 158 Cal. 559, 112 Pac. 59.

A location of an oil claim, embracing 160 acres of land made by an association of persons, is but a single location covering 160 acres, and not eight locations each covering twenty acres, and therefore a single discovery of oil is sufficient to support it. Miller v. Chrisman, (1903) 140 Cal. 440, 73 Pac. 1083, 74 Pac. 444.

Time of discovery with reference to location of claim. — It is not essential to the validity of an oil or mineral claim that the discovery of oil or mineral within its limits shall have preceded or shall coexist with the posting of the notice and the demarcation of the boundaries, but the discovery may be made subsequently, and when made operates to perfect the location against the world, save those whose bona fide rights have intervened. Miller v. Chrisman, (1903) 140 Cal. 440, 73 Pac. 1083, 74 Pac. 444.

Conveyance of location. — Where a location of an oil claim was made by an association of persons, the associates acquired a right to the claim before the location was perfected, which they could convey. Miller v. Chrisman, (1903) 140 Cal. 440, 73 Pac. 1083, 74 Pac. 444, affirmed (1905) 197 U. S. 313, 25 S. Ct. 468, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 770.

A fraudulent and clandestine entry on the oil claim of another with knowledge of the latter's occupancy of the territory cannot be made the basis of any right. Miller v. Chrisman, (1903) 140 Cal. 440, 73 Pac. 1083, 74 Pac. 444, affirmed (1905) 197 U. S. 313, 25 S. Ct. 468, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 770.

Abandonment of location. — Where a location of an oil claim was invalid, the abandonment and relinquishment thereof by the grantee of the locator did not invalidate a location subsequently made by the grantee. Miller v. Chrisman, (1903) 140 Cal. 440, 73 Pac. 1083, 74 Pac. 444, affirmed (1905) 197 U. S. 313, 25 S. Ct. 468, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 770.

Asphaltum in lodes or veins in rock in place may not be secured under this Act regarding the entry of lands containing petroleum or other mineral oils. Webb v. American Asphaltum Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 203, wherein the court said: "The Act of 1897 was not enacted for scientists or for those specially learned in the composition and analysis of geological formations alone or chiefly, but for citizens of common intelligence and learning who might desire to buy valuable deposits upon the lands of the United States; and to them the significance of these words, 'other mineral oils,' in this law, following, as they do, the word 'petroleum,' which describes a liquid, is liquid or semi-liquid mineral oils, and it does not include gilsonite or the hard forms of asphaltum. The sense in which the reader of ordinary knowledge and intelligence would take these words, the obvious common meaning of them, should be preferred to the recondite signification which would include the solid forms of asphaltum, and for this reason the Act of 1897 did not authorize the entry of lands which contain these deposits, by means of placer claims."

A government mineral surveyor appointed under this section is not an officer, clerk, or employee in the General Land Office, within Rev. Stat. sec. 452, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 212, prohibiting such persons from obtaining title to government land, and hence is not disqualified thereby from locating a mining claim under R. S. 2207, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 219, providing for such location. Hand v. Cook, (1907) 29 Nev. 518, 92 Pac. 3.

Vol. V, p. 50, sec. 2336.

Integral character of vein.—Where two or more mining claims longitudinally bisect or divide the apex of a vein, the senior claim takes the entire width of the vein on its dip, if it is in other respects so located as to give a right to pursue the vein downwards outside of the side lines. U. S. Mining Co. v. Lawson, (1904) 134 Fed. 769, 67 C. C. A. 587, affirmed (1907) 207 U. S. 1, 28 S. Ct. 15, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 65.

Determination of seniority.—In respect of conflicting mining claims, seniority is determined by the order in which they were located, whether they have been patented or remain unpatented. U. S. Mining Co. v. Lawson, (1904) 134 Fed. 769, 67 C. C. A. 587, affirmed (1907) 207 U. S. 1, 28 S. Ct. 15, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 65.

Tunnel rights.—Under this section a state is authorized to pass an act granting to an owner of ground, with a mining tunnel located thereon, the right to run the same through the claims of other parties, and providing for the payment of all "actual damages or injury done to the owner of the claims crossed" by such tunnel. Baillie v. Larson, (1905) 138 Fed. 177.

Vol. V, p. 55, sec. 2347.

An attempt to acquire land.—Of similar effect to the original note and following the case there cited, see U. S. v. Portland Coal, etc., Co., (1908) 173 Fed. 566.

Bona fide purchasers.—In U. S. v. Allen, (1910) 180 Fed. 855, it appeared that a corporation was formed to take over two patented coal land claims, the patents being in fact voidable, having been illegally obtained, one of the incorporators being father of the patent holder, and he and another incorporator having been parties to the transaction whereby the patents were obtained. The holder of the patent subscribed for all but four shares of the capital stock and sold to the corporation the two claims in payment of her subscription. Upon issuance to her of the shares she immediately transferred part of them to the treasurer of the company to be sold for the company's use. She was made secretary of the corporation, and her father manager, and they continued to hold those offices until the time of the suit, covering a period of five years. It was held that the corporation was not a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, precluding the government from proceeding to cancel the patents, as one holding a voidable patent to public lands cannot protect himself against the process of the government by forming a corporation in which he is the dominant factor and conveying to it the premises which he has acquired in violation of law.

Combination to procure title in behalf of a single association in excess of amount allowed.—Where two persons were engaged in an unlawful combination to procure title in behalf of a single association to an area of coal lands in excess of the limits prescribed by law, that only two claims aggregating 320 acres allowed by this section were actually patented to them, would not make the patents valid; the unlawful combination making the proceeding illegal from the beginning. U. S. v. Allen, (1910) 180 Fed. 855.

Evidence.—In U. S. v. Allen, (1910) 180 Fed. 855, the evidence was held to show that two patents of public coal lands running to two persons were acquired as part of a general plan for procuring title in behalf of a single association to an area of coal lands in excess of the limits prescribed by law.

Sale of entry.—Under this and the following sections authorizing individuals to enter 160 acres of vacant public coal lands, and associations to enter 320 acres, and prohibiting more than one entry by each person or association, one who has perfected an entry can sell or dispose of it as he pleases, and an individual or corporation can purchase as many entries made by others as he or it pleases, regardless of the entryman's intent to sell at the time of entry. Ireland v. Henkle, (1910) 179 Fed. 993.

This section was cited in Pereles v. Weil, (1907) 157 Fed. 419; Leonard v. Lennox, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 760; U. S. v. Doughten, (1911) 186 Fed. 227.

Right to coal incidentally removed in course of lawful development work.—Under sections 2347-2352, a qualified individual or association who, in response to the government's invitation, enters upon public lands in search of coal deposits, and expends time, labor, and means in an honest effort to open and develop such deposits when found, intending to purchase the lands according to the statute if the coal proves to be such as to give character and value to them, is not a trespasser, but is in the exercise of a privilege conferred by law, and is entitled to such coal as is extracted and removed as an incident only to the reasonable prosecution of that work. Ghost v. U. S., (1909) 168 Fed. 841, 94 C. C. A. 253.

This section was cited in U. S. v. Doughten, (1911) 186 Fed. 226.

Vol. V, p. 56, sec. 2350.

Entry for disqualified principal.—The prohibition against more than one entry of coal lands by the same person, which is made by this section, prohibits a qualified person from entering such lands apparently for himself, but in fact as the agent for a person who is himself disqualified because he has already purchased the full quantity permitted by law. U. S. v. Keitel, (1908) 211 U. S. 370, 29 S. Ct. 123, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 230; U. S. v. Forrester, (1908) 211 U. S. 399, 29 S. Ct. 132, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 245.

This section was cited in U. S. v. Doughten, (1911) 186 Fed. 226.

This section was cited in U. S. v. Doughten, (1911) 186 Fed. 226; U. S. v. Munday, (1911) 186 Fed. 375.

Vol. V, p. 58, sec. 6.

Duty of mine owner.—This section is sufficiently complied with where air is forced through to certain working places in a mine and the places not fit for working places on account of the accumulation of gas are properly dead-lined, signals being there placed warning employees not to enter such places. Central Coal, etc., Co. v. Gregory, (1906) 78 Ark. 43, 93 S. W. 56.

Negligence of fellow servants.—In an action by a servant, under this Act requiring working places in coal mines to be properly ventilated, for injuries received as a result of an explosion of gas in a coal mine, evidence that the defendant had forced air through to the working places in the mine, dead-lining such places as were not safe, and that, with knowledge of such danger signals, and of the defendant's rules forbidding employees to cross such dead lines, certain of defendant's employees did cross the lines with open lamps, thereby igniting the gas, which exploded, was held to show that the injury was caused solely by the negligence of plaintiff's fellow servants. Central Coal, etc., Co. v. Gregory, (1906) 78 Ark. 43, 93 S. W. 56.

Vol. V, p. 61, sec. 1.

Construction of statute.—While the purpose of this Act was to prevent injuries from the discharge of debris from hydraulic mines, it was not intended to exonerate the miner from liability therefor, nor to limit the powers of the state courts to protect private property from threatened injury, and to redress inflicted injury thereto from the operation of hydraulic mines, though carried on under a permit and in strict compliance with the plans of the commission. Sutter County v. Nicols, (1908) 152 Cal. 688, 93 Pac. 872.

Vol. V, p. 63, sec. 12.

Purpose of notice.—The provisions of this Act directing notice to be given and authorizing a hearing at which all persons interested may appear were not intended to conclude and estop the owners of lands below with respect to subsequent injuries that might be inflicted, but were designed to enable the commission in reaching its decision to obtain all aid which it could derive from the suggestions of all interested persons. Sutter County v. Nicols, (1908) 152 Cal. 688, 93 Pac. 872.

MONEY PAID INTO COURT.

Vol. V, p. 70, sec. 995.

For cases citing this section see U. S. v. Mason, (1910) 218 U. S. 517, 31 S. Ct. 28, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1133; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Harsha, (1904) 134 Fed. 217, 67 C. C. A. 145; Butte, etc., Consol. Min. Co. v. Montana

Vol. V, p. 71, sec. 996.

Amendment unconstitutional.—This section in so far as it required money deposited in a federal court unclaimed for ten years to be turned over to the United States, was unconstitutional, as depriving the owners thereof of their property without due process of law. American L. & T. Co. v. Grand Rivers Co., (1908) 159 Fed. 775, wherein the court said: "We need not contend, in respect to property of which there is no individual ownership ascertainable, that the powers of the appropriate government may not be exerted to forfeit or escheat it, but if a government inherently possesses such a right and might enforce it by due proceedings, the proposition here is to enforce or assert the right by mere legislative enactment without any proceeding whatever, either by a court or by a duly authorized public officer. In many of the states, and in all other countries where the common law has prevailed, so far as we can ascertain, there must be a proceeding instituted—formerly a writ of escheat or inquest of office—in which either actual or constructive notice is given to all persons in interest before a judgment declaring the property to have been forfeited or to have escheated can be entered by a court. Here Congress has undertaken to take the power of adjudication or ascertainment from the courts in whose hands the property is, and to whose credit it had been placed in a depository, and itself to exercise that power, making indeed not the 'court' but the 'judge' the person to execute its decree, ipso facto the lapse of a certain length of time, all without requiring notice to anybody (not even the parties to the suit) and without any power in the court to exercise any discretion even though the litigation might still be in progress. . . . It will also be remembered that the Constitution of the United States, which definitely fixes the rights surrendered by the states to the nation, makes no provision for escheats, and though article 3, section 3, gives Congress the power to declare the punishment of treason, yet, even as to treason, it provides that no forfeiture of property shall be for more than 'the life of the person attainted.' Section 996, Rev. Stat., proposes much more, and that not for the high crime of treason, but for mere neglect or omission to claim what is one's own. Furthermore, escheats are always bottomed upon the fundamental proposition that an owner of property has died entirely without heirs. If any heirs are found the escheat always fails. Section 996 does not proceed upon any notion that there are no heirs, nor does it make any provision for ascertaining the facts in the premises, but goes altogether upon a mere failure for ten years to withdraw money from the court's registry, thus entirely ignoring the prime factor in escheats, namely, failure of heirs, and arbitrarily forfeits the money to the government. All that is necessary is the lapse of ten years. Now, there is nothing magical in the period of ten years fixed in the statute. If that period may be fixed so may one of five years, or of one year, or one month, and Congress might as well assume the judicial function and once for all direct the court or the judge thereof to make any other order in a case; as one requiring money, under the control of the court, but payable ultimately to the persons entitled, to be paid over to the United States although the United States is not a party to the litigation, and shows no right to the money unless the statute ex proprio vigore confers it."

For other cases citing this section see U. S. v. Mason, (1910) 218 U. S. 517, 31 S. Ct. 28, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1133; U. S. v. Abeel, (1909) 174 Fed. 12, 98 C. C. A. 50.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Vol. V, p. 79, sec. 5133.

State control and regulation.—To the same effect as the original note, Larabee v. Dolley, (1909) 175 Fed. 365; Elizabeth First Nat. Bank v. Com., (1911) 143 Ky. 816, 137 S. W. 518; Farmers' Deposit Nat. Bank v. Western Pennsylvania Fuel Co., (1906) 215 Pa. St. 115, 64 Atl. 374; Green v. Bennett, (Tex. 1908) 110 S. W. 108; State v. Clement Nat. Bank, (Vt. 1911) 78 Atl. 944.

The rule that a state can exercise no control over a national bank, or in any manner affect its operation except as Congress may permit, excepts the bank only from such legislation as tends to impair its utility as an instrumentality of the federal government.

Vol. V, p. 81, sec. 5134.

Residence.—Under this section it was held that a national bank, the articles of which fixed its principal place of business at Johnson City, Tenn., should be regarded as a resident of that state, within the Tennessee statute (Acts Tenn. 1877, p. 45, ch. 31, sec. 5), giving to resident creditors of an insolvent foreign corporation priority in the payment of debts over all other creditors. In re Standard Oak Veneer Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 105.

Vol. V, p. 82, sec. 5136.

NOTES ON SECTION 5136.

- I. IN GENERAL, 1500.
- II. AUTHORITY OF OFFICERS, 1500.
- III. BANKING POWERS, 1501.

I. IN GENERAL.

Nature of deposits.—The deposits of a national bank constitute loans to it and confer on the depositor a mere chose in action. State v. Clement Nat. Bank, (Vt. 1911) 78 Atl. 944.

By-laws.—A by-law of a national bank necessitating the production of an old certificate of stock before the issuance of a new certificate to take its place will not impair the authority of the court to order the bank to issue a new certificate of stock where the one in possession of the old certificate after service of constructive process fails to appear. Letcher v. German Nat. Bank, (1909) 134 Ky. 24, 119 S. W. 236.

Other officers.—A "solicitor of business" is not within the phrase "and other officers," in the fifth clause of this section, giving a national bank power to appoint a president, vice-president, cashier, and other officers, and dismiss such officers at pleasure; but under clauses 3 and 7 of said section, empowering such a bank to make contracts and to exercise, by duly authorized officers or agents, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary

State v. Clement Nat. Bank, (Vt. 1911) 78 Atl. 944.

In Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Ford, (1907) 124 Ky. 403, 99 S. W. 260, it was held that a state statute placing notes payable and negotiable at banks organized in the state under the state or federal laws, and indorsed to, or discounted by, any such bank, on the same footing as foreign bills of exchange, violates no rights secured to national banks by Acts of Congress, such banks being subject to the control of the state in which they are situated, as regards the construction of contracts, the transfer of property, or creation of debts and liability to suit.

ute (Acts Tenn. 1877, p. 45, ch. 31, sec. 5), giving to resident creditors of an insolvent foreign corporation priority in the payment of debts over all other creditors. In re Standard Oak Veneer Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 105.

to carry on the banking business, it may employ a solicitor of business for a year. Case v. Brooklyn First Nat. Bank, (1908) 59 Misc. 269, 109 N. Y. S. 1119.

II. AUTHORITY OF OFFICERS.

In general.—A national bank has power under the banking laws of the United States to intrust to its agents such authority as is required to meet the legitimate demands of its authorized business and to conduct its affairs within the scope of its charter. Ricker Nat. Bank v. Stone, (1908) 21 Okla. 833, 97 Pac. 577.

Borrowing money.—The executive officers of a national bank may legitimately borrow money for the bank's use, in the usual course of business, without special authority from their board of directors. Cherry v. Kansas City Nat. Bank, (1906) 144 Fed. 587, 75 C. C. A. 343.

President.—Where the president of a bank certified a noncommercial instrument for the accommodation of the drawers solely in his official capacity and ultra vires the bank's powers, he was not individually liable on such certificate. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, (1908) 48 Tex. Civ. App. 301, 106 S. W. 782.

Under this Act, which authorizes banks to elect boards of directors to which are committed the management and control of the bank, and which are empowered to select one of their number as president, in the absence of any by-law or any other fact extending the authority of the president elected by the directors, a statement by him that a note which was in fact a forgery was properly signed by the purported signer is without authority from the bank and not binding upon it. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Cuero First Nat. Bank, (1904) 97 Tex. 536, 80 S. W. 601, reversing (1903) 77 S. W. 239.

In absence of evidence that the president and cashier of a national bank were the agents of a depositor in transferring to their account money of the depositor, which they agreed to loan on real estate security, and that the depositor knew at any time that they were acting for her in that capacity, it was held that the bank and its receiver were liable to the depositor for her funds so transferred, though it could not lend money on such security. Short v. Butler, (1909) 136 Mo. App. 356, 117 S. W. 114.

Vice-president.—In an action on a note representing a loan made by plaintiff national bank to the defendant, where it appeared that the negotiations for the loan were carried on by one M., plaintiff's vice-president, and that as a result of such negotiations the loan was made to defendant, M. was an agent of the bank, and evidence as to what officers regularly had authority to make loans was immaterial. National Bank of North America v. Thomas, (1910) 30 R. I. 294, 74 Atl. 1092.

Cashier.—The cashier of a national bank, who is its active executive officer and is intrusted with the duty of selling lands acquired by the bank in satisfaction of debts, and who has authority to employ a broker to sell such lands, acts within the scope of his authority in designating to the broker the lands to be offered for sale, and a mistake in such designation is likewise within the scope of his authority, and is in effect the act of the bank, for which it is responsible. Arnold v. National Bank, (1905) 126 Wis. 362, 105 N. W. 828.

In contemplation of law, the leasing of property belonging to a national banking association is not within the ordinary powers and duties of the cashier of the bank. Sponberg v. Montpelier First Nat. Bank, (1910) 18 Idaho 524, 110 Pac. 716.

Discount clerk.—In Slade v. Bennett, (1909) 133 App. Div. 666, 118 N. Y. S. 278, it was held that the discount clerk of a national bank had no authority by virtue of his office or his agency resulting from the assignment to him of a bond and mortgage for the use of the bank to secure a debt due to the bank to bind the bank by a stipulation in a suit to which it was not a party, to the effect that he was the holder and owner of the bond and mortgage, where he had executed an unrecorded assignment thereof to the bank.

III. BANKING POWERS.

Ultra vires acts.—To the same effect as the original note, The Seattle, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 284; Independence First Nat.

Bank v. Shewalter, (1911) 153 Mo. App. 635, 134 S. W. 42.

Right of bank to plead ultra vires acts as defense.—In an action against a national bank for breach of contract, a plea that defendant was a national bank, and had no authority to carry out the contract on its part, was good. Metropolitan Stock Exch. v. Lyndonville Nat. Bank, (1904) 76 Vt. 303, 57 Atl. 101.

The want of authority of a national bank to become the absolute owner, in satisfaction of a debt, of shares represented by transferable certificates in a partnership formed to purchase, improve, divide into lots, and sell a leasehold, is a valid defense to an action against it founded upon its liability for the partnership debts. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Wehrmann, (1906) 202 U. S. 295, 26 S. Ct. 613, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1036.

Where the president and cashier of a bank had no authority to certify a noncommercial instrument by which the drawers sought to indemnify their surety on a building contractor's bond for any liability the surety might sustain by virtue of such bond, it was held that the bank was not estopped to plead that the certification of such instrument was ultra vires and void. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, (1908) 48 Tex. Civ. App. 301, 106 S. W. 782.

Accounting for benefits received.—A national bank, having lawfully received property, must account for it or its proceeds, notwithstanding some ultra vires agreement connected with the transaction; and it cannot escape liability to a depositor for money which he placed in its hands by pleading that it made with him an ultra vires agreement to pay out the money to some third person on deposit of collaterals for his benefit, when the evidence shows it paid out the money without taking the collaterals agreed on. Decatur First Nat. Bank v. Henry, (1906) 159 Ala. 367, 49 So. 97.

A national bank which, in pursuance of a previous agreement with its debtor that he will devote to the discharge of his indebtedness a part of the proceeds of a loan to be obtained by him from another bank, requests the making of such loan, and guarantees its payment at maturity, must account to the lending bank for the sum which it receives for its own use in the execution of the agreement, even though such guaranty is beyond its powers under the national banking statutes. Citizens' Cent. Nat. Bank v. Appleton, (1910) 216 U. S. 196, 30 S. Ct. 364, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 443, affirming (1908) 190 N. Y. 417, 83 N. E. 470.

Action to rescind a contract.—In an action to rescind for fraud a contract as a part of which a national bank agreed to discount notes and renew them from time to time until they were discharged as provided, it was held to be immaterial whether the agreement by the bank was beyond its powers under the federal statutes; the action being not to enforce, but to rescind, the contract. Baker v. Berry Hill Mineral Springs Co., (1909) 109 Va. 776, 65 S. E. 656.

Estoppel.—An act of a national bank, void because ultra vires, cannot be made good by estoppel. Merchants' Bank v. Baird, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 642.

Collection and security of debts.—A national bank may not become the absolute owner, in satisfaction of a debt, of shares represented by transferable certificates in a partnership formed to purchase, improve, divide into lots, and sell a leasehold. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Wehrmann, (1906) 202 U. S. 295, 26 S. Ct. 613, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1036.

A national bank, which, in the usual course of its business, has become the owner of notes secured by mortgage, may lawfully agree with others holding conflicting mortgages on the same property, to represent all in an action to enforce the security, their respective rights in the proceeds to be subsequently determined, where such action was deemed best for its own interests, and, when vested with title to the other mortgages by proper assignments, its right to maintain the suit cannot be questioned by the defendant on the ground that its agreement was ultra vires. Morris v. Springfield Third Nat. Bank, (1905) 142 Fed. 25, 73 C. C. A. 211.

Borrowing money.—The notes of a national bank, given when embarrassed by pressing demands, in part consideration of the assumption by the payee of all its outstanding obligations, secured by a pledge of all its assets remaining after turning over cash and such bills receivable as the payee would accept at par, are its valid obligations, which can be enforced against its stockholders after voluntary liquidation. Wyman v. Wallace, (1908) 201 U. S. 230, 26 S. Ct. 495, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 738, affirming (1904) 135 Fed. 286, 68 C. C. A. 40; Frenzer v. Wallace, (1906) 201 U. S. 244, 26 S. Ct. 498, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 742.

Loan of credit.—A national bank has no power or authority to become a mere accommodation indorser or guarantor of the payment of a debt of another, without benefit to the bank. Barnwell Bank v. Philadelphia Sixth Nat. Bank, (1905) 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 413; Fidelity, etc., Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, (1908) 48 Tex. Civ. App. 301, 106 S. W. 782.

Agreement to pay draft.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note, National Bank v. Philadelphia Sixth Nat. Bank, (1905) 212 Pa. St. 238, 61 Atl. 889; Barnwell Bank v. Philadelphia Sixth Nat. Bank, (1905) 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 413.

Contra.—It is not ultra vires for a national bank to promise to honor a draft upon a patron. Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank v. Illinois Nat. Bank, (1908) 146 Ill. App. 136.

Guaranty of paper.—While a national bank in negotiating its paper can bind itself for the payment thereof by its indorsement thereon, it cannot guarantee payment of paper of others or become surety thereon, solely for such other's benefit. Tallapoosa First Nat. Bank v. Monroe, (1911) 135 Ga. 614, 69 S. E. 1123; Appleton v. Citizens' Cent. Nat. Bank, (1906) 116 App. Div. 404, 101 N. Y. S. 1027; Fidelity, etc., Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, (1908) 48 Tex. Civ. App. 301, 106 S. W. 782.

Where a national bank, in order to induce a person to purchase certain steamship stocks owned by it, agreed to take such person's note for $50,000 for the stock and hold the stock as collateral security, and to guarantee him against any loss in the transaction from the execution and delivery of the note, it was held that such guaranty was not an ordinary commercial guaranty, but one outside the ordinary business of banking, and ultra vires. Barron v. McKinnon, (1910) 179 Fed. 759.

A national bank lent to one of its customers, a private corporation, an amount greater than ten per cent. of its unimpaired capital stock and surplus, in violation of R. S. sec. 5200, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 139, as amended by Act Cong. June 22, 1906, ch. 3516, 34 Stat. L. 451, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 353. The cashier of the bank, who was secretary and treasurer of the borrower, notified another of such fact and induced him to lend the bank's borrower an additional sum upon the guaranty of the cashier individually, and of the bank through the cashier, of the payment thereof. It was held that the bank could not ratify such ultra vires act of the cashier, and that the cashier's object in inducing the other person to make the loan was to secure to the bank payment of the amount lent by it, and to release the cashier from his liability in making the excessive loan, and that the bank received a considerable portion of the amount borrowed from it did not estop it from setting up the invalidity of its guaranty. Tallapoosa First Nat. Bank v. Monroe, (1911) 135 Ga. 614, 69 S. E. 1123.

A state bank, at the request of a national bank, loaned $12,000 to a third person on his personal obligation. The national bank guaranteed the repayment of the loan. The third person, pursuant to his previous agreement with the national bank, paid to it $10,000 of the loan, though he was not indebted to it in any amount. It was held that the national bank's contract of guaranty was void as ultra vires, and that no action could be maintained thereon. Appleton v. Citizens' Cent. Nat. Bank, (1906) 116 App. Div. 404, 101 N. Y. S. 1027.

A national bank may warrant the title to property it conveys, or become liable as an indorser or guarantor of obligations which it rediscounts or sells, but it cannot lend its credit to another by becoming surety, indorser, or guarantor for him, such an act being ultra vires, and, when its true character is known, no rights grow out of it, though it has taken on in part the garb of a lawful transaction. Merchants' Bank v. Baird, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 642.

Effect of ultra vires act.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note, Appleton v. Citizens' Cent. Nat. Bank, (1908) 190 N. Y. 417, 83 N. E. 470, reversing (1907) 119 App. Div. 889, 105 N. Y. S. 1105.

Notice of invalidity of transaction.—In Merchants' Bank v. Baird, (1908) 160 Fed. 642, 90 C. C. A. 338, it was held that a state bank was chargeable with notice that the credit and resources of a national bank were being unlawfully used, barring recovery against the national bank's receiver on checks on the national bank by a corporation, where the national bank's president had written the state bank obligating his bank unconditionally to pay all checks of the corporation, not aggregating more than $5,000 weekly, and the national bank afterwards wired that it would "protect" the corporation's checks for $5,000 weekly in excess of "present guaranty," and later that the state bank would pay checks in excess of "guaranty" drawn during the current week.

Dealing in stocks of other corporations. — It is ultra vires of a national bank to take stock in a corporation organized to embark in the purely speculative business of buying and selling the stocks and assets of an existing and insolvent corporation, with power, but without the obligation, to engage, as an independent enterprise, in a manufacturing business, although the bank takes such stock in exchange for a claim against the insolvent corporation. Ottawa First Nat. Bank v. Converse, (1906) 200 U. S. 425, 26 S. Ct. 306, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 537.

A national bank, which in the ordinary course of business receives stock as collateral security for a loan, may protect itself from loss by taking the stock in payment of the loan. Westminster Nat. Bank v. New England Electrical Works, (1906) 73 N. H. 465, 62 Atl. 971.

Stock of other national banks. — A national bank has no power to invest its surplus fund in the stock of another national bank. Shaw v. National German-American Bank, (1905) 199 U. S. 603, 26 S. Ct. 750, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 328, affirming (1904) 132 Fed. 658, 65 C. C. A. 620.

The purchase of national bank stock for speculation by a national bank is ultra vires. Metropolitan Trust Co. v. McKinnon, (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 846.

Liability as stockholder. — Want of authority of a national bank to subscribe for capital stock in a speculative enterprise is a valid defense to an action against it to enforce its statutory liability as a stockholder. Shaw v. National German-American Bank, (1905) 199 U. S. 603, 26 S. Ct. 750, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 328, affirming (1904) 132 Fed. 658, 65 C. C. A. 620; Ottawa First Nat. Bank v. Converse, (1906) 200 U. S. 425, 26 S. Ct. 306, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 537.

Loans and discounts. — A national bank may lawfully acquire title to commercial paper, although it may be unable to show that it has made a profit upon the purchase of the paper. Blairsville Nat. Bank v. Crabbs, (1910) 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 454.

Security for loans. — Under this section prescribing the powers of national banks, authorizing them to take personal property as security for loans or for bills of exchange purchased by them, but not to deal in merchandise of any kind, the fact that the transfer to a national bank of bills of lading attached to drafts on a purchaser of hay amounted to a sale of the hay would not entitle the final purchaser to recover from the bank for deficiency in the quality of the hay, since the transaction would be ultra vires. Leonhardt v. Small, (1906) 117 Tenn. 153, 96 S. W. 1051, 6 L. R. A. N. S. 887.

Independent business enterprises. — Where a national bank took over the operation of a creamery corporation which was largely indebted to it, and continued the operation of the creamery until a receiver was appointed for the bank, at which time it held certain funds actually identified in trust for the patrons of the creamery, it was no answer to the receiver's obligation to pay over such funds that the bank had no power to engage in the creamery business. Emigh v. Earling, (1908) 134 Wis. 565, 115 N. W. 128.

Assuming obligations of an insolvent bank. — Where a contract by which a national bank assumed all the obligations of an insolvent bank in contemplated liquidation was fully explained at a meeting at which 1,665 out of 2,000 shares were represented, and after the contract was executed it was ratified by a vote exceeding the proportion of stock specified by R. S. secs. 5220, 5221, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 166, 167, the stockholders were not thereafter entitled to claim that such contract was ultra vires. George v. Wallace, (1904) 135 Fed. 286, 68 C. C. A. 40.

Certification of noncommercial checks. — Under this section, empowering national banks to perform all acts incident to the carrying on of banking business by discounting or negotiating notes, bills of exchange, or other evidence of debt, and by loaning money on personal security, etc., a bank had no power to certify an instrument by which the drawers agreed to pay their surety any amount the surety might be legally required to pay by virtue of such suretyship, not exceeding $10,159, the check to be void in the absence of such liability; such instrument not being a commercial check, drawn in the ordinary course of banking business. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, (1908) 48 Tex. Civ. App. 301, 106 S. W. 782.

Savings bank business. — A national bank is not a savings bank, and it cannot transact the same kind of business that a savings bank is incorporated to do, and, though a national bank has a savings department, it does not receive deposits to be invested in specified securities under the supervision of the bank commissioners, and it does not hold the deposits on a trust creating the relation of trustee and cestui que trust, but on a contract creating the relation of debtor and creditor. State v. People's Nat. Bank, (1908) 75 N. H. 27, 70 Atl. 542. See also Barrett v. Bloomfield Sav. Inst., (1904) 66 N. J. Eq. 431, 57 Atl. 1131.

If a national bank attempts to compete with a savings institution, the latter should appeal to the law to prevent the national bank from seeking savings deposits. Barrett v. Bloomfield Sav. Inst., (1904) 66 N. J. Eq. 431, 57 Atl. 1131, affirming (1903) 64 N. J. Eq. 425, 54 Atl. 543.

Nature of agreement to pay interest. — A national bank receiving money from depositors for investment, under an agreement to pay a fixed rate of interest thereon, is a debtor to the depositors for the deposits and interest, for the interest agreed to be paid on the money received is not in the nature of a dividend of profits realized from the successful management of the bank, but the depositors' security depends on the general solvency of the bank. State v. People's Nat. Bank, (1908) 75 N. H. 27, 70 Atl. 542.

Member of partnership.—A national bank cannot be a member of a partnership, or become liable as a partner. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Wehrmann, (1903) 69 Ohio St. 160, 88 N. E. 1004.

In Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Wehrmann, (1903) 69 Ohio St. 160, 88 N. E. 1004, it appeared that a customer of a national bank, being largely indebted to it, and being in failing circumstances, and being the owner of nine shares in a partnership consisting of forty shares, each evidenced by a certificate transferable on the books of the firm, transferred his nine shares to the bank to secure payment of his indebtedness, the bank becoming the owner of such shares. It was held not to make the bank a partner, but a part owner in severalty of the property then owned by the partnership, and liable for nine-fortieths of the debts and expenses in purchasing, improving, and disposing of the firm property.

Procuring signature to a note for another bank.—The procurement of a signature to a note for another bank, in order that it may lend money to a third person, and a representation that the signature is genuine, are not within the powers of a national bank, and it is not liable where the note turns out to be a forgery. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Cuero First Nat. Bank, (1904) 97 Tex. 536, 80 S. W. 601, reversing (1903) 77 S. W. 239.

Purchasing notes at less than face value.—The power to discount promissory notes and other evidences of debt expressly given to national banks by this section is sufficiently comprehensive to include the purchase of notes at less than their face value. Morris v. Springfield Third Nat. Bank, (1905) 142 Fed. 25, 73 C. C. A. 211.

Taking assignment of claims for collection.—A national bank may take an absolute assignment of a claim for collection, and agree to pay the proceeds or part thereof to another, and by such transfer the legal title passes to the bank, and its agent to collect the money thereon cannot refuse to pay it to the bank, on the ground that it had no legal right to own such claim. King v. Miller, (1908) 53 Ore. 53, 97 Pac. 542.

Vol. V, p. 90, sec. 1. [Act of July 12, 1882.]

Presumption of acceptance of extended charter.—Where a national bank continues its existence and performs the functions of such an association after the expiration of its original corporate existence for a long period of time, it will be presumed to have accepted the benefit of a certificate executed by the Comptroller of the Currency extending its corporate existence. Clement v. U. S., (1906) 149 Fed. 305, 79 C. C. A. 243.

Vol. V, p. 91, sec. 3.

Certificate as evidence.—Where a certificate of the Comptroller of the Currency recited that a certain bank had complied with all the provisions of this Act authorizing an extension of the corporate existence of such banks, and declared that the bank was authorized to have succession until Nov. 21, 1908, such certificate was conclusive evidence, in a prosecution of the president of the bank for violating the National Bank Act, of a compliance by the bank with all necessary conditions precedent to the extension of its charter. Clement v. U. S., (1906) 149 Fed. 305, 79 C. C. A. 243.

Vol. V, p. 91, sec. 5.

Liability of withdrawing shareholders.—Shareholders in a national bank which has extended its corporate existence, conformably to this Act, cease to be such upon the expiration of the original term of the bank's corporate life, and therefore cannot thereafter be chargeable with the personal liability for its debts, where they took the steps required of nonassenting stockholders in section 5 by giving notice of a desire to withdraw, and by appointing an appraiser to obtain a valuation of their shares. Apsey v. Kimball, (1911) 221 U. S. 514, 31 S. Ct. 695, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 834, affirming (1908) 164 Fed. 830, 90 C. C. A. 634.

Vol. V, p. 92, sec. 7.

Right to sue bank after expiration of charter.—An objection that a national bank whose charter had expired had no corporate existence for the purpose of being sued by a stockholder and cestui que trust of a special trust fund for the appointment of a receiver is without merit, under this section, extending their franchises, in such case "for the sole purpose of liquidating their affairs, until such affairs are finally closed." Cogswell v. Norwich Second Nat. Bank, (1903) 76 Conn. 252, 56 Atl. 574.

Improvement of real estate.—Where a national bank in flourishing condition had been for many years the rightful owner of a lot improved by its bank building, it had power to alter and enlarge the improvement thereon so as to furnish better accommodation for the bank's business, and at the same time provide offices which could be rented to tenants. Wingert v. Hagerstown First Nat. Bank, (1909) 175 Fed. 739, 99 C. C. A. 315.

Escheat.—The Kentucky statute (Ky. Stat., sec. 567, Russell's Stat., sec. 2153) providing for escheat of real property held by banks, not necessary to their business, for more than five years, was held not to be in conflict with this section, so that realty held by a national bank not necessary for its business for more than five years was subject to escheat. Elizabeth First Nat. Bank v. Com., (1911) 143 Ky. 816, 137 S. W. 518.

Effect of ultra vires act.—An objection that a corporation organized under the National Banking Act has no capacity to purchase land can only be raised by the federal government. De Witt County Nat. Bank v. Mickelberry, (1910) 244 Ill. 77, 91 N. E. 86; Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Jones, (1905) 95 Minn. 127, 103 N. W. 1017.

The United States alone can object to the want of authority of a national bank, under this section, to accept a conveyance of real property to be held in trust. Kerfoot v. Farmers', etc., Bank, (1910) 218 U. S. 281, 31 S. Ct. 14, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 1042, affirming (1898) 145 Mo. 418, 46 S. W. 1000.

The validity of a mortgage upon realty executed to a national bank can only be questioned by the federal government. Taylor v. Davidson, (Tex. 1909) 120 S. W. 1018.

A national bank may enforce a real estate mortgage assigned to an employee for its benefit, though it is subject to liability to the federal government for exceeding its powers. Slade v. Bennett, (1909) 133 App. Div. 666, 118 N. Y. S. 278.

Vol. V, p. 95, sec. 5138.

The capital stock of a national bank is the sum on which it is authorized to do business, constituting the permanent basis of its credit, and does not include the deposits of the bank. State v. Clement Nat. Bank, (Vt. 1911) 78 Atl. 944.

Vol. V, p. 96, sec. 5139.

Scope of notes.—This section has been construed most often in connection with R. S. sec. 5161, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 105, in relation to the individual liability of shareholders for debts. For convenience of the reader the cases on the question of liability, so far as they turn upon the question of ownership or transfer of the shares, are treated hereunder.

Control by bank.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note, Buffalo Third Nat. Bank v. Buffalo German Ins. Co., (1904) 193 U. S. 531, 24 S. Ct. 524, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 801.

To the same effect as the second paragraph of the original note and following McNeil v. New York Tenth Nat. Bank, (1871) 46 N. Y. 325, therein cited, Gray v. Fankhauser, (Ore. 1911) 115 Pac. 146.

Real and apparent owner.—As a general rule, the question of liability for an assessment on the shares of an insolvent national bank depends upon who was the actual owner of the stock when the operations of the bank were suspended. Hulitt v. Ohio Valley Nat. Bank, (1905) 137 Fed. 461, 69 C. C. A. 609, affirmed (1907) 204 U. S. 162, 27 S. Ct. 179, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 423.

A colorable transfer of shares of stock in a national bank, made for the benefit of the registered owner, cannot relieve the latter from his liability under R. S. sec. 5161, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 105, as a shareholder, for the debts of the bank. McDonald v. Dewey, (1906) 202 U. S. 510, 26 S. Ct. 731, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1128, reversing (1905) 134 Fed. 528, 67 C. C. A. 408.

Apparent holder.—One who was notified that shares of stock in a national bank had been transferred into his name, although he had in fact no interest therein, and who indorsed the certificates in blank, but took no steps to have the stock transferred to the name of the true owner, cannot avoid liability for an assessment thereon made by the controller to meet the debts of the bank after its insolvency. Kenyon v. Fowler, (1910) 215 U. S. 593, 30 S. Ct. 409, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 107, 83 C. C. A. 567.

Necessity of transfer on books of bank.—Neglect to have transfer made.—In Schofield v. Twining, (1904) 127 Fed. 486, it appeared that the defendant, prior to the failure of a national bank in which his son was a director, owned certain shares of the bank's stock, which he sold to his son, receiving in payment a demand note, secured by certain collateral. At the time of the sale the son promised that he would see that the shares were properly transferred, but he failed to do so. Defendant made no attempt to see that the stock was transferred, and it stood in his name on the books of the bank at the time of its failure. It was held that the son was prima facie the father's agent to transfer the shares, and that in the absence of proof that the transfer was in good faith, and of a prompt attempt to have the stock transferred on the books of the bank, the father was liable to assessment thereon.

As between the parties.—Failure to transfer stock in a national bank on the books of the bank, as required by this section, does not affect the validity of the transfer as between the parties, nor as to the person for whose benefit the stock was transferred. Larimer v. Beardsley, (1906) 130 Ia. 706, 107 N. W. 935.

Transfer in pledge.—For the purposes of the National Banking Act, the pledgor of stock not transferred on the books is to be regarded as the owner until and unless something further transpires which operates to transfer the ownership to another. Hulitt v. Ohio Valley Nat. Bank, (1905) 137 Fed. 461, 69 C. C. A. 609, affirmed (1907) 204 U. S. 162, 27 S. Ct. 179, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 423.

Transfer with knowledge of insolvency.—One who, with knowledge of the insolvency of a national bank, transfers his stock to an irresponsible vendee with intent to evade his liability under R. S. sec. 5151, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 105, for the debts of the bank, can only be held responsible for the unsatisfied debts existing when the fraudulent transfer was made, in view of the requirement of sec. 5210, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 152, that the list of the names and residences of all the shareholders and the number of shares held by each be kept by the bank, subject to the inspection of all shareholders and creditors, and of the provision of this section that every person becoming a shareholder by a transfer of shares to himself shall succeed to all the rights and liabilities of the prior holder of such shares, and that no change shall be made in the articles of association by which the rights, remedies, or securities of the existing creditors of the association shall be impaired. McDonald v. Dewey, (1906) 202 U. S. 510, 26 S. Ct. 731, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1128, reversing (1905) 134 Fed. 528, 67 C. C. A. 408.

The transferor of national bank stock cannot be made liable for an assessment upon the stock on the ground that the bank was insolvent at the time of the transfer, unless he knew of such insolvency, and intended to evade his liability. Vandagriff v. Rich Hill Bank, (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 823.

Knowledge of insolvency.—The fact that a stockholder in a national bank having a capital of $200,000, at the time he sold and transferred his stock, was a director and was dissatisfied with the management, was held not sufficient to charge him with knowledge of its insolvency, so as to render him liable for a subsequent assessment on the stock, although it was in fact insolvent, where its assets on their face largely exceed its liabilities, and it appeared that the directors were deceived as to their value. Fowler v. Crouse, (C. C. A. 1910) 175 Fed. 646.

Transfer to irresponsible party.—A stockholder in a national bank cannot evade his liability under R. S. sec. 5151, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 105, for the debts of the bank, by a transfer of his shares of stock to a person financially irresponsible, provided he knew or should have known at the time that the bank was then insolvent. McDonald v. Dewey, (1906) 202 U. S. 510, 26 S. Ct. 731, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1128, reversing (1905) 134 Fed. 528, 67 C. C. A. 408.

Rights of transferors in charged off assets.—Where assets of a national bank are charged off against withdrawn capital stock, and set apart in trust for the benefit of the then stockholders, a subsequent transfer of shares by the stockholders does not pass the right to the interest of the transferors in the trust fund, notwithstanding the provision of this section that transferees of national bank stock shall succeed to all the rights and liabilities of their transferors. Cogswell v. Second Nat. Bank, (1905) 78 Conn. 75, 60 Atl. 1059, affirmed (1907) 204 U. S. 1, 27 S. Ct. 241, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 343.

Similarly, shareholders at the time of the creation of the trust fund may at any time thereafter transfer their rights in the trust fund, with or without a transfer of their shares of stock. Cogswell v. Second Nat. Bank, (1905) 78 Conn. 75, 60 Atl. 1059, affirmed (1907) 204 U. S. 1, 27 S. Ct. 241, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 343.

Effect of transfer.—A stockholder in a national bank divests himself of the double liability imposed by the statute for the protection of creditors by a transfer of his stock when the bank is solvent, or even if insolvent by a bona fide transfer without knowledge of the insolvency; the only ground for holding him liable after a transfer being fraud. Fowler v. Crouse, (C. C. A. 1910) 175 Fed. 646.

Infants.—In Aldrich v. Bingham, (1904) 131 Fed. 363, it was held that a transfer of stock in a national bank, while it was a going concern, to the stockholder's infant children under five years of age, not legally liable to assume all the obligations of stockholders, did not relieve the father from his liability for assessments levied on the stock so transferred after the bank's insolvency.

Appointment of receiver by state court.—See under this title, vol. 5, p. 170, sec. 5234.

Vol. V, p. 103, sec. 5143.

Charging off assets.—A national bank, in charging off assets against capital stock withdrawn by consent of the Comptroller of the Currency, may list in the schedule of charged-off assets claims which are also and primarily listed at a lesser valuation as part of the capital stock. Cogswell v. Second Nat. Bank, (1905) 78 Conn. 75, 60 Atl. 1059, affirmed

(1907) 204 U. S. 1, 27 S. Ct. 241, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 343.

Special trust fund for original stockholders.—Under an averment in a complaint by an original stockholder of a national bank, for the appointment of a receiver, that a certain fund was set apart for the benefit of the original stockholders when they consented to a reduction of capital and by direction of the Comptroller of the Currency, it was held that an objection that no special trust fund ever existed, because the directors had no authority to make it, was without merit, since no reduction in capital could have been made under this section without the approval of the Comptroller, and it was fairly within his authority to condition his approval on the adoption of such measures as he might think proper to do justice to the holders of the original shares. Cogswell v. Norwich Second Nat. Bank, (1903) 76 Conn. 252, 56 Atl. 574.

Voting trust.—In Bridgers v. Tarboro First Nat. Bank, (1910) 152 N. C. 293, 67 S. E. 770, it appeared that a voting trust agreement between the majority stockholders of a national bank was intended to prevent the control of a majority of the stock passing by purchase into the hands of a stockholder seemingly persona non grata to many of them. It conferred on the trustees and their successors uncontrolled power to manage the bank for fifteen years. It gave the trustees unrestricted power to fill vacancies in their number and completely separated the legal and equitable ownership of the stock. The trustees were officers of the bank, forbidden by this section to act as proxies, but the agreement conferred an irrevocable representation by proxy for the term. It was not coupled with an interest, and by it the subscribers stripped themselves of their power to vote and to participate in the annual meetings at which are elected directors, each of whom is required by sections 5146 and 5147 to be the bona fide owner of at least ten shares of stock, and of their power to determine the bank's policy. The avowed purpose was to assure the subscribers of the undisturbed continuance of the existing conditions, except by an unanimous consent. The surrender of their duties was complete, and the power of the trustees to do as they saw fit was absolute. It was held that the agreement was against public policy and void.

Charging off bad and doubtful assets.—Under this section providing that the affairs of a national bank shall be managed by the directors, the directors may, on a reduction of the capital stock of the bank by a vote of the shareholders, approved by the Comptroller of the Currency on the assurance of the president and directors that bad and doubtful assets will be charged off and set aside for the benefit of the then shareholders, charge off the bad and doubtful assets as, in effect, a dividend from assets in excess of capital stock, and on so doing the right to receive the proceeds of the assets thus set apart is irrevocably vested in those who are shareholders on the date of the approval of the reduction of stock by the Comptroller of the Currency. Cogswell v. Second Nat. Bank, (1905) 78 Conn. 75, 60 Atl. 1059, affirmed (1907) 204 U. S. 1, 27 S. Ct. 241, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 343.

Liability of pledgee.—A bona fide pledgee of shares of the stock of a national banking association is not individually liable for its debts under this section. Williamson v. American Bank, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 66.

The pledgee of national bank stock as collateral security for a note, with power of public or private sale for the liquidation of the pledge, becomes the beneficial owner of such stock, and, as such, subject to the liability of a stockholder under this section, where, after the death of the pledgor, it causes the stock to be registered in the name of an employee with no beneficial interest, and afterwards indorses upon the note the supposed value of the stock as of the date of the credit, and presents the note, as reduced by the amount of such valuation, to the pledgor's administrator, who allows the claim in this form. Ohio Valley Nat. Bank v. Hulitt, (1907) 204 U. S. 162, 27 S. Ct. 179, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 423, affirming (1905) 137 Fed. 461, 69 C. C. A. 609.

Married women are liable.—The coverture of the legatee of shares of stock in a national bank when her name was placed upon the bank's books as a stockholder and when she received the certificate of stock does not protect her against a personal judgment at law for the amount due as a shareholder under an assessment made by the Comptroller of the Currency to pay the debts of the bank, although a married woman may be incapable, under the local law, of making or binding herself personally by contract, if such law does not incapacitate her from becoming an owner of such stock, by bequest or otherwise. Christopher v. Norvell, (1906) 201 U. S. 216, 26 S. Ct. 502, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 732, affirming (1905) 134 Fed. 842, 67 C. C. A. 438.

Liability of stockholders who vote against liquidation.—Valid obligations of a national bank may, after voluntary liquidation, be enforced against a stockholder who voted against the resolutions looking towards such liquidation, where the requisite amount of stock was voted in favor of that course. Poppleton v. Wallace, (1906) 201 U. S. 245, 26 S. Ct. 498, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 743, affirming (1904) 135 Fed. 286, 68 C. C. A. 40.

"Contracts, debts, and engagements."—Where a national bank assumed the debts of an insolvent bank contemplating liquidation, in consideration of a transfer of certain of the bank's available assets, and certain notes for the balance, such notes represented the "contracts, debts, and engagements" of the insolvent bank in equity, for which its stockholders were liable, as provided by this section. George v. Wallace, (1904) 135 Fed. 286, 68 C. C. A. 40, affirmed (1906) 201 U. S. 245, 26 S. Ct. 498, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 743.

Liability as affected by transfer of stock. — See under this title, vol. 5, p. 96, sec. 5139.

Vol. V, p. 106, sec. 2.

Effect of latter Acts. — This section was not repealed by Act July 12, 1882, ch. 290, sec. 4, 22 Stat. L. 163, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 194 note, providing that the jurisdiction for suits by or against any national bank, except suits between them and the United States, shall be the same as the jurisdiction for suits by or against state banks, nor by Act Aug. 13, 1888, ch. 866, sec. 4, 25 Stat. L. 436, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 193, declaring that all national banks, for the purpose of actions by or against them, shall be deemed citizens of the states in which they are respectively located, etc., as such latter sections relate exclusively to suits by or against banking associations themselves. George v. Wallace, (1904) 135 Fed. 286, 68 C. C. A. 40, affirmed (1906) 201 U. S. 230, 26 S. Ct. 495, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 738.

Who may maintain suit. — See George v. Wallace, (1904) 135 Fed. 286, 68 C. C. A. 40.

Limitation of actions. — A state statute of limitations does not begin to run against the right to enforce the individual liability of stockholders in a national bank until the amount of such liability has been ascertained and assessed by the Comptroller of the Currency. Rankin v. Barton, (1905) 199 U. S.

228, 26 S. Ct. 29, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 163, reversing (1904) 69 Kan. 629, 77 Pac. 531. See also King v. Armstrong, (1908) 9 Cal. App. 368, 99 Pac. 527.

In McClaine v. Rankin, (1905) 197 U. S. 154, 25 S. Ct. 410, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 702, it was held that the personal liability of shareholders in a national bank, under R. S. sec. 5151, for the contracts, debts, and engagements of the bank, cannot be regarded as a contract liability, for the purpose of making applicable the limitation prescribed by a state statute for an "action upon a contract or liability, express or implied, which is not in writing, and does not arise out of any written instrument."

Burden of proof. — One who relies upon a sale of shares of stock in a national bank, made with knowledge of its insolvency, to escape his liability as a shareholder under R. S. sec. 5151, for the debts of the bank, has the burden of proving that the vendee was financially responsible to the extent of the assessment. McDonald v. Dewey, (1906) 202 U. S. 510, 26 S. Ct. 731, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1128, reversing (1904) 134 Fed. 528, 67 C. C. A. 408.

Father holding stock for children. — R. S. sec. 5152 is not confined to express trusts, but applies to every one holding stock as trustee, and a father who invested funds belonging to his children in such stock, taken in his own name simply as "trustee," cannot be held personally liable for an assessment thereon, although the fund so invested arose from an investment of his own money previously made by him in their names and behalf. Fowler v. Gowing, (C. C. A. 1908) 105 Fed. 891, affirming (1907) 152 Fed. 801.

Determination of liability of trust estate. — Where the question of the liability of a trust estate for an assessment on shares of an insolvent national bank held by the trustee depends upon the power of the trustee, under the terms of the trust, to purchase such shares for the estate, such question cannot be determined in an action at law by the bank receiver against the stockholder, though it is alleged that he holds the stock as trustee. Hampton v. Foster, (1904) 127 Fed. 468.

Where stock in a national bank at the time of its failure was held by a trustee for the benefit of his children, the fact that the trust estate was wiped out of existence, so far as value or financial responsibility was concerned, by the failure of the bank, did not charge the trustee individually as a stockholder with the additional statutory liability imposed by this section. Fowler v. Gowing, (1907) 152 Fed. 801.

Amendment. — This section was amended by Act of March 4, 1907, ch. 2913, 34 Stat. L. 1289, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 355.

Vol. V, p. 109, sec. 5154.

Conversion of banks organized under territorial laws. — The conversion of a bank, organized under the territorial laws, into a national bank transfers the assets of the former to the latter, which succeeds thereto by operation of law, and not as a purchaser. People's Nat. Bank v. Kingfisher County, (Okla, 1908) 103 Pac. 692,

Rights of shareholders.—Where a stockholder in a state bank, after its reorganization as a national bank, accepted dividends on his individual shares, and in view of the tender age of certain children, to whom he had transferred part of his stock, it might be presumed that he also received dividend checks made payable by the bank to the order of such children, he was estopped to deny his liability for assessments levied on such stock by the Comptroller on the insolvency of the bank on the ground that he did not expressly assent to the reorganization of the bank. Aldrich v. Bingham, (1904) 131 Fed. 363.

Amendment.—This section was amended by Act of May 30, 1908, ch. 229, 35 Stat. L. 548, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 361.

Vol. V, p. 124, sec. 5191.

Appointment of receiver by state court.—See under this title, vol. 5, p. 170, sec. 5234.

Vol. V, p. 130, sec. 5197.

Constitutionality.—To the same effect as the original note, Schlesinger v. Gilhooly, (1907) 189 N. Y. 1, 81 N. E. 619, affirming (1906) 116 App. Div. 914, 101 N. Y. S. 1143.

Highest rate allowed by state law.—By compounding interest oftener than is permitted by a state law, a national bank charges interest at a higher rate than that allowed by the laws of the state, within the meaning of this section, although the compounded interest is less than the state laws permit to be charged directly without compounding. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Donnell, (1904) 195 U. S. 369, 25 S. Ct. 49, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 238, affirming (1903) 172 Mo. 384, 72 S. W. 925.

I. EFFECT OF USURY GENERALLY.

This section is constitutional.—Schlesinger v. Gilhooly, (1907) 189 N. Y. 1, 81 N. E. 619, affirming (1906) 116 App. Div. 914, 101 N. Y. S. 1143.

The validity of the contract.—To the same effect as the original note, Meadors v. Johnson, (1910) 27 Okla. 544, 112 Pac. 1121.

II. PAYMENT OF USURY.

Extension or renewal notes.—To the same effect as the original note, Jacksboro First Nat. Bank v. Lasater, (1905) 196 U. S. 115, 25 S. Ct. 206, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 408, reversing (Tex. 1902) 72 S. W. 1054.

Renewal note by surety.—A discharge of a note by a surety by giving his own note in renewal thereof does not operate as a payment by the principal in such sense as to entitle him to avail himself of the federal statute authorizing the recovery from a national bank of twice the amount of usurious interest paid to the bank, nor does the subsequent payment of the renewal note by the surety operate to give the principal a cause of action under such statute. Lasater v. Jacksboro First Nat. Bank, (1905) 40 Tex. Civ. App. 237, 38 S. W. 429.

Partial payments.—To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note, Richmond Second Nat. Bank v. Fitzpatrick, (1905) 84 S. W. 1150, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 283; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Donnell, (1903) 172 Mo. 384, 72 S. W. 925.

III. FORFEITURE OF INTEREST.

Personal defense.—Where two persons execute a note to a national bank and one of them pays usurious interest thereon, the other cannot take advantage of such payment in an action by the bank to collect the note, as the party paying the interest or his legal representative alone has a right of action to recover the penalty for receiving such interest, and such payment cannot be set up as an offset or defense in an action brought by the bank on the note. Trabue v. Cook, (Tex. 1910) 124 S. W. 455.

An accommodation maker of a note given to a national bank can set up the defense of usury to defeat the recovery of interest. Trabue v. Cook, (Tex. 1910) 124 S. W. 455.

Set-off.—In an action by a national bank on a note defendant can, under this section, reduce the recovery by the amount of usury included in the note, but for illegal interest paid he must bring action. National Bank v. Lynch, (W. Va. 1911) 71 S. E. 389.

Note in excess of amount received and interest.—Where a note is given for a sum in excess of the amount actually received and proper interest thereon, a forfeiture of the entire interest on the loan is warranted. Wagoner Nat. Bank v. Welch, (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 259, 104 S. W. 611.

Recovery of principal.—Under this section providing that knowingly charging usurious interest forfeits all interest, a national bank holding for value and innocently a bond and mortgage tainted with usury may recover the principal due. Slade v. Squier, (1909) 133 App. Div. 666, 118 N. Y. S. 278.

Election to remit excessive interest.—A national bank, whose action on a promissory note is met by the plea of usury, may not avoid the forfeiture of the entire interest, imposed by this section in absolute terms, by then declaring an election to remit the excessive interest. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Donnell, (1904) 195 U. S. 369, 25 S. Ct. 49, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 238, affirming (1903) 172 Mo. 384, 72 S. W. 925.

A national bank, which has made a twelve per cent. charge on overdrafts, where eight per cent. is the highest rate of interest permitted by the state laws, cannot escape the forfeiture prescribed by this section where a greater rate of interest is charged than the state laws allow, because of the trifling amount, or on the theory that the charge is a penalty because of the failure to pay a debt when due. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Donnell, (1904) 195 U. S. 369, 25 S. Ct. 49, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 238, affirming (1903) 172 Mo. 384, 72 S. W. 925.

IV. PENALTY.

Actual payment necessary.—To the same effect as the original note, Abbeville First Nat. Bank v. Clark, (1909) 161 Ala. 497, 49 So. 807.

The payment of the principal sum.—To the same effect as the original note, McCarthy v. Rapid City First Nat. Bank, (1909) 23 S. D. 269, 121 N. W. 853.

Knowledge.—In an action under this section for usury on a note to a national bank, refusal to instruct that the defendant must have received the usury knowingly was held to be error. Merchants', etc., Nat. Bank v. Horton, (1911) 27 Okla. 689, 117 Pac. 201.

Mode of payment.—This section comprehends payment of the usurious interest by transfer of property as well as payment in money. But to constitute a payment by transfer of property within the statute, the parties must intend that the property be accepted as a payment. Blakely First Nat. Bank v. Davis, (1911) 135 Ga. 687, 70 S. E. 246.

Where property is accepted as payment its market value at the time must exceed the principal and lawful interest, to amount to payment and receipt of illegal interest. Blakely First Nat. Bank v. Davis, (1911) 135 Ga. 687, 70 S. E. 246.

Where property is accepted in payment of a debt infected with usury, it must appear, not only that the market value of the property was in excess of the principal debt and legal interest, but that the transfer and delivery thereof was intended by the debtor and accepted by the bank as payment, not only of the lawful interest, but also of the illegal interest; the word "knowingly," as used in this section, meaning "with knowledge." Blakely First Nat. Bank v. Davis, (1911) 135 Ga. 687, 70 S. E. 246.

Who may sue for penalty.—Joint makers of a note to a national bank who have separately, but from a joint fund, paid usury, are entitled to jointly maintain an action for penalty under this section. Merchants', etc., Nat. Bank v. Horton, (1911) 27 Okla. 689, 117 Pac. 201.

A complaint under this section making the taking or reserving of usurious interest, when knowingly done, a forfeiture of all interest, and if such interest has been paid, authorizing a recovery of double the amount thereof, must allege that the interest was knowingly taken. Garfinkle v. Charleston Bank, (1908) 79 S. C. 404, 60 S. E. 942.

Limitation of action.—An application by a national bank of a payment on a usurious note to payment of the usurious interest, with the knowledge and consent of the maker, so that the two-year limitation for recovery prescribed by this section, of the penalty, begins to run, is shown, where on the back of the note is indorsed interest paid at a usurious rate, and such note is taken up and a new note given, in renewal, for the amount remaining unpaid after allowing such usurious rate. McCarthy v. Rapid City First Nat. Bank, (1909) 23 S. D. 269, 121 N. W. 853.

Voluntary payments by third persons.—This section does not apply to voluntary payments of debts of third persons to the bank, which may be infected with usury. Blakely First Nat. Bank v. Davis, (1911) 135 Ga. 687, 70 S. E. 246.

Burden of proof.—One seeking to recover the penalty given by this section for usury on a note to a national bank, has the burden of showing that the interest paid exceeded the legal rate, and that the bank received it knowingly. Merchants', etc., Nat. Bank v. Horton, (1911) 27 Okla. 689, 117 Pac. 201.

V. STATUTORY REMEDY EXCLUSIVE.

Set-off of interest paid.—To the same effect as the original note, National Bank v. Lynch, (W. Va. 1911) 71 S. E. 389.

Vol. V, p. 139, sec. 5199.

Assets not necessary to retain as capital or surplus.—Under R. S. secs. 5199, 5204, authorizing directors of a national bank to declare semi-annual dividends out of net profits after carrying one-tenth part of the net profits of the preceding half year to the surplus fund until the same shall amount to twenty per centum of the capital stock, and prohibiting the withdrawal, in the form of dividends or otherwise, of any portion of the capital, assets which it is not necessary to retain as capital or for the surplus fund may be returned to the shareholders by the directors, and dividends so ordered may be made payable in the future, and on the contingency of future collections on such assets. Cogswell v. Second Nat. Bank, (1905) 78 Conn. 75, 60 Atl. 1059.

Amendment.—This section was amended by Act of June 22, 1906, ch. 3516, 34 Stat. L. 451, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 353.

Effect of ultra vires act.—To the same effect as the original note, Richeson v. National Bank, (1910) 96 Ark. 594, 132 S. W. 913.

A violation of this section, prohibiting a national bank from loaning more than ten per cent. of its capital to any person or corporation, can be taken advantage of only by the government. Maryland Trust Co. v. Na- tional Mechanics' Bank, (1906) 102 Md. 608, 63 Atl. 70.

Where, in evidence of a loan actually made to a bank, the loaning bank accepted from the borrowing bank a note signed by the latter's cashier personally and indorsed by the borrowing bank, to avoid disclosing on the face of the transaction an excessive loan, it was held that the borrowing bank was not thereby relieved from its obligation as a debtor. Portage First Nat. Bank v. Northwood State Bank, (1906) 15 N. D. 594, 109 N. W. 61.

Vol. V, p. 140, sec. 5201.

Appointment of receiver by state court.—See under this title, vol. 5, p. 170, sec. 5234.

Vol. V, p. 141, sec. 5202.

Extent of indebtedness.—To the same effect as the second paragraph of the original note, Waterbury v. McKinnon, (1906) 146 Fed. 737, 77 C. C. A. 294.

Bond to secure deposit of public money.—The execution of a bond by a national bank to secure county deposits does not constitute an increase of the bank's liability, in violation of this section, declaring that no national banking association shall at any time be indebted or liable to an amount exceeding its capital stock actually paid in, except on account of moneys deposited with or collected by the association. Gratiot County v. Munson, (1909) 157 Mich. 505, 122 N. W. 117.

Vol. V, p. 143, sec. 5205.

Decision of Comptroller conclusive.—The decision of the Comptroller of the Currency that the capital stock of a national bank is impaired is conclusive on the stockholders of the bank and on the courts; the bank having no alternative but to make good the impairment or liquidate. Thomas v. Gilbert, (1909) 55 Ore. 14, 101 Pac. 393, 104 Pac. 888.

Appointment of receiver by state court.—See under this title, vol. 5, p. 170, sec. 5234.

Vol. V, p. 144, sec. 5208.

Construction of statute.—This section declares that it shall be unlawful for any officer, agent, or clerk of any national bank to certify any check when the drawer has not on deposit with the bank an amount of money equal to the amount specified in the check; and Act Cong. July 12, 1882, ch. 290, sec. 13, 22 Stat. L. 166, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 145, declares that any officer, clerk, or agent of a national bank who shall certify checks before the amount thereof shall have been regularly entered to the credit of the drawer on the books of the bank shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. It has been held that section 5208 does not create any criminal offense, but that such section should be read with section 13, and that the two create one offense, viz., the certification of a check when the drawer has not sufficient money to cover it, or before the amount shall have been regularly entered. U. S. v. Heinze, (1908) 161 Fed. 425.

The word "certify," as applied to bank checks, indicates that certain words have been written or printed on a check, and that the check has passed from the custody of the bank into the hands of some other party, and that thereby the person certifying created an obligation of the bank. U. S. v. Heinze, (1908) 161 Fed. 425.

Appointment of receiver by state court.—See under this title, vol. 5, p. 170, sec. 5234.

Vol. V, p. 145, sec. 13.

Indictment.—An indictment against an officer of a national bank, alleging unlawful certification of checks, was not fatally defective for failure to set out totidem verbis the written certifications, under the rule that in an indictment in federal courts it is not necessary to allege the tenor of an instrument unless it touches the gist of the crime. U. S. v. Heinze, (1908) 161 Fed. 425.

Proof.—Where an indictment against a national bank officer charged him personally with illegally certifying certain checks, it was necessary for the government, in order to sustain such charge, to prove that the individuals who actually executed the certification indorsement were but the physical instruments of the defendant and acted in accordance with his orders. U. S. v. Heinze, (1908) 161 Fed. 425.

NOTES ON SECTION 5209.

- I. IN GENERAL, 1512.
- II. EMBEZZLEMENT, 1512.
- III. ABSTRACTING FUNDS, ETC., 1512.
- IV. MISAPPLICATION OF FUNDS, ETC., 1513.
- V. FALSE ENTRIES, 1515.
- VI. AIDERS AND ABETTERS, 1518.

I. IN GENERAL.

"Moneys, funds, or credits."—In this section the word "moneys" refers to the currency or circulating medium of the country, the word "funds" refers to government, state, county, municipal, or other bonds, and to other forms of obligations and securities in which investments may be made; and the word "credits" refers to notes and bills payable to the bank, and to other forms of direct promises to pay money to it. U. S. v. Smith, (1907) 152 Fed. 542.

Intent.—The intent to injure or defraud, made by this section an element of the offenses of embezzlement, abstraction, or wilful misapplication of funds by an officer, clerk, or agent of a national bank, need not necessarily have been the object or purpose with which the act was done; but it is sufficient if the natural and necessary effect of the act was to injure or defraud the bank or others, and it was wilfully and intentionally done. U. S. v. Breese, (1904) 131 Fed. 915.

No criminal liability except under this section.—Gross maladministration and inexcusable breach of duty on the part of the officers of a national bank in its management, however disastrous to its stockholders, are not punishable unless in violation of this section. Prettyman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 30.

Indictment.—An indictment against a national bank cashier for an offense against the national banking law was not defective for failure to allege that the bank was doing business at the time the alleged offenses were committed. Geiger v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 844.

False report.—Where the president of a national bank made a false report to the Comptroller of the Currency with intent to deceive an examiner who might be appointed to make an examination of the bank, as provided by section 5240, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 187, it was held that such act constituted an offense, irrespective of the existence of any other incidents disjunctively mentioned in section 5209. Clement v. U. S., (1906) 149 Fed. 305, 79 C. C. A. 243.

II. EMBEZZLEMENT.

Elements of offense.—The crime of embezzlement from a national bank by an officer, clerk, or agent, within this section, involves two general elements: first, a breach of trust or duty with respect to the moneys, funds, or credits of the bank embezzled, which must have been lawfully in the custody or possession of the accused by virtue of his office or employment, although such possession need not have been exclusive of that of other officers, clerks, or agents; and, second, the wrongful appropriation of such moneys, funds, or credits to his own use, with intent to injure or defraud the association or others. U. S. v. Breese, (1904) 131 Fed. 915.

Includes abstraction and misapplication.—The crime of embezzlement by an officer, clerk, or agent of a national bank, under this section, necessarily includes the offenses of abstraction and wilful misappropriation, but either of the latter offenses may be committed without embezzlement. U. S. v. Breese, (1904) 131 Fed. 915.

Collection by agent.—In Spencer v. U. S., (1909) 169 Fed. 562, 95 C. C. A. 60, it appeared that the accused's duty was to take drafts or other items received by a national bank by which he was employed from its patrons for collection, present them to the drawees or others liable thereon, receive the money due, and return it to the bank. He, however, reported a less amount collected than he actually received, and converted the difference. It was held that in making the collection he acted as the bank's agent, and that the money while in his possession and before it had been actually deposited in the bank, belonged to it, and that he was therefore properly convicted of embezzling the same.

Indictment.—An indictment under this section is bad for insufficient description of the offense, where it charges the embezzlement, as well as the misapplication, of the "funds and credits" of a national bank by the defendant as president, without setting forth any particular description of either, and without any separate statement as to the amount either of "funds" or of "credits" so embezzled or misapplied. U. S. v. Smith, (1907) 152 Fed. 542.

III. ABSTRACTING FUNDS, ETC.

Abstract defined.—Abstraction, under this section, is the act of one who, being an officer, clerk, or agent of a national banking association, wrongfully takes or withdraws from it any of its moneys, funds, or credits, with intent to injure or defraud it, or some other person or company, and without its knowledge and consent, or that of its board of directors, converts them to the use of himself, or of some person or company other than the bank. No previous lawful possession is necessary to constitute the crime, nor does it matter in what manner it is accomplished. U. S. v. Breese, (1904) 131 Fed. 915.

Cashing check and converting proceeds.—Where a customer of a national banking association, whose note to the bank was about to mature, delivered a check to the bank to pay the note when due, and, the check coming into the hands of defendant as cashier of the bank, he cashed it and converted the proceeds, it was held that the loss was that of the bank, and the defendant's offense a wilful misapplication and abstraction of the bank's funds and credits, and not a mere breach of trust. Geiger v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 844.

Indictment. — An indictment charging that the defendant, being then and there the cashier of a certain "national banking association," to wit, etc., was not fatally defective for failure to allege that the national banking association specified was a national banking association organized under the laws of the United States. Geiger v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 844.

IV. MISAPPLICATION OF FUNDS, ETC.

Misapplication defined. — To the same effect as the second paragraph of the original note, U. S. v. Heinze, (1908) 161 Fed. 425.

Wilful misapplication of the moneys, funds, or credits of a national bank consists in their misapplication by an officer, clerk, or agent of the bank, made wilfully and wrongfully, and with intent to injure or defraud the association or some other person or company, and their conversion to his own use, or to the use of some one other than the bank. No previous lawful possession is necessary to constitute the crime. U. S. v. Breese, (1904) 131 Fed. 915.

Gravamen of offense. — To the same effect as the original note, U. S. v. Steinman, (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 913.

Withdrawal of funds necessary. — Funds of a national bank are not misapplied by an officer for the purpose of constituting a criminal offense, under this section, merely by the drawing of a draft on a fund on deposit in another bank, or by entering a credit to a depositor on the books; but it is necessary that the fund should have been actually withdrawn or converted in some form, so that it is lost to the bank, and such loss must be averred in an indictment for the offense, and the facts set out showing it to have been unlawful. U. S. v. Martindale, (1903) 146 Fed. 280.

The mere renewal of a note by the officers of a national bank to cover a loan not sufficiently secured did not constitute a misapplication of the bank's funds, because the transaction was accomplished in the form of a discount of the renewal note, by placing the proceeds to the customer's credit and receiving from him a check against the fund for an amount sufficient to pay the old note, without the bank parting with any money. Adler v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 464.

Overdrafts. — An overdraft on a national bank may be legal or criminal, according to the intent of the person committing it, inferred from the surrounding circumstances shown by the evidence. U. S. v. Heinze, (1908) 161 Fed. 425.

The fact alone that an officer of a national bank causes it to pay overdrafts, drawn by himself or other customers of the bank, or makes a loan without security, does not constitute an offense, under this section; nor does an indictment averring such facts charge an offense, because it further avers an intent to injure and defraud the bank. U. S. v. Norton, (1911) 188 Fed. 256.

An unintentional overdraft by a depositor in good standing and possessing ample means to pay, or an overdraft to be paid pursuant to a prior agreement resting on abundant credit, does not constitute a wilful misapplication of a national bank's funds, in violation of this section. U. S. v. Steinman, (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 913.

In Adler v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 464, it appeared that the accused, who was president of a national bank, having overdrawn his account $18,303.80, executed his note to the bank for $20,000, secured by certain corporate stock, the proceeds of the note being used to cancel the overdraft, and the balance credited to his account, subject to check. The note not having been paid, the collateral was sold for $5,000 cash, which paid the $1,146 additional advancement, and $3,800 on the overdraft. It was held that the execution of the note was a benefit and not a loss to the bank, and that accused by that transaction was not guilty of misapplying the bank's funds, in violation of this section.

Proof of intent. — Where, in a prosecution of the vice-president of a bank for alleged misappropriation of the bank's funds in the payment of overdrafts by the bank's cashier, there was no evidence that the checks representing the overdrafts were paid with the knowledge or under the directions of the vice-president, the offense as to him was not proved, under the rule that to constitute a wilful misappropriation of a national bank's funds there must in fact be an unlawful application by the person charged, with intent to injure and defraud the bank. Prettyman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 30.

Discounting worthless paper. — The discounting by the president of a national bank with the funds of the bank of commercial paper known to him to be worthless or fictitious, for the benefit of an insolvent corporation of which he is an officer, and with intent to injure and defraud the bank, is a wilful misapplication of its funds, constituting a criminal offense under this section. Flickinger v. U. S., (1906) 150 Fed. 1, 79 C. C. A. 515.

Effect of knowledge and consent of directors. — An officer of a national bank is not guilty of embezzlement, abstraction, or wilful misapplication of its funds because of his obtaining money from the bank for his own use by means of overdrafts or loans by bond fide arrangement with its authorized officers or committee, but he is only protected by such arrangement where it was made by those representing the bank, in good faith, and in the supposed interest of the bank. U. S. v. Breese, (1904) 131 Fed. 915.

An indictment under this section charging the defendant, as president and director, with having wilfully misapplied certain credits of the bank, "by procuring the authority of the board of directors . . . to an acceptance of an assignment" of an interest in a partnership in satisfaction of an indebtedness due the bank, and charging the amount of such indebtedness to the account of stocks and bonds, knowing that the assignor had in fact no interest in such partnership, was held not to state an offense under the statute, since what was done appeared to have been by authority of the board of directors, and the facts set out did not show a misapplication of credits by the defendant, nor was it averred that such misapplication was made to his own use, benefit, or gain, nor to that of any person other than the bank. U. S. v. Smith, (1907) 152 Fed. 542.

Bad loans.—For an officer of a national bank who is also a promoter of various enterprises to obtain the funds of the bank on the security of unmarketable bonds of his own enterprises, at the risk of the interest of the bank, is a misapplication of the funds which cannot be covered up by entering the transactions on the books as loans and investments. Walsh v. U. S., (1909) 174 Fed. 615, 98 C. C. A. 461.

Indictment — Definiteness.—A count in an indictment, under this section, charging that defendant, as a director of a national bank, between certain given dates abstracted and misapplied a stated sum of the moneys, funds, and credits of the bank, without further specification, was held to be insufficient, as too general and indefinite. U. S. v. Martindale, (1903) 146 Fed. 280.

Where, in a prosecution against a national bank officer for wilful misapplication of the moneys, funds, and credits of the bank, the indictment definitely charged the value in lawful money of the United States of the misapplied property, it was not defective for failure to specify the exact thing misapplied, whether moneys, funds, or credits. U. S. v. Heinze, (1908) 161 Fed. 425. Compare U. S. v. Smith, (1907) 152 Fed. 542.

Allegation of possession of funds.—An indictment of an officer of a national bank, under this section, for misapplication of funds, sufficiently alleges his possession of the funds by an averment that he was president of the bank, and as such had access to its funds, properties, moneys, and credits, with duties to perform in their control, management, and application. U. S. v. Eastman, (1904) 132 Fed. 551.

Manner of misapplication.—An indictment of an officer of a national bank, under this section, for misapplication of the funds or property of the association, sufficiently alleges the manner in which the misapplication was accomplished where it charges that, having access to the funds and properties of the bank, he wilfully, unlawfully, fraudulently, and without the consent of the bank, converted them to his own use, or to the use of persons other than himself and other than the association. U. S. v. Eastman, (1904) 132 Fed. 551.

An indictment alleging that F., as cashier of a national bank, unlawfully "converted" certain "moneys, funds, credit and credits" to the use of D., was held to sufficiently charge the manner in which the misapplication was effected. Dickinson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 801.

Allegation of conversion.—A conversion is charged by the allegation of an indictment for wilful misapplication of the funds of a national bank, that the defendant, being president of the bank, and having control of its funds, with intent to injure and defraud, received and discounted a promissory note for a specified sum, for his use, benefit, and advantage, knowing that the note was wholly unsecured, whereby the proceeds of the discount were wholly lost to the bank. U. S. v. Heinze, (1910) 218 U. S. 532, 31 S. Ct. 98, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1139, followed in U. S. v. Heinze, (1910) 218 U. S. 547, 31 S. Ct. 102, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1145.

An indictment for the wilful misapplication of funds of a national bank by an officer, with intent to defraud, in violation of this section, by receiving and discounting with its money an absolutely unsecured promissory note of a named partnership, whereby the proceeds of the discount of the note were wholly lost to the bank, need not charge a conversion by the recipient of the proceeds of the discount, provided it does allege a conversion by such officer. U. S. v. Heinze, (1910) 218 U. S. 532, 31 S. Ct. 98, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1139, followed in U. S. v. Heinze, (1910) 218 U. S. 547, 31 S. Ct. 102, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1145.

Allegation of fraud.—An indictment under this section which charged that the defendant, while an officer of a national bank, with intent to injure or defraud the bank, unlawfully and wilfully misapplied and converted to his own use funds of the bank, by withdrawing money therefrom upon a charge ticket, pursuant to which the amount was charged to his account, was held to be insufficient to charge an offense, in the absence of averments showing that the bank was in fact defrauded, or a probability that it would be defrauded, thereby, as that defendant was insolvent, and that the overdraft was not paid. U. S. v. Norton, (1911) 188 Fed. 256.

Allegation of felonious intent.—An indictment charging an officer of a national bank with misapplication of its funds, or with making false entries in its books, need not allege that the acts were done feloniously, where they are charged to have been done wilfully and with intent to defraud the bank, and are such as are made misdemeanors by the statute. U. S. v. Eastman, (1904) 132 Fed. 551.

Allegation of want of authority.—In an indictment under this section charging an officer of a national bank with a wilful misapplication of its funds with intent to injure and defraud the association, it is not necessary to aver that the acts set out were done without authority from the directors. Flickinger v. U. S., (1906) 150 Fed. 1, 79 C. C. A. 515. Compare U. S. v. Martindale, (1903) 146 Fed. 280.

Separate counts.—Where an officer of a national bank is charged in an indictment with the fraudulent misapplication of its funds in the payment of several and distinct notes, each payment constitutes a separate misapplication, and must be charged in a separate count. U. S. v. Martindale, (1903) 146 Fed. 280.

For other cases dealing with indictments for misapplication of the funds of a national bank, see U. S. v. Martindale, (1904) 146 Fed. 289; U. S. v. Smith, (1907) 152 Fed. 542; U. S. v. Morse, (1908) 161 Fed. 429; Geiger v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 844.

Evidence. — In a prosecution for misappropriation of the funds of a national bank, it was held that a letter written by certain of the directors of the bank to the Comptroller of the Currency, after the misappropriation, was inadmissible either as showing the state of mind of the directors after the offense, or a ratification of the misappropriation. Dickinson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 801.

In a trial for aiding a national bank cashier in misapplying a stock certificate held by the bank as collateral for a loan, defendant having used the certificate as collateral on a note he discounted, defended on the ground that he did not know of the bank's interest in the certificate and was innocent of any purpose to aid and abet in abstracting it, the prosecution could show that the bank's minute book disclosed no record of the directors sanctioning the use of the certificate. Cook v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 919.

In a prosecution of national bank officers and alleged aiders and abettors for misapplying the bank's funds, evidence of the taking of a mortgage to secure an indebtedness represented by overdrafts and the making of an additional loan secured by deposit of other collateral, the effect of which was to give the bank better security than before, was insufficient to sustain a conviction. Prettyman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 30.

Declaration of accused. — In May v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 1, it appeared that the defendant was charged with having made a false entry in a report made to the Comptroller of the Currency as president of a national bank, in that he omitted from the statement of deposits for which the bank was liable the amount of a deposit made several years before and which had not been withdrawn. The defense was that the depositor had authorized defendant to loan the money, which had been done, but the depositor denied such agreement. It was shown by the evidence that defendant, in fact, made loans which were charged to the depositor's account, and for which he took notes payable to the depositor. It was held that a statement made by him to a borrower at the time of making such a loan, which was several years before the making of the alleged false report, to the effect that it was made from money left by the depositor to be loaned, was not admissible as a part of the res gestæ, but was properly excluded as a self-serving declaration.

For other cases see Lear v. U. S., (1906) 147 Fed. 349, 77 C. C. A. 527; Brock v. U. S., (1906) 149 Fed. 173, 79 C. C. A. 121; Clement v. U. S., (1906) 149 Fed. 305, 79 C. C. A. 243.

Instructions to jury. — In a prosecution of an officer of a national bank under this section for misapplication of funds with intent to injure and defraud the association, general language used in the charge in explaining the section, stating that a misapplication of funds, in order to constitute an offense, must have been with intent to injure or defraud the bank "or to deceive any officer of the bank or any agent appointed pursuant to law to examine the affairs of the bank," was not misleading, where the jury were subsequently charged specifically on the precise issue presented by the indictment and that an intent to defraud the bank must be shown. Morse v. U. S., (1909) 174 Fed. 539, 98 C. C. A. 321. See also U. S. v. Steinman, (1909) 172 Fed. 913, 97 C. C. A. 271.

Questions for jury. — In a prosecution of an officer of a national bank for misapplying its funds, where the transactions as shown by the books of the bank were legitimate and proper on their face, it was held that the question of intent was one for the jury under proper instructions. Walsh v. U. S., (1909) 174 Fed. 615, 98 C. C. A. 461.

V. FALSE ENTRIES.

Who liable. — To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note, Morse v. U. S., (1909) 174 Fed. 539, 98 C. C. A. 321; U. S. v. Wilson, (1910) 176 Fed. 806; Richardson v. U. S., (1910) 181 Fed. 1.

False entries in reports. — The fact that entries in a report made by a national bank to the Comptroller accurately state the facts as shown by the books does not prevent them from being false, where the books themselves do not correctly show the actual transactions or condition of the bank. Morse v. U. S., (1909) 174 Fed. 539, 98 C. C. A. 321.

A schedule on the back of a report where it is covered by the same affidavit as the rest of the report is a part of the report, within this section. Harper v. U. S., (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 437, 104 S. W. 673.

Fraudulent intent. — The intent with which false entries in the books or reports of a national bank are made is of the essence of the offense, and must be proved as laid. Richardson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 1.

Intent to injure a bank by a false report to the Comptroller of the Currency is not negated as matter of law by the fact that the report showed the bank to be in better condition than it really was. U. S. v. Corbett, (1909) 215 U. S. 233, 30 S. Ct. 81, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 173, reversing (1908) 162 Fed. 687.

Voluntary reports. — This section includes a report voluntarily made as well as one required by law, if the false entry was made with the requisite unlawful intent. Harper v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 385, reversing (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 437, 104 S. W. 673.

What are false entries. — A false entry within this section is an entry made in the bank's books by an officer of the bank, that is intentionally and knowingly false when made, and made with intent to deceive the officers of the bank or defraud the association. U. S. v. Wilson, (1910) 176 Fed. 806.

Officers of a national bank may not make a false entry in the bank's books with intent to deceive in violation of this section and escape criminal liability because they go through the idle and deceitful form of making a transaction to which the entry might nominally but not really relate. Billingsley v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 653.

Entries in the books of a national bank showing loans to persons named on the security of stocks deposited as collateral, when in fact the transactions were purchases of the stock by the bank, the supposed borrowers being merely dummies wholly irresponsible for the amount of the notes which they gave without any intention of paying the same or any knowledge of the actual transactions, were false entries, and, when made by the direction of an officer of the bank who conducted the transactions, a jury was justified in finding that they were fraudulent and made with intent to deceive the bank examiner and his agents in violation of this section. Morse v. U. S., (1909) 174 Fed. 539, 98 C. C. A. 321.

The fact that a national bank is prohibited by R. S. sec. 5201, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 140, from purchasing its own stock, does not make such a purchase a nullity, nor does the purchase extinguish the stock, and, where a bank bought and held shares of its own stock, an entry in a report to the comptroller of the bonds, securities, etc., held by the bank from which such stock was omitted, constituted a false entry. Morse v. U. S., (1909) 174 Fed. 539, 98 C. C. A. 321.

Entries in the books of a national bank which correctly record actual transactions of the bank, although such transactions may have been unauthorized, or even fraudulent, are not false entries, within the meaning of this section, and will not sustain an indictment thereunder for the making of false entries. Twining v. U. S., (1905) 141 Fed. 41, 72 C. C. A. 529.

If the officer of a bank procured a note to be given to it by an irresponsible person, with intent of apparently increasing the bank's assets, and should thereafter make an entry in a report required by law to the Comptroller of the Currency, including such note as a bona fide asset of the bank, with either of the intents denounced by this section, such entry would be a false entry within this section, though the paper was in actual existence. Hayes v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 101.

In Hayes v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 101, it appeared that a national bank, of which the defendant was cashier, was in straitened circumstances, so that the president, cashier, and assistant cashier had not drawn their salaries for five months. Each of the officers having overdrawn his individual account with the bank to the amount of their unpaid salaries, the bank examiner required the overdraft to be made good, and to accomplish this the officers induced F., who was solvent, to execute his note to the bank for their accommodation, and this was discounted and entered as a loan and discount; the proceeds being credited to the officers' individual accounts to make good the overdrafts. It was held that the note, while accommodation paper so far as the officers of the bank were concerned, was enforceable against the maker by the bank, and hence its inclusion in a report made by the cashier to the Comptroller of the Currency as a loan and discount of the bank did not constitute the making of a "false entry," in violation of this section.

Conspiracy.—A conspiracy to violate this section by causing false entries to be made in the books of a national bank by an officer or agent thereof for the purpose of defrauding the bank or others, or deceiving an agent appointed to examine the affairs of the bank, is one to commit "an offense against the United States," within the meaning of section 5440, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 247, and is indictable thereunder. Scott v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 130 Fed. 429.

Presumptions.—Where entries by the accused in the books of a national bank were false and capable of deceiving the comptroller's agents, it was held that the defendant's intent to deceive and defraud might be inferred from the making of the entries, under the rule that every person is presumed to intend the natural and probable result of his acts knowingly done, and that an unlawful act implies an unlawful intent. U. S. v. Wilson, (1910) 176 Fed. 806.

A simple mistake by an officer of a national bank in making an entry in one of the company's books, growing out of a clerical error, is not a violation of this section. U. S. v. Wilson, (1910) 176 Fed. 806.

Officers intended to be deceived.—The Comptroller of the Currency is an agent within the provisions of this section, that every officer of a national bank who makes any false entry in a report to any agent appointed to examine the affairs of such association shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and it is immaterial that R. S. sec. 5240, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 187, confers power upon him to appoint suitable agents to examine the affairs of such banks. U. S. v. Corbett, (1909) 215 U. S. 233, 30 S. Ct. 81, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 173, reversing (1908) 162 Fed. 687.

Indictment.—In an indictment under this section for making a false entry in a report, it is not necessary to allege that the report in which the false entry was made was one made by the association, since the penalty is affixed to any person making the false entry, and not to the association or its officers for making a false report. Harper v. U. S., (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 437, 104 S. W. 673.

It is not necessary to allege that the report in which the false entry was made was one required by law; it being sufficient that it be intended to deceive any of the persons mentioned in the statute. Harper v. U. S., (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 437, 104 S. W. 673.

In a prosecution of a national bank officer for making false entries, an allegation that they were made "in a book of said bank known as 'Journal K'" sufficiently alleged that the book was a book of the association within this section. Billingsley v. U. S., (1910) 178 Fed. 653, 101 C. C. A. 465.

In a prosecution under this section, making it a crime for an officer of a national banking association carrying on a banking business to make a false entry in a report or statement of the association with intent to injure or defraud it, or to deceive an agent appointed to examine its affairs, the indictment alleged that the accused was the duly elected, qualified, and acting cashier of a certain bank; that he made a false entry in a report, describing it; that the entry was made to deceive a certain person who was the duly elected, qualified, and acting president of that bank; that he made the false entry on a certain date in a report showing the resources and liabilities of the bank on a certain day to the Comptroller of the Currency. It was held that the indictment was sufficient. Harper v. U. S., (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 437, 104 S. W. 673.

An indictment under this section alleging that the accused, while acting as president of a national bank, made a false entry in a report to the Comptroller of the Currency, that the lawful money reserve in the bank, consisting of gold coin, was $23,955, when in fact the bank only had $21,955 in gold coin as lawful money reserve, was not objectionable for want of an allegation that the lawful reserve exceeded the amount the bank actually had on hand, the gist of the offense being the making of false entries in the report. Clement v. U. S., (1906) 149 Fed. 305, 79 C. C. A. 243.

Definiteness.—Where an indictment against a national bank cashier for making false entries specified with great particularity and at length the entries the falsification of which was charged, and these entries were fully described, it was held that the indictment was not defective for indefiniteness, because it did not specify the names of the clerks or employees by whose hand the entries were in fact made. Richardson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 1.

Description of report.—An indictment under this section, which charges the defendant as cashier of a national bank with having made a false entry in a report with intent to deceive an officer of the association, need not describe the report with technical accuracy, and an averment of the date when made, and that it was a report made to the Comptroller of the Currency showing the resources and liabilities of the bank on a certain date, is sufficient to authorize the presumption that it was a report made by the association under section 5311, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 152. Harper v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 385, reversing (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 437, 104 S. W. 673.

Designation of officers intended to be deceived.—An indictment charging a bank officer with false entries "with the intent to deceive any agent appointed to examine the affairs of the bank" was held to sufficiently designate the person intended to be deceived. Billingsley v. U. S., (1910) 178 Fed. 653, 101 C. C. A. 465.

Allegation of doing business.—An allegation in an indictment that on a certain date a bank was a corporation duly organized and existing, with a qualified and acting president and cashier, and that on that date the cashier made a certain report to the Comptroller of the Currency, is a sufficient allegation that the bank was carrying on business at the time the report was made. Harper v. U. S., (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 437, 104 S. W. 673.

Intent.—This section contemplates two separate intents, one to injure or defraud the association, and the other to deceive, either of which, when accompanying a forbidden act, constitutes an offense, and hence it is not necessary that an indictment alleging a false entry with intent to deceive should also charge an intent to injure or defraud the association or any other company or person. Billingsley v. U. S., (1910) 178 Fed. 653, 101 C. C. A. 465.

Duplicity.—The making of a false entry, accompanied by an intent either to "injure or defraud" or to "deceive," as defined by this section, constitutes an offense; and a count of an indictment which charges that such a false entry was made with intent to injure or defraud, and also with intent to deceive, charges two offenses, and is bad for duplicity. U. S. v. Norton, (1911) 188 Fed. 256.

Aider by verdict.—Where the accused, a national bank clerk, was indicted under several counts for making false entries in the bank's books, in violation of this section, and on conviction on several counts was sentenced to imprisonment for a term less than the maximum provided for a single offense, and at least one of the counts in the indictment was sufficient, it was held that the sentence would be applied to such count, and the validity of the remaining counts regarded as immaterial. Harvey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 419.

Evidence — Admissibility.—On the trial of a defendant charged as an officer or agent of a national bank, under this section, with having made false entries in its books in the accounts showing the indebtedness to it of other banks, periodical statements taken from the bank's files and purporting to have been rendered to it by such other banks, and which are shown to have been under the defendant's charge, are admissible in evidence, and they may also be identified by employees of such other banks as having been made under their direction and duly sent by them, and their correctness verified by reference to the books of such banks, which are in evidence and used in connection with such books for convenience of reference, as evidence of the true state of the account between the two banks. Goll v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 412.

Sufficiency.—Where a national bank cashier was indicted for making false entries, and also for indirectly participating in the making thereof, in that he caused and procured them to be made, it was held that proof of either of such charges was sufficient after verdict to sustain a conviction, even though the other was not proved. Richardson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 1. See also Billingsley v. U. S., (1910) 178 Fed. 653, 101 C. C. A. 465.

Proof of intent.—Where false entries were made by the officers of a national bank to overcome complaints by the comptroller in order that the bank examiners and the comptroller might be deceived and misled thereby, proof of such false entries was sufficient to sustain a finding that they were made with intent to injure and defraud the bank, and this though they represented the condition of the bank to be more favorable than it was. Richardson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 1.

Burden of proof.—In a prosecution of a national bank officer for making alleged false entries, a plea of not guilty places on the government the burden of proving that defendant, within the district and within three years prior to the finding of the indictment, knowingly and intentionally made one or more false entries in the books of the bank with intent to deceive or defraud any agent of the government charged with the duty of supervising the transactions of the bank, or inspecting its books or accounts. U. S. v. Wilson, (1910) 176 Fed. 806.

Instructions to jury.—In the prosecution of defendants under this section, charged as officers with having made false entries in the books of a national bank and in reports to the comptroller with intent to injure and defraud the bank and deceive its officers and the examiner, it was not error to charge the jury that if they found that such false entries were made, they were authorized to presume therefrom, in the absence of any explanation, that defendants knew them to be false, and that if the natural and probable consequence of such entries was to defraud or deceive, they might presume, in the absence of explanation, that such was defendant's intention. Morse v. U. S., (1909) 174 Fed. 539, 98 C. C. A. 321. See also May v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 1; Harper v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 385, reversing (1907) 7 Ind. Ter. 437, 104 S. W. 673.

VI. AIDERS AND ABETTORS.

Who may be.—Where a violation of the statute is committed by an officer and an outsider, the one must be prosecuted as a principal and the other as an aider and abettor, but the provision as to aiding and abetting does not apply to those who, as national bank officers, with fraudulent intent make or cause to be made false entries in the books and reports of the bank; as such they are principals, whether they bring about the falsification through the medium of others, innocent or guilty, or do it themselves; the aiding and abetting applying only to those not connected with the bank, who counsel or incite those who are. Richardson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 1.

Necessity to prove conspiracy or conviction of principal.—To authorize the conviction of a defendant of the statutory offense of aiding and abetting an officer of a national bank in the misapplication of the funds of the bank, in violation of this section, it is necessary to aver or prove a conspiracy, nor that the principal offender had been convicted; the offenses of the principal and accessory both being misdemeanors of the same grade. U. S. v. Hillegass, (1910) 176 Fed. 444.

Indictment.—See Hillegass v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 199, affirming 176 Fed. 444.

Evidence.—On the prosecution of a defendant, charged under this section with aiding and abetting the cashier of a national bank to misapply the funds of the bank, the misapplication of such funds by the cashier with criminal intent is a material issue, and any competent evidence relevant to such issue is admissible. U. S. v. Hillegass, (1910) 176 Fed. 444, affirmed (C. C. A.) 183 Fed. 199.

In a prosecution for aiding and abetting the officers of a national bank to wilfully abstract the funds of the bank by means of certain overdrafts, evidence that prior to the making of such overdrafts it was agreed that the bank should furnish funds for the operations of certain corporations in which accused and the bank's president and cashier were officers, and that from time to time notes should be given by such corporations to take up the overdrafts, and that at the time of the advances the value of the corporation's property was more than $300,000, while the overdrafts aggregated only $30,872.24, was held to be admissible to show absence of criminal intent. U. S. v. Steinman, (1909) 172 Fed. 913, 97 C. C. A. 271.

Instructions.—See May v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 1; Hillegass v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 199, affirming 176 Fed. 444.

Questions for jury.—The question whether the criminal intent averred in an indictment charging a person with aiding and abetting a cashier in misapplying the funds of a bank is properly inferable from the facts proved is for the jury. U. S. v. Hillegass, (1910) 176 Fed. 444; Prettyman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 30.

Vol. V, p. 152, sec. 5210.

Jurisdiction of federal courts.—On an application to a federal court by a shareholder in a national banking association for a writ of mandamus to compel the association to permit him to inspect a list of its shareholders, based on this section, the pleadings must show that the matter in dispute exceeds the value of $2,000 to give the court jurisdiction. Large v. Consolidated Nat. Bank, (1905) 137 Fed. 168.

Under this section see People v. Consolidated Nat. Bank, (1905) 105 App. Div. 409, 94 N. Y. S. 173.

Vol. V, p. 152, sec. 5211.

Liability for false reports.—To the same effect as the original note. Yates v. Jones Nat. Bank, (1905) 74 Neb. 734, 105 N. W. 287.

Necessity for knowledge of falsity.—It is no defense to an action against the officers of a national bank for publishing false reports, to the injury of the plaintiff, that such reports were made and published by the officers without knowledge of their falsity. Yates v. Jones Nat. Bank, (1905) 74 Neb. 734, 105 N. W. 287.

Loans and discounts.—Where the directors, in signing a statutory report, knew, or by the exercise of ordinary diligence should have known, that an item of "Loans and Discounts" contained paper worth much less than its face value, which would materially affect the value of the bank stock, it was held that they were individually liable, under the common law, to a purchaser of the stock who was damaged by in good faith relying on the report. Smalley v. McGraw, (1907) 148 Mich. 384, 111 N. W. 1093, 112 N. W. 915.

The common-law right of a stockholder, for proper purposes and under reasonable regulations as to place and time, to inspect the books of the corporation of which he is a member, is not restricted as to national banks by this section. Guthrie v. Harkness, (1905) 199 U. S. 148, 26 S. Ct. 4, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 130, affirming (1904) 27 Utah 248, 75 Pac. 624.

Amendment.—This section was amended by Act of May 30, 1908, ch. 229, 35 Stat. L. 546, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 360.

Banks whose outstanding circulating notes amount to less than five per cent. of capital.

—A national bank whose outstanding circulating notes amount to less than five per cent. of its capital is not exempted from the payment of the half-yearly duty imposed by this section upon the average amount of its notes in circulation by the provision of R. S. sec. 3411, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 758, that the outstanding circulation of any bank, association, corporation, company, or person shall be free from taxation when reduced to an amount not exceeding five per cent. of its capital, although the latter section is, by R. S. sec. 3417, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 762, expressly made applicable to national banking associations, since it was so made applicable, as clearly appears from the legislation from which its provisions were drawn, in order to give national banks representing state banks the benefit of the presumption of loss or liability to retire the circulation of the state bank when ninety-five per cent. thereof had been actually retired. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. U. S., (1909) 214 U. S. 33, 29 S. Ct. 593, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 900.

- III. EXEMPTIONS AND DEDUCTIONS, 1521.
- IV. REMEDIES IN CASE OF UNLAWFUL TAX, 1521.

I. LIMIT OF STATE TAXATION.

Construction.—This section authorizes the assessment of shares of national banking associations located within a state, in such manner as the legislature of the state may provide, subject only to the restrictions that the taxation should not be at a greater rate than is assessed on other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of the state, and that the shares owned by nonresidents shall be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located and not elsewhere. Crocker v. Scott, (1906) 149 Cal. 575, 87 Pac. 102.

Power to tax in general.—To the same effect as the original note, Weiser Nat. Bank v. Jeffreys, (1908) 14 Idaho 659, 95 Pac. 23; People v. Feitner, (1908) 191 N. Y. 88, 83 N. E. 592.

The only taxation of national banks contemplated by this section is taxation on shares of stock and on real property. Albuquerque First Nat. Bank v. Albright, (1908) 208 U. S. 548, 28 S. Ct. 349, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 614; Batesville First Nat. Bank v. Board of Equalization, (1909) 92 Ark. 335, 122 S. W. 988.

Tax on stock.—A national bank is under no legal obligation to render and pay taxes on its stock. Lampasas First Nat. Bank v. Lampasas, (1903) 33 Tex. Civ. App. 530, 78 S. W. 42.

Taxation by counties.—A statute authorizing county authorities to levy taxes on the shares of a national bank is not violative of the National Bank Act, inasmuch as such action on the part of the county authorities is the exercise of an authority delegated by the state. Com. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, (1904) 117 Ky. 946, 80 S. W. 158.

Without deduction.—To the same effect as the original note, Hager v. American Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 396; Charleston Nat. Bank v. Melton, (1909) 171 Fed. 743; Batesville First Nat. Bank v. Board of Equalization, (1909) 92 Ark. 335, 122 S. W. 988.

Tax of shares on bank.—The Arkansas statute (Kirby's Dig., secs. 6902-6924) requiring every bank to annually deliver to the assessor a statement of the amount of capital, undivided profits, value of moneys, credits, etc., the amount loaned to or deposited with the bank, and providing that the shares in banks taxable by law shall be listed by the officers thereof showing the names of the persons owning the same, and that the taxes assessed on the shares of stock thus listed shall be paid by the bank, etc., provides for the taxation of the shares of national bank stock, and not the capital stock of the bank itself, and the requirement of a schedule setting forth the enumerated things is merely intended as a method of arriving at the valuation of the shares, so that the statute meets the requirement of this section, authorizing the taxation of the shares in national banks, subject to the restriction that the tax shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed on other moneyed capital, etc. Batesville First Nat. Bank

r. Board of Equalization, (1909) 92 Ark. 335, 122 S. W. 988.

Bank agent to collect.—Provisions of a state statute for the taxation of national bank stock, requiring the cashier of the bank to pay the taxes assessed against its stockholders, and making him and the bank liable therefor, and for a penalty in addition in case of default, are not illegal as applied to a bank which has in its possession dividends or other funds belonging to its stockholders sufficient to pay the taxes assessed against them. Charleston Nat. Bank v. Melton, (1909) 171 Fed. 742.

A state statute which provides that shares of stock in national banks shall be subject to taxation for all state purposes and the purposes of each county and city in which the bank is located, and that the bank shall be liable for the taxes upon the shares of stock, is not violative of the National Bank Act, since a state may levy a tax on the shares of stock, and require the bank to pay the tax. Com. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, (1904) 117 Ky. 946, 80 S. W. 158.

Waiver of rights.—A national bank having voluntarily rendered its capital stock for taxation, and stated, in its answer, in an action to recover the taxes thereon, as increased in value on equalization, that it was willing to pay taxes thereon according to its rendition, it may be held liable for the taxes on the value of its stock as rendered, though taxation of such stock is unauthorized, but an equalization board could not, without its consent, augment its conceded liability by adding other personal property to its rendition, or raising the value of that which had been rendered. Lampasas First Nat. Bank v. Lampasas, (1903) 33 Tex. Civ. App. 530, 78 S. W. 42.

II. THE RULE AS TO DISCRIMINATION.

Different systems of taxation.—The adoption of a different method for taxing state banks and other moneyed corporations from that adopted for the taxation of national banks does not necessarily conflict with this section authorizing state taxation of shares of stock in national banks, but exacting that the tax when levied shall be at no greater rate than that imposed on other moneyed corporations. San Francisco Nat. Bank v. Dodge, (1905) 197 U. S. 70, 25 S. Ct. 384, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 669; Covington v. Covington First Nat. Bank, (1905) 198 U. S. 100, 25 S. Ct. 562, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 963; People v. Feitner, (1908) 191 N. Y. 88, 83 N. E. 592.

The fact that under the laws of California shares of stock in state banks and other state moneyed corporations are not permitted to be assessed and taxed is not sufficient to show that the California statute (Pol. Code, sec. 3609), providing for the taxation of shares in national banks, constitutes an invalid discrimination against national banks, where a different method has been adopted by the state for the assessment and taxation of all the property of such state corporations embraced in the assessment of shares of stock in national banks. Crocker v. Scott, (1906) 149 Cal. 575, 87 Pac. 102.

Taxation at market value.—A discrimination against national banks, and in favor of state banks and other moneyed corporations, forbidden by this section, results from the taxation of shares of stock of national banks under a state statute at their market value, while the construction given by the highest state court to the provisions for the taxation of the "property" of state banks and other moneyed corporations does not require, although property is defined by the state constitution as including "franchises," that the assessing officers shall include in the assessment all the intangible elements of value which form part of the market and selling value of shares of stock. San Francisco Nat. Bank v. Dodge, (1905) 197 U. S. 70, 25 S. Ct. 384, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 669.

Methods of assessment.—Assessing officers who levied an assessment in solido against a national bank as agent of its stockholders did not thereby discriminate against the bank merely because they failed to assess the shares of stock in the same manner in which shares of stock in other like institutions were assessed. Batesville First Nat. Bank v. Board of Equalization, (1909) 92 Ark. 335, 122 S. W. 988.

The retroactive features of the Kentucky Act of March 21, 1900, making it the duty of certain officers of each national bank to list its shares of stock for taxation, and requiring the bank to pay the tax and a penalty for delinquency, subject to a deduction on account of taxes paid by the bank under other legislation, do not, so far as the shares of resident shareholders are concerned, operate to discriminate against the bank, contrary to this section, nor to deny due process of law, although the shareholders and the number of shares may not be the same as when the liability to taxation arose, where such statute is construed by the state courts as not imposing any new liability upon domestic shareholders or the bank, but as simply providing another method for the assessment of shares which have escaped assessment because not listed for taxation. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, (1910) 217 U. S. 443, 30 S. Ct. 532, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 832.

But the retroactive provision of the above Act, relating solely to national banks, by which such banks are charged with a liability for taxes for past years on their capital stock, whether held within or without the state, and are subjected to a penalty in addition for delinquency, operates as a discrimination against such banks, prohibited by this section, where, until the passage of that Act, national banks were not required to return for taxation shares of their capital stock held outside of the state. Covington v. Covington First Nat. Bank, (1905) 198 U. S. 100, 25 S. Ct. 562, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 963.

The intention to discriminate must appear.—The fact that a special system of taxation of national banks may not be as favorable as the general system of taxation in an isolated case does not render the system unlawful as discriminating against those institutions, so long as there is no intentional discrimination and no equality in the effect upon their stockholders. People v. Feitner, (1908) 191 N. Y. 88, 83 N. E. 592. See also Estherville First Nat. Bank v. Estherville, (1907) 136 Ia. 203, 112 N. W. 829.

III. EXEMPTIONS AND DEDUCTIONS.

Municipal, state, and federal bonds.—See Marion Nat. Bank v. Burton, (1906) 121 Ky. 876, 90 S. W. 944.

Deduction of indebtedness.—Before a state statute denying right in taxation to deduct debts from stock in national banks assessed with taxes, but allowing such deduction from other investments, can be held as in violation of this section, it must appear that other moneyed capital exists and in such amount as to operate as a discrimination against such banks, and that it is of such character as to come in competition with national banks. West Virginia Nat. Bank v. Dunkle, (1909) 65 W. Va. 210, 64 S. E. 531.

While a provision of a state revenue statute that stockholders in national banks shall not be entitled to any deduction from the assessed valuation of their shares because of debts owed by them, while owners of other "money, credits, or investments" are allowed such deduction, is invalid as applied to a stockholder who owes debts and who has not sufficient other money, credits, or investments from which such debts may be deducted, as subjecting him to taxation "at a greater rate than is assessed on other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens" of the state in violation of R. S. sec. 5219, it is not so invalid as to a stockholder who is not actually affected by it to his detriment, and a bill filed by a bank to enjoin the collection of taxes imposed on its stockholders because of such provision must allege facts showing the portion of the tax so rendered illegal, and that the valid portion has been paid or tendered, in order to entitle the complainant to equitable relief. Charleston Nat. Bank v. Melton, (1909) 171 Fed. 743.

The New York statute (Tax Law, Laws 1906, p. 805, ch. 908, sec. 23, and amended by Laws 1901, p. 1349, ch. 550) provides that the fiscal officer of every bank shall report to the assessor the amount of its authorized capital stock, number of shares, and their par value, the amount of stock paid in, amount of surplus and undivided profits, and a list of stockholders and their respective holdings. Laws 1906, p. 806, ch. 908, sec. 24, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 1350, ch. 550, provides that the rate of tax on the bank stock shall be one per cent. on the value thereof, ascertained by adding together the amount of the capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits, and dividing the result by the number of shares outstanding, provided that the rate shall not be greater than that assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens, and that the owners of the stock shall be entitled to no deduction from the taxable value thereof because of their personal indebtedness. It has been held that an assessment based upon sections 23 and 24 was not void as being a discrimination against national bank stock, within R. S. sec. 5219, because no deduction of debts was allowed, as is permitted in the case of other corporations and individuals. People v. Feitner, (1908) 191 N. Y. 88, 83 N. E. 592.

Exemption of shares of state and savings banks.—Under this section an assessment on shares of stock in a national bank, where, under a state law, shares of stock in state and savings banks are not taxable, is an invalid discrimination against national banks. Estherville First Nat. Bank v. Estherville, (Ia. 1911) 129 N. W. 475.

IV. REMEDIES IN CASE OF UNLAWFUL TAX.

When suit lies to restrain collection.—Equity will not enjoin a reassessment of a tax on the stock and real property of a national bank because of the apprehension that this section will be violated by the assessing officer in making the assessment. Albuquerque First Nat. Bank v. Albright, (1908) 208 U. S. 549, 28 S. Ct. 349, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 614.

Federal jurisdiction.—A national bank or stockholder therein has the right to go into a federal court of equity to test the validity, under this section, of a tax levied by state authority on the stock of the bank, where there is no adequate remedy at law in such court, notwithstanding a remedy provided by the state statute. Charleston Nat. Bank v. Melton, (1909) 171 Fed. 743.

Vol. V, p. 166, sec. 5220.

Effect of proceedings.—To the same effect as the second paragraph of the original note, Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Suther, (Okla. 1911) 116 Pac. 173.

Where a national bank went into voluntary liquidation, it thereby ceased to do business as a going concern, and was not thereafter required to register a subsequent transfer of its stock and to issue new stock to the transferee. Muir v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, (1905) 39 Wash. 57, 80 Pac. 1007.

Rights of creditors.—The tangible assets and the liability of stockholders of an insolvent national bank in process of voluntary liquidation in the hands of the liquidating agent constitute a trust fund for the primary benefit of creditors. George v. Wallace, (1904) 135 Fed. 286, 68 C. C. A. 40.

The good will of the business.—Minority stockholders of a solvent national bank cannot obtain relief from the majority stockholders for injuries resulting from the destruction of the good will of the bank, by a liquidation thereof by a vote of the owners of two-thirds of the stock thereof, the act of liquidation destroying the value of such good will, as a value separate from the value of tangible assets, and the loss falling proportionately on all the stockholders. Green v. Bennett, (Tex. 1908) 110 S. W. 108.

Nature of holding of liquidating agent.—Where the insolvency of a national bank was accompanied by a conveyance of its assets to a trustee, and a pledge thereof for the benefit of creditors, and this was followed by affirmative proceedings in liquidation, authorized by law, and the selection by the shareholders of the same trustee as their liquidating agent, such agent held the assets under an express trust for the benefit of creditors. George v. Wallace, (1904) 135 Fed. 286, 68 C. C. A. 40.

Right of majority stockholders who are also officers.—The owners of two-thirds of the stock of a national bank may vote to liquidate the bank, though they are the directors and the executive officers thereof, since they, as directors and officers, owe no duty to dissenting minority stockholders to continue the bank, where they do not desire so to do. Green v. Bennett, (Tex. 1908) 110 S. W. 108.

Necessity for insolvency.—This section is not limited to insolvent banks, nor to cases where the interest of all of the shareholders, including the minority, may be best subserved thereby. Green v. Bennett, (Tex. 1908) 110 S. W. 108.

Disposition of assets.—The owners of two-thirds of the stock of a national bank, who are its directors and executive officers, must, on voting to liquidate the bank, make such disposition of the assets as will be to the best interests of all the stockholders, including minority dissenting stockholders, and this may be done by the directors or by means of a liquidating committee. Green v. Bennett, (Tex. 1908) 110 S. W. 108.

Liability of liquidating committee.—In Green v. Bennett, (Tex. 1908) 110 S. W. 108, it appeared that the owners of two-thirds of the stock of a national bank voted to liquidate it. They were the officers of the bank, and became the liquidating committee. It was held that dissenting minority stockholders had a remedy against the liquidating committee for injuries resulting from the failure of the committee to properly dispose of the assets of the bank.

Sale to bank organized by the liquidating committee.—A sale of the assets of a national bank in process of liquidation, by the liquidating committee, composed of the directors of the bank owning two-thirds of its stock, to a bank organized by themselves is not void, but only subject to the closest scrutiny on the part of a court of equity, and subject to be set aside on its being shown that it was not conducted with the utmost fairness, to the end that full value, and the best price obtainable, was realized. Such a transaction does not amount to a consolidation of the two banks, and the minority stockholders are not entitled to a proportionate share of the stock of the new bank. Green v. Bennett, (Tex. 1908) 110 S. W. 108.

Appointment of receiver by state court.—A stockholder of a national bank whose charter has expired, suing also as cestui que trust of a special fund in the hands of those in control, is entitled, on proper allegation and proof, to have a receiver appointed by a state court, without violating R. S. secs. 5141, 5191, 5201, 5205, 5208, 5234, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 101, 124, 140, 143, 144, 170, or Act June 30, 1876, ch. 156, 19 Stat. L. 63, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 183, relating to winding up proceedings in case of insolvency of such associations, and making special provision by means of a receiver appointed under authority of the United States. Cogswell v. Norwich Second Nat. Bank, (1903) 76 Conn. 252, 56 Atl. 574.

Suits by receiver.—The receiver of a national bank has the legal title to the property covered by his appointment, entitling him to maintain an action at law in his own name in the state courts. Fish v. Olin, (1903) 70 Vt. 120, 56 Atl. 533.

Collections after insolvency.—Where the proceeds of a draft sent to a national bank for collection and remittance were paid to the receiver of the bank on its insolvency, the owner of the draft was entitled to recover the amount thereof. American Can Co. v. Williams, (1908) 176 Fed. 816.

Effect on rights of shareholders against directors.—The provisions of this Act for the administration of the affairs of an insolvent national bank by a receiver appointed by the Comptroller of the Currency does not prevent depositors of an insolvent bank from maintaining a suit against its directors for negligently permitting its officers to loan the bank's assets in violation of such Act, constituting a breach of the bank's implied contract with such depositors, inherent in the contract of deposit, that the bank would use such deposits and its other assets in conformity with the safeguards provided by law. Boyd v. Schneider, (1904) 131 Fed. 223, 65 C. C. A. 209.

Information regarding collateral.—Where a receiver, on taking possession of the assets of a national bank, found its affairs in confusion and found stock pledged to it as collateral with no definite and certain agreement as to the particulars of the pledge, it was his duty to ascertain and assert fully the obligations and liabilities of the pledgor to the bank and the purpose and extent of the pledge. Wise v. Williams, (1908) 162 Fed. 161.

Right to question authority of receiver.—A debtor of a national bank in the hands of a receiver cannot question the authority of such receiver. Jacobson v. Berry, (1907) 135 Ill. App. 415.

Public funds.—The fact alone that a deposit of public funds in a national bank by a public officer was wrongful, and known to be so by the bank, does not entitle a claim therefor to priority of payment over those of general creditors on the insolvency of the bank.

Lucas County v. Jamison, (1908) 170 Fed. 338.

Trust funds coming into the hands of a receiver of a national bank which are not identifiable as belonging specifically to a particular person are held by him as assets of the bank, and must be ratably apportioned among all the bank's creditors, as expressly provided by this section. Emigh v. Earling, (1908) 134 Wis. 565, 115 N. W. 128.

In all cases where an insolvent national bank holds funds as trustee, to entitle a claim therefor to a preference over those of general creditors in the distribution of the bank's assets it must be shown that such funds have not been dissipated, but that they remain in the estate and can be identified, not by earmarks, but by being traced into the estate and there now found, to its augmentation. Lucas County v. Jamison, (1908) 170 Fed. 338.

In an action against a receiver of a national bank to recover as a trust fund the amount of a draft collected by the bank, the burden of proof is on the owners of the draft to trace its proceeds into the common assets. American Can Co. v. Williams, (1908) 176 Fed. 816.

Attorney's fee on unmatured promissory notes.—A provision of a promissory note that, if not paid at maturity, the makers and indorsers shall be liable for all costs of collecting or attempting to collect the same, including an attorney's fee, cannot be enforced beyond the allowance of statutory costs against the receiver of an insolvent national bank who took charge of its assets for the purpose of liquidation before the note matured. Citizens' Bank, etc., Co. v. Thornton, (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 752.

Who entitled to.—Those portions of the collections on account of sales of butter actually coming into the hands of the receiver of a national bank which had virtually acquired and operated through its officers an insolvent creamery company doing business under an arrangement by which the proceeds of sales, less a stated compensation, were to be divided pro rata among those furnishing the milk, may be recovered by the latter, even though the transaction may have been beyond the powers of the bank, and they are further entitled to participate pro rata as general creditors to the extent that the proceeds of such sales had been diverted and appropriated by the bank. Rankin v. Emigh, (1910) 218 U. S. 27, 30 S. Ct. 672, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 915, affirming (1908) 134 Wis. 565, 115 N. W. 128.

Lien for indebtedness.—A national bank can acquire no equitable lien as against an indebted stockholder on his distributive share of the assets on a liquidation of the bank's affairs. Bridges v. National Bank, (1906) 185 N. Y. 146, 77 N. E. 1005, affirming (1905) 106 App. Div. 616, 94 N. Y. S. 1140.

Who liable generally.—Under this section providing that if the directors of a national bank knowingly violate, or permit an officer of the bank to violate, a provision of the title relating to national banks, they shall be liable for damages sustained by any person in consequence of such violation, they having attested to be correct an official report of the bank's condition, which included, at their full face, as part of the bank's resources, assets which they had been informed by the Comptroller of the Currency were doubtful, and for the collection, or removal from the bank, of which immediate steps should be taken, they are liable to one who, on the strength of the report, bought stock of the bank, for the depreciation thereof by reason of the shrinkage in the value of the specific assets, but not for its depreciation from impairment, then unknown to the directors, of other assets. Taylor v. Thomas, (1908) 124 App. Div. 53, 108 N. Y. S. 454, reversing (1907) 55 Misc. 411, 106 N. Y. S. 538.

Where a bank director was not acting as a director in obtaining discount of certain notes belonging to his father by the bank, it was held that he could not be held liable because he induced or permitted the bank to extend credit to his father in excess of the legal limit fixed by R. S. sec. 5200, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 139. Hicks v. Steel, (1905) 142 Mich. 292, 105 N. W. 767.

Jurisdiction of state courts.—State courts may enforce, against directors of a national bank who have made false representations as to the bank's financial condition in the official report to the Comptroller of the Currency, the civil liability prescribed by this section, which provides for the forfeiture of the charter of a national bank as the result of violations of the National Bank Act by the directors, such violations to be determined only by the federal courts, and makes every director who participated in or assented to the same civilly liable to persons who have suffered damage in consequence thereof. Yates v. Jones Nat. Bank, (1907) 206 U. S. 158, 27 S. Ct. 638, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1002.

Participation essential.—The directors of a national bank who merely negligently participated in or assented to the false representations as to the bank's financial condition contained in the official report to the Comptroller of the Currency, made and published conformably to R. S. sec. 5211, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 152, cannot be held civilly liable to any one deceived to his injury by such report, since the exclusive test of such liability is furnished by this section, which makes a knowing violation of the provisions of the title relating to national banks a prerequisite to such liability. Yates v. Jones Nat. Bank, (1907) 206 U. S. 158, 27 S. Ct. 638, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1002.

Absence of director.—The mere fact that a director of a national bank does not attend to his duties by reason of continued ill health or other business engagements does not necessarily relieve him from liability for losses sustained by the bank through the failure of the directors to exercise proper care and supervision over its affairs. Rankin v. Cooper, (1907) 149 Fed. 1010.

The directors are not insurers.—To the same effect as the original note. Rankin v. Cooper, (1907) 149 Fed. 1010.

Who may sue.—Damages to a national bank from the misfeasance or mismanagement of its officers are assets of the bank, recoverable only in an action by the bank or for the benefit of all the stockholders and creditors. Yates v. Jones Nat. Bank, (1905) 74 Neb. 734, 105 N. W. 287.

A receiver of a national bank may maintain a suit against the directors in behalf of creditors and stockholders to recover sums alleged to have been lost to the bank through the misconduct or negligence of defendants, and it is not a necessary condition precedent that violations of the Banking Act should have been previously adjudged in a suit brought by the comptroller. Allen v. Luke, (1906) 141 Fed. 694.

Form of remedy.—Where a stockholder's agent of a national bank sought to recover from directors losses sustained by stock speculations of the president and vice-president with the directors' knowledge and participation, it was held that a bill in equity for an accounting was sustainable, though a recovery at law could be had as to some of the transactions pleaded. McKinnon v. Morse, (1910) 177 Fed. 576.

Where several depositors of a national bank had claims against a number of the bank's directors, arising out of their failure to take steps to prevent the bank's assets being improperly loaned, and none of such depositors could, by separate suits at law, recover that to which he was entitled, it was held that such depositors were entitled to maintain a single suit against such directors in equity. Boyd v. Schneider, (C. C. A. 1904) 131 Fed. 223.

Where a national bank suffered losses through the continued negligence of its directors, which was unknown to its creditors, and such directors remained in control until the appointment of a receiver on the bank's insolvency, it was held that a court of equity would entertain a suit to charge them with personal liability, notwithstanding the fact that an action at law to recover for their wrongful acts would be barred by limitation under the laws of the state. Rankin v. Cooper, (1907) 149 Fed. 1010.

Limitation of action.—Directors of a national bank, while implied trustees, are not technical trustees, and hence directors who have ceased to be such, prior to the failure of a bank, are entitled to plead limitations as a defense to a suit by a receiver of the bank, to recover losses sustained by their malfeasance or gross negligence. Emerson v. Gaither, (1906) 103 Md. 564, 84 Atl. 26.

Bill or complaint.—In a suit against the directors of a national bank it is not necessary that the bill allege the exact amount of the loss arising from each transaction set out, where it is not yet known; but it should set out with particularity the acts of defendants relied on to constitute negligence or misconduct, and the details of the several transactions should be given with such fulness as can be done by complainant. Allen v. Luke, (1906) 141 Fed. 694.

A bill by a stockholder's agent of an insolvent bank against directors to recover moneys lost by ultra vires transactions of the president and vice-president, in which defendants participated, alleging that at a stockholders' meeting held pursuant to law the plaintiff was elected as shareholders' agent to wind up the affairs of the bank in place of a receiver, and that he gave bond, as required by law, and is the duly qualified agent of the shareholders to act in the place of the receiver, was held to sufficiently show the complainant's capacity to sue. McKinnon v. Morse, (1910) 177 Fed. 576.

In a bill charging the making of illegal loans by the defendants as directors, it is not necessary to allege a formal vote of the defendants authorizing or approving such loans. Allen v. Luke, (1908) 163 Fed. 1018.

Amendment.—Where several depositors of an insolvent national bank filed a bill against its directors for a breach of their implied contract to see that the bank's assets were used according to law, but the bill failed to allege the time when complainants' deposits were made, complainants were entitled to leave to amend in that respect. Boyd v. Schneider, (1904) 131 Fed. 223, 65 C. C. A. 209.

Duties as to management.—It is the duty of directors of a national bank to exercise reasonable control and supervision over its affairs, and to use ordinary care and diligence in ascertaining the condition of its business, which is such care as an ordinarily prudent and diligent man would exercise in view of all the circumstances. They are not expected to watch the routine of every day's business, but they should have a general knowledge of the manner in which the bank's business is conducted, and upon what securities its larger lines of credit are given, and generally know of and give direction to its important and general affairs. Rankin v. Cooper, (1907) 149 Fed. 1010.

Examination of condition of resources.—It is incumbent upon the directors of a national bank in the exercise of ordinary prudence, and as a part of their duty of general supervision, to cause an examination of the condition and resources of the bank to be made with reasonable frequency. Rankin v. Cooper, (1907) 149 Fed. 1010.

Degree of care required.—If nothing has come to the knowledge of the directors of a national bank to awaken suspicion that something is going wrong, ordinary attention to the affairs of the institution is all that is required of them, but if, on the other hand, they know, or by the exercise of ordinary care should know, any facts which should awaken suspicion and put a prudent man on his guard, then a degree of care commensurate with the danger to be avoided is required, and a failure to exercise such care makes them responsible. Rankin v. Cooper, (1907) 149 Fed. 1010.

Necessity for injury or loss to bank.—Directors of a national bank cannot be made to respond to damages or to pay excessive loans, unless some injury was done to the bank or loss sustained by reason thereof. Emerson v. Gaither, (1906) 103 Md. 564, 64 Atl. 26.

Excessive loans.—In an action by a national bank to recover damages sustained in consequence of excessive loans made by former directors in violation of this section, it was held that the issues to the jury were whether the loans were made when the borrower was already indebted to one-tenth of the capital actually paid in by the bank, whether such loans were knowingly made by such directors, and what portions of the moneys were so lost. Mangum City Nat. Bank v. Crow, (1910) 27 Okla. 107, 111 Pac. 210.

Where the directors of a national bank became aware, through the report of a committee of their number, and also by notices sent them individually by the Comptroller of the Currency, that the bank had been making excessive loans to its president and to other persons, firms, and corporations with which he was associated, but took no effective steps to reduce such loans, or to prevent their increase, which continued until the bank became insolvent, it was held that they were jointly and severally liable for all losses which the bank sustained through subsequent transactions and which could have been prevented by a proper discharge of their duties. Rankin v. Cooper, (1907) 149 Fed. 1010.

Newly elected directors.—While a director of a national bank ought not to be held responsible for the conduct of its business from the very day of his election, if he has not been a director before, he becomes responsible for acts or omissions from the time he acquires knowledge of the bank's condition and begins to actively participate in its affairs. Rankin v. Cooper, (1907) 149 Fed. 1010.

Violation of legal reserve requirement.—A loss resulting to a national bank from bad loans, which were not repaid, cannot be said to have been caused by a violation of law by the directors in failing to keep on hand the legal reserve required by R. S. sec. 5191, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 124. Allen v. Luke, (1908) 163 Fed. 1018.

Common-law liability.—The provisions of the National Banking Act defining the duties of the directors of such banks do not relieve them from their common-law liability for a failure to diligently and honestly discharge their trust. Allen v. Luke, (1908) 163 Fed. 1018.

Reporting doubtful assets at full face.—Where the directors attested to be correct an official report of the bank's condition, which included, at their full face, as part of the bank's resources, assets which they had been informed by the Comptroller of the Currency were doubtful, and for the collection, or removal from the bank, of which immediate steps should be taken, it was held that they were liable to one who, on the strength of the report, bought stock of the bank, for the depreciation thereof by reason of the shrinkage in the value of the specific assets, but not for its depreciation from impairment, then unknown to the directors, of other assets. Taylor v. Thomas, (1909) 195 N. Y. 590, 89 N. E. 1113, affirming (1908) 124 App. Div. 83, 108 N. Y. S. 454, which modified and affirmed (1907) 55 Misc. 411, 106 N. Y. S. 538.

Permitting stock speculation by officers.—Where the directors of a national bank engaged in or knowingly permitted stock speculation by the president and vice-president with the bank's funds, it was held that they were liable for the losses sustained. McKinnon v. Morse, (1910) 177 Fed. 576.

Appointment of receiver by state court.—See under this title, vol. 5, p. 170, sec. 5234.

Vol. V, p. 184, sec. 3.

Suits against agent.—Where a shareholder's agent has been appointed to take charge of the assets of a national bank under this section, providing that such agent may sue and be sued in his own name or in the name of the association, suit was properly instituted against him by an alleged creditor of the bank to recover on a guaranty collateral to a sale to complainant of certain stock owned by the bank. Barton v. McKinnon, (1910) 179 Fed. 759.

The common-law right of a stockholder, for proper purposes and under reasonable regulations as to place and time, to inspect the books of the corporation of which he is a member, is not restricted as to national banks in this section. Guthrie v. Harkness, (1905) 199 U. S. 148, 26 S. Ct. 4, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 130, affirming (1904) 27 Utah 248, 75 Pac. 624.

Vol. V, p. 188, sec. 5241.

Application of stockholder to examine books.—An application by a bona fide stockholder of a national bank to examine its books, accounts, loans, etc., in order to determine the value of his stock, is not a visitation of the corporation, within this section, so as to prevent the stockholder from obtaining such relief under a state statute declaring that all books of any corporation shall be subject to the inspection of any bona fide stockholder at all reasonable hours. Harkness v. Guthrie, (1904) 27 Utah 248, 75 Pac. 624.

Where a stockholder had sued for false representations made by directors of a national bank on which he had purchased shares of the bank's stock at a price in excess of its true value, that he discontinued such suit and recommenced it in the federal courts did not deprive him of the right to compel the bank's officers to permit an examination of its records to ascertain the true value of its assets and stock, the amount of its losses in certain specified dealings, and the existence of documents essential as primary evidence in the pending action. Woodworth v. Old Second Nat. Bank, (1908) 154 Mich. 459, 117 N. W. 893, 15 Detroit Leg. N. 773.

State courts have jurisdiction to compel officers of a national bank to permit a stockholder's examination of its records and documents for a proper purpose. Woodworth v. Old Second Nat. Bank, (1908) 154 Mich. 459, 117 N. W. 893, 15 Detroit Leg. N. 773.

Sufficiency of reasons for desiring inspection.—In Woodworth v. Old Second Nat. Bank, (1908) 154 Mich. 459, 117 N. W. 893, 15 Detroit Leg. N. 773, a national bank stockholder on Feb. 1, 1906, served on the directors written demand for an examination of its books and records, stating that he would renew the demand in person on Feb. 5, 1906, at three p. m. at the banking office, and that inspection was desired to commence at that time and continue at such hours as would not interfere with the bank's business. The notice cited a list of records to be inspected, and recited that it was to ascertain the true financial condition of the bank, the true value of its assets and capital stock, to ascertain the amount, nature, and date of the bank's losses through certain dealings with specified persons, and to investigate certain documents desired for use in a lawsuit commenced by relator. It was held that the relator's demand was made at the proper time and place, and that the notice disclosed a legitimate reason therefor.

The common-law right of a stockholder, for proper purposes and under reasonable regulations as to place and time, to inspect the books of the corporation of which he is a member, is not restricted as to national banks in this section. Guthrie v. Harkness, (1905) 199 U. S. 148, 26 S. Ct. 4, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 130, affirming (1904) 27 Utah 248, 75 Pac. 624.

I. TRANSFERS.

Actions by receiver to recover assets.—Where a national bank, after or in contemplation of an act of insolvency, made a transfer of notes to a creditor as a preference, which was void under this section, it was held that the receiver might at his election maintain an action at law against the creditor for their conversion. Ball v. German Bank, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 750.

Settlement of lease of real estate.—The owner of real property leased to a national bank for building purposes is not liable to account to the bank's receiver for the bank building erected thereon, which the bank, while insolvent and in course of voluntary liquidation, turned over to him in consideration of a release from all further liability under the lease; the bank being at the time in arrears for rent and taxes, and the income from the property not exceeding the charges against it. Brown v. Schleier, (1904) 194 U. S. 18, 24 S. Ct. 558, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 857, affirming (1902) 118 Fed. 981, 55 C. C. A. 475.

For another case under this section see Ball v. German Bank, (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 750.

II. ATTACHMENTS, INJUNCTIONS, AND EXECUTIONS.

Effect of later acts.—To the same effect as the original note. Van Reed v. People's Nat. Bank, (1905) 198 U. S. 554, 25 S. Ct. 775, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1161, affirming (1903) 173 N. Y. 314, 66 N. E. 16, cited in the original note.

Attachment, etc., in state courts.—Jurisdiction over the person or property of a national bank is not acquired by the issue of an attachment out of a state court before judgment, which, by reason of this section, is beyond the power of the court. Van Reed v. People's Nat. Bank, (1905) 198 U. S. 554, 25 S. Ct. 775, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1161, affirming (1903) 173 N. Y. 314, 66 N. E. 16; Merchants' Laclede Nat. Bank v. Troy Grocery Co., (1905) 144 Ala. 605, 39 So. 476; Meyer v. Cœur d'Alene First Nat. Bank, (1904) 10 Idaho 175, 77 Pac. 334; McBride v. Illinois Nat. Bank, (1908) 128 App. Div. 503, 112 N. Y. S. 794.

Waiver of exemption.—To the same effect as the first part of the original note. Merchants' Laclede Nat. Bank v. Troy Grocery Co., (1907) 150 Ala. 128, 43 So. 208.

Necessity for insolvency.—A national bank, whether solvent or insolvent, is within the exemption from the issue of attachment before judgment, which this section affords in suits in the state courts. Van Reed v. People's Nat. Bank, (1905) 198 U. S. 554, 25 S. Ct. 775, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1161, affirming (1903) 173 N. Y. 314, 66 N. E. 16.

Appointment of permanent receiver by state court.—This section is not violated by the appointment of a permanent receiver on the application of a stockholder, made by a state court as part of the final judgment in the cause. Cogswell v. Norwich Second Nat. Bank, (1903) 76 Conn. 252, 56 Atl. 574.

Appointment of temporary receiver.—See Cogswell v. Norwich Second Nat. Bank, (1903) 76 Conn. 252, 56 Atl. 574.

Vol. V, p. 193, sec. 4.

Since the passage of the section in the text. — The Act of July 12, 1882, ch. 290, sec. 4, 22 Stat. L. 163, which provides that jurisdiction for suits by or against national banks shall be the same as for suits by or against banks not national doing business in the same place, deprives the federal courts of jurisdiction of suits by or against national banks by reason of their national incorporation, leaving such jurisdiction dependent on diversity of citizenship alone, unless a federal question is otherwise involved; and under Act March 3, 1887, ch. 373, sec. 4, 24 Stat. L. 554, as amended by Act Aug. 13, 1888, ch. 866, 25 Stat. L. 436, which makes the citizenship of such banks for jurisdictional purposes dependent upon their location, a federal court in a state is without jurisdiction of a suit by a national bank of the District of Columbia against a citizen of such state on the ground of diversity of citizenship. American Nat. Bank v. Tappan, (1909) 174 Fed. 431.

Mandamus by state courts. — Any legal right which a stockholder of a national bank may have to obtain an inspection of its books may be enforced in the state courts by mandamus, in view of the provision of this section that, for actions against national banks at law or in equity, they shall be deemed citizens of the state in which they are located, and that in such cases the federal Circuit and District Courts shall have jurisdiction only as in cases between individual citizens of the same state. Guthrie v. Harkness, (1905) 199 U. S. 148, 26 S. Ct. 4, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 130.

Suits by receivers and agents. — To the same effect as the original note. Rankin v. Herod, (1904) 130 Fed. 390; Rankin v. Herod, (1905) 140 Fed. 661.

A federal question is not raised ipso facto in a suit by a national bank. Denison State Nat. Bank v. Eureka Springs Water Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 827.

NATURALIZATION.

Vol. V, p. 200, sec. 2165.

Repeal. — This section was expressly repealed by Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3592, sec. 26, 34 Stat. L. 603, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 375.

Judgment. — In a naturalization proceeding the court has power to admit to citizenship or not, depending upon whether the essential facts are proved, and, in either event, the judgment should be recorded. Rockland v. Hurricane Isle, (1909) 106 Me. 169, 76 Atl. 286.

Vol. V, p. 201, sec. 2165. [Declaration of intention.]

Authority of state court. — Congress, in the exercise of its power under U. S. Const., art. 1, sec. 8, cl. 4, to establish a uniform rule of naturalization, may confer jurisdiction upon the courts of a state of naturalization proceedings involving admission to citizenship in the United States, and may constitutionally provide for the punishment of false swearing in such a proceeding. Holmgren v. U. S., (1910) 217 U. S. 509, 30 S. Ct. 588, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 861.

The term "having common-law jurisdiction." — To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note. U. S. v. Nechman, (1910) 183 Fed. 788.

A "court of record having common-law jurisdiction," within the meaning of section 2165 is one having a judge, clerk, and seal, and whose powers are exercised according to the course of the common law; that is, a court wherein controversies are judicially determined after notice to the interested parties and opportunity given them to be heard. State v. Weber, (1905) 96 Minn. 422, 105 N. W. 490.

A court of common-law jurisdiction authorized by this section to admit aliens as citizens need not possess a general common-law jurisdiction, but if any part of its jurisdiction answers that designation it is sufficient. Courts with this jurisdiction are those which have the power to punish offenses, enforce rights, or redress wrongs recognized by the common law, or which, in the determination of the causes they decide, are governed by the principles, rules, and usages of that law. The term "having common-law" is used to distinguish these courts from those which have no jurisdiction save in equity, admiralty, or in matters not involving offenses or rights under the common law. Within this meaning and under the decisions of the state of Tennessee the County Courts of that state are not "courts of common-law jurisdiction," having authority to admit aliens to citizenship. In re Wolf, (1911) 188 Fed. 519.

Minor. — Under this section it was held that a minor who had reached years of discretion could make a declaration of intention. In re Polsson, (1908) 159 Fed. 283; In re Gross, (1908) 160 Fed. 739; U. S. v. George, (1908) 164 Fed. 45, 90 C. C. A. 463; In re Symanowski, (1909) 168 Fed. 978; In re Shapiro, (1911) 186 Fed. 606.

Contra. — In re Spitzer, (1908) 160 Fed. 137.

Vol. V, p. 202, sec. 2165. [Oath to support, etc.]

Time of renunciation.—This section did not require a renunciation of allegiance to the foreign sovereign, or the actual declaration of allegiance to the United States, at the time of the applicant's declaration of intention to become a citizen. In re Symanowski, (1909) 168 Fed. 978.

[Residence in United States, etc.]

Conclusiveness of record.—To the same effect as the original note. Rockland v. Hurricane Isle, (1909) 106 Me. 169, 76 Atl. 286.

A naturalization record need not show jurisdiction, or that all the legal requisites have been complied with, nor contain the alien's previous declaration of intention to become a citizen, in order to import validity. In re Symanowski, (1909) 168 Fed. 978.

Record need not show residence.—Under this section, requiring a declaration of intention two years before admission to citizenship, an oath when application for admission is made, and a showing to the court of certain residence in the United States and the particular state, and of good moral character, etc., such prerequisites were matters of proof, and not of jurisdiction, and hence a record of naturalization did not need to show residence in the state for the required time. Rockland v. Hurricane Isle, (1909) 106 Me. 169, 76 Atl. 286.

This section was not repealed by the Naturalization Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3592, 34 Stat. L. 596, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 365, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1907, p. 419. U. S. v. Meyer, (1909) 170 Fed. 983.

Proof "as now provided by law."—This section requires that the court shall, in addition to such proof of residence and good moral character as "now" provided for by law, be satisfied by competent proof of the applicant having been honorably discharged from service of the United States. It has been held that the word "now" is limited to the laws existing at the enactment of the statute, and did not include subsequent enactments. In re Loftus, (1908) 165 Fed. 1002; In re McNabb, (1909) 175 Fed. 511.

Proof of residence.—On application by an honorably discharged soldier for naturalization, as authorized by this section, his proof of residence within the United States for one year prior to his application may be made by depositions; Act Cong. June 29, 1906, ch. 3592, sec. 10, 34 Stat. L. 599, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 371, authorizing the taking of depositions in naturalization proceedings, being sufficiently broad to permit depositions to be taken without the state whenever it is essential to prove residence beyond the state. In re McNabb, (1909) 175 Fed. 511.

Japanese soldier.—This section, as limited by section 2169, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 287, by providing that "the provisions of this title shall apply to aliens being free white persons and to aliens of African nativity, and to persons of African descent," does not extend the right of naturalization to a person of the Japanese race, although having an honorable discharge from the army of the United States. In re Buntaro Kumagai, (1908) 163 Fed. 922.

Vol. V, p. 206. [Aliens honorably discharged from service in navy or marine corps.]

Posting of notice of petition.—Act Cong. June 29, 1906, ch. 3592, 34 Stat. L. 596, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 366, to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States, declares, in section 4, that an alien may be admitted to become a citizen of the United States in the following manner, and "not otherwise." It has been held that the provision of such Act requiring notice of the petition to be posted for ninety days prior to hearing was applicable to an alien applying for citizenship under Act Cong. July 26, 1894, ch. 165, 28 Stat. L. 124, providing that service in the navy or marine corps for a specified term, and honorable discharge, shall be counted as residence, and shall entitle an alien having other necessary requisites to citizenship. U. S. v. Peterson, (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 289.

Japanese sailors or marines.—In view of the provision of the Naturalization Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3592, sec. 26, 34 Stat. L. 603, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 375, repealing related sections, but omitting from such repeal R. S. sec. 2169, as amended, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 207, which limits the privilege of naturalization to free white persons and persons of African nativity or descent, such section must be held to limit and control this Act, authorizing the naturalization of "any alien" twenty-one years or more of age who served in the United States navy or marine corps as therein provided, and therefore an alien of the Japanese race is not entitled to naturalization thereunder. Bessho v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 245.

Repeal.—This section was expressly repealed by Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3592, sec. 26, 34 Stat. L. 603, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 375.

Vol. V, p. 207, sec. 2168,

Repeal.—This section was expressly repealed by Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3592, sec. 26, 34 Stat. L. 603, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 375.

This section was not repealed by implication by Naturalization Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3592, 34 Stat. L. 596, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1909, p. 97, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 365. U. S. v. Balsara, (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 694.

Armenians.—The word "white" was used in this section to classify the inhabitants and to include all persons not otherwise classified, not as synonymous with "European," there being in fact no "European" or "white" race as a distinctive class, or "Asiatic" or "yellow" race including substantially all the people of Asia; and hence the term "free white persons" includes Armenians born in Asiatic Turkey and on the west side of the Bosphorus. In re Halladjian, (1909) 174 Fed. 834.

Parsee.—"Free white persons" includes members of the white or Caucasian race, as distinct from the black, red, yellow, and brown races; and hence a Parsee is entitled to admission to citizenship. U. S. v. Balsara, (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 694.

Syrian.—A Syrian from Mt. Lebanon, near Beirut, was held to be a free white person, within this section, providing for the naturalization of free white persons of other countries as citizens of the United States; such term being construed to refer to race rather than to color, and to include all members of the Caucasian race. In re Najour, (1909) 174 Fed. 735.

Likewise a Syrian born in Damascus was held to be a "free white person," entitled to naturalization. In re Mudarri, (1910) 176 Fed. 465.

Half-breeds.—In In re Knight, (1909) 171 Fed. 299, it appeared that the petitioner was born on a British schooner in the Yellow Sea. His father was an Englishman, and his mother half Chinese and half Japanese, and their marriage occurred at Shanghai under the British flag. The petitioner enlisted in the United States navy off the coast of China in 1882, and first came to the United States Aug. 5, 1892. He had served honorably since his enlistment until his application for citizenship, when he was forty-three years old. It was held that petitioner was not a free "white person," and was therefore not entitled to naturalization under this section and Act Cong. May 6, 1892, ch. 126, sec. 14, 22 Stat. L. 81, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 784, prohibiting the admission of Chinese to citizenship.

Japanese soldier.—See under this title, vol. 5, p. 205, sec. 2166.

Japanese sailors or marines.—See under this title, vol. 5, p. 206, Aliens honorably discharged from service in navy or marine corps.

Vol. V, p. 208, sec. 2170.

Proof of residence.—While one's residence under this section, which requires an applicant for citizenship to have resided in the United States for five years next preceding his admission, depends largely on his intention, such intention is to be gathered from his acts rather than from his declaration. Thus an alien who returned to and remained in his native country for more than four years, where his family always lived, he resuming his regular occupation there, cannot claim residence in the United States during that period. U. S. v. Aakervik, (1910) 180 Fed. 137.

Effect of immigration laws.—An alien minor child who has never dwelt in the United States is not, when coming to join a naturalized parent, exempt from the provision of the Act of March 3, 1903, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 103, 23 Stat. L. 1213, ch. 1012, sec. 2, debarring aliens from landing if they are afflicted with a dangerous contagious disease, on the theory that she was invested with citizenship by virtue of the declaration of this section that minor children of naturalized citizens shall, if "dwelling in the United States," be considered as citizens thereof. Zartarian v. Billings, (1907) 204 U. S. 170, 27 S. Ct. 182, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 428; U. S. v. Williams, (1904) 132 Fed. 894. See also under this title, 1909 Supp., p. 366, sec. 4, Proceedings.

Repeal.—This section was expressly repealed by Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3592, sec. 26, 34 Stat. L. 603, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 375.

Vol. V, p. 210, sec. 5395.

Amendment.—The Naturalization Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3592, sec. 23, 34 Stat. L. 603, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 375, providing a punishment for knowingly making a false affidavit as to any material fact required to be proved in a naturalization proceeding, is to be regarded as an amendment of this section. U. S. v. Dupont, (1910) 178 Fed. 823.

Elements of offense.—On a trial of a defendant charged with a violation of this section, which denounces a penalty against one who “knowingly swears falsely” in making any oath under the law relating to naturalization, it is sufficient to warrant conviction if defendant knowingly and wilfully testified falsely, and it is not necessary that his act should also have been corrupt or malicious. Holmgren v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 439.

Perjuries committed in state court.—A District Court of the United States has jurisdiction of a prosecution under this section for false swearing in a naturalization proceeding, notwithstanding the fact that such proceeding was in a state court. Holmgren

v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 439. See also Schmidt v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 257.

Indictment — variance.—An indictment charging that the defendant made a false affidavit before a notary public “in a proceeding for naturalization” then and there pending in a stated court “touching the matters in issue and material in said proceedings,” cannot be construed to charge the making of the affidavit “under or by virtue of any law relating to the naturalization of aliens,” within the first clause of said section, but clearly charges the offense under the second clause, and is not sustained by evidence showing that the affidavit was made before the proceeding was instituted. Moore v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 962.

Instructions.—See Holmgren v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 439.

Construction.—This section provides that every person applying to be admitted as a citizen, or appearing as a witness for any such person who knowingly personates any other person than himself or falsely appears in the name of a deceased person, or in any assumed or fictitious name, or falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits any oath, notice, affidavit, certificate, order, record, etc., shall be punished. It has been held that such provision should be construed as though it read “or any person who falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits,” etc., and as so construed prohibited the felonious making of a certificate of naturalization by a person other than the “person applying to be admitted a citizen or appearing as a witness for any such person.” U. S. v. Raisch, (1906) 144 Fed. 487. Compare U. S. v. York, (1904) 131 Fed. 323.

Jurisdiction.—A conviction can be had in a federal court for false swearing in naturalization proceedings in a state court, under this section. Holmgren v. U. S., (1910) 217 U. S. 509, 30 S. Ct. 588, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 861.

Necessity for actual use for unlawful purpose.—To constitute an offense under the provision of this section that “every person . . . who without lawful excuse knowingly is possessed of any false, forged, antedated, or counterfeit certificate of citizenship . . . knowing such certificate to be false, forged, antedated, or counterfeit, with intent unlawfully to use the same,” shall be punished, etc., it is necessary that such false certificate be actually used for an unlawful purpose. Green v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 150 Fed. 560.

Recitals of certificate.—In this section, making it a criminal offense to knowingly use any false or forged certificate of citizenship “purporting to have been issued under the provisions of any law of the United States relating to naturalization,” the clause quoted refers to certificates which purport upon their face to have been issued after a compliance on the part of the alien named therein with the naturalization laws and as evidence of that fact, and a certificate to sustain an indictment based on such statute need not recite that it is issued under a law of the United States, there being, in fact, no statute authorizing or requiring the issuance of such certificate. Dolan v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 440.

“Certificate of citizenship.”—A certified copy of the record of a court showing the admission of an alien to citizenship constitutes a “certificate of citizenship,” within the meaning of R. S. secs. 5425, 5427, making it a crime to use or to aid and abet another in using false certificates of citizenship for purposes therein specified. Dolan v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 440.

A “false” certificate of citizenship, within the meaning of R. S. secs. 5425, 5427, is not limited to one which is forged, but includes one which is false in its recital of facts. Dolan v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 440.

Construction of statute.—This section provides that “every person who knowingly and intentionally aids or abets any person in the commission of any felony denounced in the three preceding sections” shall be punished, etc. In the original statute said four sections were all embraced in one section, which expressly declared the offenses now contained in the three first sections to be felonies, and the part which now constitutes section 5427 read: “Any person who shall . . . aid and abet any person in the commission of any such felony," etc. In the revision such express declaration was omitted, and it has since been settled by decision that the offenses described in the first three sections are not felonies, but misdemeanors, under the common-law rule of construction applied to federal statutes, although the punishment prescribed is imprisonment in a penitentiary at hard labor, which, by the general understanding in this country, makes the offense a felony. It was held that such construction does not render section 5427 a nullity, but that the word "felony," as used therein, should be given its popular meaning, in order to give effect to the section in accordance with the manifest intention of Congress. Dolan v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 133 Fed. 440. See also U. S. v. York, (1904) 131 Fed. 323.

False affidavit of citizenship before registration officer. — An alien who knowingly makes a false affidavit that he has been duly naturalized as a citizen of the United States, before a registration officer, for the purpose of procuring himself to be registered as a voter at an approaching election in a state, commits an offense in violation of this section. Green v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 150 Fed. 560.

Vol. X, p. 238, sec. 39.

Repeal. — This section was expressly repealed by Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3592, sec. 26, 34 Stat. L. 603, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 375.

For a case under this section see Schmidt v. U. S., (1904) 133 Fed. 257, 66 C. C. A. 389.

1909 Supp., p. 365, sec. 3.

Jurisdiction of state courts. — The courts of a state may, with the consent of the legislature, exercise the jurisdiction conferred by this Act, but the jurisdiction must be exercised under and in conformity with the federal statutes, not only in matters entering directly into the subject of naturalization, but also in matters of congressional legislation fairly incidental to the exercise of the constitutional power to deal with naturalization. Hampden County v. Morris, (1911) 207 Mass. 167, 93 N. E. 579.

The federal government in authorizing state courts to act in naturalization proceedings selects such courts and the clerks thereof as government agencies through whom the government is discharging a function of sovereignty; and, while Congress may confer power on the state courts to act in naturalization proceedings and the state courts may constitutionally exercise the same when authorized so to do, Congress may not make their acts in that regard a part of their duties as state courts, and the power conferred and the duties imposed by the Naturalization Act are not ex officio powers and duties belonging to and devolving on a state office as such. Eldredge v. Salt Lake County, (Utah 1910) 106 Pac. 939.

Within respective jurisdiction districts. — This section confers naturalization jurisdiction on the courts of the various states extending to aliens resident within the respective judicial districts of such courts. The Washington constitution, art. 4, sec. 6, confers general jurisdiction on the Superior Courts of that state within their judicial districts, not limited to the counties composing the same, and by statute (Rem. & Ball. Code, sec. 9050), Klickitat and Clarke counties are in the same judicial districts, the courts of those counties being presided over by the same judge. It has been held that, where an alien resident of such district was naturalized by such Superior Court while sitting in Clarke county, it was not a fatal objection to the naturalization that the alien was a resident of Klickitat county. U. S. v. Stoller, (1910) 180 Fed. 910.

Under the provision in this section that "the naturalization jurisdiction of all courts herein specified, state, territorial, and federal, shall extend only to aliens resident within the respective judicial districts of such courts," it has been held that a District Court of the state of Kansas has jurisdiction to naturalize aliens resident in the county where it is sitting only, its territorial jurisdiction while so sitting being restricted to that county by state statute. (Dassler's Gen. Stat. Kan. 1905, sec. 2010.) U. S. v. Johnson, (1908) 181 Fed. 429.

1909 Supp., p. 366, sec. 4. [Proceedings.]

Powers of Congress. — Under Const. U. S., art. I., sec. 8, giving Congress power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization and to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying the power into execution, Congress has exclusive jurisdiction over the subject of naturalization. Hampden County v. Morris, (1911) 207 Mass. 167, 93 N. E. 579.

A privilege, not a right. — To become a citizen of the United States by naturalization is not a right, but a privilege, which can be granted by the courts only under provision of laws enacted by Congress. In re Buntaro Kumagai, (1906) 163 Fed. 922.

Alien wife of foreigner. — An alien woman, married to an alien, although residing in this country and otherwise qualified, cannot become a citizen of the United States by naturalization. In re Rionda, (1908) 164 Fed. 368; U. S. v. Cohen, (1910) 179 Fed. 834, 103 C. C. A. 28.

Effect of immigration laws.—Under Act March 2, 1907, ch. 2534, sec. 5, 34 Stat. L. 1229, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 68, providing that a child born without the United States of alien parents shall be deemed a citizen by virtue of the naturalization of the parent, taking place during the minority of the child, provided that the citizenship of such child shall begin when he begins to reside permanently in the United States, until a minor child of a naturalized parent has begun to reside permanently in the United States he is an alien, and he cannot begin to so reside if he belongs to a class of aliens debarred from entry, and the naturalization of a father will not permit his minor child born abroad, and remaining in the country of his nativity until after the naturalization, to come into the United States if prohibited from entering by Act Feb. 20, 1907, ch. 1134, 34 Stat. L. 898, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 162, excluding from admission into the United States persons belonging to enumerated classes. U. S. v. Rodgers, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 334. See also under this title, vol. 5, p. 209, sec. 2172.

1909 Supp., p. 366, sec. 4, cl. first.

Nature of declaration.—A declaration of intention to become a citizen is in no sense a complete and binding act, and carries no full rights of citizenship before the final act of admission. In re Polsson, (1908) 159 Fed. 283.

Conclusiveness of finding of court.—Where a decree of naturalization issued by a state court of original jurisdiction recited that the alien naturalized was then twenty-five years of age, and that it appeared to the court that he had made his declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States according to law, it should be construed as finding that all other requirements necessary to sustain his application were found to exist; and hence the order could not be attacked on the ground that he had not declared his intention at least two years prior to his admission to citizenship, under the rule that a judgment may not be impeached for any facts, whether involving fraud, collusion, or perjury, which were necessarily before the court entering the judgment and passed upon. U. S. v. Neelman, (1910) 183 Fed. 788.

Evidence of qualification.—The requirement of section 4 that an application for naturalization shall state in his petition the date of his arrival in the United States and the name of the vessel on which he came must be given practical effect, and where such statement is disproved prima facie by proof that the appellant's name does not appear among the passengers on the vessel named, the burden of proof is shifted to him to explain such fact to the satisfaction of the court, and his testimony that he came under a fictitious name which he cannot remember will not be accepted as satisfactory. In re Kestelman, (1908) 165 Fed. 265.

1909 Supp., p. 366, sec. 4, cl. second.

Filing in duplicate.—The provision of this section requiring a naturalization petition to be filed in duplicate is directory only, so that a failure to comply therewith will not render the proceedings void. U. S. v. Stoller, (1910) 180 Fed. 910.

Contents of petition.—Under this section, providing that a naturalization petition shall contain every fact material to the petitioner's naturalization required to be proved on the final hearing, and clause 4 declaring that that petition shall prove, among other things, that he has resided immediately preceding his application continuously within the state or territory where the court is at the time held, for one year at least, petitioner's prior residence within the state or territory for a year is a necessary allegation of a petition for naturalization, and hence perjury may be assigned on a false allegation thereof. U. S. v. Dupont, (1910) 176 Fed. 823.

Verification.—A petition which is not verified by at least two persons who are citizens is not merely voidable but void, and cannot be amended. U. S. v. Martorana, (1909) 171 Fed. 397, 96 C. C. A. 353.

A petition for naturalization not verified by affidavits of two citizens will be dismissed, with costs, but without prejudice to the right of the petitioner to file a new application. In re Wolf, (1911) 188 Fed. 510.

Proof of residence.—While the verification provided for in this clause must show that petitioner has resided continuously in the country for at least five years, such showing need not be made by the same witnesses for the entire period, and so long as there are at least two credible witnesses testifying as to each fraction of the period, so as to cover the whole, the statutory requirement is satisfied. In re Godlover, (1910) 181 Fed. 731.

Absence of a filing indorsement, or a calendar entry by a clerk concerning a naturalization petition actually filed, is immaterial if the fact of filing sufficiently appears. U. S. v. Erickson, (1910) 188 Fed. 747.

Signing in own handwriting.—See In re Martinovsky, (1909) 171 Fed. 691.

1909 Supp., p. 368, sec. 4, cl. fourth.

Good moral character.—Where an alien applying for admission to citizenship has not behaved as a man of good moral character while residing in the United States, the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, will refuse his petition, though his behavior has been good during the five years preceding the petition; and the court must determine, taking into account the whole conduct of the petitioner, whether he possesses the necessary qualifications for citizenship. In re Ross, (1911) 188 Fed. 685.

That the applicant for citizenship keeps his saloon open in violation of a state Sunday closing act does not show want of the good moral character essential under the Naturalization Act, where the law has never been enforced in his city on account of adverse public sentiment, and where he is willing to obey the law if insisted upon by the proper authorities. In re Hopp, (1910) 179 Fed. 561, wherein the court said: "What is meant by good moral character, as the terms are used in this Act? What standard does the statute contemplate? It is plain that it does not require the highest degree of moral excellence. A good moral character is one that measures up as good among the people of the community in which the party lives; that is, up to the standard of the average citizen. Ordinary care is the test of liability in every case of negligence. This standard is arrived at, not by the overcautious or the reckless man, but by the average man, representing the great mass of men. So here, where the law says a good moral character, it means such a reputation as will pass muster with the average man. It need not rise above the level of the common mass of people. Applying this test to the particular case, we find that the views and behavior of the applicant are in accord with the overwhelming majority of the people in this community. It is not contended that the applicant must be able to rise to such moral elevation that he may analyze, criticise, and reject the prevailing opinions and settled convictions of his fellowmen, and in the clear blue of righteousness choose for himself a course of action dictated by his quickened conscience. To meet such a test a man must be a philosopher, while the statute is satisfied with a citizen whose behavior is up to the level of the average citizen. There is nothing in the mental attitude of the applicant, as disclosed by his examination, which would brand him as a deliberate law-breaker. His willingness and desire to obey the law, if insisted upon by the constituted authority, distinguishes this case from the Illinois case (U. S. v. Hrasky, (1909) 240 Ill. 560, 88 N. E. 1031, 130 Am. St. Rep. 288) which has been pressed upon our attention. In that case the front door of the saloon was closed, indicating a knowledge of the law and a pretended desire for its enforcement, while the open back door indicated stealth and a deliberate purpose to circumvent the law. This was coupled with a solemn determination on the part of the applicant to adhere to his lawless course at all hazards. It must be remembered that the act of keeping open one's saloon on the sabbath is unlawful, not in and of itself, but merely because it has been prohibited by an arbitrary Act of the legislature. Men of the highest moral character always have and always will differ as to the proper enforcement of sumptuary and police regulations. I cannot see that the applicant should be denied citizenship because he has fallen in with the general public sentiment of the community in which he lives. There is in the conduct and attitude of the applicant no moral turpitude, and nothing evincing a calloused conscience, and it would not, in my judgment, be a fair construction of the Act of Congress to require the applicant to rise above his environment and show by his behavior that his moral character was above the level of the average citizen."

An alien having pleaded guilty to murder in the second degree will not be admitted to citizenship, though before the offense, and for more than five years after the expiration of the term of imprisonment, his conduct reveals no cause for censure. In re Ross, (1911) 188 Fed. 685.

1909 Supp., p. 369, sec. 4, cl. sixth.

Stepchildren. — In In re Robertson, (1910) 179 Fed. 131, it appeared that the applicant was born in England, where his father died, and his mother was again married to an alien, who emigrated to the United States when the applicant was about four years of age. When the applicant was about seventeen years old and residing with his stepfather as a member of his family, the stepfather made a declaration of intention, but died without having been naturalized. It was held that that applicant was entitled to naturalization on the strength of his stepfather's declaration.

Widow of soldier. — This clause does not entitle the widow of an alien who never declared his intention, to naturalization without previously making a declaration because the husband was an honorably discharged soldier of the United States and as such entitled to naturalization without making any declaration, under R. S. sec. 2166, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 205. U. S. v. Meyer, (1909) 170 Fed. 983.

Time of filing petition after death of father. — Where an alien declared his intention to become a citizen July 31, 1889, and died March 6, 1892, without having been admitted to citizenship, it was held that his son, who came to the United States April 25, 1891, when between eight and nine years of age, and filed a petition for naturalization on April 22, 1900, three years after the passage of this Act, was not guilty of such laches as barred his right to citizenship, though he delayed his application for six years and five months after he became of age, and for nine years and five months after he became eighteen, when he could have first taken the required oaths. U. S. v. Poslusny, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 836.

1909 Supp., p. 369, sec. 5.

The witnesses.—To the same effect as the first case cited in the original note, In re Neugebauer, (1909) 172 Fed. 943; U. S. v. Doyle, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 687; U. S. v. Ojala, (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 51.

Presumption as to posting.—In the absence of a contrary showing, names of witnesses for an applicant for naturalization are presumed to have been posted for the time required by law. U. S. v. Erickson, (1910) 188 Fed. 747.

1909 Supp., p. 370, sec. 6.

The evident purpose of Congress in requiring that final action in naturalization cases shall be had only on stated days to be fixed by a rule of the court, and that in no case shall final action be had upon a petition until at least ninety days have elapsed after filing and posting notice of such petition, was to prevent the granting of certificates of naturalization unless due notice is given to the United States and an opportunity afforded to oppose the application. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 611.

Hearings within thirty days before election.—The proviso to this section forbidding the issuing of any certificate of naturalization by any court within thirty days preceding the holding of any general election within its jurisdiction does not forbid hearings on petitions for naturalization within such time, but merely forbids the issuing of such certificates within that time. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 611.

Adjournments.—Where the rule day is fixed by order of the court and the United States attorney has an opportunity to be present and be heard, the judge may, in his discretion, adjourn the hearing to such time as may suit his convenience, and the convenience of the parties to the case. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 611.

1909 Supp., p. 370, sec. 9.

Conclusiveness of adjudication.—An order admitting to citizenship, being a judgment with the ordinary attributes of a court of record importing verity, is as conclusive as such judgments. U. S. v. Aakervik, (1910) 180 Fed. 138; U. S. v. Stoller, (1910) 180 Fed. 910.

Time when citizenship begins.—An alien is not naturalized until the order divesting him of his former nationality and making him a citizen of the United States has been signed by a judge of a court having jurisdiction of such cases. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 611.

Review.—The admission of an alien to citizenship is a political, and not a judicial, act, and, having been vested by Congress in the courts to be exercised on proof "to the satisfaction of the court," its exercise is discretionary and not reviewable. U. S. v. Dolla, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 101.

1909 Supp., p. 371, sec. 10.

Honorably discharged soldiers.—The provision in this section that a naturalization petition shall be verified by the affidavits of at least two credible witnesses, who shall state that they have personally known the applicant to be a resident of the United States for at least five years continuously, and of the state in which the application is made for at least a year immediately preceding the date of filing the petition, is inap-plicable to the petition of an honorably discharged soldier, applying for naturalization under R. S. sec. 2166, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 205, on proof of one year's residence only within the United States, without being required to make a previous declaration of intention or prove residence in the state in which he applies for naturalization for any specified time. In re McNabb, (1909) 175 Fed. 511.

1909 Supp., p. 371, sec. 11.

Specification of objections by United States.—The court will ordinarily admit a petitioner to citizenship in the absence of declared opposition by the United States, and hence it is the duty of the United States attorney to specify his objections and to support the same by argument. In re Mudarri, (1910) 176 Fed. 465.

1909 Supp., p. 371, sec. 12.

An applicant for naturalization is not affected by any failure of the clerk to report to the Department of Commerce and Labor any details which he ought to report. U. S. v. Erickson, (1910) 188 Fed. 747.

1909 Supp., p. 372, sec. 13.

State laws regulating disposition of fees.—Where state laws or ordinances provide specified salaries for clerks of courts and require them to pay into the treasury all moneys coming into their hands, it is the duty of the clerk to pay into the treasury the one-half of naturalization fees mentioned in this section as given to the clerks. San Francisco v. Mulcrevy, (1910) 15 Cal. App. 11, 113 Pac. 339; Barron County v. Beckwith, (1910) 142 Wis. 519, 124 N. W. 1031.

But in Eldredge v. Salt Lake County, (Utah 1910) 106 Pac. 939, the court reached the opposite conclusion and held that the duties which the clerk of a state District Court discharges and the services which he renders in naturalization proceedings under the Naturalization Act, are not duties imposed on nor services forming a part of the office, and the salary received as compensation therefor does not constitute compensation for extra official services, and he need not account therefor to his county, notwithstanding the provisions of the state constitution, art. 21, secs. 1, 2, providing that officers shall be paid fixed salaries, and the state laws (Comp. Laws 1907, secs. 2057, 2062) fixing the salary of the clerk, which shall constitute full compensation; and that the principle that the incumbent of a public office must discharge duties imposed on the office for the compensation fixed by law, and, where additional duties are imposed without additional compensation, must discharge such duties for the compensation fixed by law, does not prevent the clerk of a state District Court who performs services in naturalization proceedings under the Naturalization Act from retaining the fees as provided by the Act. And in Hampden County v. Morris, (1911) 207 Mass. 167, 93 N. E. 579, it was held that a state law requiring that the fees received by the clerk in naturalization cases shall be paid over to the county treasurer, conflicts with this Act, and that a clerk of the state court need not pay over to the county treasurer fees received in naturalization cases.

Constitutional.—This section is constitutional. U. S. v. Spohrer, (1910) 175 Fed. 440.

Since jurisdiction to naturalize aliens was originally bestowed by Congress on state courts, this section, providing for the vacation of a naturalization certificate obtained by fraud or illegal procurement in its inception is not unconstitutional because it gives one court power to pass on and annul the proceedings of another. U. S. v. Mansour, (1908) 170 Fed. 671; U. S. v. Luria, (1911) 184 Fed. 644.

This section is not unconditional because it declares that in such a proceeding evidence of the acquisition of a new domicile by the naturalized citizen within five years shall be prima facie evidence of fraud; such presumption being within the power of Congress to create as a rule of procedure. U. S. v. Luria, (1911) 184 Fed. 644.

This section is not void as depriving a naturalized citizen of a vested right, or imposing any penalty on him, since the Constitution contemplates that only those intending to become permanent residents shall be naturalized, or retain their citizenship, as indicated by the Fourteenth Amendment, declaring that all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens thereof. U. S. v. Ellis, (1911) 185 Fed. 546.

Jurisdiction.—For the purpose of the naturalization Acts all courts having jurisdiction under the Acts are federal courts, and a federal court can vacate a judgment of a state court or vice versa. U. S. v. Aakervik, (1910) 180 Fed. 137. See also U. S. v. Meyer, (1909) 170 Fed. 983.

Not retroactive.—The time for vacating an order admitting to citizenship, for an error of law of the court having expired before this Act was passed, it was held that a suit did not lie to vacate it, though the Act authorizes suits to vacate certificates of citizenship. U. S. v. Aakervik, (1910) 180 Fed. 137.

Jury trial.—A suit for the cancellation of a certificate of naturalization, brought under this section, is not one in which defendant is entitled as of right to a jury trial. U. S. v. Mansour, (1908) 170 Fed. 671; U. S. v. Luria, (1911) 184 Fed. 645.

The defense of laches cannot be pleaded against the United States in a suit to cancel a naturalization certificate. U. S. v. Spohrer, (1910) 175 Fed. 440.

Technical and formal defects.—Naturalization proceedings, like ordinary judicial proceedings, are properly sustained if defects asserted are merely technical and formal though the defects cause annoyance to the supervising administrative department. U. S. v. Erickson, (1910) 188 Fed. 747.

Fraud—false statements as to residence.—Under this section the United States may maintain a suit in a federal court to cancel a certificate issued by a state court under either this or a former statute on the ground of fraud, in that the allegation and evidence that the applicant had resided in the United States for five years was untrue. U. S. v. Mansour, (1908) 170 Fed. 671; U. S. v. Spohrer, (1910) 175 Fed. 440.

False testimony.—A certificate of citizenship may be set aside for fraud or illegality in its procurement, comprehending false testimony under which the certificate was procured as well as error in rendering judgment on a given state of facts. U. S. v. Aakervik, (1910) 180 Fed. 137.

No intention of becoming permanent citizen.—Where one admitted to citizenship under R. S. sec. 2165, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 200, permitting the naturalization of persons possessing the necessary qualifications and intending bona fide to become citizens, did not in good faith intend to become a permanent citizen, and made his oath with a mental reservation to that effect, he was guilty of fraud in procuring the decree, and this section subsequently enacted authorizes the cancellation of his certificate of citizenship on the ground of fraud. Thus where an alien was naturalized in August, 1899, and he arrived in a foreign country November 23d following, and engaged in business there, where he continuously resided until after the institution of a suit in March, 1910, to cancel his certificate of citizenship, as authorized by this section, and it appeared that he had stated that he could not tell when he could leave the foreign country and return to the United States, and that he was not engaged solely as a representative of American trade and commerce, and that his residence in the foreign country was not for reasons of health or education, a decree setting aside the judgment of naturalization and cancelling his certificate of citizenship was authorized. U. S. v. Ellis, (1911) 185 Fed. 546. See also U. S. v. Mansour, (1908) 170 Fed. 671.

Service of notice.—The notice provided for in this section must be given in the manner provided by the law of the state for service on absentees, and, where the law of a state provides for the appointment of an attorney at law as curator ad hoc to represent an absentee, service on him is sufficient. U. S. v. Ellis, (1911) 185 Fed. 546.

Pleadings and procedure.—A suit for the cancellation of a certificate of naturalization under this section is a special proceeding, and, while the proof must be of the kind and force required to set aside a judgment, the pleadings and procedure may be moulded in any way best calculated to meet the ends of justice. U. S. v. Mansour, (1909) 170 Fed. 676.

A complaint by the United States to cancel an alien's naturalization certificate for fraud was insufficient where it failed to tender the material issue of fraud, alleging merely a change of residence, which by statute is only prima facie evidence on that issue. U. S. v. Luria, (1911) 184 Fed. 644.

Evidence.—In proceedings to cancel a naturalization certificate for fraud, statements of consular agents abroad that the defendant has established a permanent residence abroad, etc., are admissible. U. S. v. Luria, (1911) 184 Fed. 645.

"Illegally procured."—The words "illegally procured," as used in this section, mean procured by subornation or some other illegal means used to impose on the court, and not that the certificate was issued through error of law. U. S. v. Luria, (1911) 184 Fed. 643.

Forfeiture.—The provision in this section for the cancellation of a certificate of naturalization does not forfeit the naturalized alien's right to citizenship, but merely confers jurisdiction on the courts of naturalization to cancel a previous certificate for fraud or illegal procurement in its inception. U. S. v. Luria, (1911) 184 Fed. 643.

Changing affidavit.—A naturalization certificate should not be vacated as having been obtained illegally or through fraud, because, on ineligibility of one of two witnesses appearing, his name was erased from the witnesses' affidavit, and another name substituted, and the date of the affidavit changed to that when the new witness verified, though no duplicate of the affidavit as so changed was forwarded to the Department of Commerce and Labor. U. S. v. Erickson, (1910) 188 Fed. 747.

1909 Supp., p. 374, sec. 18.

Construction.—In U. S. v. Stoller, (1910) 180 Fed. 910, it was held that this section does not make it a felony to issue a naturalization certificate without final order under the hand of the court, but that the felony consists in issuing it contrary to the provisions of the Act, unless it be on a final order under the hand of the court.

Validity of certificate issued before final judgment signed and entered.—Where the court in a naturalization proceeding has rendered judgment admitting the alien to citizenship, the fact that the clerk issued a naturalization certificate before the final judgment had been signed and entered did not render such proceeding void under this section, such requirement being directory only and subject to correction nunc pro tunc. U. S. v. Stoller, (1910) 180 Fed. 911.

1909 Supp., p. 375, sec. 23.

Perjury.—Perjury committed by a false allegation of fact in a naturalization petition is punishable under R. S. sec. 5392, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 701, punishing perjury generally, and applicable to all cases in which a false oath or false testimony is given in a matter required by law before any competent tribunal, officer, or person, regardless of whether such evidence is punishable under this section or not. U. S. v. Dupont, (1910) 176 Fed. 824.

"Knowingly" giving false testimony.—In U. S. v. Janke, (1910) 183 Fed. 277, it appeared that a state court granted naturalization to a woman who had been dead over four years, and the certificate was issued by the clerk. No hearing was had nor evidence taken in open court, as required by section 9 of this Act, but affidavits in support of the petition were made out by the clerk, and subscribed and sworn to by defendants, the material statements in which were false. The defendants, however, did not understand the English language, and were not informed of the contents of the affidavits, but signed the same as directed by the clerk. It was held that they were not guilty of "knowingly" giving false testimony, made a crime by this section.

1909 Supp., p. 379, sec. 30.

Native Filipinos.—Section 30 provides for the naturalization of native Filipinos owing permanent allegiance to the United States, who are residents of one of the states or territories of the United States. Such person must make, or must have made since the passage of this Act, the declaration of his intention to become a citizen, required by this section, at least two years before his application for naturalization, and must have resided five years within one of the insular possessions of the United States. (1908) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 12.

NAVAL ACADEMY.

Vol. V, p. 215, sec. 1514.

Reinstatement of dismissed midshipman.—The Secretary of the Navy has no authority to reinstate to the Naval Academy a midshipman whose appointment has been revoked because of accumulated demerits and the revocation thereof duly promulgated. (1906) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 579.

Vol. V, p. 223. [Court-martial for cadets.]

Dismissal without court-martial.—This Act does not prevent the President from dismissing cadets or midshipmen without trial by court-martial. Weller v. U. S., (1906) 41 Ct. Cl. 324.

Vol. V, p. 223. [Hazing, how punished.]

Effect of Act of March 2, 1895.—This Act, providing for the court-martialing of cadet midshipmen at the Naval Academy, is not repealed by the Act of March 3, 1895, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 223, 28 Stat. L. 838, which provides that sentences of suspension and dismissal approved by the superintendent "shall not be carried into effect until confirmed by the President." Melvin v. U. S., (1910) 45 Ct. Cl. 213.

Vol. X, p. 239, sec. 1. [Punishment for hazing.]

Hazing has such a well-known meaning that it need not be defined by rules under the statute. Melvin v. U. S., (1910) 45 Ct. Cl. 213.

Summary dismissal of cadet for hazing.—The statutes on the subject of hazing do not confer upon the superintendent of the Naval Academy, or the Secretary of the Navy, or upon both conjointly, the power summarily to dismiss from the academy, without trial by court-martial, a midshipman guilty of that offense. (1905) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 543.

NAVY.

Vol. V, p. 250, sec. 7.

Effect of Act.—The Navy Personnel Act abolished the grade of commodore and practically constituted, within the grade of rear-admiral, a new grade for pay purposes known as "the nine lower numbers," into which commodores were advanced without increase of pay; but under the Act June 7, 1900, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 323, the old pay of rear-admirals extends to a rear-admiral in the nine lower numbers. Terry v. U. S., (1904) 39 Ct. Cl. 353.

Vol. V, p. 251. [Appointments from civil life in case of exigency.]

Extra pay for temporary officers after discharge.—The two months' extra pay provided for by the Act of March 3, 1899, 30

Stat. L. 1214, ch. 427, in favor of "officers and enlisted men comprising the temporary force of the Navy during the war with Spain who served creditably beyond the limits of the United States, and who have been or may hereafter be discharged," should be computed, when awarded to a naval officer appointed under the Act of May 4, 1898, to serve only during the continuance of the exigency under which his services were required in the existing war, on the basis of the pay he was receiving when he was detached from duty, after the treaty of peace was signed, and was ordered home preliminary to his discharge. U. S. v. Hite, (1907) 204 U. S. 343, 27 S. Ct. 386, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 514.

Vol. V, p. 253. [Acting assistant surgeons.]

Constructive service.—An assistant surgeon appointed "for temporary service" in the Navy under this Act is not entitled to the five years constructive service given to those officers in the Navy appointed from civil life by the Navy Personnel Act (Act of March 3, 1899, ch. 413, sec. 13, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 322). Nelson v. U. S., (1906) 41 Ct. Cl. 157.

Vol. V, p. 263, sec. 1404.

Constructor detailed to inspect vessel.—Where a naval constructor is detailed by the Secretary of the Navy to inspect a vessel, the fact that she is chartered by the War Department as an army transport does not burden the officer with service not incident to his office. Stocker v. U. S., (1904) 39 Ct. Cl. 300.

Vol. V, p. 265, sec. 1409.

Officer and enlisted man at same time.—A person can, under the provisions of sections 1409 and 1410, R. S., be at the same time an officer of the Navy and an enlisted man, the distinction being between commissioned officers and the enlisted force. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 433.

Vol. V, p. 269. [Bounty on enlistment of apprentices.]

Regulations requiring refund.—The regulations of the Secretary of the Navy, issued July 1, 1901, pursuant to this Act, which provides a bounty to each person enlisting as an apprentice in the United States Navy, are inconsistent with law and void in so far as they require a refund of the bounty, or any portion of it, in case an apprentice is discharged within a year after his enlistment for disability not incurred in the line of duty. (1904) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 270.

Minors under eighteen.—In Ex p. Lisk, (1906) 145 Fed. 860, it was held that a boy between fourteen and eighteen could not be enlisted under any circumstances without the consent of his parents or guardian.

But in U. S. v. Pendleton, (1909) 167 Fed. 690, it was held that this section is for the protection of the parent or guardian; and that an enlistment in violation thereof is valid as to the minor, and voidable only by the parent or guardian before the minor attains the age of eighteen years.

Habeas corpus.—In U. S. v. Pendleton, (1909) 167 Fed. 690, it was held that a minor enlisted in the Navy, although without the consent of his parent and in violation of the statute, is punishable for breach of discipline, and cannot be discharged on habeas corpus at suit of his parent while undergoing such punishment.

So in Dillingham v. Booker, (1908) 163 Fed. 696, 16 Ann. Cas. 127, 90 C. C. A. 280, it was held that the civil courts should not interfere by habeas corpus to discharge a minor under eighteen years of age who has been enlisted in either the military or naval service without the consent of his parents or guardian, if at the time of the representation of the petition for the writ the minor is under arrest and held for trial by court-martial on a charge of desertion or fraudulent enlistment or other charge cognizable by a military or naval court.

But in Ex p. Bakley, (1906) 148 Fed. 56, affirmed (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 1022, the court held that the parents of a minor son under the age of eighteen years, who has enlisted in the Navy without their knowledge or consent, in violation of this section, are entitled to his discharge on habeas corpus, and their right cannot be denied because of contemplated or possible court-martial proceedings against the minor for fraudulent enlistment, especially where, between the time demand for his discharge was made by the parents and the procuring of the writ, several months elapsed, during which no proceedings were taken against him.

Enlistment of person over age of eighteen years.—To the same effect as the original note. McCalla v. Facer, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 61.

Vol. V, p. 271, sec. 1420.

Effect of pardon.—A person who, having enlisted in the Navy, deserts therefrom and is convicted of desertion by a general court-martial and thereafter receives from the President a full and unconditional pardon for such offense and restoration to civil rights, may be permitted to re-enlist in the Navy notwithstanding the provisions of this section. (1908) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 617.

Vol. V, p. 285. [Active service for officers on retired list authorized.]

Pay.—The basis of longevity pay is the officer's capacity for duty and his performance of it. Longevity pay is for longevity in actual service, and extends only to officers on the active list. Faust v. U. S., (1907) 42 Ct. Cl. 94.

Vol. V, p. 286, sec. 8.

Retirements under sections eight and nine.—The voluntary retirement of officers of the Navy under this section, and the compulsory retirement of such officers under the following section, are to be made in the order of the rank of the applicants, regardless of the grade they are in. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 452.

Vacancies caused by voluntary retirement.—Vacancies caused by the retirement of officers of the Navy upon their own application, after thirty years' service, in accordance with the provisions contained in the Naval Appropriation Act of May 13, 1908, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 390, 35 Stat. L. 128, should not be considered in determining the number of vacancies required above the several grades in the line of the Navy by this section. (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 410.

The vacancies caused by promotion to extra numbers, under the Act of March 3, 1901, 31 Stat. L. 1108, should not be counted in determining the average vacancies enumerated in this section. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 452.

Vol. V, p. 286, sec. 9.

The word "casualties" in this section refers, as ordinarily understood, to death, resignation, or dismissal, and does not include promotion. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 452.

Vol. V, p. 287, sec. 11.

The purpose of this section, when applied to mates, was not to retire them with three-fourths of the lowest sea pay given to a warrant officer, but to give them three-fourths of the varying sea pay of such officers, upon the same conditions, which conditions include length of previous service. (1908) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 600.

Necessity for actual service.—It is not essential to the right of an officer to be retired on the next higher grade that he was actually ordered into active service during the civil war. Moser v. U. S., (1907) 42 Ct. Cl. 86.

Erroneous retirement under another Act.—A mate who was erroneously retired under section 17 of the Navy Personnel Act, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 288, upon his own application and after thirty years' service, was entitled to retirement under section 11. (1908) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 615.

sec. 1362, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 246, midshipmen are designated as officers of the Navy, being the ninth class; and a midshipman serving as an undergraduate in the Naval Academy is an officer in the Navy within the intent of the Navy Personnel Act, allowing him to retire with the rank and pay of the next higher grade. Jasper v. U. S., (1904) 40 Ct. Cl. 76; Moser v. U. S., (1907) 42 Ct. Cl. 86.

Mates in the navy are officers within the meaning of this section. (1908) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 615.

The retired pay of a mate in the navy, whether retired under this section or under the Act of June 29, 1906, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 386, 34 Stat. L. 554, is the retired pay of a warrant officer with the same length of previous service, which is three-fourths of the sea pay of such officer. (1908) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 599.

Vol. V, p. 287. [Retirement of mates, etc.]

See (1909) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 334.

Vol. V, p. 288, sec. 1466.

The expression "lineal rank being considered," in this section, means simply that it is not necessary to specify and fix relative staff rank, since staff officers in both services possess assimilated lineal rank. (1906) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 16.

Vol. V, p. 289, sec. 1471.

Effect of Navy Personnel Act.—The title of the heads of the existing staff bureaus of the Navy are positively fixed by this section and are unchanged by the Navy Personnel Act of 1899, 30 Stat. L. 1004, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 250, which confers the advanced rank and pay upon all bureau chiefs below the rank of rear admiral. Under those laws, construed in connection with the statutes relating to retirement and with past usage in the service, the designated titles of staff bureau chiefs carry over from the active to the retired list. (1904) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 122.

Retired rank.—When the retirement of an officer occurs during service as the head of one of the staff bureaus, the retired officer is entitled under the law to be borne upon the Navy register as a retired officer under that title permanently. A pay director of the Navy who by appointment has become a paymaster-general, and who while holding that office reaches the retiring age, has the right to bear the title of paymaster-general, not only after he has reached the retiring age but is still performing the duties of that office, and not only after he is actually retired and detached from the office and before his term of appointment as paymaster-general has expired, but also after the latter date, and permanently, upon the retired list. (1904) 25 Op. Atty.-Gen. 294.

Vol. V, p. 290, sec. 1475.

Pay.—There is nothing in this section which suggests that paymasters in the Navy shall receive the pay of paymasters in the Army. Stevens v. U. S., (1906) 41 Ct. Cl. 455.

Appearance in person.—Every officer of the Navy whose eligibility to promotion is to be acted upon by an examining board under the provisions of section 1496, 1498, 1503, and 1505, R. S., has the right to be present at his examination. He must be duly notified of the time and place of his examination, and unless he waives his right or expresses a lack of desire to be present, he must be given leave of absence or permission to attend. No finding of the board adverse to his qualifications for promotion can be made without a personal examination of such officer unless he fails to appear after having been duly notified to do so. (1909) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 251.

Section 13 of the Navy Personnel Act (Act March 3, 1889, ch. 413, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 322) contains nothing to show that it was intended as a substitute for this section. Elmer v. U. S., (1910) 45 Ct. Cl. 90.

One year pay.—The provision in the Navy Personnel Act (Act March 2, 1889, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 322), that officers of the Navy "shall receive the same pay and allowances, except forage, as are or may be provided by or in pursuance of law for the officers of corresponding rank in the Army," extends only "to their general pay" and not to the one year's pay under Act of Oct. 1, 1890, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 998, 26 Stat. L. 562, which provides that if an army officer shall fail to pass his examination for any other reason than physical disability contracted in the line of duty "he shall be suspended from promotion for one year, when he shall be re-examined, and in case of failure on such re-examination he shall be honorably discharged, with one year's pay." Elmer v. U. S., (1910) 45 Ct. Cl. 90.

Consent of Senate necessary.—A naval officer may be advanced in rank for eminent and conspicuous conduct in battle, but only with the advice and consent of the Senate. Peck v. U. S., (1904) 39 Ct. Cl. 125.

Vol. V, p. 311, sec. 1556. [Rear-admirals.]

Effect of Navy Personnel Act.—The Navy Personnel Act, as amended by the Act of June 7, 1900, is not incompatible with this section fixing the pay of a rear-admiral. The earlier statute continues operative as regards the accepted class of officers in service when the Navy Personnel Act was enacted. Cromwell v. U. S., (1907) 42 Ct. Cl. 433.

Vol. V, p. 316, sec. 1556. [Warrant officers.]

The sea pay of a warrant officer under this section is a variable quantity, ranging in varying sums from $1,200 to $1,800 per annum, according to length of service, any one of which may, in a sense, be said to be the sea pay of a warrant officer. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 600.

Vol. V, p. 322, sec. 13.

The normal pay.—To the same effect as the original note. Mahan v. U. S., (1904) 40 Ct. Cl. 36.

Pay while on leave of absence.—Since this Act was passed duty pay cannot be allowed where a leave of absence is granted at an officer's own request and presumably for his own benefit if it does, in fact, relieve him from duty and from responsibility. Roberts v. U. S., (1909) 44 Ct. Cl. 411.

Shore duty beyond the seas.—The primary question in the case of a naval officer "detailed for special duty on shore" is one of fact; and the court cannot determine the character of the duty on shore or the right of the officer to sea pay or shore duty pay without knowing what were the services rendered on shore and how far they detached him in fact from his vessel. It is well settled that where the naval officer detailed for shore duty is not called upon to perform services ashore incompatible with the performance of his duty on his ship, and the shore services are temporary and not so different in character as to detach him in fact from his vessel, his paramount duty is sea service. Leach v. U. S., (1909) 44 Ct. Cl. 132.

In Furlong v. U. S., (1910) 45 Ct. Cl. 493, it was held that where an officer in the Navy was assigned by proper authority to sea duty on a vessel he could not be considered as "detailed for shore duty beyond seas," within the intent of this section, because the naval governor of Guam by a verbal order directed him to do duty in the town of Agana in caring for the health and sanitary condition of the natives.

Equalization of army and navy pay.—The allowances of increased pay to Army officers serving in certain insular possessions of the United States and in Alaska, and to such officers serving beyond the limits of the United States, which are given respectively by the Army appropriation bills of May 26, 1900, 31 Stat. L. 211, ch. 596, and March 2, 1901, 31 Stat. L. 903, ch. 803, do not inure to naval officers discharging their ordinary sea duties, by reason of this section, equalizing the pay of Army and Navy officers, since to hold otherwise would render meaningless the proviso of this section that naval officers when "detailed for shore duty beyond seas" shall receive the same pay as Army officers detailed for the same duties. U. S. v. Thomas, (1904) 195 U. S. 418, 25 S. Ct. 102, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 259.

Reason for additional compensation.—The additional compensation intended by Congress was awarded because of the nature of the services to be performed and not because of the rank or class of the officers performing the same. It does not attach exclusively to the officer, but comprehensively to the service. Prindle v. U. S., (1905) 41 Ct. Cl. 8.

The second proviso of this section includes "all naval officers." Its benefits are not limited to officers of the line, the medical, and the pay corps. Prindle v. U. S., (1905) 41 Ct. Cl. 8.

It is not similar duties but corresponding rank which determines the rate of pay under this section. Stevens v. U. S., (1906) 41 Ct. Cl. 455.

Officers retired for misconduct.—This Act provides that officers of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances which are provided by law for officers of corresponding rank in the Army. But this refers to officers of the Navy on the active list and does not extend to officers who are retired because of their own misconduct. Hannum v. U. S., (1908) 43 Ct. Cl. 320.

Officers on receiving ships.—Officers of the Navy may perform duty on a receiving ship, which will entitle them to sea pay, but only where they wear their uniform when on duty, live and mess on board the vessel, and are subject to all the restrictions and regulations applicable to vessels at sea. But an officer also having shore duty, living and messing on shore in quarters furnished to him by the government, and presumably receiving the allowances to which Army officers are entitled, is entitled only to the shore duty pay prescribed by this section. Mahan v. U. S., (1904) 40 Ct. Cl. 36.

Pay of professors in naval academy.—This section provides that commissioned officers of the Navy shall receive the pay and allowances provided by law "for the officers of corresponding rank in the Army," and R. S. sec. 1336 provides that professors of the military academy "shall have the pay and allowances of "colonel" of "lieutenant-colonel," and of "major." But these provisions do not entitle a naval officer detailed to serve as professor in the naval academy to the pay specifically provided for professors in the military academy. This Act does not secure similarity of pay, though both persons perform similar duties. Huse v. U. S., (1907) 43 Ct. Cl. 19.

Pay of passed assistant surgeon.—A passed assistant surgeon in the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant, is entitled to the pay of a captain in the Army, mounted, in view of the respective provisions of R. S. sec. 1466, assimilating in rank lieutenants in the Navy with captains in the Army; of this section, entitling commissioned officers of the line of the Navy to the same pay and allowance as officers of corresponding rank in the Army; and of the Act of June 7, 1909, 31 Stat. L. 675, ch. 3591, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 25, declaring that assistant surgeons shall rank with assistant surgeons in the Army, who are mounted—since Congress must have used the words "assistant surgeons" as descriptive of the whole class of assistant surgeons, passed as well as those not passed. U. S. v. Farenholt, (1907) 206 U. S. 226, 27 S. Ct. 629, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1036, affirming (1906) 41 Ct. Cl. 517.

Pay of aid to rear admiral.—An aid to a rear admiral is entitled, in addition to the regular pay of his rank, to the same compensation for the additional service as is allowed an aid to a major-general, in view of the provision of this section that officers of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances, except for forage, as are, or may be, provided by law for officers of the Army of corresponding rank. U. S. v. Crosley, (1905) 196 U. S. 327, 25 S. Ct. 261, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 497, affirming and modifying (1903) 38 Ct. Cl. 82.

Flag lieutenant.—A naval officer assigned to duty on the personal staff of the commander-in-chief as flag lieutenant, and by no other designation, is an aid and entitled to the additional pay of $200 given to the aid of a major-general in the Army by R. S. sec. 1261, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 1035. Miller v. U. S., (1906) 41 Ct. Cl. 400, affirmed (1908) 208 U. S. 32, 28 S. Ct. 199, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 376.

Mounted pay cannot be given to an aid to rear admiral, although this section equalizes his compensation with that of an aid to a major-general, who is entitled to mounted pay under Army regulations of 1895, sec. 1301, since this section and the two following, when read in the light of R. S. sec. 1270, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 1041, giving to Army officers the pay of cavalry officers of the same grade when assigned to duty which requires them to be mounted, indicate a general purpose to give mounted pay to Army officers only when their duties are such as may require them to be actually mounted, or are such as may at any time subject them to the necessity of rendering mounted service, which obviously could not be required of an aid to a rear admiral. U. S. v. Crosley, (1905) 196 U. S. 327, 25 S. Ct. 261, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 497, modifying and affirming (1903) 38 Ct. Cl. 82.

Engineers appointed from civil life.—The Act of March 3, 1903, 32 Stat. L. 1197, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 242, provides that additional civil engineers and assistant engineers shall receive $1,500 during the first five years after date of appointment, $1,800 during the second five years after such date, etc. This section provides that "all officers who have been or may be appointed from civil life shall, on the date of appointment, be credited, for computing their pay, with five years' service." An assistant civil engineer in the Navy appointed after the circular promulgated by the Navy Department April 20, 1903, assuring persons seeking the appointment of civil engineer that they shall be entitled to be credited with five years' service, granted by this section, is entitled to the benefit of the credit for constructive service and to the assurance held out by Navy Department, though the question of statutory construction is not free from doubt. Thurber v. U. S., (1905) 40 Ct. Cl. 489.

This decision does not extend to an officer who enters the Navy merely for temporary service. Nelson v. U. S., (1906) 41 Ct. Cl. 157.

Officer ordered to hospital.—Where a naval officer is attached to a vessel when ordered to a hospital for treatment he is entitled to sea pay while in the hospital. But if, when ordered to the hospital, he is awaiting the arrival of the vessel to which he has been ordered, he is not then attached and will not be entitled to sea pay while in the hospital. Ackley v. U. S., (1905) 40 Ct. Cl. 216.

Vol. V, p. 323. [Pay of officers not reduced.]

The purpose of the Act of 1900. Of similar effect to the original note. Terry v. U. S., (1904) 39 Ct. Cl. 353.

The pay of officers in the service at the time of the passage of the Navy Personnel Act and this amendatory Act might be increased by the terms of those statutes but was not to be diminished. Cromwell v. U. S., (1907) 42 Ct. Cl. 433.

Vol. V, p. 328. [Mileage or actual expenses, when allowed.]

"Under orders."—In Duncan v. U. S., (1905) 40 Ct. Cl. 235, it was held that where an officer in Boston was ordered by competent authority to proceed to Mare Island, he was traveling under orders and entitled to mileage, and that it was no defense that the Navy Department intended that the officer should accompany a draft of men from Boston, if he failed to do so because the order was not transmitted to him in time.

Vol. V, p. 330, sec. 1571.

The Act of March 3, 1899, sec. 13, did not repeal or in any way modify this section. U. S. v. Thomas, (1904) 195 U. S. 418, 25 S. Ct. 102, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 259.

What does not constitute service at sea.—A naval officer is not entitled to sea pay while occupied in traveling on duty partly on a merchant steamer and partly on land, and in reporting to the Navy Department, since this is not sea service within the meaning of this section. U. S. v. Thomas, (1904) 195 U. S. 418, 25 S. Ct. 102, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 259.

Vol. V, p. 338, sec. 1588.

Prior service.—A retired mate in the Navy may be credited with his prior service in the Navy at the date of his retirement in determining his classification for pay. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 600.

Vol. V, p. 342, sec. 20.

Examination of officers for promotion.—Examinations for promotion of officers in the marine corps should be held anterior to the date upon which a vacancy is expected to occur. Where an officer entitled to promotion upon examination is required to be absent from any place where an examining board can be convened, as provided by section 32 of the Act of Feb. 2, 1901 (31 Stat. L. 756), the President may promote the officer subject to future examination. Should such officer upon examination be found disqualified, he should be treated in the same manner as if he had been examined prior to promotion. An officer who fails to pass his examination should be suspended from promotion for one year from the date of the approval of the proceedings of the examining board by the Secretary of the Navy, during which period he is ineligible for re-examination. If, however, a vacancy occurs during such period of suspension for which, owing to death, resignation, or other cause, there should be no senior officer eligible, then the suspended officer must, of necessity, take the vacancy. The Secretary of the Navy may make the date of such suspension coincident with the date of the vacancy, by delaying the approval until the vacancy occurs. Where an examination is held before the vacancy occurs, and the officer fails in such examination for other than physical cause, he cannot be re-examined until one year from the date of the approval of the proceedings of the examining board. Should the examination be held after the date of the vacancy, and the officer fail in such examination, he should be suspended from promotion for one year from the date of the vacancy to which he was promoted by the President subject to examination. The period of "loss of date" is not necessarily contemporaneous with the period of suspension, but it should correspond in length of time with the period of suspension. While the period of suspension from promotion begins to run from the date of the approval of the examining board, the period of "loss of date" begins to run from the date of the vacancy to which the suspended officer would have been promoted had he passed his examination. (1906) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 568.

Relative rank with navy.—There is no express provision of law which fixes the relative rank and precedence of officers of the marine corps and officers of the line of the Navy. By an unwritten law of the Army and Navy, officers of the Army and officers of the Navy take relative rank, as respects the two classes, according to their respective grades; and if of similar grade, then according to dates of commission. Officers of the marine corps, who are "in relation to rank on the same footing as officers of similar grades in the Army," take rank and precedence relatively to line officers in the Navy according to grade; and if of similar grade, then according to dates of commission. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 517. See also (1906) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 16.

Relative rank of graduates and nongraduates of Naval Academy.—There is no law making any distinction as to relative rank and precedence between the officers of the marine corps who are, and those who are not, graduates of the United States Naval Academy, either as respects themselves or officers of the line of the Navy. (1905) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 517.

Vol. V, p. 347. [Period of enlistment.]

Enlistment of minors.—The Marine Corps of the United States is not a part of the Navy, and enlistments therein are not governed by the statutes relating to enlistments in the Navy, but by regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, under whose government and control such corps is primarily placed; and such officer, having prescribed in the published regulations of his department that "the regulations for the recruiting service of the Army shall be applied to the recruiting service of the Marine Corps, as far as practicable," the enlistment of minors therein is governed by the statutory provisions relating to Army enlistments, and no person under the age of twenty-one years can lawfully enlist without the consent of his parents or guardians, as required by R. S. sec. 1117, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 960. McCalla v. Facer, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 61.

Civil war officers.—In the matter of retirement, officers of the Marine Corps with creditable records who served during the civil war are governed entirely by the Act of April 27, 1904, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 246, 33 Stat. L. 324, 349, which provides that they shall be retired "in like manner and under the same conditions as provided for officers of the Navy who served during the civil war." To this extent, that Act alters and amends this section. (1904) 25 Op. Atty-Gen. 262.

Vol. X, p. 242, sec. 1. [Increase in certain grades, etc.]

The number of passed assistant and assistant paymasters in the navy to be appointed in each of the two grades under this Act, not being prescribed by this Act, is necessarily left to executive discretion, to be controlled by the general terms and regulations providing for the advancement of officers in the naval service. Nor is it required that the relative proportion of officers in each of those two grades shall remain always the same, a change in the proportion being within the discretion of the executive, unless controlled by general laws or regulations. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 511.

1909 Supp., p. 386, sec. 1. [Officers not above captain, etc.]

Construction of proviso.—The proviso to this Act, which reads, "That this Act shall not apply to any officer who received an advance of grade at or since the date of his retirement," was held not to extend to an officer who had not been retired in the next higher grade, though he was retired prior to the passage of the Act. Jasper v. U. S., (1908) 43 Ct. Cl. 368.

The relative rank of a higher grade sometimes conferred upon officers on retirement is only an honorary distinction, serving merely to fix their places, in precedence, with fellow officers. Such officers do not bear the title of a higher grade, but retain the title actually held by them on retirement. (1906) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 58.

Retired pay same as under Act of March 3, 1899.—Retirements under this Act and under section 11 of the Navy Personnel Act of March 3, 1899, 30 Stat. L. 1007, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot., 287, are in effect the same as regards amount of pay. Under the Act of 1899 an officer is retired with "three-fourths of the sea pay" of the next higher grade, and under the Act of 1906 he would be retired with the "retired pay" of the next higher grade, which, under the Act of March 3, 1873, 17 Stat. L. 547, is "seventy-five per centum" of the sea pay of such higher grade or rank. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 599.

Retirement under other laws.—Where an officer of the Navy was retired under section 1454, R. S., 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 283, for incapacity not originating in the line of duty, and upon a full review of the facts the Secretary of the Navy found that the causes of his incapacity were incident to the service, and he was accordingly transferred by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to the fifty per centum retired pay list under section 1594 R. S., 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 341, and later, by a private Act of Congress, was transferred to the seventy-five per centum pay list of retired officers under section 1588 R. S., 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 338, it was held that he could not thereafter be placed on the retired list with the retired pay of one grade above that actually held by him at the time of his retirement, under this Act, which authorizes such advancement to certain officers of the Navy who have been retired on account of wounds or disability incident to the service. (1909) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 221.

Mates who are borne on the retired list of officers of the Navy in accordance with the Act of Aug. 1, 1894, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 287, are entitled in the discretion of the President, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to the benefit of the advancement provided in the case of retired officers, under this section. While the effect of such advancement may not be to place them in a different grade, they obtain the rank and retired pay belonging to the next higher grade in that service, being that of the lowest grade of warrant officers. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 434.

Assistant engineers.—Passed assistant engineers of the Navy entitled to advancement to the grade of chief engineers, and assistant engineers entitled to advancement to the grade of passed assistant engineers, under this Act, should be retired with a rank above that held by them respectively at the time of retirement, and with the pay of that rank. (1908) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 487.

A medical director in the navy who after forty years of service was retired with the relative rank of commodore, but with the retired pay of a medical director, did not thereby receive an advance of grade within the meaning of the proviso to this Act, and was therefore entitled to the increase of pay provided for by the Act. (1906) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 57.

1909 Supp., p. 390, sec. 1. [Pay of navy.]

"Officers of the navy."—Paymasters' clerks are "officers of the Navy" within the meaning of this Act, which provides for the retirement of officers of the Navy who have been in the service thirty years. (1909) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 157.

The pay of an officer when on leave is just as much his pay as is his pay when on active duty, and a statute which provides that officers of the same rank and length of service shall receive the same pay necessarily means the same pay whether on leave or on active duty. (1909) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 261.

Leave pay of construction corps, professors of mathematics, and civil engineers.—This Act places all commissioned officers of the Navy upon the same footing as to pay and allowances according to rank and length of service, whether on active duty or not, and gives to officers of the construction corps, professors of mathematics, and civil engineers, the same benefits of the law relating to the pay of Army officers when on leave of absence or on waiting orders that are conferred upon officers of the line of the Navy and of the medical and pay corps. (1909) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 261.

1909 Supp., p. 392, sec. 1. [Navy bands not to compete with civilian.]

Marine bands.—The provisions of this Act which prohibit Navy bands or members thereof from receiving remuneration for furnishing music outside the limits of military posts, when the furnishing of such music places them in competition with local musicians, do not apply to the Marine Band. (1908) 27 Op. Atty.-Gen. 90.

NEUTRALITY.

Vol. V, p. 358, sec. 5283.

Intervention by United States.—A libel instituted by an informer against a vessel for forfeiture thereof for violating this section, prohibiting the arming of vessels against people at peace with the United States, is criminal in its nature, and maintainable only in the name of the United States, either express or implied, being primarily for the use and benefit of the United States, and hence the Attorney-General may intervene and move to dismiss the libel, regardless of the rights of the informer. The Venus, (1910) 180 Fed. 635.

NOTARIES PUBLIC.

Vol. V, p. 378, sec. 1778.

Commissioner of deeds.—A bill for an injunction in a federal court, verified before a commissioner of deeds of the city of New York, was held to be improperly verified. Stationary Engineer Pub. Co. v. Comerford, (1907) 155 Fed. 667.

Vol. V, p. 379. [Taking depositions, etc.]

Bankruptcy proceedings.—Under Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, ch. 541, sec. 20, 1 Fed. Stat. Annot. 587, 30 Stat. L. 551, 552, a notary public is authorized to administer the oath to a proof of claim, being an officer authorized to administer oaths in proceedings in the courts of the United States by Act Aug. 15, 1876, ch. 304, 19 Stat. L. 206, and such oath is sufficiently authenticated, prima facie, by what purports to be the notary's official signature and seal, although made in a different state from that in which the proceedings are pending, and without regard to the special requirements of the statutes of either state. In re Pancoast, (1904) 129 Fed. 643.

Notary public and justice of the peace.—In U. S. v. Hardison, (1905) 135 Fed. 419, it was held that since a United States commissioner was authorized by this Act to take the oath of a proposed surety on a liquor distiller's bond, on which perjury might be assigned, an indictment for perjury in the taking of such oath was not defective on the ground that the officer administering it styled himself as "notary public and ex officio justice of the peace."

OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE.

Vol. V, p. 388, sec. 5399.

"Due administration of justice."—The words "due administration of justice" import a free and fair opportunity to every litigant in a pending cause in a federal court to learn what he may learn (if not obstructed or impeded) concerning material facts, and to exercise his option as to introducing testimony as to such facts, and an offense is committed under such statute if a person corruptly endeavors to induce other persons who have knowledge of facts which may be material to a party to a pending cause to conceal or deny their knowledge, so as to prevent such party from obtaining knowledge or procuring evidence of such facts. Wilder v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 433.

OFFICERS OF MERCHANT VESSELS.

Vol. V, p. 395, sec. 4131.

"A vessel of the United States" means more than a vessel whose nationality is American. It means such a vessel as is defined in this section and no other. The Alta, (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 513.

Vol. V, p. 397, sec. 4401.

State regulation.—The federal statutes (R. S. secs. 3126, 4401, 4414) respectively authorize (section 3126, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 771) registered vessels of the United States to engage in the coastwise trade, with the privilege of touching at one or more foreign ports during the voyage; provide (section 4401) that all coastwise seagoing vessels shall be subject to the navigation laws of the United States, and every coastwise seagoing steam vessel subject to such laws "not sailing under register" shall, when under way, except on the high seas, be under the control and direction of pilots licensed by the inspectors of steamboats; and prohibit (section 4444, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 750) any state or municipal government from requiring pilots of steam vessels to procure a state or other license in addition to that issued by the United States, and from levying pilot charges upon any steamer piloted as provided therein, provided that "nothing in this title shall be construed to annul or affect any regulation established by the laws of any state requiring vessels entering or leaving any port of such state, other than coastwise steam vessels, to take a pilot duly licensed or authorized by the laws of such state or of a state situate upon the waters of such state." It has been held that the exception in section 4401 from those vessels thereby made subject to the pilotage laws and regulations of the United States, of vessels "sailing under register" includes only such vessels engaged in foreign commerce, and that under such provisions, construed together, the state of California is without power to levy pilotage charges on registered vessels, entering or leaving the port of the San Francisco, which are engaged in making voyages between that port and Washington ports on Puget sound in charge of pilots licensed under the laws of the United States, although on each of such voyages they make a brief call at the port of Victoria, B. C., for passengers, freight, and mails. The Queen, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 725.

Amendment.—This section was amended by Act of Jan. 25, 1907, sec. 398, 34 Stat. L. 864, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 401, and by Act of May 28, 1908, ch. 212, 35 Stat. L. 424, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 402.

Presumption from violation of statute.—Where the navigation of one of two vessels in collision was at the time in charge of an unlicensed mate, in violation of the positive provisions of this section, it was held that there was a presumption that such fact caused or contributed to the collision, and that the vessel had the burden of showing that it could not have done so. The Eagle Wing, (1905) 135 Fed. 826.

Vol. V, p. 400, sec. 4442.

Jurisdiction of District Court to compel examination.—The federal District Court has no jurisdiction of an application to compel local inspectors of steam vessels to examine an applicant for a pilot's license, as authorized by this section, without having complied with rule 5, section 46, of the board of supervising inspectors, making it a condition precedent to the applicant's right to examination that he shall have served a three years' apprenticeship in the deck department of a steamer, sailing vessel, or barge consort. Williams v. Molther, (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 709.

Amendment.—This section was amended by Act of Feb. 19, 1907, ch. 991, 34 Stat. L. 897, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 401.

Vol. V, p. 402, sec. 4449.

Amendment.—This section was amended by Act of March 3, 1905, ch. 1457, sec. 5, 33 Stat. L. 1030, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 248.

Vol. V, p. 403, sec. 4452.

Amendment.—This section was amended by Act of March 3, 1905, ch. 1457, sec. 6, 33 Stat. L. 1030, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 248.

PATENTS.

Vol. V, p. 413, sec. 483.

Validity of rules generally.—The rules of practice of the Patent Office, when not inconsistent with the statutes relating to the patent system, have the force and effect of law in all matters to which they relate, and are not to be declared invalid on any strained or doubtful construction. U. S. v. Allen, (1903) 22 App. Cas. (D. C.) 56.

Nature of patent.—A patent is a contract made by the acceptance by the government of the proposition made by the inventor in his application. O. H. Jewell Filter Co. v. Jackson, (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 340.

The public policy declared by the patent laws is that it is for the benefit of the public to stimulate invention and that inventors shall publish their inventions, and to that end, and in consideration of such publication, to become effective at the end of seventeen years, they insure to a patentee in the meantime absolute protection in the right to exclude every one else from making, using, or vending the thing patented without his consent. Rub- ber Tire Wheel Co. v. Milwaukee Rubber Works Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 358, reversing (1906) 142 Fed. 531.

A "patent" is a monopoly created by law, and gives the right to exclude all others from making, using, and selling the invention or articles made in accordance therewith. National Hollow Brake Beam Co. v. Bakewell, (1909) 224 Mo. 203, 123 S. W. 561.

Effect of state statutes.—Rights acquired under the patent laws of the United States cannot be affected by a state statute. U. S. Consolidated Seeded Raisin Co. v. Griffin, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 364.

Claims affording basis for separate patents.

—A patent should not be held invalid because each of its claims might have been made the basis of a separate application, where all relate to improvements in a single instrument and may in a sense be considered elements of one construction. Hohmann, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Charles J. Tagliabue Mfg. Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 87.

Description of invention.—It is enough that a patent so fully describes a process or a product that one reasonably skilled in the art may practice the process or manufacture the product, and that others may know with reasonable certainty whether or not they are infringing it. Standard Paint Co. v. Bird, (1910) 175 Fed. 346.

That a patent of a method for evacuating incandescent electric lamps by first introducing into a tubular elongation of the bulb suitable substances capable of being gasified by heat and combining with the gases generated by the filament when brought to incandescence to form solid or liquid precipitations, and then exhausting the bulb by means of a pump and sealing the elongation, then bringing the filament to intensive incandescence and simultaneously heating the substance in the elongation, and finally sealing off the elongation, in the specification and claim directs that, after the partial exhaustion of the bulb by the pump, the pump connection is to be sealed off, but does not mention specifically the ordinary "working" of the filament during the pump action, would not render the patent process inoperative. Malignani v. Jasper Marsh Consol. Electric Lamp Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 442.

It is enough that a patent so fully describes a process or a product that one reasonably skilled in the art may practice the process or manufacture the product, and that others may know with reasonable certainty whether or not they are infringing it. Standard Paint Co. v. Bird, (1910) 175 Fed. 346, affirmed (C. C. A.) 182 Fed. 1023.

Description of design.—A design patent like a mechanical patent must describe the article in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable persons skilled in the art to make and use the invention. James E. Tompkins Co. v. New York Woven Wire Mat- dress Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 159 Fed. 133, reversing 154 Fed. 669.

Statement of causes producing result.—When a patent contains a sufficient disclosure of the claimed invention, it will not be invalidated either by the failure of the patentee to state the causes which produce the result, or by a mistaken statement thereof. Hemolin Co. v. Harway Dyewood, etc., Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 54, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 483.

It is immaterial whether or not the means for accomplishing a result covered by a patent are illustrated therein, if they are sufficiently described in the specification. Hillard v. Fisher Book Typewriter Co., (1907) 161 Fed. 34.

Ingredients of chemical compositions.—A patent for a chemical composition must not only give the names of the ingredients used in making the composition, but also the proportion of each, so that the invention may be practiced by those skilled in the art without further experimentation. Panzl v. Battle Island Paper, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 48, modifying (1904) 132 Fed. 607.

Means or mechanism to accomplish particular results.—A patent for a prescribed means or mechanism to accomplish a desired end must be limited to the particular means described in the specification, or their clear mechanical equivalents, and does not cover any other mechanical structure which is substantially different in its construction or in its operation. Union Match Co. v. Diamond Match Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 148.

Drawings.—The drawing filed with an application for a patent as required by law, with the specifications, constitutes a part of the patent when issued. Phillips v. Sensenich, (1908) 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 159.

Rights of public.—On expiration of a patent, the right to manufacture the patented article passes to the public, the same as if no patent had been obtained. Westcott Chuck Co. v. Oneida Nat. Chuck Co., (1910) 199 N. Y. 247, 92 N. E. 639, reversing judgment (1909) 133 App. Div. 937, 118 N. Y. S. 1149.

Combination including separately patented element.—On the expiration of a patent for a combination, the use of such combination becomes free to the public, notwithstanding the fact that it contains as one of its elements a device covered by another patent to the same patentee which has not expired. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Illinois Telephone Constr. Co., (1906) 143 Fed. 534.

Estoppel to deny validity of patent and claim trademark in name.—The owner of a patent who has had the benefit of its protection, and manufactured thereunder during its full life, cannot thereafter assert its invalidity in support of his claim to a trademark in the name by which he designated the patented article and by which it became generally known. Rice-Stix Dry Goods Co. v. J. A. Scriven Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 639.

Construction of patent.—In the construction of a generic process patent, every phenomenon observed during operation and every minute detail described in illustrating the process in the specification is not to be read into the claims as a limitation, to avoid a charge of infringement. Electric Smelting, etc., Co. v. Pittsburg Reduction Co., (1903) 125 Fed. 928, 60 C. C. A. 638, modifying (1901) 111 Fed. 742.

Undoubtedly a patent must be taken with all its limitations, and resort may be had to its course through the Patent Office to determine them; neither can rejected features be reasserted, nor a broad construction be insisted on, where a narrow one has been accepted by amendment to meet the objections of the examiner. But, subject to this, the patentee is entitled to have his patent taken as it reads, with due regard to the inventive idea embodied in it, without having it treated in such a way as virtually to destroy it. Eck v. Kutz, (1904) 132 Fed. 758.

The claims of a patent are to be fairly construed in the light of the specification and drawings, so as to cover, if possible, the invention, and thus save it, especially if it be a meritorious one. Mossberg v. Nutter, (1905) 135 Fed. 95, 68 C. C. A. 257, affirming (1904) 128 Fed. 55.

The rules for the interpretation of contracts govern the construction of a patent. O. H. Jewell Filter Co. v. Jackson, (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 340.

While it is settled law that a patentee who has acquiesced in the rejection of a broad claim by substituting a narrower one cannot insist on a construction of the latter to cover that which was rejected, yet such rule does not debar him from a liberal construction of the claim as granted, nor from the benefit of the doctrine of equivalents. Heywood Bros., etc., Co. v. Syracuse Rapid Transit R. Co., (1907) 162 Fed. 453.

A patent for a four-part structure operating in a certain way cannot be construed to cover a three-part structure, in which one of said three parts is a combination of two of the parts of the patented structure, where an entirely different mode of operation is required, and where, when it is attempted to operate the patented device in the same way, it is wholly inoperative. Ajax Forge Co. v. Morden Frog, etc., Works, (1907) 156 Fed. 591.

The claims of a patent which are not ambiguous are to be interpreted according to the meaning of their own terms, and are not controlled or limited by any argument or representation made by the patentee's attorney before the Patent Office as to the scope of the invention or the features in which it differs from the prior art, where no amendment of the claims was required or made. Fullerton Walnut Growers' Assoc. v. Anderson-Barngrover Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 443.

A patent is a contract, and the rules for the construction of contracts generally control in its interpretation; and when its terms are plain, and the intention of the parties clearly manifest therefrom, they must prevail; but if its expressions are ambiguous, or its validity or any claim is doubtful, that construction will be given which will sustain rather than destroy the patent. Denning Wire, etc., Co. v. American Steel, etc., Co.,

(C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 793, affirming (1908) 160 Fed. 108.

While the courts lean toward reading into the claims of a patent such limitations as will save the real invention as disclosed by the specification and the prior art, where claims employ broad and nebulous terms for the apparent purpose of enabling the patentee to monopolize an important industry, the claims will not be narrowed beyond the boundaries clearly warranted by the specification. Beckwith v. Malleable Iron Range Co., (1910) 174 Fed. 1001.

Nonuser as affecting construction.—While the validity of a patent is not affected by its nonuser, such fact may have a bearing on its construction in requiring its limitation to the device plainly shown and distinctly described. Kestner Evaporator Co. v. American Evaporator Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 844.

Novelty and utility as affecting construction.—Whether an invention be a pioneer, or, being of small importance, is ranked at the foot of the line, the rule is that it shall be judged on its own merits; that is to say, according to the advance it has made in novelty and utility beyond the former art. Vrooman v. Penhollow, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 296.

Matter omitted from one claim and included in another.—Where an applicant for a patent in one claim makes no mention of an element, and in another includes it, the presumption is that he omitted it from the first on purpose. Duncan v. Cincinnati Butchers' Supply Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 656.

Construction to avoid interference.—Where a patentee limited his claims by the use of the word "corrugated" to describe the form of a part, he cannot be heard to say that it should be given a broader construction as "polygonal" or "noncircular," when there was pending in the Patent Office at the same time another application with which he would have been thrown into interference if he had used the broader term. Ajax Forge Co. v. Morden Frog, etc., Works, (1907) 156 Fed. 594.

Patent not extended beyond its terms.—A patent cannot be given a construction broader than its terms, in order to cover something which might have been claimed, but was not. Universal Brush Co. v. Sonn, (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 665, reversing (1906) 146 Fed. 517.

Reference to prior art.—The claims of a patent finally allowed and accepted by the patentee must be read in connection with the claims set forth in the original application and with the prior art, and cannot be construed to cover what was rejected or disclosed by prior devices. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. American Graphophone Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 189.

A patent must be read and construed with reference to the prior art and cannot be so construed as to cover what was disclosed by the prior art. Williams Patent Crusher, etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania Crusher Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 576.

Where the language employed in a patent is indefinite or ambiguous it should be read in the light of the reader's knowledge of the prior art. Malignani v. Jasper Marsh Consol. Electric Lamp Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 442.

Error in reference to prior art.—If a patentee in his specification describes in appropriate language a real invention and properly sets forth his claim to that invention, he is not to be deprived of it merely because he has inadvertently erred in his reference to the prior art. Babcock, etc., Co. v. North American Dredging Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 265.

Reference to drawings.—The drawings accompanying the specification of a patent and referred to in the descriptive parts thereof will be examined to ascertain the true meaning of the terms used in describing the invention. Steiner, etc., Hardware Co. v. Tabor Sash Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 831.

Reference to specifications.—Where terms which are not technical terms of the art are used in the claims of a patent to differentiate between different tubes in the patented structure, the specification may be referred to for the purpose of ascertaining their meaning as so used. Fowler, etc., Mfg. Co. v. National Radiator Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 661.

Reference to rejected claims.—A patent must be read and construed with reference to the claims rejected and cannot be so construed as to cover what was rejected by the Patent Office. Williams Patent Crusher, etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania Crusher Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 576.

Particular words construed.—The term "Chamotte," as used in the arts, has a broader meaning technically than ordinary fire brick crushed or fire clay, and means, when used to describe an element in a patented combination, a clay which has been burned to an extent which deprives it of further shrinkage on being again subjected to heat. Panzl v. Battle Island Paper, etc., Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 607.

The word "simultaneously," used in a patent to describe the operation of the parts of a machine which in fact operate progressively to complete the article produced, must be construed to mean that the parts operate unitedly, harmoniously, and in concord, and not at the same instant of time. E. J. Manville Mach. Co. v. Excelsior Needle Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 538, affirming (1908) 162 Fed. 486.

The word "convex," used in the claims of a patent as applied to a surface, is to be given its generally accepted meaning, as indicating a surface of a more or less spherical form rather than cylindrical. Beckwith v. Malleable Iron Range Co., (1910) 174 Fed. 1001.

The term "bell," used in a patent for a graphophone, means the amplifying horn used in sound-reproducing machinery. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. Duplex Phonograph Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 822.

Liberal construction.—A strict construction of the claims of a patent should not be resorted to, if the result would be a limitation on the actual invention, unless it is required by the language of the claim. Wagner Typewriter Co. v. Wyckoff, (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 585, modifying (1905) 138 Fed. 108.

A patent for a process of making mica insulating sheets by combining "laminated elementary scales" of mica should not be construed to require that the scales must be split down to the last possibility of splitting, but only so far as is commercially practicable, especially where it is plain, from the description of the process in the specification, that such was the inventor's meaning. Mica Insulator Co. v. Commercial Mica Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 440, reversing (1907) 157 Fed. 90.

A statement in a patent for a process for bleaching nuts that acid is added to the solution "coincidentally" with the dipping of the nuts therein should be given a reasonable construction, and does not require that the acid should be added at the very instant of the dipping, but a successive dipping of different crates of nuts after the acid has been added and so long as it remains effective for the purpose used is fairly within the patented process. Fullerton Walnut Growers' Assoc. v. Anderson-Barngrover Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 443.

Courts will go far to save a patent for a meritorious invention, but they cannot reconstruct claims and disregard their very terms, and add or substitute material words not found therein, but necessary if the true invention is to be covered. Sharp v. Bellinger, (1909) 168 Fed. 295.

Patents granted under the laws of the United States pursuant to Const., art. 1, sec. 8, are grants made in consideration of discoveries which "promote the progress of science and useful arts," and are to be construed liberally so as to effect their real intent. Bossert Electric Constr. Co. v. Pratt Chuck Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 385.

The construction placed on the patent statutes by the courts is favorable toward inventors having meritorious inventions, and they do not put on them harsh or technical interpretations, and are inclined to resolve all doubts as to whether more than one invention is embraced in one patent in favor of the patentee. In re Briede, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 298.

Such narrow limitations should not be imposed on the patent as will enable subsequent inventors to use the invention with impunity by appropriating the essential element of the device, i. e., the indispensable, functioning feature of it. Société Anonyme des Anciens Etablissements Cail v. U. S., (1907) 43 Ct. Cl. 25.

Strict construction.—While the fact that a patented device has never gone into use does not defeat the patent, it warrants an inference against utility, the converse of that which arises from successful commercial use, and may justify a narrow construction of the patent. National Malleable Castings Co. v. Buckeye Malleable Iron, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 847.

While the fact that the device of a patent has never been put in use does not affect the validity of the patent, it is ground for giving it strict construction. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 371.

Strict construction as to mere improvements.—If validity is given to a patent only by an improvement of a narrow character, just sufficient to cross the line which divides mechanical improvement from patentable invention, the inventor will be protected only as to such improvement as is specifically described, and is but little aided by the doctrine of "equivalents," which term has a variable meaning and is measured by the character of the invention. Rich v. Baldwin, (1904) 133 Fed. 920, 66 C. C. A. 464.

A patent for mere improvement on prior devices must be limited to the precise devices and combinations shown and claimed. Cumming v. Baker, (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 395.

When the invention of a patent is not a pioneer invention, the inventor is held to a rigid construction of his claims, and is not entitled to any considerable range of equivalents; and when, in a patent for a mere improvement, which in view of the prior art is extremely narrow, he has limited his claims by specific words to a specific form of device or element, he is bound thereby. Sharp v. Bellinger, (1909) 168 Fed. 295.

The Schmetz reissue patent, No. 12,443 (original No. 791,216), for an apparatus and process for manufacturing wire glass, is for an improvement on the so-called "European" or two-sheet method of making wire glass, and consists in the simultaneity of laying the wire and rolling the first sheet and the close and progressive following of the second roll casting the second sheet on top thereof. This quickening of the whole operation produces a better welding of the two sheets and an improved result, but the claims, being for an improvement only in the respect stated, must be limited to the simultaneity of the particular method and the particular mechanical means for practicing it described in the specifications, and cannot be broadened to include other methods or means for accomplishing the same result. As so construed and limited, held not infringed. Highland Glass Co. v. Schmetz Wire Glass Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 944.

Construction in connection with other patents or applications.—A second patent applied for by and granted to a patentee for a device for the same purpose, but different in form from one shown in an earlier patent, may be taken into consideration in construing the earlier patent, as affording a presumption that it did not broadly cover other forms than the one described. D'Arcy v. Staples, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 733.

An invention covered by a patent is not necessarily to be cut down by the fact that, while the application for it was pending in the Patent Office, other applications were brought forward from time to time by the same inventor, representing different developments of the same idea; all being allowed and issued the same day. Manhattan Gen. Constr. Co. v. Helios-Upton Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 785.

Improvement on prior device of same inventor.—A patent expressly for an improvement on the device of a prior patent to the same inventor should be read in connection with the first, and will not be declared void because, standing alone, it does not describe an operative apparatus. Los Alamitos Sugar Co. v. Carroll, (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 280.

Invention not put to practical use.—The rule applied that in a suit for infringement of a patent for an alleged invention of which no practical use has ever been made, the patent is not entitled to the same breadth of construction which might be warranted by its proved usefulness. Boston Woven Hose, etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania Rubber Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 557, affirming (1907) 156 Fed. 787.

Pioneer patent.—A patent for improvements in transmitting electrical impulses and signals, and in apparatus therefor, while for a combination of elements, all of which were taken from the prior art, discloses the first practical wireless telegraphic system, and shows invention of a primary character, which entitles it to a broad construction and liberal range of equivalents. Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. v. De Forest Wireless Tel. Co., (1905) 138 Fed. 657.

The liberal construction allowed to pioneer inventions cannot be invoked in favor of a patentee whose claim was limited to save it from anticipation by previous patents, so as to broaden the claim and practically make it cover what was rejected by the Patent Office. Cotto-Waxo Chemical Co. v. Perolin Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 267.

Pioneer patent defined.—A pioneer patent is one covering a function never before performed, a wholly novel device, or one of such novelty and importance as to make a distinct step in the progress of the art as distinguished from a mere improvement or perfection of what had gone before. Autopiano Co. v. Amphion Piano Player Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 159.

Application of doctrine of equivalents.—The claims of a patent of a pioneer invention are entitled to some liberality in the application of the doctrine of equivalents. American Pneumatic Service Co. v. Snyder, (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 712, reversing (1909) 174 Fed. 152.

Construction claimed by patentee.—Where claims of a patent were construed to include by implication an element not expressly claimed therein, but which was described and shown in the specification and drawings, and, as so construed, held anticipated, and, to avoid the effect of such decisions, the patentee applied for and was granted a reissue on a new specification, which expressly disclaimed such element, it should not be read into the claims of the new patent, although they are in terms substantially like those of the old, but the courts should, if possible, adopt the construction placed on them by the patentee and the Patent Office giving effect to the disclaimer. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Black River Traction Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 759, 68 C. C. A. 461, reversing (1903) 124 Fed. 495.

Construction to sustain grant.—If the wording of a claim of a patent is fairly capable of two constructions, one of which will sustain the claim and the other defeat it, that which will preserve the invention should be adopted. Universal Adding Mach. Co. v. Comptograph Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 981, reversing 142 Fed. 539.

Under the rule that the language of a patent should be so construed as to save rather than destroy it, a claim in a patent of "rotatably mounted bars . . . substantially as described" as an element of a combination is not void because the specification and drawings show a rotatable and a fixed bar, there being no doubt as to the thing intended. Maunula v. Sunell, (1907) 155 Fed. 535.

Where the validity of a patent is in doubt because the claims are ambiguous, that construction is to be preferred which sustains the patent rather than that which would render it invalid. Electric Candy Mach. Co. v. Morris, (1905) 156 Fed. 972.

A patent is a contract, and the rules for the construction of contracts generally control in its interpretation, and when its terms are plain, and the intention of the parties clearly manifest therefrom, they must prevail, but if its expressions are ambiguous, or its validity or any claim is doubtful, that construction will be given which will sustain rather than destroy the patent. American Steel, etc., Co. v. Denning Wire, etc., Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 108.

When two constructions of a patent are permissible, the court will adopt that which will give to an inventor the protection to which, under the law, he is entitled. Malignani v. Jasper Marsh Consol. Electric Lamp Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 442.

The presumption is that an inventor intends to protect his invention broadly, and consequently the scope of a claim should not be restricted beyond the ordinary meaning of the words, save for the purpose of saving it; and in reading the claim for the purpose of construing it, heed must not only be paid to the specification proper and to the drawings, but also to the other claims of the patent. Andrews v. Nilson, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 451.

Effect of foreign patent.—The claim that a British patent covering an invention also patented in the United States was taken out by an intermeddler, and was unauthorized, and therefore that its expiration did not affect the term of the American patent, cannot be sustained, where the American patentees authorized the taking out of a patent in England, and under the other circumstances named in the opinion, did not repudiate the one in fact obtained until after its expiration. United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Duplessis Shoe Machinery Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 155 Fed. 842, affirming (1906) 148 Fed. 31.

The amendment of section 4887, by Act March 3, 1897, did not affect patents previously issued, either as to their validity or length of term, and such a patent covering an invention previously patented in a foreign country remained, as to length of term, governed by the original section, and not by section 4884. Sawyer Spindle Co. v. Carpenter, (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 976, affirming (1904) 133 Fed. 238.

Directory provision.—The provision as to dating patents is directory merely, since the same section allows the applicant six months after notice in which to pay the final fee; and where, by reason of the accumulation of work in the office, the patent cannot be prepared and signed after such payment within the six months, and it is therefore reallowed and issued on the later date, it will not be held void for that reason, at least at the instance of a private party in a collateral proceeding. Western Electric Co. v. North Electric Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 79, 67 C. C. A. 553.

Priority of patents dated on same day.—Where two patents are issued on the same day by the Patent Office, and there is no other evidence of seniority between them than such as appears from their several numbers, the earlier in number must be regarded the senior and the earlier in publication. Crown Cork, etc., Co. v. Standard Stopper Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 841, 69 C. C. A. 519.

Acquiescence in delays of Patent Office.—That an applicant for a patent acquiesces in delay in the Patent Office is immaterial to the courts, and does not affect his rights under his patent, so long as the statute law is not violated. Electric Vehicle Co. v. Duerr, (1909) 172 Fed. 923, reversed on another ground (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 893.

Constitutionality of statute.—This section is not unconstitutional because it provides that inventions or discoveries may be either arts, machines, manufactures, or compositions of matter, and that presumptively no two of these subjects are one invention. Inventions have been thus distinguished continuously since 1793, and the Supreme Court of the United States has frequently recognized the validity of this division. In re Frasch, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 25.

State legislation as affecting patent rights.—A state statute cannot interfere with the monopoly granted to a patentee and his assignees under the federal laws. Rubber Tire Wheel Co. v. Milwaukee Rubber Works Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 358, reversing (1906) 142 Fed. 531.

I. WHO MAY OBTAIN PATENTS.

Right to patent in general.—Courts generally have extended to inventors the protection of the patent laws when the real invention is susceptible of ascertainment and the inventor has contributed a new and useful invention to the art. Société Anonyme Des Anciens Etablissements Cail v. U. S., (1907) 43 Ct. Cl. 25.

Where the record date of the application for a patent of one of the parties to an interference, and consequently his reduction to practice, preceded his rival's reduction to practice, the latter can only prevail, if he succeeds at all, by showing conception of the invention prior to the conception of his adversary. Cobb v. Goebel, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 75.

Where one of the parties to an interference is shown to have been the first to conceive and the first to reduce to practice the invention of some of the counts, and, though first to conceive and last to reduce to practice the invention of the remaining counts, was diligent in reducing that invention to practice, he is entitled to an award of priority of invention as to all of the counts. Hillard v. Brooks, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 526.

Reducing inventions to practice.—The general rule is that he who first reduces an invention to practice is ordinarily held to be the inventor as against another who claims to have previously conceived the idea which led to the invention, but made no practical application of it. Killeen v. Buffalo Furnace Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 33; Eastern Paper Bag Co. v. Continental Paper Bag Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 479; Laas v. Scott, (1908) 161 Fed. 122; Hallwood v. Lalor, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 61.

The inventor who first reduces to practice is prior in right, unless the inventor who is the first to conceive was using reasonable diligence at the time of the second conception and the first reduction to practice. Parkes v. Lewis, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 1.

Where neither party shows actual reduction to practice, the senior party, being first to conceive, is entitled to an award of priority of invention. Furman v. Dean, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 277.

Reduction to practice by third person.—The reduction to practice of an invention by an original inventor cannot be taken as a reduction to practice by another merely because the ownership of the claims of both may afterwards become vested in the same person or persons. It is not enough to entitle an applicant to a patent that some one else, not his agent, has shown the practicability of the invention by reducing it to practice. Robinson v. McCormick, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 98.

Delay in reducing invention to practice.—A delay of three years in reduction to practice is fatal to an award of due diligence, where the applicant does not explain the delay, and has during that period taken out several patents relating to the same art. Parkes v. Lewis, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 1.

Dismantling experimental machine as negating reduction to practice.—The dismantling of an experimental machine by a large and prosperous company has more weight as showing the lack of success of the trial than it would have if done by a poor inventor whose necessities compel him to utilize the parts for other purposes. Robinson v. Thresher, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 22.

Allowable application as reduction to practice.—The filing of an allowable application for a patent is equivalent to a reduction to practice. Harris v. Stern, (1903) 22 App. Cas. (D. C.) 164; Davis v. Garrett, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 9.

Although actual reduction to practice is preferable to constructive reduction to practice, as more to the interest of the public, and a reasonable indulgence ought to be extended to one attempting in good faith to actually reduce to practice, yet, when the construction of an experimental device involves so great cost and risk that an inventor, although possessed of sufficient means, may well hesitate to undertake the same entirely at his own expense, due diligence requires that he should then attempt to secure his rights and promote the public interests by filing an application for patent. Seeberger v. Dodge, (1905) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 476.

Reduction to practice restricted to date of application.—Where a party to an interference who conceived the invention of the issue some time prior to the filing of his application did not reduce the invention to practice, he is restricted to his filing date for the constructive reduction to practice. Geltz v. Crozier, (1909) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 324.

A party to an interference is not entitled to the date of an earlier application as a constructive reduction to practice, although such earlier application, as originally filed, disclosed the invention of the issue, where it was amended on objection by the primary examiner and without appeal so as to eliminate all claims for such invention, and then allowed, and went to patent four years before the second application was filed. Wainwright v. Parker, (1909) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 431.

Theory of constructive reduction to practice.—The theory underlying the doctrine of constructive reduction to practice is that the filing of a proper application constitutes a sufficient disclosure to enable one skilled in the art to practice the invention. National Metallurgic Co. v. Whitman, (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 420.

Delay in making invention public.—While an inventor is under no obligation to give the public the benefit of his discovery, by failing to do so he runs the risk that some other inventor may do so, and thus in the eyes of the law become the prior inventor, and as such entitled to a patent. Howard v. Bowes, (1908) 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 619.

Demonstration of commercial success.—In reducing an invention to practice, it is not necessary to prolong the test until its commercial value has been established, but, if it accomplishes the end desired, it is a perfected invention, although it may prove of little or no commercial value. Laas v. Scott, (1908) 161 Fed. 122.

Diligence in reducing invention to practice.—If the first inventor of a device exercises reasonable diligence in reducing it to practice, he does not lose his right to a patent because a second and independent inventor of the same device may have first put it into actual use. New England Motor Co. v. B. F. Sturtevant Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 866; Continental Rubber Works v. Single Tube Automobile, etc., Tire Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 452, affirming (1909) 174 Fed. 50; O'Connell v. Schmidt, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 77; Turnbull v. Curtis, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 567.

An inventor who is the first to conceive and disclose is under no obligation of diligence in making application until just prior to the date when his rival enters the field. O'Connell v. Schmidt, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 77.

No invariable rule of diligence in the reduction to practice of an invention can be prescribed for the government of all cases, and whether it has been exercised in a particular case must depend on its special circumstances. Hammond v. Basch, (1905) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 469.

The party to an interference involving the invention of a snap hook of simple construction who was the first to conceive, and who did not know, when he filed his application, that the other party had entered the field, is not lacking in diligence, where he made a model demonstrating the utility of the invention, immediately had castings made for patterns, and five months afterwards made his first shipment, which four months afterwards was followed by the filing of his application, and where part of the time following the making of the castings he was away from home, and at other times only delayed the exploitation of the invention because of press of other work, and there is nothing to show any want of good faith on his part. Schar-tow v. Schleicher, (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 347.

What constitutes lack of due diligence.—An inventor who was the first to conceive, but who, without adequate reason, delayed for a year to reduce to practice, and to file his application, which was not filed until six months after the issue of a patent to his rival, cannot be said to have exercised due diligence, and will not be awarded priority. Anderson v. Wells, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 115.

In an interference proceeding involving improvements in electrical motors, where the senior parties conceived in March, 1901, and constructively reduced to practice by filing their application April 30, 1901, the junior party, who claimed to have made a sketch and disclosure of the invention in July, 1899, and a device embodying the invention in August, 1899, but did nothing further until he filed his application, about a year and nine months afterwards, failed to show conception prior to the date of his application;

but even if it did so show, he was not diligent in reducing to practice before the arrival of his opponent on the field of invention. Harris v. Stern, (1903) 22 App. Cas. (D. C.) 164.

Failure for three years after conception, by the junior party to an interference, to reduce to practice the invention — a very simple device, namely, a clamp for holding glass plates — during which time the senior party entered the field and reduced to practice, is not excused by want of time and money, where it appears that during such period the junior party abandoned his calling as a salesman of plate glass and engaged in another and different business, to start which he borrowed $3,000. Feinberg v. Cowan, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 80.

W. conceived an invention of an improvement in a machine, and made a drawing thereof which he exhibited to another in January, 1896. In January, 1897, he completed working drawings from which a machine was finished in the following April. In 1898 he filed an application on which a patent was granted in 1899. In the meantime, in December, 1896, T., an independent inventor, filed an application for a patent for the same machine, on which a patent was granted in 1904. It was held that W. did not use such reasonable diligence in perfecting and adapting his invention as to entitle him to carry the date of invention back to the time of its conception and disclosure, nor back of the date when he reduced it to practice by completing his machine; that the date of T.'s invention was the time of his application, and he was therefore the first and original inventor in the sense of the patent law, and his patent was valid. Automatic Weighing Mach. Co. v. Pneumatic Scale Corp., (C. C. A. 1909) 166 Fed. 288, reversing (1908) 158 Fed. 415.

Lack of diligence is shown by a party to an interference where he took no steps to file his application for more than two years after a test which he claims was an actual reduction to practice, did not file his application until nine months thereafter, and then only after he had heard of a patent granted his adversary. Lewis v. Cronmeyer, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 174.

Rules for determining priority. — When two patents for the same invention have been issued to independent inventors, the dates of their respective inventions are determined by (1) the dates of the patents; (2) the dates of the application, provided the application sufficiently describes the invention; (3) the dates of actual reduction to practice; (4) the dates of conception, with this qualification: That if either patentee seeks to carry the date of his invention back to the date of his conception, he must show reasonable diligence in adapting and perfecting his invention, either by actual reduction to practice or by filing his application. Automatic Weighing Mach. Co. v. Pneumatic Scale Corp., (C. C. A. 1909) 166 Fed. 288, reversing (1908) 158 Fed. 415.

Delay by both parties. — The fact that a patentee, after perfecting his invention, delayed for six years before applying for a patent therefor, does not estop him from claiming priority for such patent over one subsequently issued to another, who had in the meantime conceived the same invention, but who took no steps to obtain a patent until after the first patentee had filed his application and had introduced his invention into public use. Kellogg Switchboard, etc., Co. v. International Telephone Mfg. Co., (1907) 158 Fed. 104.

Delay caused by fraud of rival. — Where the junior party in interference proves that he was the first to conceive the invention; that he disclosed it to others, who fully understood it and could have reduced it to practice from his explanation; that he made accurate drawings; that this knowledge was imparted to the senior party's brother-in-law, who got possession of the drawings; and that his delay in applying for a patent was caused by the fraud of the senior party, the latter's brother-in-law, and others — such junior party is entitled to priority. Shuman v. Beall, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 324, 329.

Making and exhibiting models. — The fact that an inventor, who is the first to conceive, has made models, which, if tested, would constitute a reduction to practice, and has shown these models to those skilled in the art, thus fully disclosing the invention and its practicability, should have considerable weight in determining the question of diligence in making application. O'Connell v. Schmidt, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 77.

Excuses for delay generally. — Where the excuse given for the delay in filing an application for a patent was the impossibility of reaching an agreement with employers concerning the invention, it was held that the excuse was insufficient. Paul v. Hess, (1905) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 462.

A delay by an inventor in reducing his invention to practice and applying for a patent is not to be excused because of his supposition that prior patents in which he had an interest were sufficiently broad to include the invention. Seeberger v. Dodge, (1905) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 476.

Delay to procure capital to manufacture device. — One having the first complete conception of an invention cannot hold the field against all comers by diligent efforts merely to organize and procure sufficient capital to engage in the manufacture of his device or mechanism for commercial purposes. This is a different thing from diligence in actual reduction to practice. Seeberger v. Dodge, (1905) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 476.

Inability to construct device. — That no one could be found who was qualified to construct the device and willing to do the actual work is no excuse for inactivity for over eighteen months to reduce to practice, during which time a rival inventor conceived the invention and constructively reduced to practice, where it appears that the first inventor could have constructively reduced to practice by filing his application, especially where it appears that he filed several applications in the Patent Office for improvements in the art during that time. Nor is the fact that the inventor was a very busy man in other directions an excuse. Robinson v. Copeland, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 68.

Priority in filing application.—Where, in an interference case, it appears that neither party actually reduced to practice, but all that each did was to conceive the invention and to file an application, it was held that while weeks and months, and perhaps even years, might not count for much in the race of diligence between rival inventors when the time is to be applied to the actual reduction to practice of complicated inventions, the operativeness of which is required to be proved by laborious experiment, yet an unexplained delay of two months and a half in filing his application by the party first conceiving warranted the granting of the patent to his more diligent opponent. Ritter v. Krakau, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 271.

Prior grant of patent to rival inventor.—In an interference case, an application to countervail a patent already granted must be shown to have been made within a reasonable time from the date of reduction to practice, or from conception of the invention, with the exercise of reasonable diligence to reduce to practice, or otherwise the claim to the invention, as opposed to that covered by the patent, will be rejected. Dashiell v. Tasker, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 64.

A party to an interference is not relieved of the obligation to combat the effect of a patent issued to his adversary by the fact that he had, before the issue of such patent, filed an application for a patent for a device of the same general character as that involved in the interference, where such application did not disclose the issue of the interference. Norden v. Spaulding, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 286.

An applicant in interference, who files his application after the granting of the patent, has the burden of proving his prior right beyond a reasonable doubt; and this burden is not discharged by merely raising a doubt as to which party had the first conception of the invention. French v. Halcomb, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 307.

The burden of proof imposed on a junior applicant in interference proceedings is not increased by the granting of a patent to his opponents while his application is pending. Laas v. Scott, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 354.

Knowledge of inventor.—Where a patent discloses means by which a novel and successful result is secured, it is immaterial whether the patentee understands or correctly states the theory or philosophical principles of the mechanism which produces the new result. Van Epps v. United Box Board, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 869, reversing (1905) 137 Fed. 418.

A combination patent which has proved a great success may not be held devoid of invention because the inventor did not know all the forces which he had brought into operation. Diamond Rubber Co. v. Consolidated Rubber Tire Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 428, 31 S. Ct. 444, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 527, affirming (1908) 162 Fed. 892, 89 C. C. A. 582.

Where one of the parties to an interference disclosed his conception of a device to the other, and employed him to construct one, the relation of employer and employee existed, and any improvement on the general idea made by the employee, especially where it did not involve invention, belongs to the employer. Gallagher v. Hastings, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 88.

Conception of employer carried out by employees.—The discoverer of a new principle does not lose his right to a patent because he employs another to put it in working shape, and such other suggests minor features or improvements. Eastern Dynamite Co. v. Keystone Powder Mfg. Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 47.

The right of one who conceives an invention to patent the same as the sole inventor is not lost because he lacks the mechanical skill to embody his invention in a machine, and employs another to construct such machine. United Shirt, etc., Co. v. Beattie, (1907) 149 Fed. 736, 79 C. C. A. 442, affirming (1905) 138 Fed. 136.

To claim the benefit of his employee's skill and achievement, it is not sufficient that an employer had in mind the desired result, and employed another to devise means for its accomplishment, but he must show that he had an idea of the means to accomplish the particular result, which he communicated to the employee in such detail as to enable the latter to embody the same in some practical form. Robinson v. McCormick, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 98; Smith v. Phelps, (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 358.

While an inventor who employs another to embody his conception in practical form is entitled to any improvement thereon due to the mechanical skill of the employee, if, in doing the work, the employee goes further than mechanical skill enables him to do, and makes an actual invention, he is entitled to the benefit of his invention. Robinson v. McCormick, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 98; McKeen v. Jerdone, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 163.

Where a person has discovered an improved principle in a machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, and employs other persons to assist him in carrying out that principle, and they, in the course of experiments arising from that employment, make valuable discoveries ancillary to the plan and preconceived design of the employer, such suggested improvements are in general to be regarded as the property of the person who discovered the original improved principle, and may be embodied in his patent as a part of his invention. Orcutt v. McDonald, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 228.

Hired inventor.—In the absence of an express contract or agreement therefor, the relation of employer and employee, under whatever circumstances, at least short of a specific employment to make an invention, does not vest the employer with the entire property right in an invention of the employee, and to the patent monopoly thereof, or with anything more than the shop right or an irrevocable license to use the invention. Pressed Steel Car. Co. v. Hansen, (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 403, affirming (1904) 128 Fed. 444.

Defendant company, which was a manufacturer of carbons, employed complainant as a mechanical engineer on salary; a part of his duty being to devote his time and skill to the improvement and cheapening of the processes of such manufacture, an essential one of which was electroplating. While so employed, complainant invented a valuable process for electroplating, and a machine for carrying out the same, both of which he patented. Under his directions special buildings were made at defendant's works to accommodate seven of such machines, six of which were built and installed also under his direction, and a seventh was installed after his employment ended. It was held that while defendant did not become the owner of the patent, in the absence of an express agreement to that effect, it had an implied license to use the seven machines, and any replacement of them, together with the patented process, in the manufacture of carbons, so long as it continued in the business. Barber v. National Carbon Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 370.

Where a patent was applied for after the termination of an employment under a contract providing that the employee would execute any and all assignments in writing which might be deemed by the employer proper and necessary to transfer and vest in it the entire right, title, and interest to all inventions and discoveries made by the employee during the term of his employment, the patent vested in the employee, and the burden was on the employer to show by the weight of proof that the invention covered thereby was made by the employee during his employment. Mississippi Glass Co. v. Franzen, (1905) 138 Fed. 924.

Complainant was a corporation engaged in the manufacture of musical instruments, including organs, and defendant was its superintendent of factories and had made certain inventions relating to organs. A new contract was made between them by which, in consideration of an increased salary for a term of five years, it provided, in clause 2, that a one-half interest in all improvements or inventions made by defendant during the term "in or relative to organs, both keyed and automatic," should be assigned to complainant, and they should be patented at complainant's cost. By clause 4 it was provided that complainant should have the exclusive right to purchase and use improvements and inventions made by defendant during the term "in self-playing pianos or self-playing devices for playing pianos," on such terms as should be agreed upon. Defendant during the term made and patented certain inventions which were applicable alike to organs and self-playing pianos. It was held that such inventions were within the contract, and complainant was entitled to an assignment of a half interest therein, or a perpetual license to use the same without further payment, but only in so far as they related to organs, as expressed in the second clause of the contract. Wright v. Vocalion Organ Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 209, 79 C. C. A. 183, reversing (1905) 137 Fed. 313.

The fact that a patentee, when he made the invention of the patent, was general manager and a director of a corporation, does not give the corporation any right or interest in the patent, in the absence of an agreement therefor. Johnson Furnace, etc., Co. v. Western Furnace Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 819.

The property in letters patent, issued to an employee, on an invention, belongs to the employee to whom the patent issued, though it was the employee's duty to use his skill and inventive ability to further the interest of his employer by devising improvements generally in the appliances and machinery used in the employer's business. American Circular Loom Co. v. Wilson, (1908) 198 Mass. 182, 84 N. E. 133.

Where the inventor of a machine, after granting an exclusive license for the manufacture and sale thereof, was employed by the licensee to invent improvements, such improvements as were made while in the employ and at the expense of the licensee were the licensee's property. Meissner v. Standard R. Equipment Co., (1908) 211 Mo. 112, 109 S. W. 730.

Joint inventions.—The fact that one of two joint patentees of a combination was the first to perceive the crude form of the elements and the possibility of their adaptation and composition to accomplish a useful result is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of joint invention arising from the granting of the patent. Vrooman v. Penhollow, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 296.

Separate parts by different inventors.—The fact that another than the patentee contributed to the mechanism necessary to make the invention operative does not affect the validity of any claims of the patent which do not cover the mechanism so supplied, either as a whole or in combination. Eastern Paper Bag Co. v. Continental Paper Bag Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 479.

When a claim covers a series of steps or a number of elements in a combination, the invention may well be joint, though some of the steps or some of the elements may have come as the thought of one. Quincey Min. Co. v. Krause, (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 1012.

Distinct improvements by different inventors.—Two persons cannot obtain a valid joint patent for different improvements on the same machine, invented by each separately, without the participation and knowledge of the other. De Laval Separator Co. v. Vermont Farm Mach. Co., (1903) 126 Fed. 536.

Combinations, etc., by different inventors.—Where an art is crowded so that no pioneer patent exists, and many inventors construct machines, combinations, and improvements therein, each inventor is entitled to his own machine and improvements, so long as it differs from those of his competitors. Wayne Mfg. Co. v. Benbow-Brammer Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 271, affirming (1908) 157 Fed. 559.

II. WHAT MAY BE PATENTED.

Modification of patented device.—A modification of the device of a patent to adapt it to different situations and wider use may be made the subject of a second patent, where it involves invention, although both inventions may have been made at the same time. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Ohio Brass Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 542.

Necessity of complete operative structure.—A claim of a patent is not void because the element therein claimed does not by itself constitute a complete operative structure, where those familiar with the art would understand its use, and especially where the claim refers to the specification, which in such case may be looked to for the purpose of ascertaining the connection in which the device is used, and the other parts necessary to complete the structure and render it operative, although such parts cannot be imported into the claim. Canda v. Michigan Malleable Iron Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 124 Fed. 486, modifying (1902) 123 Fed. 95.

System of transacting business.—A system of transacting business, disconnected from the means for carrying out the system, is not, within the most liberal interpretation of the term, an "art," and unless the means used are novel and disclose invention, such system is not patentable. Hotel Security Checking Co. v. Lorraine Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 467, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 298.

Art—form of contract.—A form of proposed contract to be entered into with individuals desiring the benefit of burial insurance or guaranty, with blanks attached and readily separable therefrom, which, in addition to the ordinary draft for payment, show the several certificates required in order to provide, as far as practicable, against the perpetration of frauds on the insurer or guarantor, is not patentable as an art. In re Moeser, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 307.

Process.—It is when the term "process" is used to represent the means or method of producing a result that it is patentable, and it will include all methods or means not nature's which are not effected by mechanism or mechanical combinations. Cameron Septic Tank Co. v. Saratoga Springs, (1907) 151 Fed. 242.

Where a metallurgical process consists, not simply in making use of certain natural properties of a deoxidizing agent such as aluminum, but in making use of them at a certain time, in certain quantities, and in a certain way, it cannot be objected, to a patent for such process, that it seeks to monopolize properties which are inherent and well known. U. S. Mitis Co. v. Midvale Steel Co., (1904) 135 Fed. 103.

Process or means of manufacture.—The validity of a patent for a product or structure is not affected by the process or means by which it is made or whether it is made by hand or by machinery. American Steel, etc., Co. v. Denning Wire, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 413, affirming (1908) 160 Fed. 125.

Process performed by machinery.—Where an applicant has been allowed a patent for an apparatus or means for coaling ships at sea, and then claims a patent for the process of effecting the same purpose, but the alleged process cannot be conceived as independent of such apparatus, and calls for the apparatus as the only means for carrying it into effect, and the process cannot be described without reference to the apparatus, the alleged process is not a true process, but is merely the function of the apparatus previously allowed for patent, is sufficiently covered by that allowance, and is not patentable. In re Cunningham, (1902) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 29.

Tangible product of process.—To support a process or method patent there must be a tangible product, or a change in character or quality brought about, and not simply a principle or result underlying or involved in certain mechanical or electrical means or steps. Manhattan Gen. Constr. Co. v. Helios-Upton Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 785, distinguishing Telephone Cases, (1888) 126 U. S. 1, 8 S. Ct. 778, 31 U. S. (L. ed.) 863.

Process and apparatus as single invention.—A process and an apparatus, while presumptively independent inventions when considered in the light of this section, may be so connected in their design and operation as to constitute unitary invention. In re Frasch, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 25.

Process involving mechanical operations.—The patentability of process is not restricted to those involving chemical or other similar elemental action, but an invention or discovery of a process or method involving mechanical operations and producing a new and useful result is within the scope of this section. Expanded Metal Co. v. Bradford, (1909) 214 U. S. 366, 29 S. Ct. 652, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 103, reversing (1906) 146 Fed. 984, 77 C. C. A. 230, and affirming (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 849.

Undescribed "mechanism" to produce specified result.—Where an inventor does not confine himself to any particular form of device, such as is shown in the specifications and drawings, but claims generally "mechanism" (without describing it) suitable for giving a certain simple mechanical movement, it amounts to a monopoly of every means for doing so which is not patentable. Diamond Match Co. v. Ruby Match Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 341.

Where no concrete conception can be worked out of a claim for a mechanical patent, nothing, indeed, but an ill-defined principle of construction, the only key to which is the abstract result to be attained, it cannot be sustained. Manhattan Gen. Constr. Co. v. Helios-Upton Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 785.

Parts of machine patented as a whole.—If the structure described in a patent be a complete and an operative one, composed of several coacting parts, and it is described and claimed and patented as a whole, especially when each part is separately described and claimed, no other valid patent can be issued to the inventor for one of those parts. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Black River Traction Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 495.

Device not complete operative structure.—A claim of a patent is not void because the element therein claimed does not by itself constitute a complete operative structure, where those familiar with the art would understand its use, and especially where the claim refers to the specification, which in such case may be looked to for the purpose of ascertaining the connection in which the device is used, and the other parts necessary to complete the structure and render it operative, although such parts cannot be imported into the claim. Canda v. Michigan Malleable Iron Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 124 Fed. 486, modifying (1902) 123 Fed. 95.

Manufactures — advertising device. — An advertising device made of cardboard is a manufacture, and patentable as such, if novel and involving invention. Mitchell v. International Tailoring Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 91.

Form of construction of room in house. — A house, or a room in a house, is not a "manufacture," and therefore a particular form of construction of a room, or portion of a room, in a house, is not patentable. American Disappearing Bed Co. v. Arnaelsteen, (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 324.

Different improvements as separate inventions. — When the advance in an art is gradual, and many inventors form different combinations, or make different improvements, materially aiding the desired result, each is entitled to his own improvement, so long as it differs from those of his competitors and does not include theirs. Mallon v. Gregg, (1905) 137 Fed. 68, 69 C. C. A. 48, affirming (1903) 126 Fed. 377.

Although the various parts of a railroad car, such as the roof, the doors, the floor, the side construction, the draft rigging, etc., are related and co-operative to a certain extent, they are susceptible of improvement separately, and such improvements in these parts may constitute independent inventions and be patented accordingly. McKeen v. Jerdone, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 163.

Principle, idea, etc. — A principle is not patentable, and while there may be a valid patent for means or methods of putting principles into operation so as to produce useful results, there cannot be for nature's means and methods. Cameron Septic Tank Co. v. Saratoga Springs, (1907) 151 Fed. 242; Expanded Metal Co. v. General Fireproofing Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 564; American Steel, etc., Co. v. Denning Wire, etc., Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 108; McKeen v. Jerdone, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 163.

A mere operative idea or principle cannot be patented, and a mechanical device designed to accomplish certain practical results in the packing of explosive gelatin is therefore confined to the specific means employed for doing so. Eastern Dynamite Co. v. Keystone Powder Mfg. Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 47.

Patent for function, etc. — The mere function or operation of a machine or other device, as distinguished from the machine or device itself, is not patentable. The fact that the principle of a machine is required to be set out in the application does not make it the subject of a patent. Denning Wire, etc., Co. v. American Steel, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 793, affirming (1908) 160 Fed. 108. See also In re White, (1908) 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 607.

"Functions of a machine" defined. — The phrase "functions of a machine," as used in the patent law, defined as that power or property of the machine of acting in the specific manner designed or intended by its construction; in other words, that which the machine is designed to do, as distinguished from the machine itself, and from the product of its action on something external to itself. Denning Wire, etc., Co. v. American Steel, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 793, affirming (1908) 160 Fed. 108.

Means of producing results generally. — A patent cannot cover generally any and every means or method for producing a given result. Denning Wire, etc., Co. v. American Steel, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 793, affirming (1908) 160 Fed. 108.

Function or result of operation of machine. — A patent cannot properly issue for a result sought to be accomplished by the inventor of a machine, but only for the mechanical means or instrumentalities by which that result is to be obtained. In re Gardner, (1908) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 249.

Product of old process. — If a process is old and well known, the product of such process must likewise be considered as old in a patentable sense, and is not patentable as a separate and distinct invention. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. American Graphophone Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 189.

Movement of machine. — The movement of a machine irrespective of the mechanism which causes it is not patentable. American Crayon Co. v. Sexton, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 564.

New function for old machine. — Where a party obtains a patent on an apparatus, he is entitled to all the analogous uses of which his apparatus is capable; and the discovery of a new and analogous function for an old machine is not patentable. In re McNeil, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 461.

III. INVENTION.

New mechanical forms. — Inventors are not held to new mechanical forms or physical principles, but only to the new adaptation and application of those which are already at hand, but this adaptation is not shown by evidence that with the new light possessed old devices might possibly be made over to do the same thing. Eastern Dynamite Co. v. Keystone Powder Mfg. Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 47.

Product as affected by method of manufacture. — The validity of a patent for a product or structure is not affected by the process or means by which it is made, or whether it is made by hand or by machinery. American Steel, etc., Co. v. Denning Wire, etc., Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 125.

Invention in the sense of the patent law. — Inventive discovery, under the patent law, involves the intelligent apprehension of relations not before recognized by others, although actually existing, followed by the conception of how they can be practically utilized. Eck v. Kutz, (1904) 132 Fed. 758.

Necessity of invention. — While it is the policy of the patent law to deal liberally with inventors, the courts will not grant a monopoly unless convinced that invention is involved. In re Milans, (1908) 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 269.

While in a close case involving the question of patentability utility may be given some consideration, the real question is whether there is such originality shown as to call for the exercise of the inventive faculty. In re Sherman, (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 100.

Even though the point is not made in the proofs that the device does not disclose patentable invention, it is not to be disregarded when it is plain. Wills v. Scranton Cold Storage Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 525, affirmed (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 181.

Utility or evidence of invention.—The utility of a device is not in itself evidence of patentable invention, although it is entitled to weight when that question is doubtful. Union Biscuit Co. v. Peters, (1903) 125 Fed. 601, 60 C. C. A. 337, reversing 120 Fed. 679.

The utility of a patented device is not necessarily a proof of invention. Wills v. Scranton Cold Storage Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 525, affirmed (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 181.

Correction of defects or rearrangement of parts.—The result of the application of the common skill and experience of a mechanic, which comes from the habitual and intelligent practice of his calling, to the correction of some slight defect in a machine or combination, or to a new arrangement or grouping of its parts, tending to make it more effective for the accomplishment of the object for which it was designed, not involving a substantial discovery, nor constituting an addition to our knowledge of the art, is not within the protection of the patent laws. Sloan Filter Co. v. Portland Gold Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 23.

Beyond ordinary mechanical skill.—Where only mechanical skill and experience are required to devise an improvement in a machine, such improvement is not patentable. Gates Iron Works v. Overland Gold Min. Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 700, 78 C. C. A. 88; In re Seabury, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 377.

In view of the state of the art relating to combined funnels and valves, and in view of a former patent which shows a reversible funnel in combination with a valve, the using of the neck of a funnel as part of a plug valve to be opened by turning the funnel involves nothing more than the work of a skilled mechanic, and does not amount to invention. In re Baker, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 363.

Claims for a photographic film roll for daylight loading of a camera are void for lack of patentable invention in view of the prior art where merely ordinary mechanical skill is employed to adopt well-known devices and means to the accomplishment of a desired result, which had before been accomplished in substantially the same manner, by substantially the same means, though not in precisely the same combination. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Anthony, etc., Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 36.

Conception without mechanical embodiment.—A conception alone, although first in time, is not patentable, but must be accompanied by mechanical embodiment, which, to make the invention patentable, must itself be unanticpated. Voightmann v. Perkinson, (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 56, affirming (1904) 133 Fed. 934.

Conception obtained from another machine.—A patent for a machine is not invalid because of the fact that the patentee obtained the general conception of the machine from another, but without disclosure of any means for carrying the same into effect, which means the patentee himself devised, and which constituted the only invention described and claimed in the patent. Lincoln Iron Works v. W. H. McWhirter Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 967, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 860.

Mere improvement.—An improvement, to be patentable, must be shown to be the result of an act of invention, as distinguished from an act of applied skill, by those familiar with the state of the art. In re Klemm, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 186.

An improvement of guaranty credit books by adding to the arrangement of similar books for which former patents had been granted other columns for the purpose of keeping an account of items not provided for in such previously patented forms, does not involve invention. In re Taylor, (1908) 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 529.

Improvement overcoming previous difficulties.—Where a patent has been granted to an inventor for an improvement on a familiar article of simple mechanism, and such improvement, although it afterwards seems simple and unimportant, overcomes difficulties and objections, however slight, that have been endured by the public for a long time, and that others have made numerous efforts to overcome, without complete success, while the patented article has gone into immediate use, the patent will, as a rule, be upheld by the courts as disclosing invention. Albright v. Langfeld, (1904) 131 Fed. 473.

Superiority or excellence of workmanship.—Granulated coffee is not patentable as an article of manufacture merely because the process used may produce granules which are more uniform and attractive in appearance than those otherwise produced. Baker v. F. A. Duncombe Mfg. Co., (1906) 146 Fed. 744, 77 C. C. A. 234.

Economy of manufacture.—An improvement in a mechanical process which results in increased rapidity of manufacture, and consequent cheapening in cost of the article, does not for that reason alone disclose invention, where the steps in the process remain the same; the only difference being in the relative extent to which certain of such steps are carried. Kahn v. Starrells, (1904) 131 Fed. 464.

Mere mechanical adjustment.—“Means for holding in and out of operative position” a part of a machine are so common in the arts that there can be no invention in such means, except in the details thereof, unless under exceptional circumstances. U. S. Peg-Wood, etc., Co. v. B. F. Sturtevant Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 378, affirming 122 Fed. 470.

New application of prior knowledge.—A patent will not be issued for an improvement which is merely a new application of knowledge already possessed by those skilled in the art. In re Klemm, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 186.

Application of device to different phases of art.—Photography and blue printing are simply different phases of the art of light printing, and the mere transfer of a device used in one to the other does not involve patentable invention. Elliott v. Youngstown Car Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 345, reversing (1909) 173 Fed. 315.

Particular application of old device or process.—It being old to glaze fixed metal sash with wire glass and to use fusible links in places where any weight, such as a door, a valve, wires, shutters, or any other thing is to be kept suspended, until, on the breaking out of a fire, the same is closed by the action of heat, there was no invention in so glazing a pivoted sash, nor in using a fusible link to hold in an open position an automatically closing sash, more especially when it was old to hold such a sash open by means of a cord described in the patent to be the equivalent of a fusible link. Voightmann v. Weis, etc., Cornice Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 298.

It being old to vulcanize a rubber sole to the outer leather sole of a shoe, and old to vulcanize a rubber sole to the inner sole, there is no invention in vulcanizing a rubber sole directly to the inner sole of a particular kind provided with a welt. In re Butterfield, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 84.

Good selection from known materials.—The mere selection of one substance from among a number as the active agent in a chemical process may involve patentable invention. Naylor v. Alsop Process Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 911.

Material for particular use capable of other uses.—Where a patent for a material to be used for a stated purpose involved invention, it is not necessarily rendered invalid by the fact that the patentee also suggests its use for a different purpose, for which alone it would not be patentable. Forsyth v. Garlock, (1906) 142 Fed. 461, 73 C. C. A. 577.

New metallurgical process.—The fact that a large number of processes for the separation of aluminum from its ores were patented, in all of which external heat was used to fuse the ore, and maintain it in a fused state, some of the applications having been made after that of Bradley, on which patent No. 468,148 was issued, for a process, now exclusively used, in which both fusion and electrolysis were produced by the same electric current, is persuasive evidence that it involved invention. Electric Smelting, etc., Co. v. Pittsburg Reduction Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 926, modifying (1901) 111 Fed. 742.

Degree of inventive skill.—Where a patent discloses invention in some degree, the courts are not called upon to measure it by an exacting standard. Valvona v. D'Adamo, (1905) 135 Fed. 544.

Simplicity or obviousness of device or process.—The patentability of a process is to be determined by its effect. However simple, it may disclose invention if it produces an improved result. U. S. Mitis Co. v. Midvale Steel Co., (1904) 135 Fed. 103; Hancock v. Boyd, (1909) 170 Fed. 600; Beryle v. San Francisco Cornice Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 602; Kellogg Switchboard, etc., Co. v. Dean Electric Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 991, affirming (1908) 168 Fed. 549; Doble v. Pelton Water Wheel Co., (1910) 186 Fed. 526.

Claims for a patent for a device for regulating both the quality of the mixture of air and gas in a gas engine, and the quantity of the mixture supplied to the engine, which would otherwise be void for anticipation, are not saved by including in the combination some one of the old forms of automatic governor to actuate the quantity regulating valve, which is too obvious a step in the art to involve invention, such valves having been long in use for the same purpose on steam engines. Press Pub. Co. v. Westinghouse Mach. Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 767, 68 C. C. A. 469, reversing (1904) 127 Fed. 822.

Semble, that, where several persons contemporaneously apply for patents for the same device, the fact that they caught the idea at the same time goes to show that it was simple and obvious, and that it did not require inventive genius to produce it. Elliott v. Youngstown Car Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 345, reversing (1909) 173 Fed. 315.

That an improvement on a patented device, made by its inventor, may have seemed simple or obvious to him, and may to others after it was made, does not necessarily show that it involved only mechanical skill nor deprive him of the right to a patent therefor; the test of mechanical skill not being measured by the skill of the original inventor, but by that of mechanics who stand in the ordinary relation to the invention. National Malleable Casting Co. v. American Steel Foundries, (1910) 182 Fed. 626.

An alleged improvement in the process of forming pill mass into pills, consisting of feeding the pill mass to an old rolling machine in a different manner—that is, by cutting the pipe into uniform parts before feeding them to the rolling machine, so as to reduce the supply—is not patentable. In re Colton, (1902) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 17.

A device for protecting low-tension circuits, such as telegraph, telephone, and fire alarm, from injurious effects of unduly strong currents such as those carried by power and lighting circuits, belongs to the class of simple devices. Rolfe v. Hoffman, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 336.

Similarity to other devices.—Resemblances here and there between the means employed in a patented device and those of prior patents do not negative invention in the later combination. National Malleable Casting Co. v. American Steel Foundries, (1910) 182 Fed. 626.

Change of size or proportion.—A mere increase in the size, weight, or strength of a device so as to adapt it to an analogous use, although in a different art, is not invention. Fitzgerald Meat Tree Co. v. Morris, (1906) 142 Fed. 763.

An increase in the size of an existing device more completely to fulfil its purpose does not constitute patentable invention.

Streit v. Kaiper, (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 981.

The Schweichler patent, No. 615,500, for a coat pad, is void for lack of invention; the only feature of the device which the patentee is entitled to claim as original, in view of his acquiescence in the rejection of prior claims by the patent office, being a shoulder extension integral with the pad, which does not constitute a true combination in connection with the old part, but merely its enlargement or the uniting in one of two parts which had previously been sewed together. Schweichler v. Levinson, (1906) 147 Fed. 704, 78 C. C. A. 92.

The fact that an applicant for a patent for a process for making formic aldehyde has in his possession an apparatus suitable for the production of formic aldehyde in the manner set forth in his specification, in larger quantities than any apparatus set forth in existing patents, has no bearing on the patentability of his process, so long as the process and the results obtained are the same in each instance. In re Blackmore, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 434.

Changes in degree, proportion, or symmetry in a machine, where it does the same thing in the same way and by substantially the same means, although it may produce better results, do not amount to patentable invention. Torrey v. Hancock, (C. C. A. 1910) 184 Fed. 61, reversing (1909) 170 Fed. 600.

Varying proportions of constituents of alloy.—A mere difference in the proportions of the constituents of an alloy, however useful the result may be, does not entitle the originator to the monopoly of a patent, where such result was reached gradually by continued experimentation by the patentees and by others, all leading toward the same proportions, and the final product differs from those of the prior art only in degree. Brady Brass Co. v. Ajax Metal Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 84, reversing (1907) 155 Fed. 409.

Old idea carried forward.—The mere carrying forward or extended application of an old idea or thought is not invention, even though it results in improvement in degree. Voightmann v. Weis, etc., Cornice Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 298; Sloan Filter Co. v. Portland Gold Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 23; Yost Electric Mfg. Co. v. Perkins Electric Switch Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 511; Neureuther v. Mineral Point Zinc Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 850; In re Klemm, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 186; In re Faber, (1908) 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 531.

Improvements defined.—"Invention," in the nature of improvements, is the double mental act of discerning, in existing machines, processes, or articles, some deficiency, and pointing out the means of overcoming it. General Electric Co. v. Sangamo Electric Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 246.

Improvement marking advance in art.—A patent for improvements in turning lathes shows intention where the applicant had produced a much lighter and simpler device, dispensing with the guide bar of the old construction, and had embodied an idea never before given form and marking an advance in the art. In re Sheldon, (1908) 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 201.

Mere mechanical additions.—Where, in an interference proceeding involving an improvement in racks for supporting fire hose, the idea of a telescoping arm which would receive the links as the hose was pulled from the rack constituted the invention, and it appeared that the original device constructed by one of the parties was not provided with means for preventing such arm from being completely drawn out of its socket, and that an unusual or very sudden pull of the hose from the rack would disconnect the arm and defeat the real purpose of the invention, and to remedy this defect the inventor put a headless set screw or pin in the arm to hold the latch permanently in place, it was held that the set screw was a mere mechanical addition to the device and obvious to any one skilled in the art, and that its absence did not prevent the original test from constituting a reduction to practice. Howard v. Bowes, (1908) 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 619.

Change of form, etc.—It is not patentable invention to improve an article merely by changing the form, proportion, or degree. Rumford Chemical Works v. New York Baking Powder Co., (1903) 125 Fed. 231; General Electric Co. v. Yost Electric Mfg. Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 874; Sloan Filter Co. v. Portland Gold Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 23; Van Epps v. United Box Board, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 869, reversing (1905) 137 Fed. 418; In re Heinz, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 187.

A patent for a metal piling made in interlocking sections cannot be sustained alone because the form of the sections and interlocking parts is such that they can be rolled from steel, whereas those of the prior art, while similar in principle of operation, could not be so made, where the patent does not claim such advantage nor mention the material or method of making and the device has never been manufactured or entered into commercial use. Harder v. U. S. Steel Piling Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 434.

Making one of two coating parts stationary and the other movable, where before the first had been movable and the second stationary, does not amount to invention. Duner Co. v. Grand Rapids R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 863.

Mere modifications.—A patent should not be granted where the alleged invention is a mere modification of the principles involved in former inventions or discoveries. In re Faber, (1908) 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 531.

Changing form with new result.—The Brill patent, No. 627,898, for a pivotal truck for electric street cars, the essential purpose of the invention being to provide an improved flexible spring connection between the truck frame and the car bolster, designed to relieve the car body from shock or jar, covers a true combination, in which the several elements, though old, separately considered, co-operate to produce a new and useful result, and discloses patentable invention. Brill v. North Jersey St. R. Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 778.

Change in location and arrangement of parts.—A patent for an improvement in a machine which is a combination of mechanical elements adapted to the production of a mechanical result cannot be sustained on the ground alone that because of the changes made in the arrangement of the parts the machine may be more cheaply made. Greist Mfg. Co. v. Parsons, (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 116.

Rearrangement of parts.—Where a change in the relative location of the various elements of an apparatus is nothing more than would suggest itself to a skilled mechanic having in view the conditions and conveniences of the different places in which the construction and use of the apparatus may be desired, an application for a patent will be rejected. In re Garrett, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 19.

Mere adjustment of parts.—Merely making the parts of a machine adjustable with respect to each other does not constitute invention, but is within the ordinary ingenuity of a skilled mechanic. Smyth Mfg. Co. v. Sheridan, (1906) 149 Fed. 208, 79 C. C. A. 166.

Invention by substituting material.—The mere simplification of a mechanical device, when of a substantial character, by the elimination of parts which have long been in use, and are expensive and burdensome in character, may amount to invention. Dececo Co. v. George E. Gilchrist Co., (1903) 125 Fed. 293, 60 C. C. A. 207.

The mere substitution for one material of another known to possess the same qualities, though not in the same degree, is not patentable, even though better results are secured; and this is the case, although what preceded rests alone in public knowledge, and not upon patent. Sloan Filter Co. v. Portland Gold Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 23; American Acetylene Burner Co. v. Kirchnerberger, (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 745, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 94, judgment affirmed on rehearing (C. C. A. 1906) 147 Fed. 253; Cover v. American Thermo-Ware Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 670.

The Hogan patent, No. 752,903, for a dredge for salt or pepper, having the cap made of celluloid, is void on its face for lack of patentable invention; there being no invention in the substitution of celluloid, the qualities of which were well known, for other materials previously used for making such caps. Hogan v. Westmoreland Specialty Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 199.

It is not invention to substitute rubber for an unyielding material in the construction of interlocking tiles for floors, walls, or the decks of ships, to enable the covering to respond to strains more quickly, readily, and safely; such result being due solely to the elasticity and resiliency of the material, which is a well-known quality of rubber. New York Belting, etc., Co. v. Sierer, (1907) 149 Fed. 756.

While the substitution of one material for another is not as a rule patentable, there may be invention in substituting a different metal in one member of a device where both were previously made of the same, when by the union of the two metals certain hitherto imperfectly attained results are accomplished. Western Tube Co. v. Rainear, (1907) 156 Fed. 49.

The Hogan patent, No. 752,903, for a dredge for salt or pepper, having a celluloid cap, was not anticipated and discloses invention, as applied to a dredge for salt, although the only new feature of the device is the substitution of celluloid for other materials previously used in making the cap; it being shown that celluloid possesses a property which prevents the salt from absorbing moisture and becoming caked. Hogan v. Westmoreland Specialty Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 289.

Simplicity by omitting element.—The mere simplification of a mechanical device, when of a substantial character, by the elimination of parts which have long been in use, and are expensive and burdensome in character, may amount to invention. Dececo Co. v. George E. Gilchrist Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 293.

Merely making in one piece what was before made in two does not constitute patentable invention, nor does it because of the fact alone that the one-piece device is cheaper or more durable, when such results are merely such ordinary consequences of dispensing with joints as would naturally be anticipated by a workman. General Electric Co. v. Yost Electric Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 568.

Where a prior patent shows a rubber sole vulcanized to the inner sole, with an interposed layer of rubber-coated cloth, the omission of the cloth does not involve invention but mere mechanical skill. In re Butterfield, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 84.

Omitting both parts and functions.—Even though a prior machine was capable of being made to operate in the same way as that of the complainant by discarding certain devices, but it was not arranged to do so, it cannot be said that the difference between the two consists merely in the rejection of useless and functionless parts, which involves no invention; the devices dispensed with having a specific function as employed, and being rendered unnecessary only by the substitution of that by which they were made so, and it having remained to the complainant to perceive and develop this possibility, which was not recognized by the author of the prior machine, although a skillful inventor. Eck v. Kutz, (1904) 132 Fed. 758.

Substantial equivalents.—A device in one mechanism, to be the equivalent of the device in another, must perform the same function and perform it in substantially the same manner. American Can Co. v. Hickmott Asparagus Canning Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 86.

One element performing functions of three.—Where three separate elements in a patented device, each performing an individual function, are supplanted in another device by a single element which itself performs the functions of all three, the threefold capacity of the single element is not the equivalent of the three separate elements. Lambert Hoisting Engine Co. v. Lidgerwood Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 372, modifying 150 Fed. 364.

The test of equivalency with respect to a substituted element in a patented combination is whether it operates in substantially the same way to produce substantially the same result in the combination. Palmer v. Jordan Mach. Co., (1911) 186 Fed. 496.

Substitution of equivalents.—The doctrine of equivalents may be invoked for other than pioneer patents, the range of equivalents depending on and varying with the degree of invention. Continental Paper Bag Co. v. Eastern Paper Bag Co., (1908) 210 U. S. 405, 28 S. Ct. 748, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1122, affirming (1906) 150 Fed. 741.

The substitution in a machine of a common drive shaft for other methods of driving is too familiar in the mechanical arts to constitute invention, under ordinary circumstances. U. S. Peg-Wood, etc., Co. v. B. F. Sturtevant Co., (1903) 125 Fed. 378, 60 C. C. A. 244, affirming 122 Fed. 470.

Invention may exist in substituting a new and different operating part in a machine, notwithstanding it does not constitute such an advance in the art as to lead the owner of the patent to discard old machines and use those of the patent. It may be enough that the substitution addresses itself to any considerable portion of the community and creates an opportunity for electing between different methods. Eastern Paper Bag Co. v. Continental Paper Bag Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 479.

The Force patent, No. 705,228, for a handle for a type block, consisting of a metallic handle with two flanges at the lower end having gripping edges, between which is held a rubber type block, the claimed invention being in the use of the flanges, instead of glue or cement, to fasten the rubber block to the handle, is void on its face for lack of invention. Kuhn v. Lock Stub Check Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 235.

The Wiggins patent, No. 623,933, for a bowling alley having a concave side trough or gutter, discloses novelty, but is void for lack of invention, being merely the substitution of one common form of construction for another, the function remaining the same, and the substituted form having previously been similarly and suggestively used in other structures, and without any extraordinary, even if of a fair, degree of merit. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Rosatto, (1908) 159 Fed. 729.

The substitution of a cam for a toggle joint in a patented mechanical combination does not avoid infringement, where the two have the same purpose in the combination and effect it in substantially the same manner. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Cutter Electric, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 634.

The use in a patented device of a screw to fasten together two parts instead of a rivet used in prior devices, for the purpose of making them more readily detachable, is but the substitution of a well-known mechanical equivalent and does not amount to invention. Boss Mfg. Co. v. Thomas, (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 811.

Where, in a rock crusher, the combination of a crusher shaft, a core portion removably secured thereto, and a mantle portion removably secured to the core portion, is concededly unpatentable, the attachment of a pin and slot-fastening device of a former patent, to retain the mantle on the core, is mere double use, and also an obvious substitution of substantial equivalents. In re Thurston, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 315.

The substitution for an old element, in a combination, of an element performing a similar function, but constructed in a different way, does not render the combination itself patentable where there is no resultant change in the operation. In such a case, although the substituted element may be superior, the invention lies in the element, and not in the combination. In re Hawley, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 324.

A mere carrying forward of new or more extended application of the original thought; a change only in form, proportions, or degree; the substitution of equivalents; doing substantially the same thing in the same way, by substantially the same means, with better results—is not such invention as will sustain a patent. In re Hodges, (1907) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 525.

In a pitless wagon scale, the substitution of commercially rolled channels having separable brackets—that is, brackets fastened by bolts—for the cast-iron channels with integral cast brackets of a previously granted patent, does not involve patentable invention, although the change enhances the utility of the device. In re Orcutt, (1909) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 345.

In an improved sink or shelf bracket having its brace bar pivoted so that it can be swung out of the way of tools used in putting the bracket in place, a mere change from the manner called for by a previously granted patent of securing the brace to accomplish the same result does not involve invention, but mere mechanical skill. In re Berger, (1909) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 358.

Attaching a pipe leading from a vacuum cleaner to the conduit supplying air, to the air and fuel mixing means of an internal combustion engine, or, in other words, substituting the pump of the engine for the separate air pump of the cleaner, is not invention, although the substitution is ingenious. No different function is performed. In re Noyes, (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 107.

Mechanical equivalent defined.—The term “mechanical equivalent” has a narrow and restricted meaning in the construction of a patent for a slight improvement, and in the interpretation of patents which fall between a pioneer patent and a slight improvement its meaning is proportioned to the advance which the invention under consideration evidences. Mallon v. Gregg, (1905) 137 Fed. 68, 69 C. C. A. 48, affirming (1903) 126 Fed. 377.

The term “mechanical equivalent,” as used in the law of patents, means that each of the ingredients comprising the invention covers every other ingredient which, in the same arrangement of the parts, will perform the same function, if that was well known as a proper substitute for the one described in the specification at the time of the patent. American Steel, etc., Co. v. Denning Wire, etc., Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 108.

Equivalent for combination.—The doctrine of equivalents applies to patents for a combination, although the measure of its effect in the particular case depends on the position of the patent in the art to which it relates. Sloan Filter Co. v. Portland Gold Min. Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 23.

Reasonable range of equivalents.—A patent for an invention which is neither primary nor a slight improvement on the prior art, but possesses substantial patentable novelty, covers a reasonable range of equivalents. Lewis Blind Stitch Mach. Co. v. Premium Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 950.

Combination patent limited by use of old elements.—Where a patent covers a combination of old elements, and none of the prior inventors exhibits or suggests any co-operation of the elements on the principle adopted by the later patent, or on any principle adapted to serve the same purpose, the use of the old elements may limit, but cannot defeat, the patent. Imperial Bottle Cap, etc., Co. v. Crown Cork, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 312, reversing (1903) 123 Fed. 669.

Necessity of co-operation.—Where a device described in a claim of a patent as an element of a combination in a machine does not co-operate mechanically with the other parts, but acts separately—as a mechanism operated by a hand lever to lift another part out of position when the machine is stopped—the claim is for a mere aggregation, and not a patentable combination. Diamond Match Co. v. Ruby Match Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 341.

It is not necessary to a valid combination that all the parts should co-operate all the time, but it is enough that in the normal and progressive use of the machine they do so some of the time. Sanders v. Hancock, (C. C. A. 1904) 128 Fed. 424.

To constitute a patentable combination of old elements, they must co-operatively perform a different function from what they did before, unless it is shown that, in the combination as applied to a machine or device in its entirety, a new and useful result is produced. Elliott-Fisher Co. v. Donning, (1909) 171 Fed. 96.

Sufficient co-operation.—The Brill patent, No. 627,898, for a pivotal truck for electric street cars, the essential purpose of the invention being to provide an improved flexible spring connection between the truck frame and the car bolster, designed to relieve the car body from shock or jar, covers a true combination, in which the several elements, though old, separately considered, co-operate to produce a new and useful result, and discloses patentable invention. Brill v. North Jersey St. R. Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 778.

Test of patentable combination.—The test as to whether a device is a patentable combination or a mere aggregation of parts having no combined action is whether there is a new unitary result to the production of which the different elements co-act; and where this appears it is immaterial that there are different steps in the operation to which the different parts are successively addressed. It is not necessary that the article manufactured shall be produced at a single stroke, in which all the elements are involved. Novelty Glass Mfg. Co. v. Brookfield, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 946, affirming (1908) 170 Fed. 830.

Combination.—Where the elements in a new organization co-operate to produce a single practical and useful result, it constitutes a combination, whether they act simultaneously or successively. National Tube Co. v. Aiken, (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 254, affirming (1907) 157 Fed. 691.

Combination of old processes.—The Cameron, Commin, and Martin patent, No. 634,423, for a process of and apparatus for treating sewage, is void for lack of invention, in view of the prior art. The process claims for liquefying sewage by anaerobic action are for an aggregation of three separate and successive processes, two of which were old, and the other a process of nature not patentable, and which had, moreover, been previously discovered and utilized by others. The apparatus claims, which cover a settling tank, a septic tank, and an aerator, disclose nothing which was not known and used in the prior art, except, perhaps, an improvement in the outlet of the septic tank, which involved no invention. Cameron Septic Tank Co. v. Saratoga Springs, (1907) 151 Fed. 242.

New combination producing new result.—A new combination of old elements, so made as to produce a new result, and to accomplish a purpose long sought to be accomplished, but in which all others have failed, by making a completed structure which is useful and valuable and superior to all those of the prior art, constitutes invention. Hale, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Oneonta, etc., R. Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 514; Lowrie v. H. A. Meldrum Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 761; Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Ohio Brass Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 378; Louden Machinery Co. v. Junesville Hay Tool Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 975; American Steel, etc., Co. v. Denning Wire, etc., Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 108, affirmed (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 793; In re Klemm, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 186; In re Hill, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 318.

If a new combination and arrangement of known elements produces a new and beneficial result never attained before, it is evidence of invention, and such result need not be new and useful in a primary sense, but only approximately so. Beryle v. San Francisco Cornice Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 692.

A patent for improvements in counter stools, used in stores, consisting chiefly of the use of a spring which automatically throws the seat over toward and under the counter when not in use, and a rest for the stool arm when in use, although combining old elements, produces a new and improved result, and discloses invention and novelty. A. R. Milner Seating Co. v. Yesbera, (1904) 133 Fed. 916, 67 C. C. A. 210.

While the mere assembling in a new organization of parts of old structures to perform the same functions in their new place that they did in the old is not invention, yet where they are so taken, and are organized in a new and useful manner, so as to produce a more beneficial result, there may be invention; and where the combination displays the exercise of intuitive skill and genius beyond that possessed and exercised by those well skilled in the practice of the art, and the discovery is of something new and useful, invention should be recognized. Western Electric Co. v. North Electric Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 79, 67 C. C. A. 553.

While the skull-cracking or metal-breaking art and the art of transporting finished iron products are somewhat analogous, the combination of a skull or metal cracking weight with a lifting magnet and a traveling crane is new, and the inventor of a device involving such a combination is entitled to a patent, where it appears that it is of great practical utility, and that, although there are patents from ten to twenty-three years old covering the use of magnets for lifting articles and lifting cranes for metal-breaking devices, no one ever combined the two. In re Eastwood, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 291.

Prior device suggestive of new combination. — A new combination of old elements is entitled to the protection of a patent, where it produces a new and useful result, although each old element as seen in a prior device may have been suggestive of the use which could be made of it in the new. Steiner, etc., Hardware Co. v. Tabor Sash Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 831.

If ordinary mechanical skill is adequate to make the selection of elements from machines in the prior art and their union or combination in a new machine, operating in the old way and accomplishing the same result, although it may be an improved result, and no new idea is involved in the process, there is no patentable invention, however great the improvement. American Laundry Machinery Mfg. Co. v. Troy Laundry Machinery Co., (1909) 171 Fed. 870.

Patented device as element of combination. — A prior patent for a device does not defeat a patent for a combination of which such device forms one of the elements. Keystone Lantern Co. v. Spear, (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 595, reversing (1904) 131 Fed. 879.

New structure by readjustment of materials. — Invention may be found in a new structure, involving a readjustment of materials in use, by which new beneficial results are brought about. Edison Electric Light Co. v. Novelty Incandescent Lamp Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 977, reversing (1908) 161 Fed. 549.

New combination to accomplish old result. — One who selects and combines elements from the inventions of others into a new structure adapted to accomplish the old result is entitled to a patent only for his own particular form of adaptation. Loew Supply, etc., Co. v. Fred Miller Brewing Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 886.

New and useful result necessary. — While it may not be possible to formulate a definition of a patentable combination of old elements which will in all cases distinguish it from a mere aggregation of the results of the several elements of which it is constituted, it may be said that the effect produced by the combination must be new and useful, and not such as would suggest itself to the mind of an ordinarily intelligent person, experienced in the art to which the supposed invention relates. L. A. Thompson Scenic R. Co. v. Chestnut Hill Casino Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 127 Fed. 698, dismissing appeal (1902) 119 Fed. 359; Voightman v. Perkinson, (1904) 133 Fed. 934; Jacobs Mfg. Co. v. T. R. Almond Mfg. Co., (1909) 169 Fed. 134; Gaines v. Alabama Consol. Coal, etc., Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 303; Anton v. Grier Bros. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 796; Fellows v. Borden's Condensed Milk Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 1005, affirming (1910) 180 Fed. 421; In re Davenport, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 370; In re Hill, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 318.

The use of a ball and socket joint to accomplish the same purpose for which it had previously been used in the same art, in a different but old combination, does not constitute invention. Bradley v. Eccles, (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 521, reversing (1905) 138 Fed. 916.

Merely bringing together old devices in a combination in which each performs its old function, without producing any new result by reason of the combination, is not invention. Self-Sealing Can Co. v. Hocker, (1905) 136 Fed. 418; D'Arcy v. Staples, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 733; Yost Electric Mfg. Co. v. Perkins Electric Switch Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 511; Warner Instrument Co. v. Stewart, etc., Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 507.

There is no invention in selecting and putting together the most desirable parts of different machines in the same art, making a new machine in which each part operates in the same way as it did in the old, and effects the same result. Rich v. Baldwin, (1904) 133 Fed. 920, 66 C. C. A. 464.

The Thomson & Rice patent, No. 413,293, for a system of electrical distribution especially adapted to lighting purposes, and having for its objects to run lamps or other translating devices in series and in multiple on one and the same system, and from one and the same source of supply, embodies a combination or aggregation of elements, all of which were old, and each of which performs only its old function, and in view of the prior art, and especially of the Edison municipal system, is void for lack of patentable invention. Salem Electric Co. v. Thomson-Houston Electric Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 974, reversing (1905) 140 Fed. 445.

The coupling, without modification, of a motor that will run any kind of a machine to a machine that will run with any kind of a motor, is not patentable invention. National Regulator Co. v. Powers Regulator Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 460, reversing (1907) 152 Fed. 984.

The Morrow patent, No. 504,401, for an armature for dynamo electric machines, claim 2, which covers an armature core comprising layers of segmental laminæ dovetailed to an internal supporting shell, in which the seg-held that that was not sufficient to show actual reduction to practice. Paul v. Hess, (1905) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 462.

Construction of operative device as reduction to practice.—While the construction of a full-size operative device may sometimes be regarded as reduction to practice, although it has been called a model, such a model, so called, must be quite different from the ordinary model, which, while it may show the invention, is incapable of operation to effect its purposes. Hammond v. Basch, (1905) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 469.

Article made experimentally of inferior material.—A lamp socket made of wood, which was successfully operated for the purpose for which it was constructed, is a reduction to practice, although the commercial article would be made of metal, or of some other substance more durable than wood; and it is immaterial that it was, during the interference proceeding, called a "model." Norden v. Spaulding, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 286.

Want of perfect accuracy in voting machine.—The primary and most essential requisite of a voting machine being that of unfailing accuracy, the building of such a machine that fails to register as often as once in one hundred times cannot be regarded as a successful reduction to practice, especially where it is not apparent that it was not due to some fundamental fault of the machine rather than to crude workmanship. McKenzie v. Cummings, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 137.

The comparative crudeness of an original construction, as contrasted with subsequent machines, is no ground for the refusal of the merit of operative success. Smith v. Brooks, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 75.

Abandoned experiment.—Where one of the parties, in an interference case, prior to the date of conception by his adversary, constructed a device of the nature of the issue, but threw it in the scrap heap, and afterwards made a larger device of the same kind, which he also discarded; and, although there was great demand for some such device, he did nothing to utilize his alleged conception, and only on reading the patent issued to his adversary did he recall having made some such device some years before; and thereupon, ten months after the issue of his rival's patent, he filed his application—his contrivance will be regarded as merely an unsuccessful, abandoned experiment. Lemp v. Mudge, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 282.

Long delay in making use of an invention claimed to have been reduced to practice, or in applying for a patent, tends to show that the alleged reduction to practice was nothing more than an unsatisfactory or abandoned experiment, especially where, in the meantime, the claimant has been engaged in prosecuting similar inventions. Paul v. Hess, (1905) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 462.

Prior state of art.—Where the field of invention has been narrowed by many prior devices in the same art, a patent for a new combination must be narrowly construed, and limited to the precise structure shown. Ken- ney Mfg. Co. v. J. L. Mott Iron Works, (1905) 137 Fed. 431.

That a structure is within the terms of a patent does not establish infringement, but the scope of the patent must be determined from the state of the prior art. Page Mach. Co. v. Dow, (1908) 166 Fed. 473.

Where the question of invention is left to the jury in an action for infringement of a patent, no evidence tending to show the true state of the art at the date of the claimed invention should be excluded. Holt Mfg. Co. v. Best Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 409.

In view of the state of the art of dyeing as disclosed by three patents referred to, it was held that applicants for a patent for a process of producing printed anilin-black designs on vegetable textile fabrics had done nothing more than to apply to two of the patented processes of printing the selection of a combination of the ingredients disclosed in the other patent, and that this did not amount to invention. In re Chase, (1908) 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 154.

Utility as evidence of invention.—Where the utility of a machine which, by the combination of elements, accomplishes a new result, is not questioned, the invention is entitled to a much greater liberality of treatment than as if it dealt merely in specific improvements on an old machine. Lecroix v. Tyberg, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 586.

Invention shown by new combination.—Except in inventions of the most primary character new mechanical forms and appliances are not to be looked for, and there may be invention in making use of those which are known in the same or kindred arts by so adapting and combining them as to bring about new or improved results. Cramer v. 1900 Washer Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 296.

Reduction of cost.—A machine need not produce an original result, but, if the new arrangement lessens the cost, there is evidence of invention. National Tube Co. v. Aiken, (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 254, affirming (1907) 157 Fed. 691.

Increasing capacity of machine.—National Tube Co. v. Aiken, (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 254, affirming (1907) 157 Fed. 691.

Article made more attractive and salable.—Obtaining a more attractive exterior, or securing a more salable article, does not prove originality of conception. In re Hoey, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 416.

New application of old device to old art.—The transfer of an old device to a new use in a different art may involve invention. Hale, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Oneonta, etc., R. Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 514.

Obtaining successful result.—The fact that an invention constitutes an important and desirable improvement in an art, in the development of which many inventors have participated without making such improvement, affords persuasive evidence of patentability. Brill v. North Jersey St. R. Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 778; Revere Rubber Co. v. Consolidated Hoof Pad Co., (1905) 138 Fed. 899; American Caramel Co. v. Mills, (1906) 149 Fed. 743, 79 C. C. A. 449, reversing (1905) 138 Fed. 142;

O'Rourke Engineering Constr. Co. v. McMullen, (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 933, reversing (1907) 150 Fed. 338; Electric Controller, etc., Co. v. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 83.

Where the question of invention is still left in doubt after the application of the usual negative tests to establish want of invention, such doubt may be resolved in favor of the patent by evidence of successful results where others had tried and failed, especially where such success is in both operative and commercial results. American Graphophone Co. v. Universal Talking Mach. Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 595, reversing (1906) 145 Fed. 636, 643; Novelty Glass Mfg. Co. v. Brookfield, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 946, affirming (1908) 170 Fed. 830.

A machine for rolling prismatic glass previously made by molding, which contains the same elements and operates in precisely the same manner as prior machines for rolling corrugated glass, is not given patentability by the fact that it has been a commercial success and that its use has resulted in a better and cheaper product, where the only reason prism glass was not before so made was the general, but erroneous, belief among glass manufacturers that it would be worthless because it could neither be cut nor properly annealed. Daylight Glass Mfg. Co. v. American Prismatic Light Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 454.

The conversion of an abandoned machine, which was a failure, into one which is operative and successful, by the introduction of new and ingenious features, however simple, constitutes invention, which may be protected by a patent. United Shirt, etc., Co. v. Beattie, (1907) 149 Fed. 736, 79 C. C. A. 442, affirming (1905) 138 Fed. 136.

The Bossert patent, No. 571,297, is for an improvement in electric wall boxes which are constructed with holes already made in the bottom and sides so as to accommodate the entrance of the conduits at any desired point; the holes being closed, however, in such manner that the workmen wiring the house can open such as are required without special tools, leaving the rest of the box imperforate. This had previously been done in various ways, as by partially cutting out the holes, leaving uncut connections, by weakening the part so it could be knocked out, or by covering the holes with stiff paper or fitting them with stoppers. The improvement of the patent consisted in cutting the holes with an ordinary punching die and forcing the cut-out portion back as a plug, where it is held by frictional contact, but may be readily punched out. Held that, although the punching process had been used for various other purposes, it had never before been applied to such boxes, and that, in view of the superior results attained by such construction, the improvement involved invention. Bossert Electric Constr. Co. v. Pratt Chuck Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 385.

General and extensive use.—The fact that a patented device has come into general use because it can be made more cheaply than those previously in use is not sufficient to establish invention, unless in a limited class of cases, where that is otherwise doubtful. General Electric Co. v. Yost Electric Mfg. Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 874; Voightmann v. Weis, etc., Cornice Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 298.

The fact that the product of a machine made by a new combination of old elements goes into general use and displaces others is some evidence, of greater or less weight, that the new combination involved invention. Stafford v. Morris, (1908) 161 Fed. 113.

Apart from the presumption of novelty arising from the grant of a patent, where it is shown that the patented device has gone into general use and has superseded prior devices having the same purpose, it is sufficient evidence of invention in a doubtful case. Morton v. Llewellyn, (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 693; Boss Mfg. Co. v. Thomas, (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 811; In re Heinz, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 187.

The commercial success of a patented article can only be considered on the issue of invention, where such issue is in serious doubt. Diamond Rubber Co. v. Consolidated Rubber Tire Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 428, 31 S. Ct. 444, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 527, affirming (1908) 162 Fed. 892, 89 C. C. A. 582; American Salesbook Co. v. Carter-Crume Co., (1903) 125 Fed. 499; Beckwith v. Malleable Iron Range Co., (1910) 174 Fed. 1001.

The utility, public acceptance, or magnitude of sales of a patented article can only be considered on the question of invention, when such question is otherwise doubtful. Voightmann v. Weis, etc., Cornice Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 848, 78 C. C. A. 538, affirming (1904) 133 Fed. 298.

The fact that a machine has met with instant favor and large sales may be sufficient to determine patentability in case of doubt thereof; but it cannot confer patentability on an unpatentable device. In re Thurston, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 315.

Ability of mechanics.—Simply raising a doubt as to whether a skilled mechanic, conversant with the art involved, would not have seen the means adopted in a patented device, does not rebut the presumption of invention arising from the grant of the patent. National Malleable Casting Co. v. American Steel Foundries, (1910) 182 Fed. 626.

Rebutting presumption of invention.—Where there is an actual and admitted improvement in a combination of old elements, and its utility is shown in a marked degree, there should be controlling reasons to rebut the presumption that there is a sufficiency of invention to support a patent. Imperial Bottle Cap, etc., Co. v. Crown Cork, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 312, reversing (1903) 123 Fed. 669.

The fact that an expert, with a patent before him, might be able to build up the structure covered thereby, by selecting and adapting appliances theretofore known, does not overcome the presumption of invention arising from the granting of the patent, where neither the same combination in its entirety nor the same mode of operation had previously been described or known. McMichael, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Ruth, (1904) 128 Fed. 706,

63 C. C. A. 304, reversing (1903) 123 Fed. 888.

The fact that an invention was first operated by another than the patentee does not rebut the presumption of invention by him, arising from the granting of the patent, where both persons were present at the time of such operation and each claims to have been the originator of the experiment from which the invention sprang. National Electric Signaling Co. v. De Forest Wireless Tel. Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 449.

Recognition of patent by public as evidence of invention. — Elliott v. Youngstown Car Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 345, reversing (1909) 173 Fed. 315.

IV. UTILITY.

Utility essential to patentability. — In re Klemm, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 186.

Test of utility. — It is sufficient to sustain a patent for a valve against the objection of inoperativeness if the combination of parts shown forms a workable device when attached to a structure for which it was evidently intended. Kenney Mfg. Co. v. J. L. Mott Iron Works, (1905) 137 Fed. 431.

Demonstration of utility. — Where new devices are of an old type, and the novelty consists in specific construction, it may be that practical utility may be determined without use under conditions of industry; but, where the device is of a new type, there is need for demonstration of utility under the conditions of practical operation. Paul v. Hess, (1905) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 462.

Combination producing new result. — A new combination of two old elements, so as to make a new article, is patentable only when it results in producing a new and useful article, within the meaning of the patent law. In re Klemm, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 186.

Improved mechanism. — An improvement in mechanism for sawing stone, by which the saw is moved against the stone, which remains at rest during the operation instead of being fed to the saw, as in machines of the prior art, discloses patentable utility. Diamond Stone Sawing Mach. Co. v. Brown, (1904) 130 Fed. 896.

Capacity to produce result. — A patent for a device which states that a part is preferably made of a stated material is not rendered invalid by the fact that when such part is made of a certain other material the device is inoperative. Kirchberger v. American Acetylene Burner Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 764, affirmed (C. C. A. 1904) 128 Fed. 599.

Better than other inventions. — A patented invention cannot be held in an infringement case to be patentable because commercially better than prior devices, especially in the absence of evidence to show that this has been recognized by the commercial world, or that the patented device has supplanted the prior device, or that it has gained any recognized position. Computing Scale Co. v. Automatic Scale Co., (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.)

238, affirmed (1907) 204 U. S. 608, 27 S. Ct. 307, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 645.

Utility as evidence of invention. — The utility of a device is not in itself evidence of patentable invention, although it is entitled to weight when that question is doubtful. Union Biscuit Co. v. Peters, (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 601, reversing 120 Fed. 679.

Improving conditions of labor. — The contribution to an important industry of a device that is labor saving and effective, and relieves to a degree work under fierce heat conditions, is meritorious in the patent system, and rises to the plane of the humane. J. L. Mott Iron Works v. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 135.

Extensive sale or use. — On the question of the utility of a patented device or process, the fact that it was the first to achieve practical and commercial success is of weight. Burdon Wire, etc., Co. v. Williams, (1904) 128 Fed. 927.

The commercial success of a patented article can only be considered on the issue of invention, where such issue is in serious doubt. American Salesbook Co. v. Carter-Crume Co., (1903) 125 Fed. 499.

Development of art. — The fact that an invention constitutes an important and desirable improvement in an art, in the development of which many inventors have participated without making such improvement, affords persuasive evidence of patentability. Brill v. North Jersey St. R. Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 778.

Only slight evidence of utility required. — It requires only slight evidence of successful operation to avoid the defense of inoperativeness of a patented device. Thayer v. Wold, (1906) 142 Fed. 776, affirmed (C. C. A.) 148 Fed. 227.

Presumption as to operativeness of device. — It is a reasonable presumption, especially when corroborated by other evidence, that a person skilled in the manufacture of a product to the making of which his invention relates, before he filed an application for a process, made experiments to ascertain whether the desired results could be obtained. Saunders v. Miller, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 456.

Testing utility before applying for patent. — Caution in sufficiently testing the utility of an invention and establishing the value of a discovery before rushing into the Patent Office is to be commended rather than condemned. Saunders v. Miller, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 456.

Litigation as evidence of utility. — The utility of a patented device may be attested by the litigation over it. Diamond Rubber Co. v. Consolidated Rubber Tire Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 428, 31 S. Ct. 444, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 527, affirming (1908) 162 Fed. 892, 89 C. C. A. 582.

V. NOVELTY AND ANTICIPATION.

Novelty necessary. — In re Klemm, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 186.

A claim to a printing press is unpatentable, where it amounts to a mere duplication of what is shown in the prior art and involves the production of no new result, save, perhaps, greater convenience. In re Scott, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 307.

Pioneer patent.—A pioneer patent is one which first discloses means to accomplish a certain result, and the term does not apply to a patent for new means to accomplish a result already attained in another way, although they may be an improvement on the old way. National Dump Car Co. v. Ralston Steel Car Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 393.

Domestic and foreign patents.—A United States patent will not be defeated by a prior foreign patent, unless it describes or shows the patented invention in such full, clear, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art to practice it without the necessity of experimenting. Valvona v. D'Adamo, (1905) 135 Fed. 544.

Accidental production.—Anticipation is not avoided by the fact that the inventor of the anticipatory device, which he reduced to practice, did not realize its value, and so changed it before applying for a patent that the patented structure was not an anticipation. Merrimac Mattress Mfg. Co. v. Feldman, (1904) 133 Fed. 64.

Prior knowledge and use which will anticipate a later patent is not to be made out by a chance combination made without appreciation of the principle on which the patent is based. Western Tube Co. v. Rainear, (1907) 156 Fed. 49.

Although a new function appears in a machine made under a patent, if it was accidental, unrecognized by the patentee, and no disclosure thereof made to the public, it is not an anticipation of a subsequent patent. Hillard v. Fisher Book Typewriter Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 439, affirming (1907) 151 Fed. 34.

The fact that the method of a process patent had been previously used by another by chance, and without appreciating its merit or value, does not invalidate the patent. Karfoll v. Rothner, (1908) 165 Fed. 923.

A merely accidental occurrence, realizing the structure of a patent, not only not appreciated, but made the ground of rejection as an imperfection, is not an anticipation. Edison Electric Light Co. v. Novelty Incandescent Lamp Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 977, reversing (1908) 161 Fed. 549.

The mere accidental employment of a feature or element of a device, where its real value, for a purpose for which it is afterward put in use by another, is not recognized at the time of such accidental use, cannot be invoked to anticipate a patent for the later device. Doble v. Pelton Water Wheel Co., (1910) 186 Fed. 526.

Accidental discovery in working patented process.—An expert cannot take a process patent, which has never been applied industrially, and work the process in his laboratory, and discover therefrom something which is not disclosed on the face of the patent, and then transfer that experience back to the time of the patent, and make it a part of the prior art, for the purpose of defeating a subsequent patent for a meritorious invention. Naylor v. Alsop Process Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 911.

Unintended feature.—A patent otherwise valid is not void for anticipation because a prior patent covers a device which might be so constructed as to be capable of the same use as that of the later patent, where the prior patent gives no sign that such use was contemplated, and no specific directions for such construction. Canda v. Michigan Malleable Iron Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 124 Fed. 486, modifying (1902) 123 Fed. 95.

The accidental occurrence of an element or feature of a patented combination in prior structures, where its character and function as subsequently used were not recognized, does not constitute an anticipation. Beckwith v. Malleable Iron Range Co., (1910) 174 Fed. 1001.

Lost or forgotten invention.—An invention which has been perfected by the construction of a machine, which was used in practical work for a number of years by the inventor and is still in his possession, and of which he had photographs taken, which he still preserves, does not lose its effect as an anticipation of a subsequent patent to another for substantially the same machine as one which has been finally abandoned and forgotten, although the inventor failed to realize the full value of the invention and after a time discontinued the use of the machine. Buser v. Novelty Tufting Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 478.

Accessible to public.—A prior use, in order to negative novelty in a later patented device, must be something more than an accidental or casual one, and must be so far understood and practiced or persisted in as to contribute to the sum of human knowledge and be accessible to the public, becoming an established fact in the art. Anthracite Separator Co. v. Pollock, (1909) 175 Fed. 108.

Application as anticipation.—An application for a patent filed prior to a patent in suit can have weight as an anticipation only if there has been some actual use of the invention, so that there are elements of publicity; the application itself not being sufficient to make the invention a part of the prior art. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Ohio Brass Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 542.

Filing model as anticipation.—While a model filed in the Patent Office will not, in itself, amount to an anticipation which will invalidate a subsequent patent to another, the word "model" as so used must be understood in its ordinary sense as meaning merely a pattern or representation, and not as meaning the actual machine or device of the invention. American Writing Mach. Co. v. Wagner Typewriter Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 576, affirming (1905) 138 Fed. 108.

Sales in regular course of business.—Where the inventor of a cigar pocket for more than two years before applying for a patent therefor made and sold such pockets in the regular course of his business, such articles were in "public use" and "on sale," although they were not kept by him in stock, but were made up only on orders received; it being the custom of the trade to take such orders by sample. Dittgen v. Racine Paper Goods Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 394. See also McCreery Engineering Co. v. Massachusetts Fan Co., (1911) 186 Fed. 846.

Concealed invention.—Where a junior applicant concealed his invention for a short time, but soon gave it to the public in the way of the result of its operation, and showed it to his opponent early in the year following its reduction to practice by construction of an operative machine, such conduct is inconsistent with the theory of suppression of the invention, which will deprive him of his rights. Meyer v. Sarfert, (1902) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 26.

Knowledge of inventor.—Inventors must be charged with knowledge of devices disclosed in former patents, whether or not they have actual knowledge of such patents. Millett v. Allen, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 70.

A theory or mental conception of a new device is not "invention" within the patent law, and the date of an invention cannot be carried back of the time when it was embodied in a model or drawing, or some concrete form would enable those skilled in the art to construct the device. Corrington v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 711, reversing (1909) 173 Fed. 69.

Reduction to practice.—In contemplation of law an invention does not exist until the inventor's ideas have been reduced to practical form, either as the basis for a patent or an anticipation of another's invention. American Graphophone Co. v. Leeds, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 327; Gallagher v. Hien, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 77; Ocuppaugh v. Norton, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 90.

The decisions involving the question of reduction to practice may be divided into three general classes, namely: (1) Those including devices so simple and of such obvious efficacy that a complete construction of one of a size and form intended for and capable of practical use is held sufficient without test in actual use. (2) Those where a machine embodying every essential element of the invention, having been tested and its practical utility for the intended purpose demonstrated to reasonable satisfaction, has been held to have been reduced to practice notwithstanding it may not be a mechanically perfect machine. (3) Those where the machine is of such a character that the particular use for which it is intended must be given special consideration and requires satisfactory operation in the actual execution of the object. In cases within the second and third classes, long delay in putting the machine in actual use for the intended purpose is a potent circumstance in determining whether the test was successful, or only an abandoned experiment. Sydemann v. Thoma, (1909) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 362.

Diligence in reduction to practice.—The diligence required of an inventor is diligence rather in the reduction of his invention to practice, than in application to the Patent Office, or in manufacturing his device for public use. Rolfe v. Hoffman, (1905) 26

App. Cas. (D. C.) 336; Laas v. Scott, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 354.

There is no general rule as to what constitutes due diligence in reducing to practice, that being a question to be determined by all the facts and surrounding circumstances in the particular case. O'Connell v. Schmidt, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 77.

By due diligence in reduction to practice is meant reasonable diligence; and where a party to an interference has taken eleven months to accomplish a reduction to practice he cannot be heard to say that his adversary, who has taken only eight months, is guilty of laches. Fowler v. McBerty, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 41, 46.

Where one of the parties to an interference is the first to conceive the invention, but later than his rival in its reduction to practice, the controversy between them is reduced to the question of diligence on the part of the former. Liberman v. Williams, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 223.

First reducer to practice entitled to patent.

—In the sense of the patent statute, he is the first inventor who by his own thought makes an article or material, and first perfects and adapts his discovery to actual use, although some one may have previously made a similar article without putting it to practical use or giving his discovery to the public in any way. Warren Bros. Co. v. Owosso, (C. C. A. 1909) 166 Fed. 309.

The first to reduce an invention to practice, as shown by an actual construction produced in court, is usually held to be the inventor, as against another who merely says he had previously conceived the invention. Merrimac Mattress Mfg. Co. v. Feldman, (1904) 133 Fed. 64.

An inventor, who, although the first to conceive, is the last to reduce to practice, and who is not exercising diligence when his opponents enter the field, is not entitled to priority. Laas v. Scott, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 354.

Where the proof in an interference case showed that the senior party had the invention in controversy, and had reduced it to practice by the construction and operation of the device in December, 1896, or in the early part of 1897, while the junior party's reduction to practice was not shown to have taken place until October, 1897, priority of invention was properly awarded to the senior party. Shaffer v. Dolan, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 79.

A junior applicant in an interference case, who was the first to conceive and make disclosures of the invention, but the last to constructively reduce it to practice by filing his application, about five years after conception, and more than four years after the application of the senior party, held to be lacking in diligence and not entitled to an award of priority of invention. Paul v. Johnson, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 187.

What constitutes reduction to practice generally.—It is essential that a device, to constitute reduction to practice, must show that the work of the inventor is finished, physically as well as mentally. Nothing must be left to the inventive genius of the public. Sydean v. Thoma, (1909) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 362.

Insufficiently tested machine as reduction to practice.—Where one of the parties to an interference involving the ejecting mechanism of a match machine was not a match manufacturer, but a manufacturer of machines, his failure to test his device with real matches, instead of dummy matches, and his failure to use his machine commercially, could not be taken as discrediting his claim that the machine was successfully reduced to practice. Wyman v. Donnelly, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 81.

Construction of operative machine as reduction to practice.—A full-sized operative structure fit for commercial use, except for the ornamentation and polish, held, in an interference case, to be a full and complete reduction to practice for the purpose of displaying the invention. Hope v. Voight, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 22.

Reduction to practice not proved by either party.—Where neither party to an interference proves actual reduction of the invention to practice, but the junior party was the first to conceive and made disclosure of it to the senior before the latter's application was filed, it was held that the junior party was entitled to an award of priority of invention. Greenwood v. Dover, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 251.

Application as reduction to practice.—When an application for a patent has been allowed and then abandoned, and subsequently or before the forfeiture has been completed another application is filed in which substantially the same invention is described and claimed, the applicant is entitled, in an interference case, to the filing date of his first application as that of his constructive reduction to practice. Lotterhand v. Hanson, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 372.

Mere accidental practice does not constitute reduction to practice. Thompson v. Smith, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 284.

Reduction to practice by agent.—Where a typewriter manufacturing company, after declining to purchase an invention and returning a model of the device to the inventor, adapted the invention to one of its typewriters, and constructed a machine embodying it, and then purchased the invention, and procured an assignment of it, the company cannot be said to have been the agent of the inventor in reducing the invention to practice, so as to make such reduction inure to his benefit, in an interference between him and another inventor of the same device. Howell v. Hess, (1907) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 194.

The mere making of a model of a device will not amount to a reduction to practice of the invention embodied in it, where the model represents a device intended to be used as a part of a complicated machine, and the practical usefulness of which depends on a test in that machine. Howell v. Hess, (1907) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 194.

Unless an invention belongs to that class of simple inventions which require no other proof of their practicability than the construction of a model, the mere construction of a model does not constitute a reduction to practice, even if such model is clearly sufficient to disclose the invention, and to enable those skilled in the art to understand it thoroughly. O'Connell v. Schmidt, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 77.

Requirements of operative device.—In determining whether a device constitutes a reduction to practice, its size is not necessarily controlling, nor is mechanical perfection, or that there are "possibilities of greater excellence in shape, location, arrangement, material, or adjustment," essential; but it is essential that the device should show that the work of the inventor is finished physically as well as mentally, and nothing left for the inventive genius of the public. Gallagher v. Hien, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 77.

To constitute a reduction to practice, the device constructed must be fashioned out of a material capable of actual use for the intended purpose. Gilman v. Hinson, (1906) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 409.

In order to constitute reduction to practice, it is not necessary that a device should have been made of a material which would be used when it should be placed on the market; nor is it necessary that it should have been mechanically perfect, so long as it was an operative device, and was used as such, and showed that the work of the inventor was complete. Lowrie v. Taylor, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 522.

Necessity for actual tests.—Where it appears that an invention is a radical departure from previous methods, in order to establish the fact of reduction to practice, thorough tests are necessary. Gallagher v. Hien, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 77.

In order that a device may be a reduction to practice, it is necessary in every case, except that of a very simple device, that it be tested. A scale of the pendulum pattern is a device requiring a test to show its accuracy. Pool v. Dunn, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 132.

Mere experiments not reduction to practice.—It is not necessary, in order to constitute reduction to practice, that actual tests of the invention be made in order to complete the inventive act; but the device relied on must, however, if it has not been worked, clearly be capable of work, and not have been a mere experiment. Gallagher v. Hien, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 77; Ocuppaugh v. Norton, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 90; Bourn v. Hill, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 291.

Experimental operation.—In an interference case, where there were tests of the device embodying the invention by men of experience in the particular art to which the invention related, at a place equipped with everything necessary to enable continued and complete tests to be made, it was held that there had been a reduction to practice, in that the test showed the work of the invention to be complete, though the first device so made was not a commercial article. An-draws v. Nilson, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 451.

In order to reduce to practice a device for protecting low-tension telephone circuits from the injurious effects of unduly strong currents, it is sufficient to operate the device with currents such as would prevail in telephone circuits if the latter became crossed with wires carrying more current than is safe, and it is not necessary actually to operate it in a telephone circuit. Rolfe v. Hoffman, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 336.

Necessity of complete machine.—Where prior patents, or the machines constructed under them, embody the principle covered by a later patent, and sufficiently disclose the invention claimed therein, they are not deprived of their effect as anticipations by the mere fact that such machines are not capable of successful practical working, because of objections as to minor matters of detail in construction. Van Epps v. United Box Board, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 869, reversing (1905) 137 Fed. 418.

In the case of simple devices, it is not essential that actual tests of the invention be made in order to constitute a reduction to practice. Rolfe v. Hoffman, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 336.

An improvement in mantles for incandescent lights of the inverted type, held not so simple or of such obvious efficacy that the making of one of the required description constituted an actual reduction to practice without its test on the inverted lamp then in use. Daggett v. Kaufmann, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 450.

Whether the making of a model of a snap hook, so constructed that it may be attached to a chain without the necessity of welding the chain, constitutes reduction to practice, in view of the simplicity of the device, the invention is so simple that the construction of a model containing all the elements of the invention will amount to a demonstration of utility. Schartow v. Schleicher, (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 347.

Acts constituting reduction to practice.—The same act or set of acts may or may not constitute a reduction to practice, modified, as they may be, by the special circumstances of the particular case. Gallagher v. Hien, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 77; Rolfe v. Hoffman, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 336; Andrews v. Nilson, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 451; Sydean v. Thoma, (1909) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 362.

Delay in filing application as negating reduction to practice.—A delay of two years and a half in filing an application for a patent is not sufficient to destroy the weight of proof of an actual reduction to practice, especially where it appears that drawings showing substantially the same construction as the original device were sent to the applicant's attorneys more than a year before the filing of the application, and before any one else had entered the field. Seeberger v. Russel, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 344. See also Ocuppaugh v. Norton, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 50.

Evidence of reduction to practice.—Where one of the parties to an interference, and a witness skilled in the art, testified that such party's machine was successfully operated in 1896, and the machine in its present condition, although apparently dismantled by the removal of parts, supports their testimony, it will be regarded as a reduction to practice. Smith v. Brooks, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 75.

Where it appears, in an interference case, that the machine claimed as a reduction to practice by one of the parties was submitted by him to his employers, but they adopted another machine, and, this proving unsatisfactory, it was withdrawn and still another machine put on the market, it was held that the circumstances pointed to the conclusion that the machine did not represent a complete and practical invention. Paul v. Hess, (1905) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 462.

Evidence of reduction to practice must embrace all the elements of the issue, leaving nothing to inference merely. Robinson v. Seelinger, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 237.

While the destruction or dismantling of a first construction and the loss of some of its parts or their use in making other machines are sometimes important in determining the question of reduction to practice, they are only important when depending on other circumstances tending to cast doubt on claims of the earlier reduction, notably that of long and unreasonable delay in the exploitation of the invention. Funk v. Whitely, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 313.

Where the inventor of an escalator and auxiliary traveling platform, and two witnesses who show themselves thoroughly familiar with its construction, testify fully as to the construction and operation of the device, and state that they used it a number of times and found it successful, a reduction to practice is sufficiently proved, and it is unnecessary that the facts on which they base their conclusion as to the successful working of the device should appear on the record. Seeberger v. Russel, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 344.

Although the fact that, after an alleged successful operation of a device, the device was taken apart and one element never used again, is sufficient to warrant an inference that the test was not successful, yet, when a reasonable and satisfactory explanation of such fact is given, such an inference is unwarranted. Seeberger v. Russel, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 344.

Necessity of prior use.—In determining the question of identity of the inventive idea involved in two patents, it is not a sufficient answer to say of an alleged anticipation that it was a mere paper patent, and that the device had never been operative or commercially successful, because prior existing conditions may not have stimulated full development. Ideal Stopper Co. v. Crown Cork, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 131 Fed. 244, affirming (1903) 123 Fed. 666.

To constitute an anticipation by an unpatented device, it is not necessary that it should have come into general use, but it is sufficient if it was in actual and practical use by a number of persons. Daniel v. Restein, (1904) 131 Fed. 469.

A horse collar, made from a casing cut from a single piece of material folded and stitched in a peculiar manner, is one of those devices so simple in their purpose and of an efficacy so obvious that the making of one of a size and form intended for and available for practical use is a sufficient reduction to practice without actual use or test; and therefore the making of such a collar, exhibiting it to a number of persons, and putting it on sale, without testing it on the neck of a harnessed animal, is a reduction to practice of the invention. Couch v. Barnett, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 446.

What constitutes a prior use.—The rules of law as to what constitutes a prior use and what constitutes a reduction to practice are the same. Gilman v. Hinson, (1906) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 409.

Abandonment of use of patented machine.—A machine fully embodying a device subsequently patented by another does not lose its effect as an anticipation because its use was abandoned solely for the reason that the product in making which it was employed was not successful where it is shown that the machine worked successfully and the maker did not abandon the invention embodied therein. United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Greenman, (1906) 145 Fed. 538.

The subsequent abandonment of the use of the machine does not render it an abandoned experiment, nor lessen its effect as an anticipation which will invalidate a subsequent patent to another for substantially the same machine. Buser v. Novelty Tufting Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 478.

Mere invention without use or publication.—It is not enough to defeat a patent that some one other than the patentee had conceived the invention before he did, or had even perfected it, so long as it had not been in public use, or described in some patent or publication, if the patentee was an original and independent inventor. Lincoln Iron Works v. W. H. McWhirter Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 967, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 860.

One who invents and constructs a machine, but permits it to slumber, and neither applies for a patent nor makes any public use of it, cannot resort to such invention as an anticipation of a subsequent patent obtained by another. Welsbach Light Co. v. Cohn, (1910) 181 Fed. 122.

Mere experimental device.—Gallagher v. Hien, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 77.

Complete invention subsequently abandoned.—Where an unpatented mechanical invention was reduced to practice by the construction and use of the device, and its exhibition by the inventor to others, it cannot be abandoned so as to change its effect as an anticipation of a device subsequently patented by another. Merrimac Mattress Mfg. Co. v. Feldman, (1904) 133 Fed. 64.

Abandoned experiments.—Oral testimony of prior invention and use, not only unsupported by any writing or exhibits, but also contradicted on the question of priority of date, and which, at best, shows only an unsuccessful and abandoned experiment, is insufficient to defeat a patent. Arrott v. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 457.

Where the idea of a machine has been conceived, and the conception carried into effect by the construction of the machine, which is used, or is capable of being used, for the purpose for which it was designed, it is no longer an experiment, but an invention; and the subsequent abandonment of the use of the machine does not render it an abandoned experiment, nor lessen its effect as an anticipation which will invalidate a subsequent patent to another for substantially the same machine. Buser v. Novelty Tufting Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 478.

A delay of two years and eight months after an alleged reduction to practice raises a strong presumption that what was done amounted to a mere abandoned experiment, but such presumption may be overcome by satisfactory proof that the machine was successfully operated. Smith v. Brooks, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 75.

Long delay in making use of an invention claimed to have been reduced to practice, or in applying for a patent, is a potent circumstance tending to show that the alleged reduction to practice was nothing more than an unsatisfactory or abandoned experiment; and this is specially the case where, in the meantime, the inventor has been engaged in the prosecution of similar inventions. Gilman v. Hinson, (1906) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 409.

Abandonment a question of intention.—Abandonment of an invention in its experimental stage is a question of intention, and may be shown by conduct even within the two years allowed by the statute; the use of an invention by the inventor for the purpose of testing its utility, which is not a public use, may continue indefinitely. Warren Bros. Co. v. Owosso, (C. C. A. 1909) 166 Fed. 309.

Rejection of application as showing abandoned experiment.—While a rejected application for a patent is not a bar to a subsequent patent to another for the same device, the fact of such rejection does not of itself characterize the invention as an abandoned experiment, and if it, in fact, had passed beyond the experimental stage and was in practical and successful use, it cannot thereafter be appropriated and patented by another. Miller v. Walker Patent Pivoted Bin Co., (1905) 138 Fed. 919.

Application for patent as negating abandoned experiment.—Notwithstanding that A, having embodied his invention in a machine whose use was soon abandoned, later failed to describe it in the patent granted him, so that the latter was inoperative, yet the attempt to obtain the patent is evidence that A's invention was not an abandoned experiment. United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Greenman, (1906) 145 Fed. 538.

Prior unpatented device by same inventor.—The unpatented device of the same inventor cannot be regarded as part of the prior art, so as to compel him to face it as an anticipation, or prevent him from drawing on it in the development of his ideas, where it has not been relinquished by two years' prior use or sale. Eck v. Kutz, (1904) 132 Fed. 758.

Experiments in analogous arts.—The experiments made by Sir Humphry Davy in 1807, in which he decomposed small pieces of potash or soda rendered conductive by moisture, by using an electric current to effect both fusion and decomposition, while interesting as experiments, cannot be held an anticipation of the Bradley process for the reduction of aluminium ores, in view of the facts that the materials operated upon were wholly different, and that for seventy-five years, with such experiments before them, chemists and electricians were unable to make the possibilities suggested thereby practically available for the separation of aluminium from its ores. Moreover, attempts of Davy himself to separate alumina by means similar to those employed with soda and potash were unsuccessful. Electric Smelting, etc., Co. v. Pittsburgh Reduction Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 926, modifying (1901) 111 Fed. 742.

Patented unsuccessful device.—The defense of anticipation is not made out where the alleged anticipatory process or machine is inoperative or a failure, while that of the patent is operative and successful, even though the same devices or parts are used, but combined in a new way. Kirchberger v. American Acetylene Burner Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 764.

A patent for a device which fails to accomplish the desired end is not an anticipation of one for a device which successfully accomplishes it. Farmers' Mfg. Co. v. Spruks Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 127 Fed. 691, reversing (1902) 119 Fed. 594.

A patentee cannot be denied invention because of a prior patent for a device which never came into use, unless the idea on which his patent is predicated is so clearly set forth or suggested in the alleged anticipating patent that a mechanic with such patent before him could by the exercise of mere mechanical skill so modify proportions or change the mode of operation as to overcome the difficulties which excluded the prior device from commercial utility. Ideal Stopper Co. v. Crown Cork, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 131 Fed. 244, affirming (1903) 123 Fed. 666.

A patent for an improvement or manufacture which does not accomplish the objects and purpose of its conception and is impracticable does not anticipate a later patent upon a similar device capable of successful operation, unless the objections to the device of the prior patent relate merely to details of construction, or where it can be converted into a successful device by a mechanic of ordinary skill. Timolat v. Philadelphia Pneumatic Tool Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 257.

Similar device in analogous art.—There is such analogy in purpose and function between a machine for punching paper and one for punching metal that the former may properly be considered in the metal punching art. Conley v. King Bridge Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 79.

A patent for the first successful machine to accomplish a new and useful result is not anticipated nor limited by a mere paper patent granted many years before, although it disclosed the theory of the successful machine; such a patent having no place in the prior art. Kings County Raisin, etc., Co. v. U. S. Consolidated Seeded Raisin Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 59.

The application of an old device or process to a similar or analogous subject, with no change in the manner of applying it, and no result substantially distinct in its nature, is not patentable, even if the new form of result has not before been contemplated. Millett v. Allen, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 70.

Different devices in same art.—Patents covering systems of ventilation belong in the same art, although they may apply the art to different structures. Jones v. Cyphers, (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 753, affirming (1902) 115 Fed. 324.

A patent for an improvement in chairs having an adjustable back, and one for a similar device as an improvement in articles of furniture having a swinging member, are in the same art; only mechanical skill being required to adapt the device to the different articles. Cook v. Heywood Bros., etc., Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 755.

Device not brought into commercial use.—That the device of a patent never came into commercial use does not prevent such patent from being an anticipation of a later one, if it sufficiently embodies the elements and discloses the principle of operation of the latter or from narrowing its scope; nor is it material that the earlier patentee did not claim the particular device of the later patent as a part of his invention. E. L. Watrous Mfg. Co. v. American Hardware Mfg. Co., (1908) 161 Fed. 362.

Scope of alleged anticipating machine.—The scope of a machine, alleged to be an anticipation of a later patented machine, is co-extensive with the range of adjustment of parts which its construction intelligently provides for. Hillard v. Remington Typewriter Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 73, affirming (1908) 163 Fed. 281.

New contrivance for old purpose.—Patent No. 491,761 for a car seat having a reversible back of the "walk over" type, the essential feature of which is a pair of arms connecting the back to the seat frame, having the one end of the pair pivoted to the end of the frame near the centre thereof by pivots arranged in a horizontal plane, and having the other or upper end of the pair pivoted to the end of the back by pivots arranged in a plane substantially at right angles to the plane of the back, in such method of pivoting discloses novelty and patentable invention, and is entitled to a broad range of equivalents. Heyward Bros., etc., Co. v. Syracuse Rapid Transit R. Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 453.

A process for pasteurizing beer in bottles by moving the bottles through heated water, which is stationary, is not anticipated by a patent for a process involving the moving of heated water around stationary bottles containing the liquor to be pasteurized. In re Wagner, (1903) 22 App. Cas. (D. C.) 267.

New process for old purpose.—The fact that a large number of processes for the separation of aluminum from its ores were patented, in all of which external heat was used to fuse the ore, and maintain it in a fused state, some of the applications having been made after that of Bradley, on which patent No. 468,148 was issued, for a process, now exclusively used, in which both fusion and electrolysis were produced by the same electric current, is persuasive evidence that the Bradley process was not anticipated. Electric Smelting, etc., Co. v. Pittsburg Reduction Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 926, modifying (1901) 111 Fed. 742.

Old contrivance for new use.—The use of a composition as a waterproof lining for a reservoir did not anticipate a subsequent patent for a street pavement made of a similar composition. Warren Bros. Co. v. Owosso, (C. C. A. 1909) 166 Fed. 309.

To add teeth and a key with cogs to effect motion of the operating sleeve of a drill-chuck, instead of using the fingers or a spanner as previously done, does not involve patentable invention when such method of imparting motion was well known and used in many arts, although the device was one of utility. Jacobs Mfg. Co. v. T. R. Almond Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 935, affirming (1909) 169 Fed. 134.

A change in prior devices, in order to be patentable, must be made by transferring an old device to use in an entirely different and unrelated art. In re Thurston, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 315.

A form of proposed contract to be entered into with individuals desiring the benefit of burial insurance or guaranty, with blanks attached and readily separable therefrom, which, in addition to the ordinary draft for payment, show the several certificates required in order to provide, as far as practicable, against the perpetration of frauds on the insurer or guarantor, is unpatentable for want of novelty. In re Moeser, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 307.

An advertising device to be used in connection with a telephone, and automatically operated by the removal of the telephone receiver from its hook, is anticipated by a similar device used in connection with a cigar lighter, and operated in the same way by the lifting of the lighter from its hook, and by a device for utilizing in a different way a telephone for the display of advertisements. In re Lyon, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 501.

New combination.—The novelty of an invention is never negated merely by proving that it is made up of old parts. The question is whether they have been newly combined, so as to effect new and useful results. Where this is fairly shown, and the defendant has asserted the novelty of a similar device by having it patented, he cannot well complain that the same conclusion is reached with regard to that of the complainant after which he has patterned. Eck v. Kutz, (1904) 132 Fed. 758.

Elements of new combination found in older patents.—It constitutes no anticipation and no defense to a claim of infringement that one or more elements of a patented combination or one or more parts of a patented improvement may be found in one old patent, and others in another, and still others in a third. J. L. Owens Co. v. Twin City Separator Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 259.

Mere mechanical improvement.—That the device of a later patent is a mechanical improvement on that of an earlier one and produces a better result does not prevent the earlier from being an anticipation, where the principle and mode of operation are the same. E. L. Watrous Mfg. Co. v. American Hardware Mfg. Co., (1908) 161 Fed. 362.

Where, in an interference case, it appeared that one of the parties used his machine before the other party's date of conception, and the machine was operated successfully, although it was not so perfect as a machine built by the other party, it was held that the former was the first inventor. Jenner v. Dickinson, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 316.

Prior device serving additional purpose.—The effect of a device as an anticipation is not altered by the fact that it was made to serve a purpose additional to that for which it was used in the second case, where, so far as the latter goes, the two are equivalents. American Carriage Co. v. Wyeth, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 389.

Adapting prior device to new use.—A patent for an air-brush used for making pictures, in which by a combination device liquid colors are atomized and thrown on a paper or canvas by a jet of compressed air, was not anticipated by oil burners having concentric oil and steam nozzles; invention being required at least to adapt the principle to use in the different art. Wold v. Thayer, (1906) 148 Fed. 227, 78 C. C. A. 350, affirming 142 Fed. 776.

Claims of a patent for means for or mechanism adapted to, a certain result, and like functional claims, are not objectionable if limited to the invention shown by the specification and drawings. Weed Chain Tire Grip Co. v. Excelsior Supply Co., (1910) 179 Fed. 232.

Novelty of selection of old devices or elements, remote in structure and purpose, for a new use, may evidence patentable invention. Hartford v. Moore, (1910) 181 Fed. 132.

Prior machine intended for different purpose.—A patent for a successful machine is not void for anticipation, because a prior machine intended for a different purpose may possibly be capable of use as an inefficient substitute for the later machine. United Shirt, etc., Co. v. Beattie, (1907) 149 Fed. 736, 79 C. C. A. 442, affirming (1905) 138 Fed. 136.

Seniority of patents.—The effect of a patent as an anticipation is to be determined by the date it was issued, and not by that when it was applied for. However, it may be otherwise, when the question is as to who was the original or first inventor. Eck v. Kutz, (1904) 132 Fed. 758.

A patent is not anticipated by other patents, which, although prior in date, had not been granted when application for such patent was filed, and which were therefore not in the prior art. Gray Telephone Pay Station Co. v. Baird Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 417.

General language in prior patents.—Anticipation is not shown by broad and general language in prior patents, although, interpreted in the light of the later invention, it may be said to include the same. Keasbey, etc., Co. v. Philip Carey Mfg. Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 571.

Abandoned application.—An abandoned application for a patent is not an anticipation of a later patent in the absence of some showing that the later patentee borrowed ideas therefrom. Wright Co. v. Herring-Curtiss Co., (1910) 177 Fed. 257; Wright Co. v. Paulhan, (1910) 177 Fed. 261; Interurban R., etc., Co. v. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 166.

Simultaneous applications without interference declared.—The fact that two applications for patents were pending to the Patent Office and before the same examiner at the same time, and no interference was declared, is evidence that they were not for the same invention, and that one patent does not anticipate the other. Beckwith v. Malleable Iron Range Co., (1910) 174 Fed. 1001.

Prior foreign patent.—That the device of a patent was in fact anticipated by a foreign patent will not constitute a defense to a suit for infringement, where it contains a patentable improvement over the foreign device, and defendant has used the improvement. Dececo Co. v. George E. Gilchrist Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 293.

A foreign patent, to constitute an anticipation which will defeat a subsequent American patent granted to one who had no knowledge of the foreign invention, must describe the invention in such full, clear, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art to construct the device patented. Pettibone v. Pennsylvania Steel Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 730.

The instrument known under the German law as a "Gebrauchsmuster" is not one the filing of which charges any one with notice of its contents or which has the effect of a foreign patent as an anticipation of a subsequent United States patent. Steiner v. Schwarz, (1906) 148 Fed. 868.

Prior applications of one of the parties to an interference, which are found to have disclosed the invention of the issue, cannot be said to have been anticipated by British patents granted him for the same invention described in such applications, where the applications in interference were filed within the two years after the grant of the British patent. Young v. Struble, (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 410.

Prior patent to same person.—That a prior patent for the same invention was issued to the same patentee does not avoid anticipation. McCaslin v. Link Belt Machinery Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 393.

Two patents for same invention.—Where an application is made for a patent on an alleged method after a patent has been granted on the apparatus, and it appears that the substitution of the word "means" for the word "method" at two places would not change the sense, and would make the disclosure in the application the same as that in the patent, to grant the alleged method claims would result in two patents for substantially the same thing. In re Creveling, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 530.

Two applications by same person pending at same time.—An inventor having two applications for patents pending at the same time, both of which disclose his invention, may base his broadest claims on the one which he considers shows the best form of mechanism, although it may be the later application, and the patent issued thereon will not be anticipated by a later patent issued on his earlier application. Welsbach Light Co. v. Cohn, (1910) 181 Fed. 122.

Matters not shown by patent.—A patent cannot, as an anticipation, properly have applied into it, from necessity, more than it fairly shows, to make it an operative structure. What is required, and not so shown, is left for later inventors. New England Motor Co. v. B. F. Sturtevant Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 866.

Where the disclosures of a process patent in regard to the machines and method employed are so uncertain that they can only be spelled out tentatively, such patent is not an anticipation of a later one for a definitely described process. Asbestos Shingle, etc., Co. v. H. W. Johns-Manville Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 620.

Description and drawings.—To constitute an anticipation, the prior patent or publication relied on must, by descriptive words or drawings, or by both, contain and exhibit a substantial representation of the patented improvement in such full, clear, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art to make the article or practice the invention. Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Elliott-Fisher Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 927.

To overthrow a patent by a foreign one of prior date, the description of the invention must be in such full, clear, and exact terms as to enable one acquainted with the art to which it belongs to make or practice the invention. Warren Bros. Co. v. Owosso, (C. C. A. 1909) 166 Fed. 309.

Incorrect drawing of prior invention.—It is not an anticipation that by a mistake in the figure of a preceding patent by the error of the draftsman the structure of a patent appears contrary to the conception of the inventors and the reading of the patent. Edison Electric Light Co. v. Novelty Incandescent Lamp Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 977, reversing (1908) 161 Fed. 549.

Merely suggestion in prior patent.—A patent must do more than to make untested suggestions or pregnant surmises to constitute an anticipation of a later patent. Asbestos Shingle, etc., Co. v. H. W. Johns-Manville Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 620.

Prior unclaimed description in patent.—A patent for a mechanical combination is not anticipated by a prior patent, which incidentally shows a similar arrangement of parts, where such arrangement was not claimed nor designed to perform the function for which it is designed and claimed in the second patent. Gray Telephone Pay Station Co. v. Baird Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 417.

Description in prior application.—Statements in a prior application for a patent, relied on as an anticipation of a patent granted while such application was pending, must be so clear and explicit that those skilled in the art will have no difficulty in ascertaining their meaning. Hillard v. Fisher Book Typewriter Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 439, affirming (1907) 151 Fed. 34.

Functions not claimed by prior patentee.—A patent is not anticipated by prior patents for devices which might by slight modifications have been made to perform the functions of that of the later patent, where it does not appear that the patentees had in mind their use or adaption to accomplish such result. Gunn v. Bridgeport Brass Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 239.

A patentee is entitled to a beneficial use of a feature of his device if it actually exists, although he did not specifically claim it, and it may constitute an anticipation of a later patent. Forest City Foundry, etc., Co. v. Barnard, (C. C. A. 1910) 176 Fed. 561.

Time to put invention in public use.—An inventor who has reduced his invention to practice is entitled to a period of two years in which to put the same in public use and on sale, without a forfeiture of his right to receive a patent, based on an application filed by another before the statutory bar has arisen. Rolfe v. Hoffman, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 336.

Sufficiency of published descriptions.—An article describing in very general terms a process of some unknown inventor for the reduction of aluminum, as explained at a meeting of mining engineers by one who had not seen it practiced, but spoke from hearsay only, is not such a publication as constitutes an anticipation of a process subsequently invented and patented by another. Electric Smelting, etc., Co. v. Pittsburg Reduction Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 926, modifying (1901) 111 Fed. 742.

A prior publication in a paper, patent, or otherwise, will not negative the novelty of an invention unless it describes a complete and operative invention capable of being put into practical operation, or contains such a disclosure of the invention that any omission would ordinarily be supplied by one skilled in the art. Crown Cork, etc., Co. v. Standard Stopper Co., (1904) 136 Fed. 199.

A disclosure of an invention by publication is not sufficient to invalidate a patent thereafter applied for more than two years thereafter, unless the description was so full and intelligible as to enable persons skilled in the art to which the invention relates to comprehend or make it without assistance from the patent. Comptograph Co. v. Universal Accountant Mach. Co., (1906) 142 Fed. 539, reversed on other grounds (C. C. A.) 146 Fed. 981.

Under the rule that to constitute a prior publication which will invalidate a subsequent patent the publication must contain such a substantial representation of the patented device as would enable any person skilled in the art to make, construct, and practice the invention to the same practical extent as he would be enabled to do if the information was derived from a prior patent, a published illustration and description of a bicycle, showing every detail of a part subsequently patented by another, except that it did not show that a tube for containing the pedal shaft, shown by the patent to be without perforations, and so appearing in the illustration, may not have been perforated or cut away on the bottom or the opposite side not seen—there being, however, nothing to indicate that such was the fact—fulfills all the conditions of the rule, even conceding that there was a patentable difference between a perforate and imperforate tube used for such purpose. Pope Mfg. Co. v. Arnold, (1910) 177 Fed. 419.

A description by a foreign inventor of a process which was never patented and never used in order to constitute an anticipation of a subsequent American patent must be an account of a complete and operative invention, and in case of doubt the success of the patented process, invented many years later, should turn the scale in favor of patentability and nonanticipation. Schmertz Wire Glass Co. v. Western Glass Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 977.

Statement of mere fact of invention.—The naked assertion that a certain result has been accomplished, without describing the means which produced it, is insufficient as an anticipation. American Graphophone Co. v. Leeds, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 327.

Publications and devices suggesting invention.—Devices and publications leading up to, but not fully accomplishing, a desired end, do not anticipate an invention which for the first time effectively meets all requirements and successfully accomplishes such end. Truax v. George F. Childs Adjustable Parlor Chair Co., (1894) 162 Fed. 907.

Extrinsic evidence.—It is not competent to read into a publication relied on as an anticipation of a subsequent patent information which it does not give, nor by expert opinion explain an otherwise uninforming statement by evidence of some apparatus or article not itself competent as an anticipation. Loew Filter Co. v. German-American Filter Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 855, modifying (1907) 155 Fed. 124.

Reasonable diligence in perfecting invention.—In an interference proceeding to determine priority of invention, the lack of reasonable diligence by a party in reducing his conception to practice is not shown, where the delay in filing his application is accounted for by the loss of his drawings. Garrel's v. Freeman, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 207.

Where the senior party to an interference saw working drawings and a model of the invention of the issue, made by the junior party, and understood their construction, and said nothing about any previous conception or disclosure of the invention by himself, although both parties were at the time in the employment of the same company, which was engaged in the manufacture of similar devices, and the superintendent of which had solicited suggestions from its employees for improvement of such devices, and remained silent for a year before he filed his application, such conduct on his part is inconsistent with the existence of a right which he was desirous to protect, and the junior party will be entitled to an award of priority. Harter v. Barrett, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 300.

Date determined by application.—The date of a patented invention is at least as early as the date of the application, provided it sufficiently describes the invention to enable those skilled in the art to understand it, such application being conclusive evidence that the invention is perfected and adapted to use, and the equivalent of an actual reduction to practice under the statute. Automatic Weighing Mach. Co. v. Pneumatic Scale Corp., (C. C. A. 1909) 166 Fed. 288, reversing (1908) 168 Fed. 415.

In an interference between an applicant and a prior patentee, the date of the filing of the latter's application, in the absence of proof on his part to show an earlier date of conception and reduction to practice, must be taken as his date of conception, disclosure, and constructive reduction to practice; the patent standing as proof of those facts. Dashiell v. Tasker, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 64.

The filing date of a party to an interference who takes no testimony stands for his date of conception and constructive reduction to practice. McKnight v. Pohle, (1907) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 92.

Successive applications.—The abandonment of one application for a patent on the filing of another for the same device does not preclude the patentee from showing the actual date of his invention to meet a claim of anticipation. Corrington v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 69.

Date determined by testimony of inventor.—Where the date of an invention contended for depends on the mere say-so of the inventor and his son, without any convincing or corroborating circumstances, this does not fulfil the high degree of proof required to escape anticipation. Eck v. Kutz, (1904) 132 Fed. 758.

Date of foreign patent to same inventor.—As against an infringer, the patentee in a United States patent for an invention previously made by him and patented in a foreign country may, to avoid alleged use in this country before the date of the foreign patent, show the date of the application for the foreign patent, for the purpose of showing the actual date of his invention. Badische Anilin, etc., Fabrik v. Klipstein, (1903) 125 Fed. 543.

Date of foreign anticipating patent.—A patent will not be invalidated for anticipation by a foreign patent of prior date, if the invention is shown to have been made by the American patentee before such date; but, where anticipation is otherwise clear, the burden rests on him to establish such priority beyond a reasonable doubt. Columbus Chain Co. v. Standard Chain Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 622, 78 C. C. A. 394.

Identity of anticipating device.—A patent cannot be supported against a claim of anticipation by features not referred to, claimed, or even suggested therein, and not a function of the thing patented, except when used in a special combination. Greene v. United Shoe Machinery Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 973, 66 C. C. A. 43, reversing (1902) 115 Fed. 155.

Substantial identity.—The fact that a mechanical structure is crude does not prevent it from being an anticipation of one subsequently patented, where the inventive thought embodied is the same in both. Merrimac Mattress Mfg. Co. v. Feldman, (1904) 133 Fed. 64.

Possible accomplishment of results.—A patent cannot be invalidated by a structure which can only be altered into an anticipation by the use of inventive skill. Waterbury Buckle Co. v. Aston, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 120, affirming (1909) 172 Fed. 672.

It is not sufficient to constitute anticipation that the devices relied upon might, by a process of modification, reorganization, or combination, be made to accomplish the function performed by the device of the patent. Los Alamitos Sugar Co. v. Carroll, (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 280.

Devices operating on different principles.—A device which does not operate on the same principle as that of a patent cannot be an anticipation. Los Alamitos Sugar Co. v. Carroll, (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 280.

Infringement as test of anticipation.—A process is not an anticipation of one subsequently patented, unless, if invented later, it would have been an infringement. Electric Smelting, etc., Co. v. Pittsburg Reduction Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 926, modifying (1901) 111 Fed. 742.

A patentee cannot avoid anticipation of broad claims by showing the presence in the alleged anticipatory device of elements which would not obviate infringement of such broad claims. Standard Mach. Co. v. Rambo, (1910) 181 Fed. 157.

Subsequent device not infringing.—Where a subsequent patent does not infringe a former one, it is independent thereof, and will be regarded as a new patent, and not a mere improvement of the former one. Stitzer v. Withers, (1906) 122 Ky. 181, 91 S. W. 277.

Change of material.—The Miller patent, No. 524,178, for a packing consisting of two wedge-shaped sections, intended to slide on each other, with a yielding cushion back of one of said sections, by means of which the steam pressure transmitted to the sliding sections causes that side of the strip to widen, forming a tight joint, describes an effective and useful device; but the claims are not limited as to the materials to be used, and, the form of construction having been in use in a prior unpatented packing, the patent is void for anticipation. Daniel v. Restein, (1904) 131 Fed. 469.

Prior chemical compound having same formula.—That a chemical compound is not a new article of manufacture in a patentable sense is not conclusively shown by the fact of a prior known compound having the same formula. Kuehmsted v. Farbenfabriken of Elberfeld Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 701, affirming (1909) 171 Fed. 887.

Reduction in cost of chemical product.—A chemical compound in a new form may be patentable where by reason of its greater purity or efficiency or of its comparative cheapness it is made a commercial instead of merely a laboratory product. Union Carbide Co. v. American Carbide Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 104, reversing (1909) 172 Fed. 120.

Novelty of process producing previously known article.—A patent for the product of a process is void where the same product had previously been produced by other processes. Société Fabriques de Produits Chimiques de Thann et de Mulhouse v. Lueders, (1904) 135 Fed. 102.

The production of aldehyde by selective oxidation of the hydrogen of a hydrocarbon is old in the art, and there can therefore be no invention in the idea that formic aldehyde can be thus produced, the chemical reaction being well known to chemists; and it is not a new discovery that the temperature must not be above the dissociating point of the aldehyde desired. In re Blackmore, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 434.

Novelty of manufactured article.—The Kahn patent, No. 669,011, claim 3, covering as an article of manufacture a flat knit cap formed from a single length of tubular fabric by distending and setting it on a block or form, is void for lack of novelty; the product, as distinguished from the process of making, differing not at all from other caps in extensive prior use. Kahn v. Starrells, (1904) 131 Fed. 464.

Whatever novelty, in a patentable sense, there may be in flakes of cooked wheat, must be found in some superior efficaciousness or some new properties which they possess, and not in any mere change of form produced by mechanical division of the cooked grain either before or after the last step in cooking. Nor does the fact that such flakes contain some dextrin make them a new product in a patentable sense, that being true to a greater or less extent of other forms of cooked wheat. Sanitas Nut Food Co. v. Voigt, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 551.

Improvement in well-known art.—In a long-developed art, in which there is a meagre sphere for invention, a marked improvement in product evidences corresponding originality in making such product. Greenwald v. Enochs, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 583, reversing 180 Fed. 478.

Better results of new device.—Anticipation is not avoided because the anticipating structure, while mechanically the same, is not so efficient as that of the patent, owing to the use in the latter of different and better materials, which are not, however, claimed as a feature of the invention. Daniel v. Restein, (1904) 131 Fed. 469.

Disproof of asserted novelty.—It is not the law that the asserted novelty of a patented combination can only be overcome by showing that all of the elements have previously been employed as a unit in the same relation to each other. Voightmann v. Weis, etc., Cornice Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 298.

Equivalents—chamotte and crushed fire brick.—The term "chamotte," as used in the arts and in the Panzl patent, No. 644,367, as an ingredient used in making an acid-resisting composition for lining pulp digesters, denotes a species of specially pure calcined clay, which must be silicate of alumina, and is not the equivalent of crushed fire brick, used in prior preparations, which may or may not have the chemical composition and properties of chamotte. Panzl v. Battle Island Paper Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 48, reversing (1904) 132 Fed. 607.

Lack of interchangeability of parts.—The lack of interchangeability of parts in two combinations is an important factor in determining the question of equivalency or mechanical suggestion, where lack of novelty and invention is claimed because of a prior patent. Steiner, etc., Hardware Co. v. Tabor Sash Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 831.

Simplification of complicated mechanism.—Patentable novelty may be found in an improvement which simplifies a complicated train of mechanism by eliminating some of its elements, with the result that defects due to the presence of those elements are done away with. Brown v. Huntington Piano Co., (1904) 134 Fed. 735, 67 C. C. A. 639, affirming 131 Fed. 273.

Same result by two devices.—An improvement in mechanism for sawing stone by which the saw is moved against the stone, which remains at rest during the operation, instead of being fed to the saw as in machines of the prior art, discloses patentable novelty. Diamond Stone Sawing Mach. Co. v. Brown, (1904) 130 Fed. 896.

State of art.—When it is sought to ascertain the state of the art by means of prior patents, nothing can be used except what is disclosed on the face of those patents. They cannot be reconstructed in the light of the invention in suit, and then used as a part of the prior art. Naylor v. Alsop Process Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 911. See Smyth Mfg. Co. v. Sheridan, (1906) 149 Fed. 208, 79 C. C. A. 166.

Knowledge of inventor of prior state of art.—In determining the question of patentable invention, a patentee is chargeable with knowledge of all that preceded him in the art. Daylight Glass Mfg. Co. v. American Prismatic Light Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 454, 73 C. C. A. 570.

Success and adoption in doubtful cases.—General public acceptance and use of a patented device is only a fact to be considered with all the other facts in the case on the issue of patentable novelty, and is most appropriately resorted to where the issue is in grave doubt. Torrey v. Hancock, (C. C. A. 1910) 184 Fed. 61, reversing (1909) 170 Fed. 600.

Although the commercial success of a device does not confer patentability on it, and although a combination of old elements is not patentable, yet, where the question of novelty is in doubt, the fact that a new combination and arrangement of known elements produces a new and useful result, displacing other devices employed for a like purpose, is sufficient to turn the scale in favor of invention. In re Thomson, (1906) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 419.

Although the fact that a device has supplanted prior devices in the trade may turn the scale in favor of the existence of invention, where that question is in doubt, yet such fact has no weight where the want of patentable novelty is already reasonably clear. Utility is not novelty. In re Garrett, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 19.

The fact that a new device or construction may have displaced others, by reason of its manifest superiority, is material only when the question of patentable novelty is otherwise a matter of doubt. Millett v. Allen, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 70.

Patent as evidence of novelty.—The granting of a patent is prima facie evidence of the novelty of the device described, and the burden of proof to establish anticipation rests on the defendant alleging it. Hancock v. Boyd, (1909) 170 Fed. 600; Phoenix Knitting Works v. Bradley Knitting Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 163.

The presumption of novelty arising from the granting of a patent is greater or less according to circumstances. If the patent relates to something of temporary interest, and the object sought is of little importance, it may receive but little attention in the Patent Office, and the presumption is slight; but where the problem sought to be solved is of such importance that its solution promises great pecuniary returns, and it is shown that all the claims were subjected to critical analysis, resulting in amendments and disclaimers designed to distinguish the invention from everything in the prior art, the presumption of novelty is greater than in those cases where the patent may have passed by inadvertence. Imperial Bottle Cap, etc., Co. v. Crown Cork, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 312, reversing (1903) 123 Fed. 669.

Where there is a mere comparison of a patent with others to determine the novelty of the device, it is immaterial just when the invention was conceived or reduced to practice, or whether due diligence was used; a patent taking rank as a publication, negating novelty, only when it comes out, and a mere application has no effect. Union Typewriter Co. v. Smith, (1909) 173 Fed. 288.

Application as rebutting presumption against novelty.—Where an inventor applies for and receives a patent which discloses another unpatented invention, not claimed, it is presumed not to be novel, but this presumption is rebutted if the patentee has another application pending in the Patent Office, claiming it. Saunders v. Miller, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 456.

Novelty of part of combination.—Where one of two contested features of a combination patented is lacking to a certain extent in novelty, but the other is not, nor admittedly is the whole, and all that can be said against the invention is that the existing art has been somewhat drawn upon, but this has not been without new and independent treatment, nor so but that the conjoined result in form and function is the inventor's own, this is not sufficient to negative novelty or inventive skill, of the existence of which the efforts of other inventors in the same direction are to be accepted as persuasive proof. Eck v. Kutz, (1904) 132 Fed. 758.

Proof of novelty.—Where a patent duly issued is attacked for want of novelty, and oral evidence is relied on, the proof must be clear, satisfactory, and beyond a reasonable doubt. Clark v. George Lawrence Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 512.

Burden of proof.—A patent duly issued being presumptively valid, a person attacking it for want of novelty has the burden of proof. Clark v. George Lawrence Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 512.

Burden of proving priority.—A public knowledge and use of a device by others prior to the application for a patent therefore being shown, the burden is cast on the patentee to furnish convincing proof that the anticipation was anticipated by him in making the invention. New England Motor Co. v. B. F. Sturtevant Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 150 Fed. 131, reversing (1905) 140 Fed. 866.

On an issue as to anticipation, the burden of proof rests on the party pleading such defense, and where the identity of methods and results in the two devices is doubtful the doubt must be resolved in favor of the patent. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. Duplex Phonograph Co., (1909) 177 Fed. 248.

Where an anticipatory device is shown to have been in use prior to the application for a patent, the burden rests on the patentee to carry the date of his invention back to a time antedating such use by satisfactory and convincing proof. Torrey v. Hancock, (C. C. A. 1910) 184 Fed. 61, reversing (1909) 170 Fed. 600.

Where the junior parties to an interference were admittedly employed by the senior party to construct a machine embodying an invention made by him, the burden is on them to prove that the improvements embodied by them in the machine were their own invention, and not the ideas suggested by the senior party. Corry v. McDermott, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 305.

Convincing evidence of anticipation required.—Anticipation must be proved by evidence so cogent as to leave no reasonable doubt in the mind of the court. Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Elliott-Fisher Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 927.

In a suit for infringement of a patent, the burden rests on a defendant to prove the defenses of anticipation or prior use beyond a reasonable doubt. Beckwith v. Malleable Iron Range Co., (1910) 174 Fed. 1001.

Prior use, in order to show anticipation of a patent, must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, and it cannot be said to have been proved with such degree of certainty by oral testimony, where it may be reasonably deduced from all the record that other and conclusive evidence might have been obtained, and no effort was made to produce it nor to excuse the omission. H. Mueller Mfg. Co. v. Glauber, (C. C. A. 1910) 184 Fed. 609.

Declarations of patentee.—Declarations of a patentee relating to his invention, accompanied by descriptions thereof, and made before his application for a patent was filed, are competent evidence to carry the date of his invention back to the time when they were made. Bullock Electric Mfg. Co. v. Crocker-Wheeler Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 101.

Unaided recollection of witnesses.—A patent will not be held void for anticipation by an unpatented machine on the oral testimony of witnesses, the accuracy of which depends on their unaided recollection of events which occurred twenty-five years previously, unless it is exceptionally clear and convincing. United Shirt, etc., Co. v. Beattie, (1907) 149 Fed. 736, 79 C. C. A. 442, affirming (1905) 138 Fed. 138.

Where oral testimony of witnesses speaking from memory only is relied on to establish a defense of prior use to invalidate a patent, it must be so clear and specific as to convince the court beyond a reasonable doubt. Parker v. Stebler, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 210.

Where an anticipatory device is shown to have been in use prior to the application for a patent, oral testimony given many years after the event, unsupported by physical exhibits, and which is in itself somewhat contradictory, is not sufficient to sustain the burden resting on the patentee to carry the date of his invention back to a time antedating such use by satisfactory and convincing proof. Torrey v. Hancock, (C. C. A. 1910) 184 Fed. 61, reversing (1909) 170 Fed. 600.

Rebutting presumption of novelty.—The rule that evidence relied on to overthrow the presumption of patentable novelty should be of the most cogent character does not preclude the court from accepting as sufficient the oral testimony of witnesses describing prior anticipating devices, although none of such devices are produced, where the testimony is of such character as to produce conviction beyond a reasonable doubt. Rodwell Sign Co. v. F. Tuchfarber Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 127 Fed. 138.

Disclosure of ideas by inventor.—Where an inventor communicates his ideas to one who is thoroughly competent to understand and perpetuate them in case of his death, having effectively given his invention to the world in this way, he is entitled to bring forward the disclosure to maintain the asserted priority of his invention. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Roberts, (1903) 125 Fed. 6.

The facts of each case must control the determination of whether there is patentable novelty in an invention. In re Eastwood, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 291.

Estoppel to assert novelty.—The cancellation in the Patent Office, on references cited by the examiner, of a part of the original application in which one feature of the patent as finally allowed is claimed, does not estop the inventor from asserting the novelty of that feature, where the defendant is sought to be held for infringement of the whole combination of which it forms a part. Eck v. Kutz, (1904) 132 Fed. 758.

Particular devices, etc., held wanting in patentable novelty.—The making of an annular flange on the feed section of a fountain pen, over which the mouth of the elastic rubber reservoir for holding the ink is stretched for the purpose of making the connection more secure, is only a usual and well-known method of making a tight connection between an elastic tube and an inelastic one, and does not disclose patentable novelty. Lancaster v. Witte, (1910) 175 Fed. 976.

An improvement in mechanism for sawing stone by which the saw is moved against the stone, which remains at rest during the operation, instead of being fed to the saw as in machines of the prior art, discloses patentable novelty. Diamond Stone Sawing Mach. Co. v. Brown, (1904) 130 Fed. 896.

An application for a patent for a method of treating shells in the manufacture of pearl buttons, consisting of reducing portions of the shells to a suitable thickness and then cutting blanks therefrom, held to disclose no patentable invention. In re Weber, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 29.

In an infringement case, involving the claims of a patent for improvements in computing scales, in which nonpatentability and noninfringement are claimed, where it appears that the main difference between the complainant's device and a former patent is that his cylinders are arranged vertically, while those of the former patent were arranged horizontally, and that such vertical arrangement was old long before any date that can be assigned to the complainant, it must be held that there was no invention in complainant's device, as invention could not be predicated on differently positioning the cylinders. Computing Scale Co. v. Automatic Scale Co., (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 238, affirmed (1907) 204 U. S. 609, 27 S. Ct. 307, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 645.

An application for a patent for a process of producing ammonia by passing air and steam over peat maintained at varying temperatures is not novel. In re Woltereck, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 130.

VI. PRIOR USE OR SALE.

Public use in general.—A patent must be held invalid if there has been sale and public use of the article for more than two years prior to the filing of an application for a patent. Federal Mfg., etc., Co. v. U. S., (1907) 42 Ct. Cl. 479.

Where the inventor of an improvement in pumps for fire engines had the device placed on an engine of which he was in charge as engineer, where it was publicly tested, and thereafter used successfully for many years without material alteration, and was shown and explained by the inventor to the manufacturers of the engine without any injunction of secrecy, the action of the manufacturers in placing the device on an engine which they subsequently built for another city did not involve any breach of trust or confidence such as to render the use of the invention on the new engine surreptitious, fraudulent, or piratical, and defeat its effect as a public use, even though they knew that the inventor contemplated applying for a patent. Eastman v. New York, (1904) 134 Fed. 844, 69 C. C. A. 628.

The use of a process by the patentee and his employees for more than nine years before application was filed for the patent, without any substantial change therein, during which time some 8,000 articles were produced for commercial purposes, cannot be considered experimental, although it is claimed that improvement was constantly sought, but is a public use which invalidates the patent. National Phonograph Co. v. Lambert Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 164, 73 C. C. A. 382, affirming (1903) 125 Fed. 388.

The use of a composition for lining pulp digesters in the practical lining of digesters for use in a number of different plants by persons to whom it had been disclosed without secrecy was a public use, which, if continued for more than two years, would bar a patent whether such use was known to the inventor or not, unless the delay was for the purpose of perfecting the invention. Hentschel v. Carthage Sulphite Pulp Co., (1909) 169 Fed. 114.

Necessity of general use.—To constitute an anticipation by an unpatented device, it is not necessary that it should have come into general use, but it is sufficient if it was in actual and practical use by a number of persons. Daniel v. Restein, (1904) 131 Fed. 469.

Use prior to application.—The Weisgerber design patent, No. 35,043, for a design for a rolling chair held not infringed, on evidence which showed that defendant's chairs, if they would otherwise infringe, were constructed and in use by defendant prior to complainant's application for the patent. Weisgerber v. Clowney, (1904) 131 Fed. 477.

Use prior to application not prosecuted with diligence.—Where the Commissioner of Patents denied a petition for the revival of an application on the ground that there had been such unexcused delay in its prosecution as to work an abandonment under R. S. sec. 4894, a new application filed thereafter cannot be regarded as a continuation of the same proceedings, but stands on the same footing as though no previous application had been made; and to authorize the granting of a patent thereon it must appear that the invention had not been in public use or on sale in this country for more than two years prior to such application. Hayes-Young Tie Plate Co. v. St. Louis Transit Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 900.

Public use of similar invention.—Public use of an unpatented lamp which was not successful does not defeat a patent for another lamp, where the first lamp, while resembling the second one in external appearance, did not embody the nice adjustment of parts which was the gist of the patent. Campbell v. New Idea Arc Light Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 115.

Computing time of use — pendency of original application.—Where the original application has not been abandoned, subsequent applications and amendments constitute a continuance of the first proceeding, and the two years' public use or sale, which may avoid the patent, must be reckoned from the presentation of the first application, and not from the filing of subsequent applications or amendments. Hayes-Young Tie Plate Co. v. St. Louis Transit Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 80, affirming (1904) 130 Fed. 900.

New application after abandonment of original.—The abandonment of an application destroys the continuity of the solicitation of the patent, and a subsequent application institutes a new proceeding, and the two years' public use or sale which may invalidate the patent must be counted from the latter application. Hayes-Young Tie Plate Co. v. St. Louis Transit Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 80, affirming (1904) 130 Fed. 900.

Delay in application on advice of solicitor.—The fact that an inventor delayed making application for a patent, under the advice of his solicitor, does not prevent the running of the statutory period of limitation from a prior public use from rendering the patent invalid. Eastman v. New York, (1904) 134 Fed. 844, 69 C. C. A. 628.

Single prior use.—The public use of an invention for more than two years before the application for a patent therefor, although in but a single instance, will defeat the right to a patent. Bradley v. Eccles, (1905) 138 Fed. 911.

What constitutes sale generally.—The manufacture of a machine on an order for its construction, followed by its delivery and acceptance, constitutes a "sale" within the patent statute. National Cash Register Co. v. American Cash Register Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 79.

Single sale for experimental purposes.—A single sale of an invention by the inventor for experimental purposes, where he is unable otherwise to make proper tests, does not put the invention "on sale" within the meaning of the statute. In re Mills, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 377.

Single unrestricted sale by inventor.—A single sale of a single machine by the inventor more than two years before his application for a patent thereon, without restriction as to its use, is sufficient to invalidate the patent. National Cash Register Co. v. American Cash Register Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 79.

A single unrestricted sale by the inventor of his invention is a public sale, or puts it "on sale," within the meaning and intent of this section. In re Mills, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 377.

Improvements during public use as extending time for application.—The duplication of a set of rollers on a machine which was before complete and operative, and had been in use for two years, the purpose being merely to reinforce the work of the original rollers in certain cases where necessary, did not constitute a part of the invention of the machine, so as to extend the time within which a patent might be applied for. Jenner v. Bowen, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 556.

Delay from unsuccessful effort to construct machine.—An inventor of a complicated device, who attempts to construct a completed machine with his own hands during a period of over a year, and finally abandons the effort from lack of time and money, and immediately makes a model and drawings, is exercising due diligence. Davis v. Garrett, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 9.

Commercial use as public use.—Where the inventor of a machine made and set up one for a customer, who paid for it and used it commercially, selling the product, as was intended, neither he nor his employees being under any obligation of secrecy, such use was public and not private, and its continuance for more than two years before application for a patent deprived the inventor of the right to a patent. Jenner v. Bowen, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 556.

The commercial use of a machine for more than four years, although its operation was unsatisfactory to the inventor, leading to frequent experiments to improve the combination and finally to the addition of an element of such value that a patent was applied for, was an abandonment to the public of the invention so far as it was embodied in the combination before the addition of such improvement, and invalidates a claim of the subsequent patent from which the new element is omitted. Star Mfg. Co. v. Crescent Forge, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 856.

Experimental use.—An inventor has a reasonable time in which to experiment for the purpose of perfecting his invention and demonstrating its utility, and the time thus spent, if in good faith, is no part of the two-year period of limitation. Eastman v. New York, (1904) 134 Fed. 844, 69 C. C. A. 628.

Where a patent is for a manufactured article itself, designed for general use, a presumption arises that, when the inventor issues such article to the public, he regards it as a finished product, and, in case he does not apply for a patent within two years, abandonment of his purpose to do so may well be assumed; but where the invention is for a machine designed to produce articles, a different rule as to experimental use may well apply, and, although the articles produced may be perfect, the machine may not, and the sale of the product does not necessarily, render the use of the machine a public use, where none are sold, and the use is entirely under the observation of the inventor. Bryce Bros. Co. v. Seneca Glass Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 161.

The Conroy patent, No. 735,949, for a machine for shaping or chipping the edges of glass articles, discloses invention, and is not invalid for public use because the machine was in fact used for more than two years prior to the application; it being shown that, while the machine was fairly successful, and its product was sold, the purpose of its use was experimental, and it was during such time being perfected by the inventor and was kept under lock and key and as far as possible from the knowledge even of the factory workmen who were not engaged in its operation. Conroy v. Penn Electrical, etc., Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 421.

The use of a machine while it was being perfected, in a room from which the public and all others not engaged in its operation were excluded, changes and improvements being made from time to time, although extending back to more than two years before application was made for a patent, was an experimental and not a public use, and did not invalidate the patent granted therefor, and it is immaterial that the product of such experimental use was sold. Penn Electrical, etc., Co. v. Conroy, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 943.

The use of a telephone transmitter by the inventor for the purpose of determining its efficiency only, although known to others, was not a public use which invalidated a later patent. International Telephone Mfg. Co. v. Kellogg Switch Board, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 651, affirming (1907) 158 Fed. 104.

An experimental use of a new invention or discovery, which will not defeat the right of the inventor to a patent unless application is made within two years, must have been in perfecting the invention, and where the discoverer of a new form of calcium carbide, who made a considerable quantity, used the same in experiments in making acetylene gas, etc., not for the purpose of perfecting it, but to demonstrate its commercial value, and also sent a quantity abroad without injunctions of secrecy or restrictions upon its use, where it was used for like purposes, such use constituted a public use or disclosure within the meaning of the law. Union Carbide Co. v. American Carbide Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 120.

An experimental use of an invention, to be such, need not necessarily be made by the inventor himself, or at his shop. In re Mills, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 377.

Burden of proving experimental character of use.—When a clear case of prior public use is established, the burden is on the inventor to prove by convincing proof that the use was experimental. Eastman v. New York, (1904) 134 Fed. 844, 69 C. C. A. 628; Corbett Bros. Co. v. Reinhardt-Meding Co., (1909) 166 Fed. 767; Greenwald v. Weiss, (1910) 180 Fed. 474; In re Mills, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 377.

Sale of product of experimental use.—A patent is not invalidated because a machine like that of the patent was made and used by the patentee more than two years before the application was filed, where such use was for the purpose of experiment only, nor is such use a public use which will defeat the patent because the product of the machine during the time was sold. American Caramel Co. v. Mills, (1906) 149 Fed. 743, 79 C. C. A. 449, reversing (1905) 138 Fed. 142.

Exhibition of experimentally constructed machines.—The mere exhibition of an experimentally constructed machine by the inventor to an audience, accompanied by an explanation of the invention, no charge being made, is not such a public use as will defeat his right to a patent applied for more than two years afterwards. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. American Graphophone Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 860, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 350.

When experimental use becomes public.—The use of an unpatented invention on a machine in actual service, continued for years without any change therein, although it may have been experimental in the beginning, becomes a public use from the time the success of the invention is demonstrated, and a patent therefor issued on an application filed more than two years after such time is invalid. Eastman v. New York, (1904) 134 Fed. 844, 69 C. C. A. 628.

Use to test utility.—The use of an invention by the inventor for the purpose of testing its utility, which is not a public use, may continue indefinitely. Warren Bros. Co. v. Owosso, (C. C. A. 1909) 166 Fed. 309.

Trial use by purchaser.—Allowing the purchaser of an unpatented device a period of use to determine whether it will satisfactorily do his work must be deemed the user's trial, and not the inventor's. It cannot be regarded as extending to the experimental stage of the invention. Federal Mfg., etc., Co. v. U. S., (1907) 42 Ct. Cl. 479.

Insanity of inventor after authorizing public use.—The right of one who purchased an unpatented machine from the inventor, with the intention and understanding that it was to be used commercially, to so use the same, is not terminated by the subsequent insanity of the inventor, and such continued use prior to the application for a patent constitutes a prior public use within the meaning of the patent law. Jenner v. Bowen, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 556.

Use by permission of inventor.—If an inventor passes his invention into the hands of different persons to use and test as to the usefulness of the device before application for a patent, such use by them must be restricted to experimental use; and if they are permitted to use the device publicly as a nonpatented article, and it is either sold or given away to even a few persons, their use of it will be a prior public use which may deprive the inventor of his right to a patent. Bradley v. Eccles, (1905) 138 Fed. 911.

Conditional sale.—While a shop test of a machine may be sufficient to show a reduction to practice, especially in view of favorable results being obtained by a later actual test under the conditions of ordinary use for which the machine is intended, it does not necessarily remove the machine from the domain of experiment, so as to constitute a conditional sale a public sale. In re Mills, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 377.

Unaided recollection of witness as to prior use.—As a general proposition, mere oral testimony, depending on the recollection of the witnesses, will not be regarded as sufficient to establish prior public use, to defeat a patent. Interurban R., etc., Co. v. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 168.

Applicant as witness regarding prior use.—Where it is sought to be shown that an invention was in public use, the applicant is entitled to be heard as a witness in his own behalf. In re Mills, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 377.

Character of evidence of prior use.—There is no hard and fast rule as to the measure or kind of proof required to establish prior use of a patented device, further than that it must be clear and satisfactory to the judicial mind in each case. Sipp Electric, etc., Co. v. Atwood-Morrison Co., (1906) 142 Fed. 149, 73 C. C. A. 367, reversing (1905) 136 Fed. 859.

Burden of proving prior use.—A defendant has the burden to establish an alleged prior use to defeat a patent by proofs clear, satisfactory, and beyond reasonable doubt. Timolat v. Philadelphia Pneumatic Tool Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 257.

Under the rule that the defense of prior use must be established beyond a reasonable doubt it will not be sustained when it rests on the recollection of a single witness, especially when his knowledge depends in large part on information received from others who are not called. Albright v. Langfeld, (1904) 131 Fed. 473.

The burden of proof to establish a defense of prior use to invalidate a patent rests on the defendant. Parker v. Stebler, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 210.

VII. ABANDONMENT.

Accepting interference as to one of several claims.—An inventor is not estopped from insisting on his application for a patent in which were united process and apparatus claims for essentially the same invention by requiring his process claims to be placed in interference with those of an existing patent after receiving a letter from the primary examiner permitting the retention of the process and apparatus claims pending the determination of the interference, but stating that the acceptance of an interference on one of the process claims would be held by the office to be an election of the prosecution of such claims, and further prosecution of the apparatus claims would not be permitted. U. S. v. Allen, (1904) 192 U. S. 543, 24 S. Ct. 416, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 555, 109 Off. Gaz. 549.

Intention the test of abandonment.—Burdon Wire, etc., Co. v. Williams, (1904) 128 Fed. 927; Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. American Graphophone Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 860, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 350; International Telephone Mfg. Co. v. Kellogg Switch Board, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 651, affirming (1907) 158 Fed. 104.

Question of fact.—Questions relating to the actual or constructive abandonment of an invention are questions of fact; and every reasonable doubt thereon should be resolved in favor of the patent. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. Duplex Phonograph Co., (1909) 177 Fed. 248.

Burden of proof.—The burden of proving abandonment of an invention to defeat a patent therefor rests upon the party alleging the same, and evidence is insufficient which rests on doubtful inferences. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. American Graphophone Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 860, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 350.

Convincing evidence required.—Kellogg Switchboard, etc., Co. v. International Telephone Mfg. Co., (1907) 158 Fed. 104; Computing Scale Co. v. Automatic Scale Co., (1905) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 238, affirmed (1907) 204 U. S. 609, 27 S. Ct. 307, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 645; Saunders v. Miller, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 456.

Discontinuance of experiments.—Total abandonment of experiments, and neglect and loss of the physical things made, together with inaction by the alleged inventor and his assignee for two years, justify the conclusion of abandoned experiment and failure to successfully reduce to practice. Richards v. Burkholder, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 485.

Within two years.—An inventor who has reduced his invention to practice being entitled to a period of two years in which to put it in public use and on sale, an abandonment within such period cannot be presumed, but it must be proved. Rolfe v. Hoffman, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 336.

Concealed invention.—The fact that the first inventor failed to apply for a patent and to manufacture and to put his invention on the market for about two years, because of business reverses and poverty and inability to obtain assistance from others, shows such concealment of his invention as will deprive him of an award of priority as against a subsequent inventor who had obtained a patent. Brown v. Blood, (1903) 22 App. Cas. (D. C.) 216.

Deliberate concealment, by the junior party to an interference, of an invention from the public for two and a half years, with no change of such policy of concealment until he obtained knowledge of the senior party's efforts in the same field, during which time the senior party, with no knowledge of his rival's invention, worked diligently to perfect the invention and to put his product on the market, and applied for a patent, will render the junior party's rights, based on his prior construction of an operative device, subordinate to the right of the senior applicant, who, within the policy of the law, is the first to invent; and the fact that the senior party's application had not ripened into a patent before the filing of the junior party's application will not affect the cause. Matthes v. Burt, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 265.

Patent for combination as affecting right to basic patent.—Where an application for a basic patent is pending, the granting to the same inventor of a limited combination patent of which the subject-matter of the basic patent is an essential element is not an abandonment of the latter to the public. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Electric Appliance Co., (1906) 142 Fed. 545.

Experimental use.—Abandonment and dedication to the public use by one of the parties to an interference involving an apparatus for the manufacture of rubber shoes is not shown, where it appears that he made experimental tests of the product of his invention by having boots made with it worn by the men in the employ of the company with which he was connected, testing them in connection with boots then being manufactured, continued his experiments for two years, and filed an application for the process, followed by an application for the apparatus. Saunders v. Miller, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 456.

Discontinuance of experimental use.—A party to an interference claimed to have made and successfully tested a device embodying the invention of the issue, an improvement in sewing machines, by attaching it to a sewing machine manufactured by his assignee, a sewing machine company, and operating it. It appeared that the device was then removed from the machine—which was afterwards sold to the trade—and put away in the drawer of a desk in a room to which the officers of the company alone had access, where it remained four years, during which time the old machines and improved ones were sold without such device being attached to them or used in any way, or any attempt being made to obtain a patent upon it, although it was a simple device, easily attached to the machines then in use, and there were no difficulties in the way of its manufacture. Held, that the making and operating of the device must be regarded as an unsuccessful and abandoned experiment. Quist v. Ostrom, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 69.

Mere delay.—Abandonment is not to be predicated on mere delay. Where, therefore, the complainant, as early as July, 1891, had a complete conception of his device substantially as it now appears, which he reduced to practical form, he has the right to claim this as the date of his invention; and it cannot be regarded as abandoned simply because, for business and other reasons, he let the matter rest for upwards of three years, having eventually in September, 1894, put his ideas into exact shape. Eck v. Kutz, (1904) 132 Fed. 758.

Unreasonable delay in application.—The fact that the inventor of a device did not apply for a patent until six years after it had been perfected, and successfully tested, did not operate as an abandonment or dedication to the public, in the absence of proof of anything indicating such an intention, such as a public use or publication. International Telephone Mfg. Co. v. Kellogg Switch Board, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 651, affirming (1907) 158 Fed. 104.

An inventor who, after perfecting his invention and reducing it to practice, without adequate excuse delays applying for a patent for five or six years, and until another has invented and patented the same device, and then applies for and obtains a patent, is estopped by his laches from asserting such patent as against the second inventor. Curtain Supply Co. v. National Lock Washer Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 45.

The fact that the first inventor failed to apply for a patent, and to manufacture and to put his invention on the market for about two years, because of business reverses and poverty and inability to obtain assistance from others, shows such lack of diligence as will deprive him of an award of priority as against a subsequent inventor who had obtained a patent. Brown v. Blood, (1903) 22 App. Cas. (D. C.) 216.

Failure by one of the parties to an interference to file an application for four years after conception of the invention, during which time he constructed a device embodying it, discussed it freely with others, and endeavored to interest men of means to exploit it, does not show such lack of diligence as will preclude him from asserting his rights against the other party, although the latter was diligent both in respect to reduction to practice and in applying for a patent. Rolfe v. Kaisling, (1909) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 582.

While, if an invention which is the subject of an interference has been actually reduced to practice, the inventor will not be deprived of the benefit of his invention by reason of mere delay, without intention to secrete or suppress it, or by the exploitation of a preferred substitute, yet long delay in making use of the invention, or in applying for a patent, are potent circumstances tending to show that an alleged reduction to practice was nothing more than an abandoned experiment. Daggett v. Kaufmann, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 450.

Evidence held to establish reasonable diligence. — Eck v. Kutz, (1904) 132 Fed. 758.

Delay on account of proposed related invention. — To delay one invention for the sake of another projected invention to be used in connection with it, and which may never be realized, cannot in patent law be construed as an exercise of due diligence. Lotterhand v. Hanson, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 372.

Delay to work out details. — An inventor having grasped an idea and put it in mechanical form may not wait to secure a monopoly on the broad thought until everything in the nature of mere accessory improvement that makes it commercially better has been worked out and perfected. Universal Adding Mach. Co. v. Comptograph Co., (1906) 146 Fed. 981, 77 C. C. A. 227, reversing 142 Fed. 539.

Delay to obviate defects in operation. — Delay by an inventor in applying for a patent after he has reduced his invention to practice for the purpose of perfecting it, or testing its practical value, will not constitute an abandonment or laches which will defeat his right to a patent where, from some unknown cause, it was not successful in operation, although it subsequently develops that the trouble was due to external causes not affecting the utility or successful working of the invention. Appert v. Brownsville Plate Glass Co., (1904) 144 Fed. 115.

Failure to prosecute application after rejection by examiner. — The failure of an applicant for a patent to further prosecute his application after it has been rejected by the examiner for anticipation does not operate as an abandonment of the invention, nor an acquiescence in the ruling, where it was caused by his lack of funds. Shepherd v. Deitsch, (1905) 138 Fed. 83.

An abandonment of an application for a patent is not an abandonment of the invention, and a patent may lawfully issue on a second application. Hayes-Young Tie Plate Co. v. St. Louis Transit Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 137 Fed. 80, affirming (1904) 130 Fed. 900; Commercial Acetylene Co. v. Acme Acetylene Appliance Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 89; Tripler v. Linde, (1902) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 32.

Successive applications. — Pending an application for a patent, the specification of which is broad enough to warrant the making of certain claims which are not made, the applicant, instead of inserting such claims by amendment, may at his election make them the subject of a new application, which in such case may fairly be considered a continuation of the first, and their omission therefrom will not operate as an abandonment. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. American Graphophone Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 350, affirming (1905) 140 Fed. 860.

A second application for a patent, which describes precisely the same device as a former one, which has been abandoned by permission, will be treated as continuous of the first. L. E. Waterman Co. v. McCutcheon, (C. C. A. 1904) 127 Fed. 1020, affirming (1903) 121 Fed. 103; Corrington v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 69; Duryea v. Rice, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 423.

Matter described and not claimed. — The question whether a patentee has abandoned any part of what he has described in his patent is largely one of intention, and the fact that while the specification of a process patent describes two or three ways of performing one of the steps of the process which are equivalent but one is mentioned in the claims does not constitute an abandonment of those not so mentioned. Burdon Wire, etc., Co. v. Williams, (1904) 128 Fed. 927.

A patent is not invalidated by the fact that the invention claimed was described, but not claimed, in an earlier application by the patentee, on which a patent was issued after the one in suit, where it is apparent that there was no intention to abandon the invention to the public. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. American Graphophone Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 860, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 350.

Pending an application for a patent, the specification of which is broad enough to warrant the making of certain claims which are not made, the applicant, instead of inserting such claims by amendment, may at his election make them the subject of a new application, which in such case may fairly be considered a continuation of the first, and their omission therefrom will not operate as an abandonment. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. Duplex Phonograph Co., (1909) 177 Fed. 248.

Where an inventor applies for and receives a patent which discloses another unpatented invention not claimed, it is presumed to be dedicated to the public by the patentee, but this presumption is rebutted if the patentee has another application pending in the Patent Office claiming it. Saunders v. Miller, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 466.

Unclaimed matter in another application. — The fact that an invention is described but not claimed in a patent does not operate as a disclaimer or abandonment of the same, where it is the subject-matter of a pending application by the inventor for another patent. Kinnear Mfg. Co. v. Wilson, (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 970.

Disuse of patent.—A patentee is under no obligation, during the life of his monopoly, to use or place on the market a device or machine embodying his invention. Lewis Blind Stitch Mach. Co. v. Premium Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 950.

The making of an invention and its reduction to practice, without any public use or other act placing the public in possession of the invention, although the inventor may by delay in applying therefor lose his right to a patent, does not constitute an abandonment of the invention to the public, which will invalidate a patent subsequently granted to another therefor. Davis, etc., Temperature Controlling Co. v. National Steam Specialty Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 191.

Public benefit.—An applicant for a patent, who, after another applicant has been adjudged priority of invention as to certain of his claims in interference proceedings, canceled such claims, did not acquire any right in the subject-matter thereof by the subsequent defeat of issuance of a patent to the other applicant on the ground of prior public use, but the same became abandoned to the public. Dodge Needle Co. v. Jones, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 715, affirming (1907) 153 Fed. 186.

If the original inventor has, by his action, forfeited his right to a patent, the invention will be deemed to have been dedicated to the public, and no one subsequently claiming to be the inventor can acquire a property right in the invention. Saunders v. Miller, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 456.

Abandonment of application for product patent as affecting process patent.—The abandonment of an application for a product patent, on a finding of an examiner in interference proceedings that the product had been in use for more than two years prior to the application, is not a conclusive admission that the process for the manufacture of such product for which the applicant had been granted a patent on an application filed at the same time, was old, nor does it estop the patentee from asserting the validity of such patent. Mica Insulator Co. v. Commercial Mica Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 440, reversing (1907) 157 Fed. 90.

VIII. DIVISION OF INVENTIONS.

Two patents for same invention.—Two valid patents may not be issued to a party, based on the same patentable invention. In re Wickers, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 71.

Vol. V, p. 468, sec. 4887.

DECISIONS CONSTRUING SECTION 4887 PRIOR TO THE AMENDMENT OF MARCH 3, 1897.

Construction of second clause.—The second clause of the section that "every patent granted for an invention which has been previously patented in a foreign country shall be so limited as to expire at the same time with the foreign patent," is plain and un-

An enlargement of a patent is not to be effected by the engraving of broad claims on a later patent, based on an application of narrow scope, where the second patent is applied for as an improvement on the first. Union Typewriter Co. v. Smith, (1909) 173 Fed. 288.

The fact that a prior design patent is invalid, because the subject of it is not within the law, will not save a subsequent mechanical patent for the same device from constituting a case of double patenting; the patentee having enjoyed a nominal, and for a time an apparently unquestioned, monopoly therefrom, and it not being open to him to set himself right for a mistake which he has made in the character of the patent by taking out another and different one for substantially the same thing. Williams Calk Co. v. Neverslip Mfg. Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 210.

Process and apparatus.—No general rule can be laid down by which to determine when a given invention or improvement shall be embraced in one, two, or more patents. The Commissioner of Patents is vested with a discretion in determining whether or not to require a division of claims for a process and an apparatus. In re Frasch, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 25.

Generic and subordinate inventions.—An inventor has the right, by contemporaneous applications, to a generic and specific patent; and, when he has thus applied, he does not lose the right to his generic patent because one or more of the specific patents may happen to be issued first. Nor does he lose such right by the subsequent filing of an amended or new application changing the specification of the generic invention, where the patent is still sought for the substance of the invention as originally claimed. Badische Anilin, etc., Fabrik v. Klipstein, (1903) 125 Fed. 543.

Generic invention and improvement.—Where a patent first granted is distinctly and only for an improvement on another and generic invention which is the subject of a prior application by the patentee, then pending, it does not invalidate the patent subsequently granted thereon, although there is no express disclaimer of the matter claimed in such prior application. Cleveland Foundry Co. v. Detroit Vapor Stove Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 131 Fed. 853.

Burden of proving unitary invention.—The burden of proof is on the applicant to prove that two statutory inventions constitute one unitary invention. In re Frasch, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 25.

ambiguous, and not to be extended by construction, and applies only to cases where the inventions actually claimed in the foreign and domestic patents are identical; it is not sufficient that the foreign patent may disclose the invention of the later United States patent, where it is not therein claimed. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Stanley Instrument Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 823.

Improvement as differentiating patents.—The Pickard patent, No. 448,072, for construction of pleasure canals or waterways, shows a canal which, while the same in principle, is not identical in structure with that shown in the prior British patent of 1888, No. 10,519, to the same inventor, but contains the additional feature that the longitudinal partition through the centre is extended to the ends, dividing the canal throughout its entire length, while in the British patent an opening is left at each end, through which the water flows and the boats pass. Hence, as to such feature, which is an improvement of great value and utility, showing patentable invention, the United States patent did not expire with the British patent. Aquarama Co. v. Old Mill Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 229.

Method and apparatus.—A foreign patent for a method is not for the same invention as an application for a United States patent for an apparatus for practicing that method. Commercial Acetylene Co. v. Acme Acetylene Appliance Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 89.

Foreign patent for minor part of basic invention.—A prior patent in a foreign country for a minor part of a broad or basic invention is not for the same invention as a subsequent United States patent covering both the minor parts and the broad main invention, and such foreign patenting of a part does not so affect the whole that the expiration of the foreign patent terminates the whole of the American patent including the broad claims. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. Leeds, etc., Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 1022, 79 C. C. A. 536, affirming 146 Fed. 534.

Substantial identity.—The identity contemplated relates to matters of substance and not of form merely, applying only where there is a valid foreign patent, and a United States patent for an alleged invention which was covered by a prior certificate of addition to a French patent is not limited to the term of the French patent, where the same was adjudged null and void by the French courts on the ground of anticipation; the effect of such judgment under the law of France being to render the patent, with any certificates of addition thereto, a nullity from the beginning. Hennebique Constr. Co. v. Myers, (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 869.

Formal identity of claims is not necessary to constitute identity of a United States and a foreign patent, but substantial identity of the invention as covered by the claims is sufficient. United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Duplessis Shoe Machinery Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 31.

In determining whether the invention of a United States patentee was previously patented in a foreign country so that its term is limited by such foreign patent, the court must look through the mere form of phraseology and determine what was the essence of the invention laid open to the public by the foreign patent. Commercial Acetylene Co. v. Searchlight Gas Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 85.

Different claims in foreign and domestic patents.—All the claims of a domestic patent do not necessarily expire with a foreign patent because of the provision that "every patent granted for an invention which has been previously patented in a foreign country shall be so limited as to expire at the same time with the foreign patent," but only such claims expire as are embodied in the foreign patent. Leeds, etc., Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., (1909) 213 U. S. 301, 29 S. Ct. 495; 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 805, affirming (1906) 148 Fed. 1022, 79 C. C. A. 536.

Effect of foreign extensions.—Article 4 bis, inserted in the international convention for the protection of industrial property of March 20, 1883, by the additional Act proclaimed by the President, Aug. 25, 1902 (32 Stat. L. 1936, 1939), did not have the effect of changing the term of a patent granted by the United States to a citizen thereof, as that term is fixed by statute; and such a patent, granted prior to Jan. 1, 1898, and which is limited by the provisions of this section to the term of a prior foreign patent for the same invention, is not extended by such additional Act. United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Duplessis Shoe Machinery Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 31; Malignani v. Hill-Wright Electric Co., (1910) 177 Fed. 430.

Forfeiture of foreign patent.—The provision that a United States patent shall expire at the same time as a prior foreign patent for the same invention, has reference to the legal term of the foreign patent as appears on its face at the time of the issuance of the United States patent, and the latter is not further limited by the subsequent lapse or forfeiture of any portion of such legal term of the foreign patent by the failure to comply with a condition subsequent, such as the payment of additional fees at stated intervals. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. Leeds, etc., Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 1022, 79 C. C. A. 536, affirming 146 Fed. 534.

The expiration of a Canadian patent by reason of the failure to pay the fee required to keep such patent alive for the second six years of the eighteen-year term for which it was granted does not affect the duration of a domestic patent. Leeds, etc., Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., (1909) 213 U. S. 301, 29 S. Ct. 495, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 805, affirming (1906) 148 Fed. 1022, 79 C. C. A. 536.

- I. APPLICATIONS, 1590.
- II. SPECIFICATIONS AND DESCRIPTIONS, 1591.
- III. CLAIMS, 1594.

I. APPLICATIONS.

Separate applications for machines and process.—Under Patent Office rule 41, requiring that two or more independent inventions cannot be claimed in one application, and providing that claims for a machine and the process in the performance of which the machine is used must be presented in separate applications, a process is the mode of treatment of certain materials to produce a certain result, and a machine or apparatus is a combination of mechanical elements, which may or may not be useful in performing the acts which constitute the process. U. S. v. Allen, (1903) 22 App. Cas. (D. C.) 56.

Variance between venue and jurat of affidavit.—A patent will not be declared invalid by a court because the venue of the affidavit to the application was laid in one state and the jurat was made by a notary in another, where such application was accepted by the Patent Office and no fraud is shown. Empire Cream Separator Co. v. Sears, (1907) 157 Fed. 238.

Alteration of application.—The Commissioner of Patents has the power, either in an ex parte proceeding or in an interference case, to inquire and determine whether an application for a patent has been altered or substituted without authority by the attorney for the applicant with the applicant's connivance or consent, or by any one else, because, if altered or substituted, the application will not be the one contemplated by the statute as the foundation of a patent. Moore v. Heany, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 31.

Time for filing application.—In an interference case, an application, to countervail a patent already granted, must be shown to have been made within a reasonable time from the date of reduction to practice, or from conception of the invention, with the exercise of reasonable diligence to reduce to practice, or otherwise the claim to the invention, as opposed to that covered by the patent, will be rejected. Dashiell v. Tasker, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 64.

Multiplication of applications.—The law does not favor the multiplication of applications and of patents for devices closely related to each other, when they can properly be included in one application and in one patent. Norden v. Spaulding, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 286.

Joinder of inventions.—So far as rule 41 of the Patent Office rules of practice prevents an inventor from uniting in one application process and apparatus claims which are essentially the same invention, it is invalid as an abuse of the discretion vested in the Patent Office to permit or deny a joinder of inventions. U. S. v. Allen, (1904) 192 U. S. 543, 24 S. Ct. 416, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 555, 109 Off. Gaz. 549.

Application as creating vested right.—While letters patent, when issued, give the patentee a vested right in them, the mere filing of an application for a patent gives the applicant no such right which Congress has no power to affect by legislation. De Ferranti v. Lyndmark, (1908) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 417.

Construction in light of prior art.—An applicant's specifications and drawings must be construed in the light of the prior art. Gold v. Gold, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 152.

II. SPECIFICATIONS AND DESCRIPTION.

Object of specifications.—It is not essential to the validity of a patent to insert in the drawings and specification a description of every detail. It is sufficient if the description is such as to enable a mechanic skilled in the art to construct the device patented. American Delinter Co. v. American Machinery, etc., Co., (1904) 128 Fed. 709, 63 C. C. A. 307.

A statement in the specifications of the Dolan patent, No. 589,342, for a duplex acetylene gas burner or tip of the Bunsen type, having a series of inclined air passages on the sides, that, if the burner were cut off, the general shape and condition of the flame would be the same, does not indicate with sufficient definiteness that the essence of the invention is to have so short a chamber or cylinder as to prevent the mixing of the air taken into it, and to emit a current of gas surrounded by the greater part of such air as an envelope or film. Steward v. American Lava Co., (1909) 215 U. S. 161, 30 S. Ct. 46, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 139, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 731, 740, 84 C. C. A. 157, 166.

Vague and uncertain description.—The specification in the claims of a patent for a process, of a "weak acid" to be added to a solution, does not render the patent void for uncertainty, where the specification names vinegar as a preferable acid, which for practical purposes indicates the standard of strength meant, although it does not limit the claims to the acid so specified, and they are infringed by the use of a dilute mineral acid. Fullerton Walnut Growers' Assoc. v. Anderson-Barngrover Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 443.

Incorrect description.—An applicant's claims to a ball-bearing ring are properly rejected by the Commissioner of Patents, where they do not correctly describe his invention, but include new matter borrowed from a patent granted to another party. In re Dilg, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 9.

Essential features of invention.—Where the essence of an invention is the location, form, size, or any other characteristic of the means employed, the patentee must distinctly specify the peculiarities in which his invention is to be found. American Lava Co. v. Steward, (C. C. A. 1907) 155 Fed. 731.

Details of construction.—When the device consists of a yielding packing ring of asbestos and tallow, and every description in the patent imports a predominance of the one central idea of a yielding packing composed of asbestos and tallow, it is the invention; the details of construction are of minor importance. Société Anonyme des Anciens Etablissements Cail v. U. S., (1907) 43 Ct. Cl. 25.

Well-known things.—While the applicant for a patent is required to point out and distinctly claim the part, improvement, or combination which he claims as his invention or discovery, his specifications are not addressed to the public generally, but to those skilled in the art; and it is unnecessary for him to describe that which is common and well known. Mark v. Greenawalt, (1908) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 253, 267.

Simple device.—Where an applicant's ball-retaining ring for ball bearings is a simple invention, there is no warrant for introducing ambiguous terms, thereby failing to clearly and correctly describe it. In re Dilg, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 9.

Construction by those skilled in the art.—The failure to describe a complete mechanism in the specifications of a patent for a process is not material if enough is disclosed to indicate to those skilled in such matters the mechanism whereby the method of the patent can be put into operation. Expanded Metal Co. v. Bradford, (1909) 214 U. S. 366, 29 S. Ct. 652, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 1034, reversing (1906) 146 Fed. 984, 77 C. C. A. 230, and affirming (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 849; Shepherd v. Deitsch, (1905) 138 Fed. 83; Société Anonyme des Anciens Etablissements Cail v. U. S., (1907) 43 Ct. Cl. 25; Hopkins v. Newman, (1908) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 402; General R. Signal Co. v. Thullen, (1909) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 575.

The drawings of a patent are addressed to those skilled in the art, and must also be considered in connection with the claims and specification and with each other; and a patent is not invalidated by a clerical mistake in a drawing, which, when so considered, would not mislead one skilled in the art to which it relates. Cutler-Hammer Mfg. Co. v. Union Electric Mfg. Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 266.

That the claim of a patent for a method of exhausting incandescent electric lamps contains no limitation as to the extent to which the bulb must be exhausted before sealing, and the specification only states it approximately, would not render the disclosure of the patent insufficient to enable one skilled in the art to practice the process, though it might be necessary to make several tests to determine with exactness what the patentee meant by the expression "exhausted to the extent of about two millimeters of mercury." Malignani v. Jasper Marsh Consol. Electric Lamp Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 442.

In claiming a patent for the discovery of a useful result in any art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter by the use of certain means, the applicant must specify the means he uses in a manner so full and exact that any one skilled in the science to which it appertains can, by using the means he specifies, without any addition to or subtraction from them, produce precisely the result he describes. In re Blackmore, (1909) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 338.

Device not fully explained.—In an interference involving an improvement in an automatic locking device for hose couplers, the senior party stated in his specifications that to provide the upper side of his locking pin with a "short inclined face" would permit automatic coupling of the device. Held that the disclosure did not justify the claims that the failure to state the angle of inclination was immaterial, as it would appear to any one skilled in the art that the specifications and drawings would immediately suggest an automatic coupler. Gold v. Gold, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 152.

Necessity of describing all details.—It is not essential to the validity of a patent to insert in the drawings and specification a description of every detail. It is sufficient if the description is such as to enable a mechanic skilled in the art to construct the device patented. American Delinter Co. v. American Machinery, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 128 Fed. 709.

Statement of one mode only.—A patent for a method of maintaining a constant electric current in an alternating current circuit, in which there are translating devices in series, is not limited by the description therein of an apparatus for practicing such method, which must be taken as merely illustrative. Manhattan Gen. Constr. Co. v. Helios-Upton Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 785.

Description of best mode.—The description in a specification or drawing of a form or construction of a mechanical element when that form or construction is not essential to the combination or improvement claimed is a mere pointing out of the best mode in which the patentee contemplated applying the principle of his invention, and does not deprive him of protection against mechanical equivalents, nor indicate that he gave up all other modes of application. J. L. Owens Co. v. Twin City Separator Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 259.

The statutory requirement that an applicant for a patent shall explain the best mode in which he has contemplated applying the principle of his invention (R. S. sec. 4888), does not preclude him from claiming any other mode which embodies his principle. Vrooman v. Penhollow, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 296.

Features recommended as preferable.—Features of construction which the specifications of a patent recommend or describe as preferable do not thereby become essential parts of the patent or limitations of the claims. Smeeth v. Perkins, (1903) 125 Fed. 285, 60 C. C. A. 199.

Description of material.—A claim of a patent calling in general terms for a "non-combustible and nonconducting material" cannot be limited by construction to a particular noncombustible nonconducting material named in the specification, either to avoid anticipation or infringement. Empire Circuit Co. v. Channon, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 705.

Form of structure.—While an invention is undoubtedly to be regarded as residing in a structure of the same general character as that which is described in the specifications, to which the inventor is to be confined, this does not restrict him to the particular form to which prominence is there given, where it is evident that he had variations of it in mind, and has formulated a claim in broad terms to cover them; the particular form having also been made the subject of a separate claim. Manhattan Gen. Constr. Co. v. Helios-Upton Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 785.

Novelty in dimensions or material.—When the novelty of an invention consists in the dimensions or the material of the new thing devised, the patentee must specify the particular dimensions or the particular material his invention contemplates. Bullock Electric Mfg. Co. v. General Electric Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 409, 79 C. C. A. 229, reversing 146 Fed. 549.

Description of manufacture.—A patent for a machine, described as one for moulding tubes or cylinders, is not invalid because in the use of the machine it makes only half tubes or cylinders capable of being fitted together and so designed. Keasbey, etc., Co. v. American Magnesia, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 490, reversing (1905) 137 Fed. 602.

Failure to describe design in words.—Under this section and section 4933, a design patent is not invalid for failure to describe the design in words. Cheney v. Weinreb, (1910) 185 Fed. 531; National Casket Co. v. New York, etc., Casket Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 533; Ashley v. Samuel C. Tatum Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 339, reversing (1910) 181 Fed. 840.

Description of art or process.—Where the only suggestion of a method as a distinctive part of an inventive concept in the specification is in the use of the word "method" at two places therein, and it does not appear that there is any difference in the inventive concept underlying such disclosure from that underlying the disclosure in a patent to the applicant on the apparatus, the alleged method claims are not patentable. In re Creveling, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 530.

Inventor ignorant of chemical changes.—If the inventor of a process in the claims of his patent therefor has so defined his ingredients that there can be no mistake as to what he means, and has indicated a process which will transform those ingredients into the product claimed, it is immaterial that he was wholly ignorant of all of the chemical changes that take place in the course of such process, and such fact will not defeat the patent, but it may properly be taken into consideration in construing the language and terms used in the specification in describing the process. National Enameling, etc., Co. v. New England Enameling Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 643.

Unnecessary parts of combination.—A patent for a machine for delinting cotton seed, which shows that the seed is to be fed into the machine at one end and discharged at the other, is not invalidated by the failure to specify or show in the drawings a feed screw or other device for assisting to move the seed through the machine; the machine being operative without it, but it being obvious that some such device would aid the passage of the seed through the machine, and when in fact it was used in the construction of the first machine. American Delinter Co. v. American Machinery, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 128 Fed. 709.

Specification of means generally.—The rule applied that where the claims of a patent for a machine refer generally to "means" for accomplishing a specified result, or movement, without claiming such means, they are not limited by a description of particular means in the specification, given for the purpose of explaining the mode in which the patentee contemplates applying the principle of his invention. Eastern Paper Bag Co. v. Continental Paper Bag Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 479.

Where the claims of a patent specify the elements of a combination, but do not specify the means whereby those elements perform their functions but call for "means" generally, and close with the words "substantially as and for the purpose" described, or specified, or set forth, such words import into the claims the specific means described in the specification, and the claims are limited accordingly. Union Match Co. v. Diamond Match Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 148.

Specification construed as mere description.—In the Postlethwaite patent, No. 622,532, for a gold-dredging apparatus, claim 3, which contains as one element of the combination "a perforated spray pipe leading into the separator or grizzly from the lower end thereof," the statement of the location of such pipe as entering the grizzly at the lower end thereof is in the nature of a mere description, and is not a limitation of the claim to that precise construction. Western Engineering, etc., Co. v. Risdon Iron, etc., Works, (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 224.

The effect of the words "substantially as described" in a claim of a patent is not to limit the claim to the precise construction shown in the specification, nor to deprive the patentee of the benefit of the doctrine of equivalents, where his invention is of a primary character. Lowrie v. H. A. Meldrum Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 761.

The words "to operate substantially as described," at the end of a claim, do not import into the claim elements described in the specification, but not mentioned in the claim, for the purpose of either extending or limiting it. General Electric Co. v. International Specialty Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 755.

An element of a combination, although not definitely described in the claims, except by reference to the specification by the words "substantially as described" at the end of each claim, may be read into the claims, where it is fully described in the specification, and is essential to the operation of the machine. Sanders v. Hancock, (C. C. A. 1904) 128 Fed. 424.

Where a patent contains specific claims in which certain features described in the specification are expressly claimed, and also broad claims from which such features are omitted, they cannot be read into the broad claims because of the closing formula "substantially as described," for the purpose of narrowing such claims to avoid anticipation. Avery v. J. I. Case Plow Works, (1905) 139 Fed. 878.

The specification of a patent must be construed for the purpose of ascertaining the intent of the parties when the words "substantially as specified" are found in the claim, for the claim is founded on and explained by the specification, whether these words appear in it or not, and they refer to the elements and operation set forth in the specification. O. H. Jewell Filter Co. v. Jackson, (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 340.

A claim of an applicant, made the issue of an interference without objection on the part of the other party, and reading, "a boiler flue having one end reduced in internal diameter and increased in external diameter, substantially as described," will not be read at the instance of such other party, so as to require that the external and internal reinforcement of the tube should be integral with it. Geltz v. Crozier, (1909) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 324.

Reference to drawings.—Where a patentee has pointed out in his claims the precise construction that is to be regarded as his invention, by references to the drawings, his patent may properly be confined to such construction on an issue as to infringement. Schaum v. Riehl, (1903) 124 Fed. 320.

Purpose of drawings generally.—The drawings of a patent are not required to be working plans, but are merely illustrative, to be read in connection with the specification and claims, and a patented device will not be held inoperative merely because of imperfections in the drawing in respect to the dimensions or relative position of parts of the mechanism. Wold v. Thayer, (1906) 148 Fed. 227, 78 C. C. A. 350, affirming 142 Fed. 776.

Irregularities in signature to drawings.—Irregularities in the signing of the drawings filed with the application for a patent, or in witnessing the signatures, where they did not operate as a fraud on the commissioner who considered the application and issued the patent on the merits, cannot avail to defeat a suit for its infringement. Hallock v. Babcock Mfg. Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 226.

Absence of description.—While a doubtful or ambiguous description in the specification of a patent may be aided and made plain by the drawings, they cannot supply the entire absence of any written description of a feature of the invention. Windle v. Parks, etc., Mach. Co., (1904) 134 Fed. 381, 67 C. C. A. 363, reversing 128 Fed. 58.

Changing specifications to broaden claims.—An applicant for a patent, after a successful contest in interference proceedings, cannot, without changing his specification, broaden his claims to include something not shown nor claimed in his original application, but which is claimed in the interfering application. General Electric Co. v. Sangamo Electric Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 246.

Amendment of specifications.—An inventor may so amend his specification as to include therein all the advantages within the scope of his invention, where his amendment is filed before other inventors have entered the field, whose rights might be prejudiced, and the original drawings and specification sufficiently show and suggest the claims finally made. Kirchberger v. American Acetylene Burner Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 128 Fed. 599, affirming (1903) 124 Fed. 764.

An applicant for a patent has the right to alter and amend his specification to conform to the state of the art as the facts are developed in the Patent Office, so long as he does not, by enlarging its scope, appropriate prior inventions, or any that have in the meantime gone into public use; and he may also amend his claims to conform more closely to the specification and drawings. Keasbey, etc., Co. v. Philip Carey Mfg. Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 571.

An applicant for a patent in his endeavor to protect his invention may amend his specification and claims, so long as he keeps within the requirements of the statutes and rules of the Patent Office; but he cannot be permitted at any time to introduce new matter into his application, and obtain therefor a date as of the date of his original application. In re Dilg, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 9.

New matter introduced by amendment.—Where the applicant for a patent originally disclosed standards springing from both edges of an annular base, and according to the original disclosure both were necessary, an amendment claiming a base having standards springing from one edge only involved new matter; and where the original case disclosed the top pieces of the standards with straight sides an amendment stating that those top pieces were sector shaped or flaring also involved new matter. In re Dilg, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 9.

Where a claim inserted by amendment includes new matter not originally disclosed, it was held that if the change from the original was an obvious one which would occur to any one, it was not patentable, and if it was not obvious it involved new matter. In re Scott, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 307.

If an amended application embodies anything new that was not in the original application, or materially differs or varies from the original application, it cannot be sustained and made to relate back to the latter. The law does not permit such an enlargement of the original specifications as will interfere with the right of inventors who have entered the field or filed applications in the meantime. McFarland v. Watson, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 445.

Where amendments are made to an application before another party has entered the field, the rule prohibiting the insertion of new matter by amendment will not be applied as strictly as where it is sought to enlarge the scope of an application to the prejudice of inventors whose rights have accrued between the date of filing and the date of amendment. Young v. Struble, (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 410.

III. CLAIMS.

Interpretation of claims in general.—In interpreting the claims of a patent, proper regard should be had to the natural import of the terms in question, the context, and the specification. Lewis Blind Stitch Mach. Co. v. Premium Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 950.

Liberal construction of claims.—The reasonable presumption is that an inventor intends to protect his invention broadly; and the scope of a claim should not be restricted beyond the fair and ordinary meaning of the words, save for the purpose of saving it. Miel v. Young, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 481.

Claim interpreted in light of specifications.—The claim of the issue of an interference is to be interpreted in the light of the specifications of the party first making it. Viele v. Cummings, (1908) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 455.

Claim limited by application.—A claim first made by one of the parties to an interference and only presented by the other party on the suggestion of the Patent Office for the purpose of interference must be given the meaning intended by the party with whom it originated, and read in the light of his application. Weintraub v. Hewitt, (1910) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 487.

Arbitrary limitation of claim.—A limitation in a claim that is merely arbitrary and without function ought not to be permitted to deprive the first inventor of reward simply because the one first to file an application has inserted it. Arbetter v. Lewis, (1910) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 491.

In case of doubt, a claim should be given the evident meaning intended by the party first making it. Viele v. Cummings, (1908) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 455.

Form.—If an applicant desires the claims interpreted or limited otherwise than expressed by the plain and usual meaning of the words employed, he should draw his claims to embody the meaning intended. Lindmark v. Hodgkinson, (1908) 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 612.

Claims unnecessarily multiplied.—Where an invention can be clearly defined by means of four claims, the presentation of twelve claims is objectionable, because unnecessarily multiplied. In re Carpenter, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 110.

More verbal differences between the original claims of one of the parties to an interference and the claims of the issue will not preclude an award of priority to him. Furman v. Dean, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 277.

Effect of amending specifications.—Claims of a patent are to be taken as they read, and are not limited by an amendment of the specification more particularly describing the device shown in the drawings to meet objections of the Patent Office, where the claims themselves are left unchanged. Manhattan Gen. Constr. Co. v. Helios-Upton Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 785.

Changing or enlarging claim.—The law requires a patentee to define in his claim precisely what his invention is, and, when that has been done in plain terms, a court has no power to disregard such terms and either change or enlarge the claim by reference to the specification. Cincinnati R. Supply Co. v. American Hoist, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 322.

Inaccurate claim.—A claim which is inaccurate is not patentable. In re Creveling, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 530.

Indefinite claims.—On an appeal from a decision of the Commissioner of Patents rejecting certain claims of an application for a patent for a process of extracting aluminum and other metals, the invention disclosed in the application being the reduction of the metal-containing compound in a fused bath, or specifically the reduction of aluminum oxide fused with aluminum fluoride, it was held on a review of the claims that they were not warranted by the description in the application, and were too indefinite, and that the commissioner properly rejected them. In re Blackmore, (1909) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 338.

General language used in the claims of a patent relating to a limited field is merely general as to this limited field, and should not be held to render the claims indefinite because as a matter of literary composition the same language might be applied to some other field, if the public would not thereby be deceived. Hohmann, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Charles J. Tagliabue Mfg. Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 87.

Agreement of claims and description.—A patentee cannot read the specification into a claim for the purpose of changing it, or to escape anticipation or establish infringement, and much less can be read into it a feature not shown in either the specification or drawings. H. Mueller Mfg. Co. v. Glauber, (C. C. A. 1910) 184 Fed. 609.

Claim broader than description.—A broad claim in a patent cannot be based on a description in the specification that is specifically limited to a single device and does not present it as an example or a preferred structure. Excelsior Drum Works v. Sheip, (1909) 173 Fed. 312.

Rights determined by claim.—A patentee is bound by his claims, and cannot claim a broader invention than that which he has specifically described therein, even though he may have been entitled to make broader claims. Hardison v. Brinkman, (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 962.

A patent is not granted nor to be sustained by what the patentee may have done in fact, but only for what he particularly points out and distinctly claims. Harder v. U. S. Piling Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 463, affirming (1906) 149 Fed. 434.

When a claim of a patent is explicit, the courts cannot alter or enlarge it. Dey Time Register Co. v. Syracuse Time Recorder Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 111, affirming (1907) 152 Fed. 440.

An element not claimed therein cannot be read into a claim of a patent to impart to it patentable novelty. Simplex Railway Appliance Co. v. Pressed Steel Car Co., (1910) 177 Fed. 426.

A patentee cannot describe something to the world in his letters patent that means just that thing or its equivalent, and, having claimed that, claim in addition something not thus described and not equivalent. Chicago State Bank v. Hillman's, (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 732.

Description of useless device in combination as limiting claim.—The fact that the specification of a patent, in describing the invention, describes a device which is, in fact, entirely useless so far as contributing to the result is concerned, does not restrict the claims to a combination including such device as an element where it is not mentioned therein. Barnes v. Lingo, (1907) 151 Fed. 59.

Patent exceeding claims.—A claim for a mechanical or apparatus patent, otherwise invalid as an abstraction, will not be sustained by reference to the specifications, where it not only goes far beyond anything which is there suggested, but fails to refer to that which is admittedly a distinguishing feature of the invention on which its novelty is made to depend. Manhattan Gen. Constr. Co. v. Helios-Upton Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 785.

Special features not indicated.—In the construction of a patent the omission of the patentee to point out or refer in his specification or claims to a special feature which he subsequently maintains is the most important part of his invention is very significant, and should be carefully scrutinized. Stirling Co. v. Rust Boiler Co., (1906) 144 Fed. 849.

Intervention limited by claims.—The claim in a patent is the measure of the invention, and, while the specification may be referred to for the purpose of explaining any ambiguity in the claim, it cannot be referred to for the purpose of expanding or changing the claim. National Enameling, etc., Co. v. New England Enameling Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 151 Fed. 19, reversing (1905) 139 Fed. 643.

Scope of claims generally.—A patentee having described his invention and shown its principle, and claimed it in that form which perfectly embodies it, is, in contemplation of law, deemed to claim every form in which his invention may be copied, unless they are disclaimed. Albright v. Langfeld, (1904) 131 Fed. 473.

Where an inventor has placed his invention before the public in a form best fitted for practical use, and disclosed his conception of his invention, both in his description and in his claim, so as to accurately express his idea, he is entitled to the exclusive privilege of all other forms that can be embraced in the one claim, unless such other forms are disclaimed. Oehrle v. William H. Horstmann Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 487.

Estoppel as to matters not claimed.—When an inventor has made his claims he has dedicated to the public all other devices, combinations, and improvements manifest from his specification and claims, and is estopped by his patent from claiming a monopoly as to such devices, combinations, or improvements. O. H. Jewell Filter Co. v. Jackson, (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 340.

Intention to claim.—Where claims following the specification in a patent end with the words "substantially as described," the specification must be looked to in construing such claims which may be thereby limited or qualified. Scott v. Fisher Knitting Mach. Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 137.

It does not necessarily follow, from the fact that a claim of a patent describes a specific form of construction of a machine or part, that the inventor is limited to that form; but it depends on his expressed intention and the scope of his actual invention. Kings County Raisin, etc., Co. v. U. S. Consolidated Seeded Raisin Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 59.

Where an applicant's invention is a machine for covering eyelets, a claim by him of a machine for covering studs or lacing hooks is improperly made, where he does not point out in his description any modification of the machine by which it could be made to cover studs or hooks, and any such modification would not be a matter of mere mechanical skill. Neuberth v. Lizotte, (1909) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 329.

Invention narrowed.—Where a patentee has pointed out in his claims the precise construction that is to be regarded as his invention, by references to the drawings, his patent may properly be confined to such construction on an issue as to infringement. Schaum v. Riehl, (1903) 124 Fed. 320.

Claims too broad.—A patent cannot cover generally any and every means or method for producing a given result. American Steel, etc., Co. v. Denning Wire, etc., Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 108.

Where, in a press for making screw insulators, an essential element, to differentiate the prior art, is a rotary table or its equivalent to support the moulds and carry them in a fixed and predetermined path to and from other parts of the machine, by which the process involved is carried out, the specification of a "movable mould adapted to travel," although under some circumstances competent to imply a structural arrangement by which the mould is moved back and forth mechanically, in a predetermined way, between designated points, the specific means employed for doing so in the patent in suit being of the essence of the invention, a claim in which it is not made an element of the combination is invalid, as being too broad; or if, disregarding this, the omitted element is read into the claim as being implied, it will also be bad where, as here, it thereby duplicates another claim. Novelty Glass Mfg. Co. v. Brookfield, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 946, affirming (1908) 170 Fed. 830.

Claim must include complete invention.—The rule is that each claim of a patent covers a complete invention, and is in substance an independent patent. XXth Century Heating, etc., Co. v. Taplin, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 96.

Immaterial omissions.—The fact that a patentee described and claimed "a trestle consisting of two pairs of legs" pivoted as shown, whereas by the accepted definition a top piece is essential to constitute a trestle, does not render the claim invalid, where the meaning is plain, and the legs as shown are adapted to be used with any kind of a top piece to complete the trestle, as intended. Chicago Wooden Ware Co. v. Miller Ladder Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 541, 66 C. C. A. 517.

Claim for function or effect.—A claim of a patent is not invalid, as for a function and not a mechanism, because it claims generally a means for doing a certain thing, provided the mechanism is fully described in the specification, which must be read in connection with the claim, and as a limitation thereof, whether specifically referred to therein or not. Corrington v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 69.

Claims in an application for a patent are properly rejected by the commissioner as claims for functions or results, where, if allowed, they would cover means substantially different from those described, which might be discovered by another for accomplishing the same results. In re Gardner, (1906) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 249.

Recital of function.—If the claims of a patent are for means sufficiently specified and described in the claims and specifications, they are not invalidated as being for a function by a recital therein of the function to be performed or the result to be secured by such means. Continental Automobile Co. v. Spalding, (1910) 177 Fed. 693.

Process and apparatus.—While it is competent, when the circumstances permit it, for an inventor in describing a machine or apparatus which he has devised to make a claim for a process which his patented device is capable of carrying out, to entitle him to do so the process must be one capable of being carried out by other means, otherwise the claim is merely for a function of the machine; and, unless such other means are known or are within the reach of ordinary skill or judgment, the patentee is bound to point them out. American Lava Co. v. Steward, (C. C. A. 1907) 155 Fed. 731.

Where a process and an apparatus, while presumptively independent inventions, when construed with reference to R. S. sec. 4886, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 421, providing that inventions or discoveries may be either arts, machines, or composition of matter, are so dependent as to constitute a unitary invention, they may be claimed in the same application; but otherwise when they in fact constitute independent inventions. In re Frasch, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 25.

While an applicant for a patent, in describing a machine or apparatus which he has devised, may make claim for a process which his device is capable of carrying out, to entitle him to do so the process must be capable of being carried out by other means than by the operation of his machine, and, unless such other means are known or within the reach of ordinary skill and judgment, the applicant is bound to point them out; for, unless the public are informed by what other means the process can be carried out, the process to them is nothing less than the operation of the machine—in other words, the exercise of its functions—and the function of a machine is not patentable. In re White, (1908) 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 607.

Product only.—The Adams patent, No. 24,915, for "a tube or cylinder cast out of copper, and free from blowholes and other similar defects, when produced as herein stated," covered a product only, and not the process, and was void for anticipation, it being shown that other processes previously in use also produced sound copper tubes, although not so large a percentage as that described in the patent. American Tube Works v. Bridgewater Iron Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 16, 65 C. C. A. 636, affirming (1903) 124 Fed. 782.

Claims of pioneer invention.—A pioneer inventor is entitled to a generic claim, and may also include specific claims in the same patent, and in such case the broad claims are not, prima facie, to be restricted by reading into them the specific devices claimed in the narrower ones. Los Angeles Art Organ Co. v. Aeolian Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 880.

Operative device necessary.—Where a claim of a patent is for a combination, it must be for an operative combination; and if an element essential to make it operative is shown and described in the specification, but is omitted from the claim, it must be read into the claim. McCaslin v. Link Belt Machinery Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 393.

Defective method.—A claim purporting to cover a method cannot be regarded as patentable where it is lacking in one of the steps which, in accordance with the statement of invention, description, and drawings, are essential to the carrying out of the alleged method. In re Creveling, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 530.

Enumeration of elements.—Where one claim of a patent specifically names two elements, and another claim specifically names these two elements and in addition thereto a third element, it must be presumed that the patentee intended to limit the claims to the elements enumerated. Marshall v. Pettingell-Andrews Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 862, affirming (1907) 153 Fed. 579.

Element claimed conditionally.—A patent is granted for solving a problem, not for stating one, and a claim for a combination which embraces an element only in case it is made capable of being employed in the combination and without disclosing means of adapting it is invalid as disclosing nothing definite. Columbia Motor Car Co. v. Duerr, (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 893, reversing (1909) 172 Fed. 923.

All elements included material.—Where a patentee in a claim for a combination specifies any element as entering into the combination, he makes such element material to the combination, and it cannot be held immaterial by the court for the purpose of finding infringement. Avery v. J. I. Case Plow Works, (1905) 139 Fed. 878.

Every part of a combination claimed in a patent is presumed to be material to the combination, and in a suit for its infringement evidence to the contrary is not admissible. Automatic Switch Co. v. Monitor Mfg. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 983.

In patents for a combination if the patentee specifies any element as entering into the combination, either directly by the language of the claim or by such a reference to the descriptive part of the specification as carries such element into the claim, he makes such element material to the combination, and the court cannot declare it to be immaterial. Electric Protection Co. v. American Bank Protection Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 916, modifying (1910) 181 Fed. 350.

Construction of claims for improvements.—In construing improvement claims of a patent, consideration should be given to the character of the improvements introduced by the patentee and the change in the art attributable to them. When they result in converting imperfection into completeness, and in producing the first practically and commercially successful machine, however simple the change appears, the invention is entitled to liberal treatment by the courts. Wagner Typewriter Co. v. Wyckoff, (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 585, modifying (1905) 138 Fed. 108.

Improvement does not include whole device.—It is not necessary that a patent for specific improvements on a burglar alarm system should include as an element of the combination the burglar alarm system itself. American Bank Protection Co. v. Johnson City Nat. Bank, (1909) 181 Fed. 375.

Accepting narrowed claim.—The claims of a patent as allowed must be construed with reference to the action of the Patent Office thereon as the prior art; they are not affected by a mere change in the wording at the instance of the Patent Office which leaves the substance unchanged, but, if narrowed in scope, and so accepted by the applicant, he is bound thereby. Welsbach Light Co. v. Cremo Incandescent Light Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 1023, affirming (1906) 145 Fed. 521.

Where an applicant for a patent repeatedly acquiesced in the rejection of broad claims and substituted therefor narrower ones until his application was granted, the owner of the patent cannot be heard to insist that the narrower claims allowed shall cover the same as the broader ones rejected. St. Louis Street Flushing Mach. Co. v. American Street Flushing Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 574.

An applicant for a patent, who trims away, modifies, and otherwise defines his specification and claims to meet references made by the Patent Office, must be deemed to have surrendered and disclaimed what he conceded, and to have imposed such definitions upon the language of the patent as he attributed to it in order to secure the grant. American Stove Co. v. Cleveland Foundry Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 158 Fed. 978, reversing (1907) 157 Fed. 562.

Where an applicant for a patent contesting with others, and after repeated rejections, in order to obtain a patent at all bases his claim thereto on a "peculiar organization" of parts, and specifies and specifically names and locates those several parts, he is held to the peculiar organization so particularized, specified, and claimed. Safety Car Heating, etc., Co. v. Consolidated Car Heating Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 476.

Amendments to meet objections of Patent Office.—Where an applicant for a patent persisted in the basic idea on which he claimed invention, although amending his claim from time to time after rejections by the examiner as to details of construction in attempts to avoid references by the examiner, and his application was finally rejected by the examiner, but allowed on appeal, on the broad ground that such basic idea involved invention, such amendment did not limit the claim as finally allowed to the precise construction therein described. Gray Telephone Pay Station Co. v. Baird Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 417.

Where an applicant for a patent materially modifies a claim in accordance with a requirement of the Patent Office, it will not be construed as it would have been if it had not been so modified, even though the modification was made under protest, or the decision of the Patent Office was erroneous. Johnson Furnace, etc., Co. v. Western Furnace Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 819.

It is of the essence of the rule whereby an inventor is estopped from claiming to the full of his invention as disclosed by his specification and claims in consequence of his concessions to meet the requirements of the Patent Office, and so obtain his patent, that the requirements which were conceded by him should concern the matter on which the estoppel is raised, and whether the examiner states his objection, or contents himself with a reference, the estoppel does not extend to a matter not stated in the objection or disclosed by the reference. Vrooman v. Penhollow, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 296.

Claim rejected.—Where, after the granting of a patent for a process, an application filed by the same applicant at the same time for a patent on the resulting product was rejected by the Patent Office on the ground of lack of patentable novelty, because of more than two years' prior use, and the applicant acquiesced in such rejection, he is bound by the finding, at least as to want of patentable novelty, and his process patent must be construed as limited in accordance with such finding. Mica Insulator Co. v. Commercial Mica Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 90.

The fact that a claim in an application for a patent was rejected by the Patent Office and another substituted by the applicant does not preclude a broad construction of the claim as allowed, except as to features which were clearly surrendered by the substitution; and where the claim as allowed contained a new feature or element not contained in the original claim, such feature or element is entitled to the benefit of the doctrine of equivalents wholly unaffected by the rejection of the original claim. Sharp v. Physicians', etc., Appliance Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 424.

Acquiescence in rejection of claim.—A patentee who acquiesces in rejection of his claim is estopped from maintaining that an amended claim covers the combinations and devices shown in the references, or that it has the breadth of the rejected claim, but is not estopped from securing by an amended claim every improvement and combination he has invented that was not disclosed by the references on which his original claim was rejected. J. L. Owens Co. v. Twin City Separator Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 259.

Where a patentee acquiesces in the rejection of his claim, he is estopped from maintaining that an amended claim covers the combinations and devices shown in the first claim, or that it has the breadth of the rejected claim. Wayne Mfg. Co. v. Benbow-Brammer Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 271, affirming (1908) 157 Fed. 559.

Estoppel by acquiescence in rejection.—Where an applicant for a patent acquiesces in the rejection of claims presented, and amends the same or substitutes others to meet the objections of the Patent Office, he must be deemed to have surrendered and disclaimed what he thus conceded, and is bound by the limitations so imposed, and it is immaterial whether the office was right or wrong in rejecting the original claims. Campbell v. American Shipbuilding Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 498.

A patentee who originally sought broader claims which were rejected, and who acquiesced in such rejection, cannot insist on such a construction of an allowed claim as would cover what had been previously rejected. Automatic Switch Co. v. Monitor Mfg. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 983.

When an inventor seeking a patent for a broad claim acquiesces in the rejection of the same by the Patent Office and substitutes therefor a narrower one which is allowed, such claim must be construed with reference to the rejected claim and the prior state of the art, and will not be so interpreted as to cover either what was rejected by the Patent Office or disclosed by prior devices. Boss Mfg. Co. v. Thomas, (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 811.

A claim in a patent as allowed must be read and interpreted with reference to claims that have been rejected and to the prior state of the art, and cannot be so construed as to cover either what was rejected by the Patent Office or disclosed by prior devices. Cotto-Waxo Chemical Co. v. Perolin Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 267.

Estoppel by acquiescence in modification.— If a claim of a patent is itself so changed through action of the Patent Office as to limit it to a particular means for performing a function, acquiescence therein by the inventor estops him from claiming any different device as an infringement, and also acquiescence in the rejection of certain claims for "means" generally, and the allowance of claims describing specific means precludes a construction of such claims which would include other means. XXth Century Heating, etc., Co. v. Taplin, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 96.

A patentee who canceled all the original claims in his application on objections by the Patent Office, and substituted a new claim which was allowed, is estopped to claim a construction of such claim which would make it equivalent to those canceled. Langan v. Warren Axe, etc., Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 143.

Claims limited by estoppels in general.— While the courts will ascertain what contribution an inventor has made to the art to which his invention relates, and will protect him to the full extent of that contribution, due weight must be given to any estoppel which he has created by reason of anything done by him, or suffered to be done, either prior or subsequent to the issuing of his patent, which prevents him from claiming his invention in its entirety. Computing Scale Co. v. Automatic Scale Co., (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 238, affirmed (1907) 204 U. S. 609, 27 S. Ct. 307, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 645.

Part described not claimed.— An element not mentioned in a claim of a patent for a combination cannot be read into it, although it may appear in the specification; but if a claim includes an element in general terms and refers to the specification to identify it, such element may be read into the claim. Duncan v. Cincinnati Butchers' Supply Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 656.

Claims limited by specifications.— For the purpose of sustaining a patent, as where a nonpatentable principle or function appears to be claimed, but the specification shows that the patent was sought for a machine, device, or process which is patentable, the specification may be read into the claims, but not for the purpose of escaping anticipation or establishing infringement. General Sub-Constr. Co. v. Netcher, (1909) 167 Fed. 549.

A feature of a process not covered by the claims of a patent, but merely recommended in the specification, instead of being required or stated to be an essential part of the process, cannot be read into the claims. General Sub-Constr. Co. v. Netcher, (1909) 167 Fed. 549.

Feature not claimed.— Where an alleged element or characteristic feature of an invention is not necessarily inherent in the invention itself, the failure of the patentee to refer to it is persuasive evidence that it is not within the scope of his invention, and, not being disclosed to the public, it should not be read into the patent. Edison Gen. Electric Co. v. Crouse-Hinds Electric Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 437, reversing (1906) 146 Fed. 539.

Action of Patent Office as prior art.— The claims of a patent as allowed must be construed with reference to the action of the Patent Office thereon as the prior art; they are not affected by a mere change in the wording at the instance of the Patent Office which leaves the substance unchanged, but if narrowed in scope, and so accepted by the applicant, he is bound thereby. Welsbach Light Co. v. Cremona Incandescent Light Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 521.

The words "substantially as specified," at the end of a claim for a combination, refer to the whole claim, and import nothing into it not already there, either to narrow it so as to escape anticipation, or to broaden it so as to establish infringement. American Can Co. v. Hickmott Asparagus Canning Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 141, 73 C. C. A. 359.

Combination including new elements.— An inventor of a new and useful combination is not confined to his combination claims unless all of the elements are old; but if any of the elements are new and useful and show invention they may be claimed and patented either in a separate patent or by separate and distinct claims in the patent covering the combination, even though such parts are without utility save in combination with the other parts of the device. National Malleable Casting Co. v. American Steel Foundries, (1910) 182 Fed. 626.

General and specific claims.— Where a patent contains a general claim for a combination of certain elements, and a specific claim for a combination of a particular form or construction of an element of that combination with its other elements, the general claim is not limited to the particular form or construction of the element claimed in the specific claim, but protects the element and its mechanical equivalents, though they may differ from the form or construction claimed in the specific claim. J. L. Owens Co. v. Twin City Separator Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 259.

Limitation of claims.— Features of construction which the specifications of a patent recommend or describe as preferable do not thereby become essential parts of the patent or limitations of the claims. Smeeth v. Perkins, (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 285.

Limitation in one claim omitted from others.—Where a limitation expressly stated in some of the claims of a patent is omitted from others, it cannot be read into them to avoid a charge of infringement. Diamond Match Co. v. Ruby Match Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 127 Fed. 341.

Claim construed with description.—The specification of a patent which forms a part of the same application as its claims must be construed with the latter for the purpose of ascertaining the true meaning of the claims and the intent of the parties when they were made and allowed. O. H. Jewell Filter Co. v. Jackson, (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 340.

Ambiguous claims.—Where the meaning of the language used in the claims of a patent is doubtful, or is susceptible of two different constructions, the specification and drawings may properly be referred to for the purpose of ascertaining the true construction of the claims. Robins Conveying Belt Co. v. American Road Mach. Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 923, 76 C. C. A. 461, affirming (1905) 142 Fed. 221.

Part claimed not described.—Where, in an application for patent for an improvement in cans and powder boxes, the claim is for a combination of two closures, and such combination is held to have no patentable novelty, the applicant cannot successfully contend that he is nevertheless entitled to a patent, in that he has substituted a permanent for a movable perforated pivoted cap and that he makes a specific perforation at a specified point in the box or can. Even if such features are patentable, they should have been pointed out in the specifications, and the claims should have been limited to them. In re Seabury, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 377.

Enlargement of claims by construction.—Claims of a patent cannot be broadened by construction or elements imported into them for the purpose of giving them novelty or establishing infringement. Continental Automobile Co. v. Spalding, (1910) 177 Fed. 693.

Reference to figure in drawing.—The use in a claim of a patent of a letter of reference to the drawings which show a part composed of two pieces does not limit the patentee to a two-piece construction where it is not of the essence of the invention claimed. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Rosatto, (1908) 159 Fed. 729.

Knowledge of theory.—If the construction of a patentee effects the desired results, and they are beneficial, he does not lose the benefit of his invention because he may not have correctly understood the principles of its operation. Cleveland Foundry Co. v. Detroit Vapor Stove Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 131 Fed. 853.

Even where a theory is erroneously advanced by an inventor in his specifications to explain a patented process, the scope of the invention is not to be narrowed thereby, so as to preclude him from laying claim to other beneficial results. It is the process, not the theory, which is patented, and the inventor is entitled to all the benefits legitimately to be derived therefrom. U. S. Mitis Co. v. Midvale Steel Co., (1904) 135 Fed. 103.

Extent of patentee's rights.—Where a patented pump was designed primarily for use as an air pump, the fact that it may also be used as a combined air and water pump, or as a water pump, and that such uses are claimed, does not deprive the patentee, in determining invention, of the weight to be given to the merits which attach to the use of the pump as an air pump. Warren Steam Pump Co. v. Blake, etc., Steam Pump Works, (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 263, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 285.

A patentee who has sufficiently described and distinctly claimed his invention is entitled to every use to which his device can be applied, whether he perceived or was aware of all of such uses at the time he secured his patent or not. Acme Truck, etc., Co. v. Meredith, (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 124.

Particular advantage not claimed.—That a particular advantage of a patented device was not claimed or mentioned in the specification will not exclude it from the scope of the patent if it was necessarily achieved by the invention. Kellogg Switchboard, etc., Co. v. Dean Electric Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 991, affirming (1908) 168 Fed. 549.

Characteristics of device disclosed but not specifically claimed.—A patentee is entitled to the benefit accruing from a characteristic of his device which is clearly disclosed, although not specifically claimed. E. H. Angle Regulating Appliance Co. v. Aderer, (1909) 171 Fed. 93.

Machine capable of use not indicated in patent.—The rule applied that the fact that the machine of a patent is capable of a method of use not referred to nor indicated in the patent cannot be availed of to affect the construction of the claims. U. S. Peg-Wood, etc., Co. v. B. F. Sturtevant Co., (1903) 125 Fed. 378, 60 C. C. A. 244, affirming 122 Fed. 470.

Claim includes mechanical equivalents.—If there was no amendment narrowing a claim of a patent in respect to the essential feature of the invention disclosed therein, amendments made in reference to an incidental matter intended to perfect the claim or device impose no restriction on the rights of the patentee in respect to equivalents. Heywood Bros., etc., Co. v. Syracuse Rapid Transit R. Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 453.

In a combination patent for an improvement in the arrangement or adaptation of old elements, the inventor is not entitled to a broad interpretation of the doctrine of mechanical equivalents, so as to cover a device not specifically included in his claims and specification. Hardison v. Brinkman, (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 962.

The use of reference letters in a claim of a patent does not confine the claim to a part having all of the characteristics of that shown in the drawing, but it covers any equivalent of such part. Electric Candy Mach. Co. v. Morris, (1905) 156 Fed. 972.

The facts that the specification of a patent describes two forms of one element of the combination which may be used in the alternative, while a claim describes but one of such forms, does not preclude the patentee from invoking the doctrine of equivalents as to the alternative form. Whitin Mach. Works v. Houghton, (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 444.

Amendment of claims.—If an inventor comes to better understand the principles of his invention while his application for a patent is pending, an amendment of his claims to conform thereto does not introduce any original matter nor enlarge his invention, and is within his legal right. Cleveland Foundry Co. v. Detroit Vapor Stove Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 131 Fed. 853.

The settled limitation on the amendment of applications in respect of claims is that there must be a basis for them in the description and specifications of the application as originally filed. In re Duncan, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 457.

Improvements set up by amendment of claims.—A patentee is not estopped from maintaining and securing by an amended claim every improvement that he has invented that was not disclosed by the references on which his original claim was rejected. Wayne Mfg. Co. v. Benbow-Brammer Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 271, affirming (1908) 157 Fed. 559.

Additional claims by amendment.—The fact that a new claim was inserted in an application for a patent by the attorney for the applicant without any new oath does not render the patent invalid as to such claim, where it was within the invention described in the specification. Cutler-Hammer Mfg. Co. v. Union Electric Mfg. Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 266.

Additional applications for new claims.—While amendment of claims and the introduction of new claims are freely allowed, provided they are disclosed and there is proper basis for them in the original specifications or drawings, yet no such amendment or addition will be allowed when it involves new matter not so disclosed in the original application, as intervening rights of other parties may have accrued which may be affected by it; but an applicant advancing such claims is not precluded from presenting them in a new and distinct application, if he so desires. In re Scott, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 307.

Functions discovered after grant of patent.—A patentee is entitled to every function his device will perform, though he was ignorant of it when he procured his patent, but he secures no patent on the function, and the discovery of a new one in the patented device does not operate to enlarge or broaden the letter of his claim, which is the measure of his rights. Dunlap v. Willbrandt Surgical Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 151 Fed. 223.

Cancellation of one of several claims.—The cancellation of a claim in an application for a patent, while it is pending in the Patent Office, does not affect the validity of a retained claim which is substantially the same, although, if susceptible of two constructions, it will not be so construed as to cover the canceled claim. Bullock Electric Mfg. Co. v. Crocker-Wheeler Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 101.

Invention involving single feature of construction.—Where a patent depends for its novelty over the prior art on a single limited feature of construction, the claims cannot be expanded by any doctrine of equivalents to cover a device which lacks that single essential feature. Liberman v. Ruwell, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 590, affirming (1908) 165 Fed. 208.

Vol. V, p. 486, sec. 4889.

Patent Office drawings are not working drawings. Their object is to aid in conveying to one skilled in the art the idea of the inventor. Gold v. Gold, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 152.

Vol. V, p. 487, sec. 4892.

Insertion of new claim within invention.—An applicant for a patent may properly file new claims in the Patent Office without verification, where they are within the invention as disclosed in the specification and drawings, and narrower than the original claims. General Electric Co. v. Morgan-Gardner Electric Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 168 Fed. 52, reversing (1907) 159 Fed. 951.

New matter not sworn to.—The amended specification of the Dolan patent, No. 589,342, for a duplex acetylene gas burner or tip of the Bunsen type, having a series of inclined air passages in the sides, which, for the first time, if at all, indicates as the essence of the invention so short a chamber or cylinder as to prevent the mixing of the air taken into it, and to emit the current of gas, surrounded by the greater part of such air as an envelope or film, is void under this section, because introducing entirely new matter not sworn to, where the original application made no claim for a process, and disclosed no invention of a device. Steward v. American Lava Co., (1909) 215 U. S. 161, 30 S. Ct. 46, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 139, affirming (1907) 155 Fed. 731, 84 C. C. A. 157.

Vol. V, p. 488, sec. 4893.

No power to annul patent.—The Patent Office has no power to annul or vacate a patent duly issued. Mica Insulator Co. v. Commercial Mica Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 90,

Doubt as to patentability.—Where there is doubt as to whether or not an applicant's invention is patentable, the doubt will be resolved in his favor. In re Schraubstaedter, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 331; In re Eastwood, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 291.

Presumption as to knowledge and skill of examiner.—The examiners in a Patent Office, who are selected and appointed for their skill and scientific knowledge, will be presumed to have the requisite skill and knowledge to understand the use of, and the manner of using, the microscope in their work. Flora v. Powrie, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 195.

Effect of granting patent.—The validity of a patent which is regular on its face cannot be collaterally attacked in a suit for its infringement on the ground of irregularities in the proceedings in the Patent Office, as that the final fee was not paid within the six months required by the statute. Calculus Co. v. Wilson, (1904) 132 Fed. 20.

The grant of a patent raises a presumption that the device described and claimed therein is not an infringement of an earlier patent. Simplex Electric Heating Co. v. Leonard, (1910) 180 Fed. 763.

Damages for fraudulently procuring issuance of patent.—A complaint in an action to recover damages for the fraudulent procuring of a patent by defendants in the name of one of them for an invention alleged to have been made by plaintiff, held to state a cause of action on demurrer. Le Brocq v. Childs, (1908) 158 Fed. 412.

Vol. V, p. 488, sec. 4894.

Divisional application after final action on original application.—The provision of this section, before the amendment of 1897, that application shall be regarded as abandoned on failure of the applicant to prosecute the same within two years after any action thereon, does not apply where a divisional application was filed within two years after final action by the Patent Office on the original application. Duryea v. Rice, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 423.

Vol. V, p. 492, sec. 4895.

Application in name of inventor.—Whether an applicant for a patent has assigned his interest in his invention or not, the application must be prosecuted in his own name. Moore v. Heany, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 31.

Assignability of invention or discovery.—The discoverer or inventor has a kind of property right in his invention or discovery which he may transfer, either absolutely or to a limited extent. Pomeroy Ink Co. v. Pomeroy, (1910) 77 N. J. Eq. 293, 78 Atl. 698.

An inventor or his assignee has, before the issuance or allowance of a patent, an inchoate right of property in his invention and in a pending application for a patent, which he may assign, or with which he may deal, as an article of property. Richardson Shoe Machinery Co. v. Essex Mach. Co., (1911) 207 Mass. 219, 93 N. E. 650.

Single assignment as evidence of agreement

by employee to assign all inventions.—The fact that an employee assigned to his employer the right to patents applied for by him for inventions made in the course of his employment does not alone warrant an inference that he was bound by a contract to assign all such inventions, especially where his action is reasonably explained on other grounds. Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Hansen, (1904) 128 Fed. 444.

Parol agreement to assign right to patent.—A parol agreement to assign the right to obtain a patent for an invention is valid. Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Hansen, (1904) 128 Fed. 444.

Successive assignments.—A patent may be issued to an assignee of an inventor through mesne assignments, provided they are first entered of record in the Patent Office. Elliott-Fisher Co. v. Underwood Typewriter Co., (1909) 176 Fed. 372.

Vol. V, p. 493, sec. 4896.

Time for filing applications by guardian of insane person.—The guardian of an insane inventor is not allowed two years from the time the inventor became insane, but he must file his application within the two years allowed to the inventor himself. Jenber v. Bowen, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 558.

Vol. V, p. 494, sec. 4897.

Only one renewal application allowed.—Under this section only one renewal application may be made; and, even if more are allowable, the final application must be made within two years after the allowance of the first, otherwise a valid patent cannot issue thereon. Weston Electrical Instrument Co. v. Empire Electrical Instrument Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 90.

Abandonment of former application.—While, in the case of a renewal application, the intention of the party in allowing his former application to be forfeited may, under this section, be inquired into for the purpose of determining the question of abandonment, such inquiry must be directed to the abandonment of the invention claimed in the original application, and not to some other invention that may be described incidentally therein, and subsequently made the subject of a new application by the same party, and brought into interference. Saunders v. Miller, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 456.

Two years allowed for renewal application. — The Commissioner of Patents is without authority to issue a patent on an application filed more than two years after the allowance of a patent for the same invention on a prior application by the same party, which has been forfeited for nonpayment of fees. Weston Electrical Instrument Co. v. Empire Electrical Instrument Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 599, 69 C. C. A. 329, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 90.

Vol. V. p. 499, sec. 4904.

Interference defined. — An interference is a judicial proceeding carried on in the Patent Office, for the purpose of determining the question of priority between two or more parties, each of whom is seeking a patent for the same invention, or between two or more parties, at least one of whom is seeking a patent for an invention already covered by a patent which has not yet expired. Lattig v. Dean, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 591.

Effect of declaring interference. — While the Commissioner of Patents, during the pendency before him of an interference, may for cause appearing suspend the proceeding and refer the case back to the primary examiner for review of the question whether the interference was rightfully declared, the question whether one of the parties has a right to make the claim in issue is determined and becomes res judicata by the declaration of interference so far as the interference proceeding is concerned. Herman v. Fullman, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 259.

Necessity of patentability. — In the sense of the patent law, there can be no interference unless there is a patentable invention, and there are rival claimants of it. Lattig v. Dean, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 591.

Prior declaration of difference. — The fact that one of the parties to an interference had declared that his invention was different from that of the other party will not necessarily estop him from taking a contrary position in the interference proceeding, as there might be differences of detail between the two devices while they might be the same in substance. Furman v. Dean, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 277.

Second application pending interference. — In a case where a party whose application is involved in a pending interference presents another application based on the invention involved in the interference, he will be refused a patent on the later application until the interference has terminated. In re Wickers, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 71.

Application for reissue pending interference. — Claims in an application for reissue are properly disallowed by the Patent Office, when the subject-matter of them is embraced in a subsequent and pending application by the same party, which is in interference, and the purpose of the applicant for reissue is apparently to gain an advantage over his opponent in the interference proceeding. In re Lacroix, (1908) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 299.

Sole issue in interference. — Interferences are declared between applications rather than applicants, and are intended to disclose and determine which invention was first produced, not who has the title. Automatic Racking Mach. Co. v. White Racker Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 643; Westinghouse v. Hien, (C. C. A. 1907) 159 Fed. 936; Hillard v. Remington Typewriter Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 334; Lattig v. Dean, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 591.

Priority between parties only. — The question whether a senior party to an interference may be entitled to priority as against all persons is not at issue in the interference, but the question is whether the junior applicant has sustained the burden of establishing his own priority over that of his opponent. Prindle v. Brown, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 114.

Issue of patentability. — The question of the patentability of the claims of an interference is settled by the allowance of them by the Patent Office, and will not be considered by this court on an appeal from an award of priority by the commissioner. Dunbar v. Schellenger, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 129.

Right to patent. — Whether either of the parties to an interference will ultimately have a right to a patent under his pending application will not be determined in the interference proceeding, which involves solely the question of priority of invention. Gueniffet v. Wictorsohn, (1908) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 432.

Operativeness of invention. — Ordinarily the question of operativeness will not be considered by this court in an interference case. Lotterhand v. Hanson, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 372.

Res judicata. — The doctrine of res judicata does not apply so as to estop an applicant in interference from claiming against a previously granted patent of his adversary, where the record of the patent shows that the patentee had no right to make in his application the claims which are the issue of the interference. McKnight v. Pohle, (1907) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 92.

The question of the right of a party to make a claim in interference proceedings may sometimes be an ancillary question, to be considered in awarding priority of invention. Wickers v. McKee, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 4, 21, 28.

Issues construed in light of application. — The issues of an interference are to be construed in the light of the application of the party making the claims, and it is improper for the commissioner to read into them, for any purpose, limitations not disclosed in such party's application. Sobey v. Holsclaw, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 65.

Effect of dates in preliminary statement.—The sworn preliminary statements required when an interference has been declared constitute the pleadings of the parties, and they are to be held strictly to the dates given therein. Hammond v. Basch, (1905) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 469; Fowler v. Boyce, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 48; Neth v. Ohmer, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 319; Lowrie v. Taylor, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 522; Parkes v. Lewis, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 1.

The rule in interference cases, that the parties are limited to the dates set out in their preliminary statements, will not be ignored, with the consent of counsel, unless expressly approved by the Commissioner of Patents or his representatives—especially where it appears that leave was asked to file an amended preliminary statement and was refused. Fowler v. Boyce, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 55.

Effect of filing second application.—Where the application of one of the parties to an interference is only a division of an application theretofore filed, he is entitled to the filing date of his first application for the purposes of the interference. Hillard v. Brooks, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 526.

Reopening interference.—It is not error for the Commissioner of Patents to refuse to reopen an interference on the ground of newly discovered evidence, when the only effect of admitting such evidence would be to show that some of the counts were first invented by one not a party to the interference. Dunbar v. Schellenger, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 129.

Burden of proof.—The burden is on the junior party to an interference to overcome the earlier filing date of his adversary. Cherney v. Clauss, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 15; Fowler v. Dyson, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 52; Lowrie v. Taylor, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 522; Sobey v. Holsclaw, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 65; Gibbons v. Peller, (1907) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 530; Munster v. Ashworth, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 84.

A junior applicant in interference proceedings must, in order to overcome a decision against him, prove prior conception coupled with diligence, or prior conception and prior reduction to practice. Ball v. Flora, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 394.

In an interference case between an applicant and a patentee, where the applicant proves that he made patterns embodying certain counts of the issue before any date proved by the patentee, and the patentee asserts they were made from disclosures by him, but this is denied by the applicant, the burden is on the patentee to prove the disclosure, and if he fails to sustain it the applicant will be entitled to an award of priority of invention on those counts. Cherney v. Clauss, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 15.

Preponderance of evidence required.—The burden is on the junior applicant in interference to establish his right to a patent by a preponderance of the evidence. Smith v. Phelps, (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 358.

Uncorroborated evidence of inventor.—The practically uncorroborated evidence of the inventor himself cannot be accepted on an interference proceeding as proof of conception. French v. Halcomb, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 307.

Proof of priority beyond reasonable doubt.—An applicant in interference must prove priority beyond a reasonable doubt. Rolfe v. Hoffman, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 336; Anderson v. Wells, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 115; Orcutt v. McDonald, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 228; Bourn v. Hill, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 291; Shuman v. Beall, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 324, 329; Andrews v. Nilson, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 451.

Effect of disclaimer as to third persons.—The fact that, after interference proceedings had been declared between two applications for patents for the same device, one of the applicants entered a disclaimer in favor of the other, while not conclusive as to a third person, who may still show that such disclaiming party was the real inventor, it is strong evidence to the contrary, although, when the withdrawal is the result of a compromise in which the withdrawing party is given large privileges, it is not so significant as if the withdrawal was purely voluntary. Eck v. Kutz, (1904) 132 Fed. 758.

Inadvertent grant of patent.—A patent granted to a party to a subsequently declared interference, when granted inadvertently and on an application filed subsequently to that of the other party, will not, in the interference proceeding, avail the party to whom it is granted. Watson v. Thomas, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 65; Shaffer v. Dolan, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 79; Furman v. Dean, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 277.

Effect of decision as to issues in infringement suit.—On the question of fact whether one who conceived an invention and made drawings and a disclosure to others of the same was reasonably diligent in adapting and perfecting the same, the decision of the Patent Office tribunals and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in interference proceedings to which he was a party is entitled to great weight, if not absolutely controlling, in subsequent litigation between the same parties. Automatic Weighing Mach. Co. v. Pneumatic Scale Corp., (C. C. A. 1909) 166 Fed. 288, reversing (1908) 158 Fed. 415.

Language of claims not controlling.—An interference in fact, like the question of the validity of two patents issued to the same party, depends chiefly upon the subject-matter disclosed, and not merely upon the language of the respective claims. Blackford v. Wilder, (1907) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 535.

Identity of description as evidence of interference.—While the same language may be applied to two structures that are not the same, the employment of such identical language in two claims does not necessarily prove that there is an interference in fact. Podlesak v. McInnerney, (1906) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 399.

Maliciously procuring interference proceedings.—The action of a defendant in causing interference proceedings to be instituted and prosecuted in the patent office, thereby delaying the issuance of a patent to complainant, although malicious and for the purpose of obtaining the benefit and use of the invention in the meantime, does not give a right of action at law for damages. Avery v. J. I. Case Plow Works, (1908) 163 Fed. 842.

Vol. V, p. 501, sec. 4909.

Remand with leave to appeal.—Where, on appeal to the Commissioner of Patents from a decision of the examiners-in-chief rejecting an application for a patent, a new and additional claim is suggested, semble, that the proper procedure is for the applicant to request that his application be remanded to the examiner with leave to amend by inserting such claim as an additional one, or as a substitute for others. In re Garrett, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 19.

Ex parte cases.—The provision giving every applicant for a patent the right to have his claim twice rejected by the primary examiner applies only to ex parte cases, where the rejection following the first consideration has not afforded the applicant opportunity for hearing and argument. It does not confer on an applicant whose right to make a claim has been denied in an inter partes proceeding the privilege of contesting that question ex parte, after the adverse inter partes decision has been rendered. U. S. v. Moore, (1908) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 464.

Division required by examiner.—Where the primary examiner requires a division, under rule 41 of the Patent Office, of the process claims and the apparatus claims in an application for a patent, refusing to act on the merits of the application until the division is made, an appeal from his action to the examiners-in-chief does not lie; but his action may be reviewed on a petition to the commissioner under rule 45. U. S. v. Allen, (1903) 22 App. Cas. (D. C.) 56.

Rejection of claim.—A ruling by an examiner that an applicant for a design patent cannot have a certain claim, but must offer a claim suggested by the examiner, is in effect a rejection of the claim, and if repeated entitles the applicant to an appeal to the examiners-in-chief. In re Mygatt, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 366.

Rules of Patent Office relating to appeals.—An appeal from a decision of the primary examiner on a motion to dissolve an interference, holding that the party had the right to make the interfering claims, may be prohibited by the rules of the Patent Office without infringing the right of appeal in interferences given by this section and sections 482, 483, 4904, of the Revised Statutes, since the appeal therein provided for must be deemed limited to final decisions on the question of priority of invention, which, under these statutes, is the sole question for determination in interference cases. U. S. v. Allen, (1906) 203 U. S. 476, 27 S. Ct. 141, 61 U. S. (L. ed.) 281, 125 Off. Gaz. 2365, affirming (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 8.

Motion to transmit to primary examiner.—After an appeal from the decision of the examiners-in-chief, a motion to transmit an interference to the primary examiner will only be entertained by the Commissioner of Patents when it appears that a clear and unmistakable error has been committed in the prior decision. Parkes v. Lewis, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 1.

Nature of commissioner's functions.—The Commissioner of Patents, in all matters involving the validity and patentability of claims and priority of invention, exercises only an appellate jurisdiction; but in matters of practice and procedure, not involving the merits and final rejection of claims, he acts in his supervisory capacity as head of the Patent Office, and his action is final, and not reviewable on appeal. U. S. v. Allen, (1903) 22 App. Cas. (D. C.) 56.

Vol. V, p. 502, sec. 9.

Constitutionality.—The Commissioner of Patents, in passing on applications and deciding controversies between rival applicants for patent for the same invention, exercises a power that is essentially judicial; and for that reason Congress has the power to provide for a review of his decisions by appeal to the courts. Moore v. U. S., (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 597.

The jurisdiction of this court to entertain appeals in patent cases from the Commissioner of Patents is limited to two classes of decisions, namely, a final rejection of an ap- plication for a patent, and a final award of priority to one of the parties in an interference case. Cosper v. Gold, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 194, 198.

Refusal of examiners-in-chief to entertain appeal.—Although it is the better practice usually, in cases where the examiners-in-chief have erred in refusing to entertain an appeal, to require the Commissioner of Patents to direct them to entertain the appeal, yet in cases of general public interest, and where the case, if sent back, would undoubtedly come up again, this court will itself entertain an appeal from a decision of the commissioner upholding the action of the examiners-in-chief. In re Myatt, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 366.

Discretionary matters.—Rules of practice in interference cases are necessary and should not be disregarded; and this court does not sit to review the rulings of the Commissioner of Patents in discretionary matters, or decisions of the examiner of interferences, not lawfully appealed from. Jones v. Starr, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 64.

The Commissioner of Patents being vested with a discretion in determining whether or not to require a division of claims for a process and an apparatus, the Court of Appeals will not interfere when such discretion has been exercised except in cases of clear abuse. In re Frasch, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 25.

Whether leave shall be given to amend a preliminary statement is a matter that rests in the discretion of the Commissioner of Patents, and is not reviewable in the Court of Appeals, save possibly in a case of palpable abuse of that discretion. Neth v. Ohmer, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 319.

The exercise of the discretion of the Commissioner of Patents in granting or refusing a motion by one of the parties to an interference for leave to take the testimony of experts is not reviewable on appeal, especially where it appears that the party making the motion has not been prejudiced, in view of the fact that everything which he desired to prove has been admitted by his adversary. Weintraub v. Hewitt, (1910) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 487.

Retaking testimony.—The granting or refusal, by the Commissioner of Patents, of a motion by one of the parties to an interference for leave to retake testimony which had been suppressed for irregularities in taking it, is within the discretion of the commissioner, and is not such a decision as this court may review on appeal. As an interlocutory proceeding this court would not review it, and it is not one which should be reviewed as necessary or proper in connection with the final decision of priority. Jones v. Starr, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 64.

Sufficiency of affidavits filed in Patent Office.—The Court of Appeals will not consider affidavits filed therein or in the Patent Office relating to changes that may have occurred in the drawings, models, experimental machines, and like exhibits, as such matters must be wholly settled in the Patent Office. Greenwood v. Dover, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 251.

Amendment of preliminary statement.—Whether an amendment to a preliminary statement in an interference proceeding shall be allowed is discretionary with the Commissioner of Patents, and nothing less than an abuse of that discretion, causing a palpable miscarriage of justice, will warrant a review and a reversal of his action. Hammond v. Basch, (1905) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 460.

Questions not raised before commissioner.—Where, on appeal to the Commissioner of Patents from a decision of the examiners-in-chief rejecting an application for a patent, a new and additional claim is suggested by the applicant, but not acted on by the commissioner, the Court of Appeals on an appeal from his decision is not at liberty to pass on such claim. In re Garrett, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 19.

Where the tribunals of the Patent Office, without objection on the part of an applicant and apparently with his consent, treat claims substituted by him for his original claims as having been presented by way of amendment, in order to put the claims in better form for appeal, he will be considered as having waived an objection, for the first time made in this court, that the substituted claims were not substantially the same as the original ones, and therefore should have been referred back to the primary examiner for reconsideration. In re Heinz, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 187.

Comments on inutility of descriptive language.—Comment by the Commissioner of Patents, in his opinion on the rejection of an application for a design patent, on the inutility of the descriptive language contained in the applicant's specifications, cannot properly be made the ground of assignment of error by the applicant on an appeal to the Court of Appeals from a decision rejecting his application. In re Freeman, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 226.

Remanding cause for determination of questions reserved.—A mere suggestion by a party in interference to the effect that new references brought forward before the commissioner for the first time will show want of patentable novelty in the subject-matter of the controversy is not the equivalent of a reservation of the question of patentability by the commissioner, and a motion to remand the cause for the determination of the question cannot be allowed. Luger v. Browning, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 201.

Reissue of patent omitting interfering claims.—Where pending an interference between an application and a patent, the patentee applies for a reissue of his patent, omitting from his application the claims involved in the interference, and the reissue is allowed, the surrender of the original patent takes effect on the reissue, and a subsequent award of priority by the examiner of interferences being void, on an appeal by the patentee from the decision of the commissioner awarding priority to the applicant the appeal will be dismissed, as any judgment of priority of invention awarded would be equally void, and the case will be remanded to the Patent Office, to be dealt with as law and justice may require. Lattig v. Dean, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 591.

Decisions appealable.—The decision of the commissioner on appeal from a determination of the examiners in an interference case requiring a division of the process claims and apparatus claims on an application for a patent, and refusing to act on the merits of the application until the division should be made, does not involve the merits and final rejection of the claims and therefore is not reviewable by the Court of Appeals. U. S. v. Allen, (1903) 22 App. Cas. (D. C.) 56.

Review of discretion.—The exercise by the Commissioner of Patents of his discretion in refusing to reopen an interference case for the introduction of newly discovered evidence may be the subject of review and correction on appeal, when undoubtedly abused and productive of palpable injustice, especially when the question has been raised and decided by the commissioner along with the general question of priority. Dunbar v. Schellenger, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 129.

Decision not involving merits.—Under this statute a decision of the commissioner on appeal from the refusal to act on the merits of an application until the applicant makes a division of his process claims from his apparatus claims, as it does not involve the merits and final rejection of the claims, is final, and not reviewable by the Court of Appeals. U. S. v. Allen, (1903) 22 App. Cas. (D. C.) 56.

Assignments of errors.—An assignment of error by the appellant in an interference proceeding that there was irregularity in the declaration of the interference, consisting of the failure of the primary examiner to make formal allowance of the claims of the parties before declaring the interference, is without merit. Luger v. Browning, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 201.

Sufficiency of description in design case.—The question whether a description in a design case is a proper one is not reviewable in the Court of Appeals, except in an extraordinary case. In re Mygatt, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 366.

Interlocutory orders.—In an interference case, the Court of Appeals cannot review the rulings of the Patent Office on interlocutory matters that occurred in the Patent Office during the pendency of the case, such as motions for rehearing, motions to vacate orders and remand the cause, which have no reference to the merits of the controversy, unless, perhaps, in extreme cases it should be necessary for the maintenance of the jurisdiction of this court. Ritter v. Krakau, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 271.

An order dissolving an interference on the ground that one of the parties has no right to make the claims of the issue, being interlocutory, cannot be appealed from to this court, independently of a final decision putting an end to the litigation through an award of priority to the other party; but, when a final award has been made, the interlocutory order may be reviewed on an appeal from the final order, but not otherwise. Cosper v. Gold, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 194, 198.

Dissolving interference.—A motion to dissolve an interference in the Patent Office before the final hearing of the question of priority, and before the case is ready for such hearing, is an interlocutory proceeding, and is not appealable to the Court of Appeals unless made so by statute or sale of court. Allen v. U. S., (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 8.

Conclusiveness of decision of Patent Office.—An appellant in an interference case, who is the junior applicant, with the burden of proof therefore upon him, and who also has the unanimous concurrence of all the tribunals of the Patent Office against him, must make out a very clear case in this court. Luger v. Browning, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 201; Cobb v. Goebel, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 75; Orcutt v. McDonald, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 228; Lecroix v. Tyberg, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 596.

Where a party to an interference case is admittedly not entitled to an award of priority of invention, for the reason that in his preliminary statement he fails to allege conception prior to the filing date of his adversary, he will not be heard, on an appeal from an adverse decision of the commissioner, to question the patentability of the invention of the issue. Potter v. McIntosh, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 510.

The patentability of the issue in an interference proceeding is not a jurisdictional fact without which there can be no determination of priority of invention; and in such a proceeding this court will not review the action of the Patent Office in deciding that the issue is a patentable one, but will confine its consideration to the question of priority alone. Johnson v. Mueser, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 61.

Identity of invention.—A proceeding to dissolve an interference for want of identity of invention of the devices of the parties is collateral to the interference itself, and does not, as a general rule, enter into the consideration of the question of priority of invention when the interference is brought to the Court of Appeals. Luger v. Browning, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 201; Lecroix v. Tyberg, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 596.

In extreme cases, where palpable error has been committed, a decision of the Patent Office holding identity of invention between the devices of the parties to an interference may be reversed. But the court, although of opinion that error has been committed, may refuse to hold that there is no interference in fact, and may send the case back to the Patent Office for further consideration. Podlesak v. McInerney, (1906) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 399.

Except in extreme cases this court will not go behind the declaration of interference in order to determine the question of identity of invention; and such a case is not presented where it appears that the assignee and employer of the junior and unsuccessful party, after the latter saw his rival's application and drawings, filed the junior party's application, with specifications reading very much like those of the senior party. Bechman v. Southgate, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 405.

Operativeness of device.—On an appeal from a decision of the Commissioner of Patents in an infringement case, the question of the operativeness of the device cannot be considered by this court as an incident of the main question of priority. Duryea v. Rice, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 423.

Ancillary questions.—The decision of a primary examiner that a party to an interference has the right to make a claim which is the same as a count of the issue of an interference will be reviewed by the Court of Appeals as an ancillary question to be considered in awarding priority of invention. But where the examiners-in-chief and the commissioner have concurred in this decision, the court will not disturb their finding unless manifest error has been committed. Podlesak v. McInerney, (1906) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 399.

The "reasons of appeal," in a patent appeal, are in the nature of the ordinary assignments of error in actions at law or in equity. Horine v. Wende, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 415.

Amendment of notice of appeal.—A reason of appeal filed in the Patent Office with the notice of appeal to this court may be amended so as to make it more specific, or to remedy some inadvertence in its preparation, if the amendment is made in due time and no injury is done the opposing party. Horine v. Wende, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 415.

Vol. V, p. 505, sec. 4912.

Indefinite assignment.—An assignment of errors on an appeal from a decision of the Commissioner of Patents, that the commissioner "erred in many material respects," will not be considered. In re Frasch, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 25.

Failure to assign error.—Where an appel-

Right of party not appealing.—Where one of three parties to an interference fails to appeal from a decision of the examiners-in-chief of the Patent Office adverse to him, so that under rule 132 of the Patent Office his claims which were involved in the interference stand finally rejected, he can have no standing in the Court of Appeals on an appeal by one of the other parties from the commissioner's decision. Fowler v. Boyce, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 48.

Rules of Patent Office binding on court.—The Court of Appeals on appeal in the Patent Office in interferences is bound by the rules lawfully established for the taking of testimony in such cases. Lowrie v. Taylor, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 522.

No appeal to Supreme Court.—Rousseau v. Brown, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 73.

lant in an interference case, in his assignment of errors, does not challenge the decision of the Commissioner of Patents on the question of priority of invention, he will, to that extent, be presumed to have acquiesced in the decision against him. Bechman v. Southgate, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 405.

Vol. V, p. 506, sec. 4914.

Conclusiveness of Patent Office decisions generally.—Ordinarily, in an interference case, the decision of the Patent Office in respect of the identity of the inventions of the parties will be accepted by this court as conclusive, especially where the invention is one of elaborate and complicated mechanism; but in extreme cases, where palpable error has been committed, such a decision may be reversed, and, under certain circumstances, a decision of the commissioner will be reversed where one party has been permitted to broaden his application for a specific invention into a generic one, and thereby dominate another and different specific invention contained in the later application of another. Seeberger v. Dodge, (1905) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 476.

Ordinarily in a technical case this court will accept the views of the expert tribunals of the Patent Office, but if it is apparent that those tribunals are not in harmony on controlling questions involved, or if the court is satisfied that an incorrect conclusion has been reached, it will consider the case afresh. Arbetter v. Lewis, (1910) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 491.

Concurrent decisions of Patent Office tribunals.—The burden to sustain his claim is on a party to an interference who appeals to the Court of Appeals, where he is the junior applicant, and also comes here with the concurrent decisions of all the tribunals of the Patent Office against him. Harris v. Stern, (1903) 22 App. Cas. (D. C.) 164; Talbot v. Monell, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 108, 112; Murphy v. Meissner, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 260; In re Adams, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 275; Thibodeau v. Hildreth, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 320, 323; Ball v. Flora, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 394; Cleveland v. Wilkin, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 311; Turnbull v. Curtis, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 567; In re Duncan, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 457; Wickers v. McKee, (1907) 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 4, 21, 28; In re Blackmore, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 434; Daggett v. Kaufmann, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 450; Woodbridge v. Winship, (1909) 33 App. Cas. (D. C.) 490; Gold v. Gold, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 229; In re Gold, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 239.

Decision of question of fact.—The Court of Appeals will not overrule the concurrent findings of the three Patent Office tribunals, that certain evidence of one of the parties to an interference proves a disclosure. Fowler v. McBerty, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 41, 46; O'Connell v. Schmidt, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 77; Orcutt v. McDonald, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 228; Bourn v. Hill, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 291.

Affirmance on motion.—A case must be a very clear one to justify an appellate court in affirming a decision of the Commissioner of Patents on motion and in advance of the hearing on the printed record. Jones v. Starr, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 64.

Remand to Patent Office for proof.—A motion in the Court of Appeals by the appellant in a patent interference case to remand the case to the Commissioner of Patents in order that it might be reopened in the Patent Office for the introduction of newly discovered evidence, and also for the allowance of the filing of an amended preliminary statement by the appellant, denied; the Commissioner of Patents having denied a similar motion. Richards v. Meissner, (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 305.

Evidence not offered before commissioner.—Where, in an interference case, exhibits are offered in evidence on which to predicate a reduction to practice, and they are lacking in one or more elements of the issue, the necessary elements in them cannot be supplied by this court unless warrant for such finding is found in the record. Robinson v. Seelinger, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 237.

Failure to include testimony in record.—Where the record, on appeal in an interference case, does not contain the testimony, but only the assignments of error and the decisions of the Patent Office tribunals, it will be assumed that the decision of the commissioner was correct, and it will be affirmed.

Vol. V, p. 507, sec. 4915.

Effect of other Acts.—This section, so far as it relates to the remedy in equity in interference cases, was not repealed by Act Feb. 9, 1893, ch. 74, sec. 9, 27 Stat. L. 436, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 502, the only effect of such Act being to require the applicant to exhaust his remedy in the direct proceedings by an appeal from the decision of the commissioner before being entitled to proceed in equity. McKnight v. Metal Volatilization Co., (1904) 128 Fed. 51; Dover v. Greenwood, (1906) 143 Fed. 136.

The broad scope of this section was in no way limited or qualified by the Act of 1893, providing for appeals from the decision of the Commissioner of Patents to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Prindle v. Brown, (C. C. A. 1907) 155 Fed. 531, reversing (1905) 136 Fed. 616.

Necessity of appeal in interference case before filing bill.—An applicant for a patent, who failed to appeal from the adverse decision of the commissioner to the Court of Appeals, as provided by the Act of 1893, cannot maintain a suit in equity to obtain a patent. Prindle v. Brown, (1905) 136 Fed. 616.

Nature of proceeding.—A suit by an unsuccessful applicant to compel the issuance of a patent to him under this section is not an appeal from the proceedings in the Patent Office or the decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, but is one of original equity jurisdiction. Appert v. Brownsville Plate Glass Co., (1904) 144 Fed. 115.

A suit brought under this section to obtain the issuance of a patent is not revisory, but an original suit in equity; and testimony taken in interference proceedings before the Patent Office, although between the same parties, is incompetent and inadmissible, unless a foundation is laid for its introduction as secondary evidence. Dover v. Greenwood, (1907) 154 Fed. 854.

A suit to obtain the issuance of a patent is a plenary suit in equity, to which all the rules of practice and evidence in such suits apply, and a party cannot be deprived of the right given him by equity rule 67 to cross-

Goldberg v. Halle, (1909) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 183.

Dismissal of appeal.—An appeal from the decision of the Commissioner of Patents will not be dismissed because the appellant has availed himself of all the time allowed by the rules for taking and perfecting his appeal, although by so doing he necessarily prevents the hearing of the appeal until after the summer recess of the court. Jones v. Starr, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 64.

Where the appellant does not appear when the case is called for argument and no brief has been filed in his behalf, a motion by the appellee to open the cause and affirm the decision of the Commissioner of Patents in an interference proceeding must be granted in accordance with rule 8, sec. 9. Peckham v. Price, (1906) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 556.

examine opposing witnesses by the introduction of the proofs taken in interference proceedings, unless a showing of necessity is made for their introduction as secondary evidence. Dover v. Greenwood, (1910) 177 Fed. 946.

Refusal of Court of Appeals to consider testimony suppressed in Patent Office.—Where, in an interference case, the Court of Appeals refused to consider the testimony of the appellant which had been suppressed in the Patent Office, and affirmed a decision of the commissioner awarding priority to the appellee on the record dates of the parties, the appellant still had a remedy in this section, and, if there successful, could invoke relief under section 4918. Jones v. Starr, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 64.

Formal action refusing application.—An applicant for a patent, against whom adverse decisions have been rendered in interference proceedings by the examiners and commissioner of the Patent Office and by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia on appeal, whose decision governs the further proceedings in the case in the Patent Office, may maintain a bill in equity in a Circuit Court without waiting for the formal action of the Patent Office refusing his application. McKnight v. Metal Volatilization Co., (1904) 128 Fed. 51.

Effect of decisions in Patent Office.—Where the question which of two applicants for a patent for the same invention was the true inventor depends on questions of fact, the court, in a suit by the unsuccessful applicant to compel an issuance of the patent to him, must be very clearly satisfied that the decision of the Patent Office tribunals was erroneous before it will be justified in reversing the same. Gillette v. Sendelbach, (1906) 140 Fed. 758, 77 C. C. A. 55.

Where there has been a contest as to priority of invention between two applicants for patents before the Patent Office and the Court of Appeals, both of which tribunals have decided in favor of the same contestants, and the unsuccessful party has instituted a suit in equity to relitigate his right, he begins his controversy in that court with a prima facie case against him which he must overcome by such a weight of evidence as to carry thorough conviction to the mind of the judge, and his right to a preliminary injunction in such suit to restrain the defendant from paying his final fee and obtaining a patent is seriously questionable; and in any event such an injunction should not be granted without a clear showing that irreparable injury will otherwise result to complainant. Richards v. Meissner, (1906) 158 Fed. 109.

In a suit under this section the decisions of the Patent Office and the Court of Appeals adjudging priority of invention to the defendant are presumptively correct only, and that presumption is destroyed by proof that they were based on false and perjured evidence. Laas v. Scott, (1908) 161 Fed. 122.

The decision of the Patent Office and the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in interference proceedings, awarding priority of invention to one of two applicants for a patent, is controlling as to such question of fact as between such parties in a subsequent suit brought under this section, unless the contrary is established by evidence which carries thorough conviction. Richards v. Meissner, (1908) 163 Fed. 957.

In a suit under this section by an unsuccessful applicant for a patent to establish his right, where in interference proceedings before the Patent Office between complainant and defendant all of the examiners who passed upon the matter, the commissioner, and the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia concurred in adjudging priority of invention to defendant, who was awarded a patent, such judgments can only be overcome by clear and convincing proof, which strongly outweighs that of the other side in the interference proceedings. Western Electric Co. v. Fowler, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 224.

Unexplained laches and delay in filing bill.—Allegations in a bill to obtain a patent, filed more than a year after the patent was refused, held insufficient to show that the delay was "unavoidable," within the meaning of R. S. sec. 4894, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 488. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Ohio Brass Co., (1911) 186 Fed. 518.

Delay in prosecuting suit.—Mere delay in the prosecution of a suit to obtain the issuance of a patent, incident to the death of the complainant and which is acquiesced in by the adverse party, will not operate as an abandonment or preclude the court from reviving and proceeding with the suit on application of complainant's administrator. Schmertz Wire-Glass Co. v. Pittsburgh Plate-Glass Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 73.

Citizenship as affecting jurisdiction.—Under this section the Circuit Court has exclusive jurisdiction, regardless of the citizenship of the parties or the amount in controversy, and such a suit may be brought in any district where valid service can be had on the defendant. Lewis Blind Stitch Co. v. Arbetter Felling Mach. Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 974.

Jurisdiction where conflicting interests are united.—The fact that pending a suit under this section between two applicants for patents, the interests of the two litigants is united, does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to proceed to a decree adjudging the right of the prior inventor to a patent. Schmertz Wire-Glass Co. v. Pittsburgh Plate-Glass Co., (1909) 168 Fed. 73.

Commissioner as party in interference case.

—A bill filed against an adverse party to obtain the issuance of a patent, and which also joins the Commissioner of Patents as a defendant to compel the granting of a reissue, which is an ex parte matter, is multifarious. Gold v. Gold, (1910) 181 Fed. 544.

Assignee as complainant.—Where an applicant for a patent has made an absolute assignment of his rights in the invention, the right to bring a suit in equity to obtain issuance of the patent is vested in the assignee. Smith v. Thompson, (1910) 177 Fed. 721.

Averment of priority of invention.—A bill which states the date of an application for a patent is not to be held to state that the invention was then first completed or reduced to practice unless nothing is alleged showing invention prior thereto, and a further allegation that the invention was made prior to such date covers the fact of reduction to practice, and is sufficient to carry the date back of the application. Prindle v. Brown, (C. C. A. 1907) 155 Fed. 531, reversing (1905) 136 Fed. 616.

Power to annul a patent.—A suit under this section is for the purpose of establishing complainant's right to a patent which has been refused by the Patent Office; and where such patent was granted to the defendant after interference proceedings complainant is not entitled in such suit to introduce evidence to prove that the patent is void for anticipation, an issue which was not, and could not have been, tendered by the bill. Richards v. Meissner, (1908) 162 Fed. 485, disapproving (1907) 155 Fed. 135.

Right to decree on default.—In a suit in equity to obtain a patent, application for which has been refused by the Patent Office and the appellate tribunal, the complainant is not entitled to a decree adjudging his right to a patent as a matter of course on default by the defendant, but must establish such right, including the patentability of his alleged invention by proofs, and where the defendant has entered an appearance although in default for want of pleading, he is entitled to notice before final decree is entered. Davis v. Garrett, (1907) 152 Fed. 723.

It is not the object of this statute to encourage or permit the insertion of claims in a reissue application which involve an impracticable mode of operation, or which are obviously inserted for the sole purpose of appropriating claims of other inventors. Otis v. Ingoldsby, (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 102.

Protection of meritorious inventions.—Where a patented device has won a position of unchallenged supremacy in the commercial world, a court should endeavor to sustain the patent rather than defeat it. Consolidated Rubber Tire Co. v. Firestone Tire, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 237, affirming (1906) 147 Fed. 739.

Conclusiveness and effect of decision of Patent Office.—Granting the reissue of a patent raises a presumption that proper ground therefor was shown, and the courts will not review the decision of the commissioner unless unsupported by the record. Chicago R. Equipment Co. v. Perry Side Bearing Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 968.

Findings by the commissioner that a legal condition exists and is available to authorize the granting of a reissue are conclusive in so far as they depend upon credibility and weight of evidence, but in so far as they depend upon the legal interpretation and effect of admittedly genuine documents or other undisputed evidence they are reviewable in court. General Electric Co. v. Richmond St., etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 178 Fed. 84.

The ruling of the Patent Office on an application for reissue that the failure of the patentee to include certain features of his invention was due to accident, inadvertence, or mistake cannot be reviewed by the courts on the facts. Asbestos Shingle, etc., Co. v. H. W. Johns-Manville Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 620.

Effect of applicant's oath.—The oath of an applicant, filed with his application for a reissue, should count for something, and cannot be entirely ignored, but must be traversed by the Patent Office. In re Briede, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 298.

Unreasonable delay.—A patentee who is entitled to a reissue is required to exercise his right promptly on the discovery of the error which renders such reissue necessary, and where he continues litigation for years in various courts on his original patent, after it has once been adjudged invalid, he will be deemed to have elected to stand on such patent as the measure of his rights, and cannot thereafter obtain a valid reissue. Milloy Electric Co. v. Thomson-Houston Electric Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 843, 78 C. C. A. 533.

An application for a reissue with broader claims is properly rejected, when made six years after the grant of the patent, the claims of which were not difficult to be understood, during which period it was subject to several transfers, and when the only excuse for the delay is the uncorroborated statement of the applicant that he was unaware of the narrow scope of his claims until an infringement case was decided adversely to him. In re Starkey, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 519.

Delay incident to nonresidence.—The lapse of seven months between the issue of an ordinary patent and an application for a reissue does not constitute undue delay or laches on the part of the inventor, where both he and his attorney reside abroad and are unfamiliar with the English language and with the requirements of our patent laws. In re Briede, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 298.

Discovery of defects.—Where a patentee, on obtaining information of prior foreign patents and becoming convinced that some claims of his patent had inadvertently been made too broad, promptly applied for a reissue, which did not broaden the invention claimed, and no rights are shown to have intervened, the fact alone that the application was not made for seven years after the granting of the original does not render the reissue invalid. Sirocco Engineering Co. v. B. F. Sturtevant Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 378.

A reissue patent on an application filed as soon as the patentee discovered that his original claims had inadvertently been made too broad, and which narrows them to his actual invention, is valid. Geneva Mfg. Co. v. National Furniture Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 662.

Waiting final result of litigation.—The owner of a patent which has been declared void by the decision of a Circuit Court of Appeals cannot thereafter continue litigation thereon for years in other circuits, and, if finally defeated, then apply for and obtain a valid reissue. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Western Electric Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 813.

Where a suit on a patent was commenced within fifteen months after its issue, and within ten days after it was adjudged invalid by the Circuit Court of Appeals a reissue was applied for which narrowed the scope of the original patent, and it appeared that a decision as to the validity of the original patent was reasonably necessary to establish the necessity for a reissue, the application therefor was made within a reasonable time. Conroy v. Penn Electrical, etc., Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 299.

Reissue held invalid for laches.—Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Sterling-Meaker Co., (1907) 150 Fed. 589 (three years after adjudication of invalidity of original patent).

Identity of invention necessary.—A reissue patent cannot be issued for an invention other than the one actually described in the original patent. Morse Chain Co. v. Link Belt Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 825; In re Briede, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 298; In re Hoey, (1906) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 416.

A reissue patent must be for the same invention as the original patent, and cannot include a feature which was withdrawn on the original application to meet a requirement of the Patent Office, or in the rejection of which by the Patent Office the applicant acquiesced. Franklin v. Illinois Moulding Co., (1904) 128 Fed. 48.

The Weston reissued patent, No. 11,250 (original No. 433,637), for an electrical measuring instrument used for measuring the difference of potential between the terminals of an alternating current circuit, while disclosing patentable invention in so proportioning the parts of the apparatus as to reduce the effect of self-induction to a negligible quantity, is invalid as a reissue because the description in the original patent fails to show such invention, or that it was intended to be secured thereby. Weston Electrical Instrument Co. v. Stevens, (1904) 134 Fed. 574, 67

C. C. A. 374, reversing (1902) 119 Fed. 181.

A patentee is not entitled to claim in a reissue a feature of the device not claimed in the original patent as a part of his invention, although it was incidentally shown or indicated in the drawings. Marvel Buckle Co. v. Alma Mfg. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 1002.

Authority to grant reissue patents is derived exclusively from this statute, and the commissioner goes beyond his jurisdiction if he grants a reissue for an invention other than the one disclosed and described in the original patent, which, by reason of inadvertence, accident, or mistake, is inoperative to secure the monopoly it shows on its face was intended to be secured. Moneyweight Scale Co. v. Toledo Computing Scale Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 826, affirming (1910) 178 Fed. 557.

The question whether two patents are for the same invention is one of law, to be determined by a comparison of the documents themselves, no extrinsic evidence being necessary, and hence the decision of a Circuit Court of Appeals holding the later patent void for double patenting, although rendered on an appeal from an interlocutory order granting a preliminary injunction, is in effect a final decision for the purpose of advising the owner of the invalidity of the patent, and any delay thereafter in applying for a reissue for the purpose of curing such invalidity is at his peril. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Western Electric Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 813.

Necessity of reissued patent.—The Commissioner of Patents is without jurisdiction to grant a reissue in lieu of an original patent, unaltered save by the addition of enlarging claims, and where the original described and illustrated by its drawings an operative machine which was fully covered and protected by its claims. McDowell v. Ideal Concrete Machinery Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 814.

For statutory defects only.—To authorize the Commissioner of Patents to grant a reissue, either the original specification must be defective or insufficient, or the original claims must embrace more than the patentee had a right to claim as new. General Electric Co. v. Richmond St., etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 178 Fed. 84.

Mistaken limitation of claims.—The remedy for a mistaken limitation in the claims of a patent is by a reissue and not by construction. Dey Time-Register Co. v. W. H. Bundy Recording Co., (1909) 169 Fed. 807.

Adjudication of invalidity of patent.—An adjudication of invalidity of a patent for lack of patentable invention held not to entitle the patentee to a reissue. Penn Electrical, etc., Co. v. Conroy, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 511, reversing (1910) 181 Fed. 697.

Enlargement of invention.—A reissue patent applied for, not for the purpose of narrowing the original patent because the patentee had claimed too much, but for the purpose of giving a broader monopoly, and the claims of which as recast have that effect, is unauthorized and void. General Electric Co.

v. Richmond St., etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 178 Fed. 84.

Broadened claims.—A patentee may extend his claims by a reissue, when the invention remains the same and there is no material change in the drawings and specification. Universal Caster, etc., Co. v. M. B. Schenck Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 344.

Where the claims of a patent are narrower than the real invention, the error or mistake cannot be corrected by inserting the broader claims in a subsequent patent for improvements on the first, but only by a reissue. Union Typewriter Co. v. L. C. Smith, etc., Typewriter Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 966, affirming (1909) 173 Fed. 288.

On an application for a reissue of a patent on the ground that, by mistake, the claim of such patent does not fully cover the actual invention, where it appears that the same invention is set forth in the specifications and claims of the original patent, that the applicant has exercised due diligence in discovering his mistake and returning to the Patent Office, that there are not intervening rights, and that there is no fraud, a reissue with a broader claim is permissible. In re Briede, (1906) 27 App. Cas. (D. C.) 298.

To warrant new and broader claims in a reissue, such claims must not be merely suggested or indicated by the original specifications, drawings, or models; but it must further appear from the patent that they constitute parts of the invention which were intended to be covered by the patent. Nelson v. Felsing, (1909) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 420.

Patent enlarged to correct mistakes.—A patent will not be reissued for the mere purpose of enlarging a claim, unless there has been a clear mistake, inadvertently committed, in the wording of the claim. If the description in the reissue application finds no real support in the original application, a case for reissue is not made. Otis v. Ingoldsby, (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 102.

Omissions by mistake of solicitor.—The failure of the solicitors for an applicant for a patent to present claims which adequately cover the invention disclosed by the specification and drawings is an inadvertence which may entitle him to a reissue. Moneyweight Scale Co. v. Toledo Computing Scale Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 826, affirming (1910) 178 Fed. 557.

Inadvertence of solicitor.—The inadvertence of the solicitors of an applicant for a patent is his inadvertence, and, on the other hand, their erroneous judgment in submitting to the rejection of claims is his erroneous judgment, and he is estopped from presenting any of such rejected claims in an application for a reissue. Moneyweight Scale Co. v. Toledo Computing Scale Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 826, affirming (1910) 178 Fed. 557.

Parts described and not claimed in original.—A reissued patent must be confined to the invention which was intended to be secured by the original patent. Devices or parts which, although described or shown in the specification or drawings of the original patent, were not a part of the invention, as therein disclosed, cannot be covered by a reissue.

U. S. Whip Co. v. Hassler, (1905) 134 Fed. 398.

Terms defined by patent.—Where a term is defined in a patent, that is the construction to be given it, rather than the definition found in the dictionaries; and held, therefore, in a patent for the interior fire-finishing of the glass article which provides that it is to be subject to the fire blast when in a "plastic" condition, by this term according to the patent is meant before the imperfections imparted to the inner surface of the mold by the plunger have become permanent by the formation of a glaze. Blair v. Jeannette-McKee Glass Works, (1908) 161 Fed. 355.

Process and product.—A patent for the product of a process is for the same invention as the process itself, and a reissue of a process patent, containing a new claim for the product, is not a departure from the original invention. Asbestos Shingle, etc., Co. v. H. W. Johns-Manville Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 620.

Reissue for machine instead of product.—Where an original patent was for a method and held invalid because broader than the invention, a reissue covering a machine by which such method, and only that, can be practiced, is not invalid as not for the same invention. Conroy v. Penn Electrical, etc., Co., (1909) 173 Fed. 299.

Validity of reissued patents.—The presumption that new matter found in the specification of a reissue patent was omitted from the original through inadvertence or mistake, arising from the fact of the granting of the reissue, is prima facie only, and merely places the burden of proof upon a defendant contesting the validity of the reissue. Franklin v. Illinois Moulding Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 58, affirming (1904) 128 Fed. 48.

Even though the changes in description in the specification of a reissued patent are not material, and the claims are identical with some of those of the original patent, such facts do not impeach their validity. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Black River Traction Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 759, 68 C. C. A. 461, reversing (1903) 124 Fed. 495.

Unless the court can find that the invention of a reissue is described as the invention in the original patent, and that the patentee intended to secure it as his invention in the original, the reissue is not for the same invention, and is invalid. Chicago R. Equipment Co. v. Perry Side Bearing Co., (1909) 170 Fed. 968.

Construction and operation generally.—A reissued patent takes the place of the surrendered patent, and is a new grant for the unexpired part of the term of the original patent, which, from the time when its surrender takes effect, is extinguished and legally dead. No rights can be predicated on it. All pending suits brought on it fall. No judgment of any nature can thereafter be based on it. Lattig v. Dean, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 591.

Where the drawings and descriptions of a reissue patent are identical with those of the original, the validity of claims of the original, which are repeated and separately stated in the reissue, is not affected by the invalidity of other claims, nor by the fact that the reissue itself was unauthorized. Rawson, etc., Mfg. Co. v. C. W. Hunt Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 239, 77 C. C. A. 381, reversing (1905) 140 Fed. 716.

Where a patentee, pending a suit for infringement, applies for a reissue on the ground that the specification of his patent is insufficient, and such reissue is granted, he is estopped to claim that the specification was sufficient, or to further maintain the suit for the infringement of the patent. Coffield v. Fletcher Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 321.

Persons who after the date of a reissue patent sell the articles covered thereby become infringers, although they had lawfully sold them prior to the reissue by reason of an omission which was thereby corrected. Coffield Motor Washer Co. v. A. D. Howe Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 668.

Collateral attack.—From the reissue of a patent it is to be presumed that the law was complied with, and the proceedings can only be impeached for fraud. John Kitchen, Jr., Co. v. Levison, (C. C. A. 1911) 188 Fed. 658.

Effect of surrender generally.—A patentee cannot claim rights under a patent which he has surrendered to obtain a reissue. Franklin v. Illinois Moulding Co., (1904) 128 Fed. 48.

Vol. V, p. 523, sec. 4917.

Purpose of disclaimer.—The purpose of a disclaimer after issue is to take out of a patent that which has been mistakenly or inadvertently included in it, by which it is made too broad. It must be of some distinctive and separable matters, and may be made use of to avoid the effect of having included more devices than could properly be the subject of one patent, or to remove an ambiguity. Matters so disclaimed cease to be a part of the invention, and the patent is to be construed as though they had never been included in it. They are not, however, to be taken as admitted to have been a part of the prior art. Manhattan Gen. Constr. Co. v. Helios-Upton Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 785.

Separable part of claim.—A disclaimer cannot validate a claim of a patent except as to something of which the patentee was the inventor, and which was "a material and substantial part of the thing patented." A claim too broad in its terms cannot be rendered valid by a disclaimer of all except a particular form of construction which may or may not have been embraced in the broad language of the claim, but which, if so, was not in any way specified or suggested therein as distinguished from other forms of construction. Westinghouse Air Brake Co. v. New York Air Brake Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 265.

Patentable feature of structure.—A patentee cannot patent a structure, and by a disclaimer withdraw the invention which makes the structure patentable. Otis Elevator Co. v. Portland Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 127 Fed. 557, affirming 119 Fed. 928.

Effect of failure to disclaim.—Where, in a suit for infringement of a patent, one claim involved is held valid and infringed, and another void for lack of invention, while under

R. S. sec. 973 the complainant cannot recover costs unless a disclaimer is filed as to the claim adjudged invalid, such disclaimer will not be required as a condition precedent to the recovery of profits or damages for infringement of the valid claim. Plecker v. Poorman, (1905) 147 Fed. 528.

Vol. V, p. 526, sec. 4918.

Power to annul patents confined to the courts.—A patent duly issued cannot be made void by subsequent action of the Patent Office, but that power rests with the courts alone. The patentee's acquiescence in such subsequent action, however, when material, should be considered by the court in ascertaining what right he acquired by the grant. Mica Insulator Co. v. Commercial Mica Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 90.

Actual conflict.—To make out a case under this section for adjudging a patent void for interference, there must be an actual conflict and not mere infringement, and in determining whether there is an interference the court cannot go beyond the claims as to which it is charged so as to consider the patent as a whole. Donner v. American Sheet, etc., Co., (1908) 160 Fed. 971.

Substantial identity of patents.—This section gives the court jurisdiction only to adjudicate between patents, the claims of which are substantially identical, and, where such identity is not shown, it cannot declare a later patent invalid for want of patentability. Boston Pneumatic Power Co. v. Eureka Patents Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 29.

Question of patentability not involved.—The authority given the court by this section to "adjudge and declare either of the patents void in whole or in part," covers a wide range of investigation in such suits covering fraud, negligence, and inadvertence on the part of the Patent Office, and the court has power to determine the original question of patentability, and may declare both patents invalid. Dittgen v. Racine Paper Goods Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 394.

Matters determinable on demurrer.—An interference suit brought under this section, in which the issues depend to some extent on the construction and scope of the claims of the earlier patent in view of the prior art will not be determined on demurrer. Star Ball Retainer Co. v. Klahn, (1906) 145 Fed. 834.

I. IN GENERAL.

Title and rights of patentees in general.—The patent statutes, in conferring on an inventor the exclusive right to make, use, and sell articles embodying his invention, create in him a new right and do not extend or continue a previously existing right. Hartman v. John D. Park, etc., Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 388.

Where a contract for the assignment of certain patents included inventions of a similar nature which the patentee might thereafter complete, the assignee of a subsequent invention not conceived by the party at the time such contract was executed, though with actual knowledge of such previous assignments, was not chargeable with notice that the word "complete" was intended to be given an extraordinary interpretation to include inventions not then conceived. Davis, etc., Temperature Controlling Co. v. Tagliabue, (C. C. A. 1908) 159 Fed. 712, reversing (1906) 150 Fed. 372.

Ownership of a physical structure covered by a patent does not necessarily include the incorporeal right to use the same, nor can such incorporeal right be foreclosed by the operation of state statutes. Federal Constr. Co. v. Park Imp. Co., (1908) 166 Fed. 128.

Inventor's rights dependent on patent laws.—An invention or discovery does not, of itself, confer on the discoverer an exclusive property right against all the world, but can only be acquired under patent or similar laws. Pomeroy Ink Co. v. Pomeroy, (1910) 77 N. J. Eq. 293, 78 Atl. 698.

Territorial operation of patents.—Where defendant, owning a flue cleaner patented in the United States only, took no steps to protect its manufacture and sale in the dominion of Canada by securing letters patent there, defendant had no superior right to sell such article in Canada. Herman v. William B. Pierce Co., (1905) 105 App. Div. 16, 93 N. Y. S. 413.

The monopoly of a patent does not extend beyond the jurisdiction of the government granting it, and whatever effect a patent granted by one country has in another depends upon the status given to it by the laws of the latter. Goodyear Tire, etc., Co. v. Rubber Tire Wheel Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 889.

Situs of property.—The owner of a patent has a personal privilege, which, while assignable and protected as a property right, has no situs separate from the individual holding it. P. H. & F. M. Roots Co. v. Decker, (1910) 111 Minn. 458, 127 N. W. 417.

State license to make or sell patented article.—The state can require a patentee or his assignee to take out a license before he can sell the right to make or sell the patented article. Burns v. Sparks, (1904) 82 S. W. 425, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 688.

Assignment and license distinguished.—A grant of the exclusive right to make and sell an invention under a patent, or a grant of an undivided part of these exclusive rights, or a grant of all these exclusive rights throughout a specified part of the country, is an assignment of an interest in the patent, and is more than a license. Paulus v. M. M. Buck Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 594.

An instrument granting the sole and exclusive license to manufacture, sell, and use a patented article, but reserving to the grantor the exclusive right to manufacture, sell, and use certain specific apparatus only for certain purposes, although called a license, was in legal effect an assignment, with reservation of a license to the grantor. Sirocco Engineering Co. v. Monarch Ventilator Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 84.

A grant by a patentee of the right to manufacture and sell under his patent, with a reservation to the patentee of the right to use, is the grant of a license, and not an assignment of the patent. Mathy v. Republic Metalware Co., (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 151.

Where the contract allows the defendants to use a patented device, and binds the claimant to disclose the formulæ and to hold and save them harmless from and against the demands of all persons, and to furnish full information regarding the composition of compounds employed, and to impart to the defendants all information concerning future discoveries and inventions relating to the process, with the right to adopt and use them without further payment, the contract is much more than a license under a patent. Harvey Steel Co. v. U. S., (1904) 39 Ct. Cl. 297.

A contract granting a license to manufacture and sell a patented device construed, and held not to give the licensee a right to an assignment of the title to part of the patent on the termination of the contract. Copeland v. Eaton, (Mass. 1911) 95 N. E. 291.

Complainant contracted to make defendant "the owner, within certain territory," of certain patent rights, and agreed to "procure H. to transfer" to defendant his inventions and discoveries with reference to certain wall coating, with patents on all inventions and improvements which he should make in the future, which should belong exclusively to defendant within the territory. The contract also provided that defendant should employ complainant for five years, and that on the expiration of such period the stock of defendant company should be increased at the rate of one dollar for each ten cents of its average annual increased earnings during the five-year period, which increased stock should be divided equally between complainant and defendant. The provision for employment, however, was not connected with, and had no relation to, the provision relating to defendant's rights in the patents. Held that such contract rendered defendant the absolute owner of the patents so transferred, and did not constitute a mere license to use the same for a period of five years. Church v. Anti-Kalsomine Co., (1904) 138 Mich. 211, 101 N. W. 230, 11 Detroit Leg. N. 534.

Where complainant conveyed absolutely his interest in the discovery of formulæ for the preparation of certain proprietary medicines for a term of fifty years, and granted the exclusive use of his name as a trademark in connection with the preparations for the same time, the transferee was not a mere licensee, but was vested with complainant's entire estate and interest in the subject-matter. Barclay v. Charles Roome Parmele Co., (1907) 71 Atl. 1133, affirming (1905) 70 N. J. Eq. 218, 61 Atl. 715.

Where the contract between a patentee and a manufacturer, providing that the latter was to make and sell the patented article, recited that the parties of the second part were to manufacture said implements and sell them, the party of the first part receiving ten cents for each one sold, the contract was in the nature of a license, and not an assignment; it being evident that the manufacturer was to make and sell the implement and pay the patentee a royalty, despite the fact that there was a provision for the sale of the patent by either party, and a division of the proceeds, and on a failure of the manufacturer or its assigns to perform their obligations the patentee could treat the contract as discharged; the provision as to a division of the profits of a sale of the patent existing only during the life of the contract. Wildes v. Nelson, (1911) 154 N. C. 590, 70 S. E. 940.

Sale distinguished from conditional contract.—A contract whereby plaintiffs stated that they were willing to give defendants the exclusive right to manufacture and sell certain machines, and full and exclusive license under any letters patent which might be granted for improvements made therein, and agreeing that they themselves would not make or sell any of the machines, and would not sell or assign any letters patent relating thereto or grant any rights thereunder, and that the contract should last for the full term for which any letters patent should be granted, and that, if no patent should be granted, then the contract should last twenty years from its date, was a sale of plaintiffs' good will in the business of manufacturing and selling machines of the type described, together with any patent rights which they might procure upon the machines, and an agreement not to make or sell the machines during the existence of the contract; but was not an agreement that plaintiffs would be successful in obtaining patents, or that defendants would be excused from complying therewith, in case a fundamental patent was not obtained. Bancroft v. Union Embossing Co., (1903) 72 N. H. 402, 57 Atl. 97.

II. TITLE TO AND CO-OWNERSHIP OF PATENTS.

No established market value or license fee.—In an action at law to recover damages for the infringement of a patent, where there is no established market value or license fee, general evidence is admissible to show the extent of the plaintiff's damages from the infringement, and he is entitled to show the utility and advantages of the invention over old devices, as a basis from which the jury may estimate the extent of his loss. McCune v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 63.

Rights of joint owners.—Joint owners of a patent are at the mercy of each other. Copeland v. Eaton, (Mass. 1911) 95 N. E. 291.

III. ASSIGNMENTS.

1. Agreements to assign.

Validity as against subsequent assignee.—An executory agreement by patentees to transfer to a third person an interest in patents not identified therein does not operate as an assignment, and cannot be set up by defendants to impeach the title of an assignee of the patent in a suit for its infringement, to which such third person is not a party. McMichael, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Ruth, (C. C. A. 1904) 128 Fed. 706, reversing (1903) 123 Fed. 888.

Where defendant agreed to give complainant one-half interest in a patent, his subsequent wrongful transfer of such interest to another, who had knowledge of complainant's rights, was void. McRae v. Smart, (1908) 120 Tenn. 413, 114 S. W. 729.

Assignment of future improvements.—By contracts between defendant, an inventor, and two other persons, defendant assigned to each of such persons a one-third interest in inventions for which applications for patents were pending, and agreed to devote his best skill and energy to the making of improvements and further inventions in the same art, and to assign a like interest in all such inventions. Subsequently complainant corporation was organized by the three, to which the patents then issued were assigned, and defendant also assigned inventions covered by certain pending applications and "any and all inventions of like nature or similar thereto which I have already completed or which may hereafter be completed by me." Thereafter, while a stockholder in and an employee of complainant, he made other similar inventions which he assigned to complainant pursuant to such contracts, and also two similar inventions for which he subsequently obtained patents, which he assigned to his codefendant after leaving complainant's employ. Held that complainant was entitled to a decree as against both defendants requiring the assignment to it of such patents; it being shown that the second defendant had knowledge of the terms of the contract at the time he took the assignments. Davis, etc., Temperature Controlling Co. v. Tagliabue, (1906) 148 Fed. 705.

A contract by an inventor, who has sold inventions, to disclose and assign to the purchaser any future inventions made by him for improvements thereon, is not contrary to public policy, but is valid and enforceable, if based on a valuable consideration. Reece Folding Mach. Co. v. Fenwick, (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 287.

Assignment of all future inventions.—An agreement by an employee to give his employer, who was a candy manufacturer, "the full benefit and enjoyment" of any and all inventions which he might make pertaining to the employer's business, imports an agreement for a shop right or license to use such inventions merely, and does not entitle the employer to an assignment of patents secured by the employee therefor. Hildreth v. Duff, (1906) 143 Fed. 139.

An assignment by an inventor of certain patents and inventions covered by pending applications, "and any and all inventions of like nature or similar thereto which I have already completed or which may hereafter be completed by me," does not charge a third person with notice that it was intended to cover inventions, which, though similar in character, were not then in existence or even conceived, so as to deprive him of protection as a bona fide purchaser of a patent for an invention made by the assignor afterward, and while in the employ of such third party. Davis, etc., Temperature Controlling Co. v. Tagliabue, (1906) 150 Fed. 372.

Breach of agreement as defense to suit for infringement.—The owner of a patent who agrees to assign it, but in violation of his agreement refuses to do so, cannot recover from his intended assignee for an infringement. Schmitt v. Nelson Valve Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 125 Fed. 754.

Preliminary injunction in suit for specific performance.—In a suit to compel the assignment of patents under a contract, where, on the showing made, there is a reasonable probability that complainant may succeed on the merits, he is entitled to a preliminary injunction to maintain the status quo until a final hearing. Ball, etc., Fastener Co. v. Patent Button Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 272.

2. Form and Requisites.

No particular form of assignment of letters patent is prescribed by statute, and any written conveyance duly signed and sufficiently specific to identify the property is sufficient. American Tobacco Co. v. Ascot Tobacco Works, (1908) 165 Fed. 207.

Effect of state statutes.—The regulation of the sale of patent rights made by Laws Kan. 1889, ch. 182, which compels one selling a patent right in any county in the state to file with the clerk of such county an authenticated copy of the letters patent, together with an affidavit of the genuineness of the letters patent and as to other matters, and provides that any written obligation given for the purchase price of a patent right shall contain the words "given for a patent right," does not violate Const. U. S., art. 1, sec. 8, granting to Congress the right to secure to inventors the exclusive right to their discovery, nor R. S. sec. 4898, authorizing written assignments of patents or interests therein, which shall be void as against subsequent purchasers unless recorded in the Patent Office. Allen v. Riley, (1906) 203 U. S. 347, 27 S. Ct. 95, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 216, affirming (1905) 71 Kan. 378, 80 Pac. 952.

The requirement of a state statute that a negotiable instrument taken on a sale of rights under a patent shall show on its face for what it was given, or be void, does not violate Const. U. S., art. 1, sec. 8, granting to Congress the right to secure to inventors the exclusive right to their discovery, nor R. S. sec. 4898, authorizing written assignments of patents or interests therein, which shall be void as against subsequent purchasers unless recorded in the Patent Office. Woods v. Carl, (1906) 203 U. S. 358, 27 S. Ct. 99, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 219, affirming (1905) 75 Ark. 328, 87 S. W. 621; Columbia County Bank v. Emerson, (1908) 86 Ark. 155, 110 S. W. 214.

Patents are creatures of the federal statute, and an assignment is sufficient if it conforms to the requirements of this section, regardless of the state statutes. Welsbach Light Co. v. Cohn, (1910) 181 Fed. 122.

A lease of the exclusive right to sell a patented article in a specified territory and an agreement by the patent owners to protect lessees in the exclusive sale of the article for a specified term is a sale of a patent right within the Kansas statute regulating the sale of patent rights, and imposing a penalty for failure to comply therewith. State v. Morey, (1909) 81 Kan. 149, 105 Pac. 501. See Tredick v. Walters, (1910) 81 Kan. 828, 106 Pac. 1067.

The Wisconsin statute declaring that all promissory notes given for any patent, patent right, or interest therein, shall have written or printed thereon in red ink the words, "The consideration for this note is the sale of a patent, patent right, or interest therein," and providing that any person who shall sell a patent or patent right without complying with the statute shall be liable to a penalty equal to the face of the note, and that all notes or other evidences of indebtedness taken as required by the provisions of the statute shall be nonnegotiable and subject to all the defenses in the hands of an innocent holder that would exist if they had not been transferred, is void because in conflict with Const. U. S., art. 1, sec. 8, providing that Congress shall have power to secure to inventors for a limited time the exclusive right to their discoveries, and with R. S. sec. 4898, declaring that every patent or interest therein shall be assignable in law by an instrument in writing and that the patentee or his assigns or legal representatives may in like manner grant and convey an exclusive right under the patent to the whole or any specified part of the United States. J. H. Clark Co. v. Rice, (1906) 127 Wis. 451, 106 N. W. 231.

Filing patent required by state statute. — A complaint, under the Kansas statute, charging that accused sold a patent right without complying with that statute, is not indefinite or uncertain because alleging that accused failed to file "his" letters patent, while the contract referred to the patent as being the property of a corporation, and purported to be executed by it, and not accused. State v. Morey, (1909) 81 Kan. 149, 105 Pac. 501.

Conditional assignment. — A contract between a patentee and complainant's assignors construed in the light of the correspondence between the parties, and held not to operate as an assignment of the legal title to patents, because of conditions therein which were precedent to the becoming absolute of the assignment, and which were neither performed by the assignee nor waived, so that complainant was without title to support a suit for infringement against subsequent licensees of the patentee. Arnold Monophase Electric Co. v. Wagner Electric Mfg. Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 234.

In writing. — A patent monopoly can only be transferred in the manner prescribed by the statute, namely, by a written instrument signed by the owner of the patent and duly recorded. Ball v. Coker, (1909) 168 Fed. 304.

Implied contract. — The transfer of patent rights or rights under invention may be based on an implied as well as on an express contract. Pomeroy Ink Co. v. Pomeroy, (1910) 77 N. J. Eq. 293, 78 Atl. 698.

Acknowledgment. — The acknowledgment of an assignment of a patent relates to the date of the assignment. Murray Co. v. Continental Gin Co., (1907) 149 Fed. 989, 79 C. C. A. 499.

Sufficiency of language. — An assignment by a sole patentee of all his right, title, and interest in the patent, "being an entire interest therein," is sufficient to vest the title in the assignees. Canda v. Michigan Malleable Iron Co., (C. C. A. 1903) 124 Fed. 486, modifying (1902) 123 Fed. 95.

A conveyance by a corporation of all of its property, including its "good will, patents, trademarks," etc., is effective as an assignment of a patent then owned by it, although not described therein, and it is immaterial as against an alleged infringer that it was not eligible for record. Delaware Seamless Tube Co. v. Shelby Steel Tube Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 928, affirming (1907) 151 Fed. 64.

Burden of proving worthlessness. — In an action to foreclose a mortgage to secure the purchase price of certain patent rights, the defense being misrepresentations as to the value of the patented article, the issuance of the patent, and ownership and possession thereof by the seller, were prima facie evidence of its utility, and the burden was upon the mortgagor to show its uselessness by clear and strong evidence. Waymire v. Shipley, (1908) 52 Ore. 464, 97 Pac. 807.

Worthless patent. — In a suit on a note for price of patent right, the jury should find for plaintiff, unless the machines were not reasonably suited to the uses for which they were made. Nettograph Mach. Co. v. Brown, (1911) 28 Okla. 436, 114 Pac. 1102.

Breach of warranty.—A warranty of plaintiff to maintain defendant in the enjoyment of a leased patent was broken by a judgment holding that the patent leased by plaintiff was an infringement of a patent belonging to another. American Machinery, etc., Co. v. Haas, (1911) 127 La. 811, 54 So. 38.

Territorial lease.—A territorial lease and appointment of agency giving the party of the second part six sample machines and the agency for the sale of the same for a term of years, the company agreeing to furnish all machines ordered by the agent at a certain fixed price, is a contract for the sale of a patent right within Gen. Stat. 1901, secs. 4356-4358. Nyhart v. Kubach, (1907) 76 Kan. 154, 90 Pac. 796.

3. Recording.

Assignment void unless recorded.—An unrecorded grant of all the exclusive rights under a patent is an assignment, and void as against subsequent purchasers without notice. Paulus v. M. M. Buck Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 594.

Applicable to issued patents only.—A written assignment of future inventions is not recordable in the Patent Office, and such record is not notice to a subsequent assignee. Eastern Dynamite Co. v. Keystone Powder Mfg. Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 47.

Certified copy as evidence.—A certified copy of a Patent Office record of a document purporting to be an assignment of a patent is not prima facie proof of the execution or genuineness of such assignment, nor is it made competent evidence by this section. American Graphophone Co. v. Leeds, etc., Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 981; Eastern Dynamite Co. v. Keystone Powder Mfg. Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 47.

4. Nature and Effect.

Later invention of similar device.—Certain patent on a portable horse stall held, under the evidence, not a mere improvement of a former patent obtained by the same person on a portable stall, but a distinct and independent contrivance, so that no interest therein passed under an assignment by the patentee of an interest in the former patent. Stitzer v. Withers, (1906) 122 Ky. 181, 91 S. W. 277.

Equitable interest of assignor.—A resolution of corporate stockholders that the corporation assign all its assets to plaintiff, and authorizing its officers to execute all necessary papers for that purpose, and a formal assignment of all the property, including "interests in letters patent, . . . inventions, . . . and choses in action," to plaintiff, passed its equitable interest in letters patent in an invention useful in its business, but which its president had purchased for himself. American Circular Loom Co. v. Wilson, (1908) 198 Mass. 182, 84 N. E. 133.

Title acquired by assignment.—A patentee conveyed it with other interests to S., "his assignees and successors in trust," and directed that S. and his successors should have and hold the patent in trust, without power to sell, encumber, or otherwise dispose of the patents, etc., for the benefit of three persons, S. being one of them. S. thereafter assigned the same interest, so far as he had any right to do so, to D., trustee. Held that, by such transfer, D. acquired title in trust for himself, and for the two other persons, for whose benefit S. had held the title, so that D. was entitled to convey a one-third interest in the patent, of which he was the absolute owner. McDuffee v. Hestonville, etc., Pass. R. Co., (1908) 158 Fed. 827, modifying (1907) 154 Fed. 201.

Nature of assignee's title.—Where a patentee, alleging infringement, is shown not to have been a pioneer in the art, but merely an improver, he is entitled to such recognition as his contribution to the art warrants, and his assignees to protection to the same extent, subject, however, to such limitations, if any, as either permitted to be imposed on the grant, as disclosed by the file wrapper and contents of the application on which the patent issued. Computing Scale Co. v. Automatic Scale Co., (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 238, affirmed (1907) 204 U. S. 609, 27 S. Ct. 307, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 645.

Use of assignor's name.—Mere assignments of patents for the manufacture of shoes having cushioned insoles did not carry the right to the assignee to use the patentee's name in connection with shoes manufactured under such assignments. Dr. A. Reed Cushion Shoe Co. v. Frew, (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 887, reversing 158 Fed. 552.

Where defendant corporation became the owner, or legally possessed, of patented Edison phonographs and kinetoscopes, it was entitled to use such machines for public entertainment, and to advertise that the machines used were in fact Edison machines, both under the rule authorizing a statement of the truth in the conduct of a business, and the law with reference to the use of patented articles. Edison v. Mills-Edisonia, (1908) 74 N. J. Eq. 521, 70 Atl. 191.

Improvements on improvements.—The words "all improvements thereon," in an assignment of original letters patent for an improvement in pulp-beating engines and "all improvements thereon," include all improvements on the improvement in engines for which the original letters patent were granted. Marshall Engine Co. v. New Marshall Engine Co., (1908) 199 Mass. 546, 85 N. E. 741.

Previous licenses.—The assignment of a patent carries to the assignee the right to receive royalties under licenses previously granted by the assignor, and the government is liable to the assignee for such royalties, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3737, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 123. Federal Mfg., etc., Co. v. U. S., (1907) 42 Ct. Cl. 479.

Liability of assignee to licensee of assignor.—Where complainant acquired the exclusive right to use, exhibit, and sell phonographs and graphophones, under a license from a corporation owning patents thereon, and such rights were wrongfully invaded by a subsequent corporation, which succeeded to the rights of the licensor with knowledge of the licensee, complainant was entitled to recover against the latter in equity for breach of covenant. New York Phonograph Co. v. Edison, (1905) 136 Fed. 600.

Laches of licensee in enforcing contract against assignee.—Where complainant, a licensee of the exclusive right to use and sell patented phonographs and graphophones in a certain district, brought suit against defendant, a corporation which succeeded to the rights of the licensor, for breach of covenant in the license, within five years after defendant's incorporation, and within less than three years after the termination of fruitless negotiations to settle, and there was no evidence that complainant had acquiesced in defendant's intrusion into such field, complainant was not barred by laches. New York Phonograph Co. v. Edison, (1905) 136 Fed. 600.

Estoppel by acquiescence in violations of contract.—A contract assigned the legal title to a patent for a gas producer to a trustee for the benefit of a company, in consideration of the payment by the assignee of one-third of all royalties received from licensees. The company subsequently engaged in the building of the producers itself, granting licenses to those to whom they were sold. The contract contained no provision respecting such building operations, which were not at that time contemplated, but the patentee was fully advised of the company's action, and from time to time expressed his approval thereof. Held that, while such operations were outside of the contract, he was estopped by his acquiescence from claiming that they were in violation of it and entitled him to its cancellation, or from claiming a share of the profits of such business. Duff v. Gilliland, (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 16, reversing 135 Fed. 581.

Liabilities of assignee to third persons.—The assignee of a patent does not, in the absence of express contract, assume any obligation to perform a contract of his assignor with a licensee. New York Phonograph Co. v. Davega, (1908) 127 App. Div. 222, 111 N. Y. S. 363.

Stipulation to put apparatus to practical use.—A provision in a contract by which complainant agreed to assign certain patents relating to elevators to defendant, that defendant should test the patented apparatus with reasonable diligence, "and, if such test results satisfactorily, within such further reasonable time as is convenient to put such apparatus into practical use," bound the defendant absolutely, having accepted the test as satisfactory, to put the apparatus into some practical use within a reasonable time thereafter, and impliedly to put in all the patented elevators it reasonably could with due regard to its business interests. Neenan v. Otis Elevator Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 997.

Suit by lessee of territorial rights.—A contract for the sale of patent rights, providing that the assignor guaranteed peaceable possession of the rights to said patent and invention in a certain county, and all expenses which may be incurred for suits for infringement or for ousting present contractors within said territory, does not stipulate for peaceable possession of the territory named, but for peaceable possession of the "rights" to said patent, which means the rights which the assignor had; and hence the assignee could sue for infringement, or oust other contractors and recover his expenses therefor, but could not recover for profits made in the county through infringements by others than the assignor. Bailey v. Miller, (1910) 45 Ind. App. 475, 91 N. E. 24.

Estoppel of assignor.—The assignor of a patent is estopped to set up its invalidity as a defense to a suit for infringement brought against him by the assignee. Frank v. Bernard, (1905) 135 Fed. 1021, 68 C. C. A. 506, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 269; Hurwood Mfg. Co. v. Wood, (1905) 138 Fed. 835; Siemens-Halske Electric Co. v. Duncan Electric Mfg. Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 157, 73 C. C. A. 375; Wold v. Thayer, (1906) 148 Fed. 227, 78 C. C. A. 350, affirming 142 Fed. 776.

If the assignor of a patent, who is estopped to deny its validity, enters into business with others, and all, availing themselves of his knowledge of the patented process or machine, enter upon a manufacture infringing the patent, all are bound by his estoppel when sued for infringement; and when individuals so estopped form a corporation to carry on the infringing manufacture, the corporation is also deemed in privity of estoppel with them, even though it has some stockholder who is more or less ignorant of the history of the patent and of the transactions which led to the incorporation. Mellor v. Carroll, (1905) 141 Fed. 992.

In a suit for infringement by the assignee of a patent against the assignor, where it is not shown that the assignor made any representations other than those necessarily involved in the assignment, he is estopped only to deny that the invention presented a sufficient degree of utility to justify the issuance of the patent, and with this limitation the court will apply the same rule of construction which would be applicable between the patentee and a stranger, and, on the question of infringement, the defendant may show the prior state of the art to limit the scope of the claims sued on. Automatic Switch Co. v. Monitor Mfg. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 983.

An assignor of a patent is not estopped to deny its infringement by a later invention of his own, nor to invoke the prior art for the purpose of showing that no infringement in fact exists. Leather Grille, etc., Co. v. Christopherson, (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 817.

A corporation organized by a patentee, who had assigned his patents, and others having full knowledge of the facts, who are largely the owners of its stock, is estopped to deny the validity of the patents, or to limit their claims by the prior art, to the same extent as the patentee. Siemens-Halske Electric Co. v. Duncan Electric Mfg. Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 157, 73 C. C. A. 375; National Recording Safe Co. v. International Safe Co., (1908) 158 Fed. 824; Johns-Pratt Co. v. Sachs Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 70, reversing in part 168 Fed. 311; Automatic Switch Co. v. Monitor Mfg. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 983.

While a corporation organized by a patentee who has assigned his patent for the purpose of carrying on business in violation of the rights of the assignee is estopped equally with the assignor to deny the validity of the patent when sued for infringement or to invoke an adjudication of invalidity made in a suit against its predecessor in business, no such estoppel arises where it was organized in good faith to take over and continue the business of its predecessor, and without any reference to the patent, merely because the assignor is one of its stockholders and officers. Macey Co. v. Globe-Wernicke Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 401.

One of the patentees of a device who joined in an assignment of the patent is estopped to deny the validity of any of its claims when sued by the assignee for its infringement, and the estoppel extends to a corporation which he was instrumental in forming and in which he is a stockholder. Mathews Gravity Carrier Co. v. Lister, (1906) 154 Fed. 490.

Where the assignor of a patent organized a corporation for the purpose of making and selling an article which is an infringement of the patent and an imitation of the patented article made and sold by his assignee, of which corporation he is manager, and in which he is interested, although he does not appear as a stockholder, the corporation equally with the assignor is estopped to deny the validity of the patent. Onondaga Indian Wigwam Co. v. Ka-Noo-No Indian Mfg. Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 832.

One who becomes a stockholder in a corporation organized for the purpose of taking title to a patent, and selling the same, and who participates in such sale and receives his share of the profits, is estopped to attack the validity of the patent as against an innocent purchaser for value. Welsbach Light Co. v. Cohn, (1910) 181 Fed. 122.

Corporation employing assignor. — A corporation charged with infringement of a patent is not estopped to deny its validity merely because the patentee who sold and assigned it is a subordinate in its employment. Babcock, etc., Co. v. Toledo Boiler Works Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 81.

5. Rescission.

Tender of patent. — Where the purchaser of a patent right sold without compliance with the state statutes brings an action to rescind the contract of sale and to recover the consideration, and offers to return all benefits received, and defendant contends that the statute is invalid, plaintiff's right to the relief and a judgment for costs is not affected by the omission to tender the patent right before action brought. Allen v. Riley, (1905) 71 Kan. 378, 80 Pac. 952.

Compensation for depreciation. — Where one who had purchased a patent right, in reliance on false representations of the seller, sought, about a month later, to induce him to take back the patent, but he refused to do so, in a subsequent suit by the purchaser for rescission plaintiff should not be compelled to make any compensation for depreciation in the value of the patent owing to lapse of time. Lederer v. Yule, (1904) 67 N. J. Eq. 65, 57 Atl. 309.

Assignment canceled for fraud. — One of the complainants obtained patents for an invention in this country and Europe, and assigned a half interest in the foreign patents to the complainant in the second suit. They afterwards became associated in the ownership of the foreign patents with defendants and others, each complainant retaining a fourth interest. A fund was raised, and a representative sent to England, who negotiated profitable license contracts. This fact was concealed from the complainants, and by means of representations to them that the efforts had so far been unsuccessful, and demands for further advances, at a time when large payments had been actually received under the foreign licenses, they were induced to transfer their property interests to defendants for a small sum. Held that such facts constituted a fraud on complainants, which entitled each of them to a cancellation of his assignment and to recover his share of the profits realized from the joint venture, with interest. Goldsmith v. Koopman, (1905) 140 Fed. 616.

Misrepresentations by seller. — A misrepresentation by a seller of a patent right will not entitle the purchaser to rescind, unless it amounts to an untrue statement of some present fact, and a mere promise or prediction is not sufficient. Lederer v. Yule, (1904) 67 N. J. Eq. 65, 57 Atl. 309.

Evidence held insufficient to show fraud. — In an action on a note given as part payment of the price of a patent right, evidence held insufficient to show fraud on the part of the vendor, invalidating the sale. Eisenberg v. Lefkowitz, (1911) 142 App. Div. 569, 127 N. Y. S. 595.

Breach of conditions. — Under a contract for assignment of patents, which provided for the payment of royalties to the assignor, a breach of the absolute undertaking to put the apparatus to some practical use, which would have been satisfied by any use, however small, is not ground for rescission of the contract, since such requirement does not go to the whole consideration, but, to entitle the assignor to a rescission in equity, he must show that the implied and substantial part of the stipulation has been violated, and that the assignee has failed to exert itself in good faith to install the patented apparatus whenever in reason it was feasible in view of its business and opportunities. Neenan v. Otis Elevator Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 997.

Refusal to permit seller to inspect buyer's books. — A provision of the contract requiring the company to keep accounts showing the licenses granted which should be subject to the inspection of the patentee did not give him the right to inspection of the books covering the construction work, and a refusal to permit such inspection therefore constituted no ground for cancellation of the contract. Duff v. Gilliland, (1905) 135 Fed. 581, reversed (C. C. A.) 139 Fed. 16.

IV. LICENSES.

1. Nature and Requisites.

Parties. — Owner of an undivided part of a patent right may, without the consent of his co-owners, grant a valid license. Paulus v. M. M. Buck Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 594.

Reserved right to use. — A grant by a patentee of the right to manufacture and sell under his patent, with a reservation to the patentee of the right to use, does not deprive the patentee, as against the licensee, of the right to register a trade-mark as applied to the patented articles. Mathy v. Republic Metalware Co., (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 151.

License prior to patent. — The facts that a licensee to use a patented device is oral and that it was granted after the application, but before the issuance of the patent, do not render it invalid. St. Louis St. Flushing Mach. Co. v. Sanitary St. Flushing Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 923.

Implied license. — Where a company is licensed by one patentee to make and sell a patented article, and the president of the company, owning another patent for a device used in and as a part of the same patented article, sells a large number of such articles made under and in accordance with such patents, with the statement that the company is duly licensed, there is an actual license as to the one patent and an implied license as to the other which will protect the users from the charge of infringement of either. O'Rourke Engineering Constr. Co. v. McMullen, (1907) 150 Fed. 338.

Evidence considered and held sufficient to show an implied license to use machines invented and patented by plaintiff while in defendant's employ and at its expense. Wilson v. American Circular Loom Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 840.

License implied from relation of parties. — The fact that the patentee of a furnace was at the time president of a corporation engaged in making furnaces does not entitle the company to the right to use the invention. American Stoker Co. v. Underfeed Stoker Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 642.

2. Assignability.

The right to assign in general. — A license to use a patented invention that does not contain words importing assignability is a grant of a mere personal right to the licensee, which does not pass to the licensee's heirs or representatives, and which cannot be transferred to another without the express consent of the licensor. Bowers v. Lake Superior Contracting, etc., Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 983, 79 C. C. A. 493.

Implied right to assign. — A continuing assignable quality may be given to a license to use a patented invention originally unassignable, by facts and circumstances and the conduct of the parties during the continuance of the license. Bowers v. Lake Superior Contracting, etc., Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 983, 79 C. C. A. 493.

Sale of all property and effects by one corporation to another. — A corporation which took from another corporation, afterward dissolved, all of its property, contracts, and good will, by a bill of sale which warranted title, and without assuming any of the liabilities of the grantor, was not the legal successor of such grantor and did not succeed to its rights under a contract granting it a license under a patent which by its terms was not assignable without the consent of the patentee. Niagara Fire Extinguisher Co. v. Hibbard, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 844.

3. Construction.

Conditions imposed. — The exclusive licensee for the sale of articles embodying the patented invention or discovery has and controls to that extent the monopoly granted by the letters patent, and may attach such conditions as he sees fit to sales made under his license; and a contract binding a purchaser not to resell for less than certain named prices, or to any other dealer who does not sign a similar agreement, and which makes a compliance with such requirements a condition of the license to use or vend the patented article implied from its sale, is valid and enforceable. National Phonograph Co. v. Schlegel, (C. C. A. 1904) 128 Fed. 733, reversing (1902) 117 Fed. 624.

Use of a patented invention cannot be had except on the inventor's terms, and the requirement that a licensee join other licensees in a combination or pool to control the prices and output of an innocuous patented article is not in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. L. 209, ch. 647, § 1, 7 Fed. St. Annot. 336. Patented articles, unless and until they are released by the owner of the patent from the dominion of his monopoly, are not articles of trade or commerce among the several states within the meaning of such Act, because they are not articles in which the people are entitled to freedom of trade. Rubber Tire Wheel Co. v. Milwaukee Rubber Works Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 358, reversing (1906) 142 Fed. 531.

Exemption of licensor from liability for infringement. — One acquiring a right to manufacture and sell a patented article under a contract stipulating that the patentee shall not be responsible for any damages from an infringement of the patent, etc., takes the risk of infringements. Alexander v. American Encaustic Tiling Co., (1908) 61 Misc. 190, 113 N. Y. S. 261.

License as grant of monopoly. — A license to manufacture and sell a patented article, which stipulates that it shall not be an exclusive license, but that the patentee may license others to manufacture and sell the article, etc., does not grant a monopoly so as to be against public policy. Alexander v. American Encaustic Tiling Co., (1908) 61 Misc. 190, 113 N. Y. S. 261; Alexander v. Mosaic Tile Co., (1908) 113 N. Y. S. 265.

Damages for exceeding terms of license. — Where a contract giving defendant the right to use a patented construction in the erection of fireproof flooring provided that the defendant should not use or sell any construction similar to that granted by the contract for the purpose of evading the same, and further provided that defendant should in good faith construct flooring according to such patent, defendant was liable in damages for inducing the owners of a building, who had contracted with it to build the flooring mentioned in the contract, to substitute another system, for no other reason than that of saving to itself the royalties which it would have been obliged to pay under the system, and to make greater profits on the work. Standard Fireproofing Co. v. St. Louis Expanded Metal Fireproofing Co., (1903) 177 Mo. 559, 76 S. W. 1008.

Unauthorized use by licensee as infringement.—A suit by the owner of patents to enjoin a licensee from using any of the patented devices except on the terms imposed by the license contract is not one for the specific performance of the contract, but is one to enjoin infringement of the patents by excluding defendant from that part of the patent domain not granted by the contract, and is maintainable in a federal court of equity irrespective of the validity of the contract. Indiana Mfg. Co. v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 365.

Conditions as to manufacture.—A contract for the sale of territorial rights for the manufacture of patent burial vaults contained an agreement by the second party to manufacture 300 vaults before Jan. 1, 1904, and to pay a fixed royalty for every vault made, and to pay the royalty on the first 300 in four equal payments on dates specified, and to pay the royalty on vaults in excess of that number made during that time on Jan. 1, 1904, and after such date to make returns on sworn statements and make payment semiannually. Held that the second party agreed absolutely to manufacture 300 vaults before Jan. 1, 1904, and pay the royalty on them. Lyons Burial Vault Co. v. Taylor, (1908) 198 Mass. 63, 84 N. E. 320.

Extent of license to make and sell.—A license to "operate under a patent" does not authorize the licensee to buy up infringing articles made by others, who have been adjudged infringers, and resell them under its own name. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. American Graphophone Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 577.

Right of licensee as to similar devices not covered by patent.—Where a contract for the manufacture of a patented automatic feed attachment for a cottonseed linter referred explicitly to the attachment patented, and provided for the manufacture and sale of such attachments for the entire unexpired term of the patent, such contract did not deprive the licensee of the right to make and sell any machine not covered by the patent. Strong v. Carver Cotton Gin Co., (1907) 197 Mass. 53, 83 N. E. 328.

An agreement made by the owner of a patent for a hose clamp, in settlement of a suit for infringement, that he would not trouble the defendant so long as it made only brass clamps, the complainant being then making them of steel, must be construed to apply only to clamps covered by the patent; and the making by the defendant of steel clamps of a different kind, not within the patent, was not a violation of the license which would render a user of its brass clamps subject to a suit for infringement. Clancy v. Troy Belting, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 554, reversing 152 Fed. 188.

An exclusive license to sell phonographs granted by an assignee of the patentee, with the right to improvement patents granted to him within fifteen years, covered only phonographs containing patented inventions and improvements owned by the licensor. New York Phonograph Co. v. National Phonograph Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 534.

Covenants against infringement.—Where defendant procured a license to operate a machine under a patent, the licensor agreeing to defend him against any action for infringement brought against him by a certain company, and parties owning other patents, who had established an infringement by the first patent in an action against others than defendant, formed a company and took over the conflicting patents, the new company could require defendant to procure a license from it to use the machine under the other patents which it controlled. Ferry-Hallock Co. v. Zipfel, (N. J. 1909) 74 Atl. 299.

Invalidity of patent as defense to action for royalties.—It is competent for one to agree to pay a patentee a royalty for a license to manufacture a particular machine, when such manufacturer is uncertain whether it is covered by a patent or not, so that, in a suit for royalties under such agreement, it is no defense that the patent is invalid or that the machine manufactured is not covered by it. Strong v. Carver Cotton Gin Co., (1907) 197 Mass. 53, 83 N. E. 328.

4. Operation and Effect.

Limited license.—A limited license under a patent conveys only the rights defined therein, and if the licensee makes any other or different use, either as to time or place, than that authorized by the license, he becomes an infringer, and his limited license is no justification. St. Louis St. Flushing Mach. Co. v. Sanitary St. Flushing Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 923.

Estoppel of licensee.—Where a contract granting a license to make and use a patented printing press is for one press, and a second contract is for five presses, and a third for six, and a fourth for six, the contracts are limited to these eighteen presses, and do not preclude the defendants, if they build and use additional presses, from contesting the validity of the patent. Federal Mfg., etc., Co. v. U. S., (1907) 42 Ct. Cl. 479.

One acquiring a license to manufacture and sell a patented article under a contract stipulating that, on the patent being declared invalid by any final judgment of any court of competent jurisdiction of last resort, the agreement shall terminate, and that the licensee will recognize the validity of the patent and will take no action impairing the interests of the patentee, etc., cannot, so long as the patent has not been declared invalid by a court of competent jurisdiction of last resort, collaterally attack its validity. Alexander v. American Encaustic Tiling Co., (1908) 61 Misc. 190, 113 N. Y. S. 261.

Estoppel of licensor.—A grantor of an exclusive license under patents and its successors are estopped, as against the licensee, to deny the validity of such patents, or that they expired before the term for which they were granted by reason of the expiration of prior foreign patents. New York Phonograph Co. v. National Phonograph Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 534.

License under invalid patent.—An invalid patent can create no rights in favor of the patentee against one who in no way recognizes its validity or a licensee to use it, and it cannot furnish any protection to a licensee thereunder, and hence there is a failure of consideration for the license. Ross v. Dowden Mfg. Co., (1909) 147 Ia. 180, 123 N. W. 182.

Estoppel of mortgage trustee.—Mortgage trustees of a corporation licensed under a patent, who have taken possession of the property on default, and through their agents have continued the business and to manufacture and sell the patented article, placing the patent stamp thereon, are estopped to deny the validity of the patent when sued for the infringement. Regina Music Box Co. v. Newell, (1904) 131 Fed. 606.

5. Duration, Expiration, and Renewal.

Provision for termination not exclusive.—Where a contract allowing defendant to make and sell machines containing plaintiff's inventions required defendant to pay royalties on at least 1,000 machines in each year during the life of the contract, and provided that the agreement should terminate if defendant failed to pay the minimum royalties, the provision for the termination of the contract was not exclusive, and by electing to terminate for failure to make the minimum payment plaintiff did not waive payment according to the contract during its continuance. Cummings v. Standard Harrow Co., (1908) 124 App. Div. 915, 108 N. Y. S. 1128, affirming (1907) 55 Misc. 601, 105 N. Y. S. 646.

Forfeiture of license.—A contract giving a licensee to manufacture and sell patented saws required quarterly reports by licensee, under oath, of all saws sold during the previous quarter, and provided that the royalty to be paid should be estimated on the amount collected, and that for a failure to make reports or payments as required the contract might be terminated. The requirement that the reports be sworn to was not enforced by the owner of the patent, the quarterly payments of royalty being made on unverified reports prepared by licensee and submitted to the owner. During a quarter licensee had a settlement with the owner through its president, and paid all royalty then due, and also royalty in advance to the following quarter, whereupon the president and secretary of the owner, who held its stock, sold the same. The purchasers of the stock during the same quarter asked licensee to make a report on the first of the following quarter, and licensee informing them that the royalty had been paid, and declining to show his books, thereafter, during the following quarter, the purchasers notified licensee that the contract was terminated because of his failure to comply therewith. Held that purchasers, under such circumstances, should not be permitted to forfeit the license. Jones, etc., Co. v. Cray, (1908) 234 Ill. 26, 84 N. E. 651.

A breach of covenant contained in an exclusive license to use and sell patented phonographs and graphophones in a specified territory did not work a forfeiture of the license per se, no condition to that effect being inserted in the license. New York Phonograph Co. v. Edison, (1905) 136 Fed. 600.

Equitable relief against forfeiture.—A provision in a license to manufacture under a patent, that in case of default in the payment of royalties the contract may be terminated by a notice, is valid and effective in so far that the licensor may forfeit the license without resort to a court of equity, but does not preclude a court of equity from relieving against a forfeiture at the instance of the licensee, and, under general equitable principles, it should do so where the default is merely in delay in payment of royalties, and their payment with interest will fully compensate the licensor. Foster Hose Supp. Co. v. Taylor, (C. C. A. 1911) 184 Fed. 71, affirming (1910) 180 Fed. 994.

Mode of termination in general.—A license under a patent cannot be terminated except by mutual agreement of the parties or the decree of a court. American Graphophone Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 431, affirmed (C. C. A.) 188 Fed. 428.

Where a contract provides for an exchange of licenses to manufacture under specified patents severally owned by the respective parties, the consideration being such mutual agreements, one party cannot elect to abrogate or rescind it with respect to a single license while retaining it in effect as to the others. American Graphophone Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 431, affirmed (C. C. A.) 188 Fed. 428.

Right to revoke license.—A patentee of certain street car advertising racks wrote defendants a letter demanding payment of three dollars a car for alleged infringement in the building of such racks in certain cars, with an offer to make arrangements at the same rate for cars to be subsequently built. Defendants paid such rate for cars in question, and in answer to a letter from the patentee they sent a check for other cars at the rate of two dollars per car. The patentee accepted the same in payment for cars at the rate of three dollars and stated that he could not make the rate less and that it was not to his interest to have the racks built into the cars. Shortly thereafter he wrote another letter, demanding a statement of all cars built with such racks therein, and notified defendants to discontinue building such racks except at the rate of five dollars per car, to which letter defendants did not reply. Held that the letters prior to the last did not amount to an irrevocable license for the life of the patent, and hence defendants, after receiving the letter of revocation, was relieved from further liability to account for or pay royalties. American St. Car Advertising Co. v. Jones, (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 974, reversing (1903) 122 Fed. 803.

A contract licensing the use of a particular patent and providing a royalty cannot be rescinded unless it appears that the terms of such contract have been violated by the licensee. Crary v. Jones, etc., Co., (1907) 138 Ill. App. 225, affirmed (1908) 234 Ill. 26, 84 N. E. 651.

Cancellation in equity.—Where the decision of a court of equity is necessary to cancel a license to use patented structures or with respect to the sale thereof, equity may enjoin the manufacture or sale pendente lite, or until the contract has been annulled by judicial decree. Schalkenbach v. National Ventilating Co., (1908) 129 App. Div. 389, 113 N. Y. S. 352.

Rescission for misrepresentations by licensor.—Where plaintiff, a physician, after having been afforded ample opportunity to test a patented formula and apparatus to relieve neuralgia, headache, and other superficial pain by means of a counter irritant, purchased a license for the sale thereof in two states, and thereafter used and recommended the medicine, sold a number of the appliances, and assisted his licensors in disposing of other licenses, he was not entitled to rescind the contract in equity for alleged fraudulent representations of the licensors with reference to the efficacy and harmless character of the medicine, or because he was not furnished with the proper formula as agreed. Landon v. Tucker, (1908) 130 Mo. App. 704, 107 S. W. 1037.

Rescission for lack of novelty.—The vendee in a contract for the sale of an invention cannot rescind for failure of consideration because of the rejection of patents for some of the claims, without returning to the vendor those parts of the supposed invention for which patents were allowed. Eclipse Bicycle Co. v. Farrow, (1905) 199 U. S. 581, 26 S. Ct. 150, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 317, reversing (1904) 24 App. Cas. (D. C.) 311.

Repudiation by attacking validity of patent.—The fact that a licensee under a patent for the full term of its life, under a contract which he has fully executed by payment of the agreed consideration, although he was to pay further royalties if the patent was sustained in an infringement suit brought by the licensor against a third party, by leave appeared by counsel in the appellate court in such suit and filed a brief in aid of the defendant, attacking the validity of the patent, did not constitute a repudiation of the license contract which entitles the licensor to its cancellation. Comptograph Co. v. Burroughs Adding Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 321, affirming (1910) 175 Fed. 787, (1909) 175 Fed. 792.

Extension of terms of patent.—An extension of the term of a patent does not inure to the transferee of a license, in the absence of language expressing such intention. New York Phonograph Co. v. Edison, (1905) 136 Fed. 600.

Forfeiture of option to renew.—Plaintiffs contracted for the exclusive right to sell defendant's patented flue cleaner in the United States, west of Ohio, for a term of two years, the contract also providing that, if plaintiffs should have fully performed its conditions at the end of two years, they should have the right at their option to a renewal on the same terms for a further period of three years. Plaintiffs at great expense built up a large and profitable trade for these machines during the two years, but during such time prepared to assist another to sell such machines in Canada, where defendant had no patent or business, but, before the project was consummated, plaintiffs withdrew and sold only four machines in Canada. Held that such transaction and sales did not constitute a breach of plaintiffs' contract, entitling defendant to refuse to renew the same at plaintiffs' option. Herman v. William B. Pierce Co., (1905) 105 App. Div. 16, 93 N. Y. S. 413.

Waiver of notice of election to renew.—A license to use patented phonographs and graphophones provided for a renewal until March 26, 1903, and for a second renewal after such date for "such further time, at the option" of the licensee, as the licensor was authorized to extend the license. Prior to the date specified the licensor had invaded the licensee's territory and refused to recognize the latter's exclusive rights granted, and had obstructed the licensee's efforts to obtain supplies, and a suit had been brought by the licensee to compel recognition of its rights. Held that such acts on the part of the licensor constituted a waiver of the obligation of the licensee, if any, to give notice of its election to exercise its option to take a renewal of the license. New York Phonograph Co. v. Edison, (1905) 136 Fed. 600.

Where put in issue, the complainant in a suit for infringement of a patent for a machine is required to prove affirmatively that machines made thereunder were marked as required by this section, or that notice of infringement was given to the defendant, to entitle complainant to recover damages for infringement prior to the filing of the bill. American Caramel Co. v. Mills, (C. C. A. 1907) 162 Fed. 147.

Process patent.—This section is not applicable to the case of a process patent, and the omission is not a bar to recovery for infringement where the defendant has been notified, and continues the infringement in disregard of such notice. U. S. Mitis Co. v. Midvale Steel Co., (1904) 135 Fed. 103.

Direct notice.—Where direct notice of a patent is given to one who is infringing the same, neither damages nor profits are recoverable except for infringements after such notice was given. Lorain Steel Co. v. New York Switch, etc., Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 205.

Marking thing to which patented article is attached.—Notice of a design patent for a hatband on women's sailor hats is not sufficiently given by printing the words "Lichtenstein Pennant Sailor, Pat. Jan. 15th, 1907," upon the lining in the inside of the hats, there being nothing to indicate that such notice refers to the band. Lichtenstein v. Phipps, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 61, reversing (1908) 161 Fed. 578.

When notice is necessary.—To entitle the owner of a design patent to recover the statutory penalty for its infringement, he must have duly marked the patented articles made or sold by him, where there is no proof of infringement by defendant after notice. Crier v. Innes, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 324, modifying and affirming (1908) 160 Fed. 103.

The burden rests on the complainant, in a suit for infringement, to allege and prove such notice either to the public generally by such marking of the patented article, or by direct notice to the defendant. Lorain Steel Co. v. New York Switch, etc., Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 205.

An admission of notice by defendant by failing to deny it in the answer did not relieve complainant from the burden of proving the date, and where that question was not adjudicated by an interlocutory decree finding infringement and directing an accounting, such date must be proved before the master to afford any basis for an accounting. Lorain Steel Co. v. New York Switch, etc., Co., (1907) 153 Fed. 205.

Right to accounting.—In a suit in equity for infringement of a patent by a party who failed to mark the articles made thereunder as required by R. S. sec. 4900, he may nevertheless be decreed an accounting on account of infringement committed by defendant after notice given by the filing of the bill. Maimen v. Union Special Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 440, affirming 161 Fed. 748.

Vol. V, p. 549, sec. 4901.

Intent to deceive.—To authorize the recovery of the penalty for marking upon or affixing to an unpatented article a word importing that the same is patented for the purpose of deceiving the public, such purpose must be proved, and where the article is sufficiently like that described in a patent to permit of an honest belief that it is within the patent, although on a construction of the patent the court is required to rule that it is not, the question of the intent of defendant in marking it as covered by the patent is one for the jury. Star Mfg. Co. v. Crescent Forge, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 856.

A corporation is a "person," within the meaning of this section, which imposes a penalty on "every person" who marks an unpatented article with any word importing that the same is patented for the purpose of deceiving the public, and may be convicted of such offense. Star Mfg. Co. v. Crescent Forge, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 856.

- II. WHO LIABLE FOR INFRINGEMENT, 1626.
- III. PLEADING, 1627.
- IV. RECOVERY, 1627.

I. WHO MAY SUE FOR INFRINGEMENT.

Applicant for patent.—An applicant for a patent, while his application is pending in the Patent Office, has no exclusive right to the invention which will sustain a suit in equity by him to enjoin another from using the same and for an accounting, although it is shown that while he was the original inventor, defendant wrongfully and by fraud has secured a patent to himself for the invention. The patent laws contemplate that the right to a patent shall in all cases be determined in the first instance by the Patent Office. Standard Scale, etc., Co. v. McDonald, (1904) 127 Fed. 709.

Equitable owner.—A suit for infringement of a patent may be maintained by the equitable owner against the patentee. Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Avery Portable Lighting Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 60.

Assignees.—A bill of sale executed by a corporation, shown to have been at the time the owner of certain patents, conveying all of its stock in trade, assets, and property, specifically including "the patent properties which are held by the party of the first part," vested the purchaser with title to such patents, which will support a suit for their infringement, although no patents were specifically described therein. Æolian Co. v. Hallett, etc., Piano Co., (1905) 134 Fed. 872.

Assignee pendente lite.—A suit for infringement may be prosecuted by an assignee pendente lite, even though the patent may have expired after suit begun. Interlocking Steel Sheeting Co. v. Friestedt Interlocking Channel Bar Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 398.

License amounting to assignment.—From the nature of a patent right, which is purely statutory, and by R. S. sec. 4884 is "a grant to the patentee, his heirs or assigns, for the term of seventeen years, of the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the invention," a company having the exclusive right under a contract to make, use, and vend a patent brake beam was for all practical purposes the assignee thereof, and at all events was the exclusive licensee, and entitled to enjoin an infringement and to all the profits received by the infringer and to all accruing damages. National Hollow Brake Beam Co. v. Bakewell, (1909) 224 Mo. 203, 123 S. W. 561.

Assignment amounting to license.—An allegation that a patentee assigned to complainant the exclusive right to make, use, and sell for use within the United States and its territories and foreign possessions, "in connection with wireless telephone work and wireless telephonic communication only, apparatus and equipment embodying said methods and apparatus under the patents hereinabove mentioned, or any other patent or patents now or hereafter owned or controlled" by the assignor or his assignee, did not show a conveyance to the assignee of the entire monopoly granted by the government to the patentee, but a mere license; and hence the licensee had no capacity to sue in his own name to restrain infringers. De Forest v. Collins Wireless Telephone Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 821.

Assignment amounting to mortgage.—The owner of a patent made an absolute assignment of the same, which was duly recorded. At the same time the assignee executed a paper showing that the assignment was as collateral security for a debt, and agreeing that the assignor should retain the exclusive right to manufacture and sell under the patent, and to license others thereunder. This agreement was not recorded. Subsequently the debt was paid, and a reassignment made, which expressly covered the sole and exclusive right to all causes of action for past infringements. Held that the original assignment and the paper executed at the same time constituted a single contract, under which the assignor retained the right to sue at law for infringement of the patent; the fact that the agreement was not recorded being immaterial as against this infringer. Ormsby v. Connors, (1904) 133 Fed. 548.

Right of assignor to sue.—Where the owners of nearly the entire interest in a patent united in an assignment of the same to a corporation, purporting to convey the full title, which assignment was duly recorded, such assignors could not thereafter maintain a suit for infringement without making the corporation a party, or alleging and proving affirmatively either that the assignment never took effect or that the title had in some way reverted; the corporation, although it had ceased to do business, not having been dissolved, and being still capable of suing and being sued under the law of the state of its organization. Snead v. Scheble, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 570.

Action by licensee in name of patentee.—A license granting to one the exclusive right to make and sell in specified territory a patented article vests in him sufficient title to the patent to sue for an infringement thereof under the federal statutes in the name of the patentee. Manning v. Galland-Henning Pneumatic Malting Drum Mfg. Co., (1910) 141 Wis. 199, 124 N. W. 291.

II. WHO LIABLE FOR INFRINGEMENT.

County commissioners.—A bill to restrain the infringement of a patent for a ventilating device will not lie against county commissioners, merely because a contractor for a public building has placed an infringing device in such building, without its having been specified in the contract and without knowledge on their part of the patent, which device has not been used. McCreery Engineering Co. v. Massachusetts Fan Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 115.

Liability of agent.—An agent is not properly joined with his principal as a defendant in a suit for infringement because of acts done in his capacity as such agent, in the absence of special circumstances. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Mutual L. Ins. Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 213.

Action against licensee.—In an action for infringement of a patent, a written contract between the parties by which it was agreed that defendants might use the patented invention, subject to the payment of a royalty, if plaintiffs' right thereto should be established by the judgment of a court, was admissible in evidence, as tending to show that the use was by plaintiffs' consent, and was therefore not an infringement. Holmes v. Kirkpatrick, (1904) 133 Fed. 232, 66 C. C. A. 286.

A licensor under a patent cannot declare a forfeiture and sue the licensee for infringement. American Graphophone Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 431, affirmed (C. C. A.) 188 Fed. 428.

Directors of corporation.—Infringement by a corporation gives no right of action against one of its officers individually, unless he has acted beyond the ordinary scope of his office. Cazier v. Mackie-Lovejoy Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 654.

Stockholders of a corporation alleged to have infringed a patent are not liable in the absence of proof of individual acts of infringement. Johns-Pratt Co. v. Sachs Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 70, reversing in part 168 Fed. 311.

Action against stockholders.—The owner of a majority of the stock of a corporation, who controlled its affairs and who transferred to it certain patents in violation of a trust under which they had been conveyed to him by the owners, is equally liable with the corporation for its infringement of the patents by the use of the patented devices. Harrington v. Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co., (1906) 143 Fed. 329.

Acts of officers before organization.—A corporation held not liable for infringement of a patent by reason of the building and sale of infringing machines by its president before it was organized, the bills for which were assigned to and collected by it. Palmer v. Jordan Mach. Co., (1911) 186 Fed. 496.

Individual doing business in name of corporation.—An individual person cannot avoid liability for infringement by conducting his business in the name of a corporation. Calculagraph Co. v. Wilson, (1904) 132 Fed. 20.

III. PLEADING.

Averment of marking.—The complaint in an action for infringement of a patent must allege that the article as made thereunder was marked with notice of the patent, or that notice of the infringement was given to the defendant. Streat v. Finch, (1904) 154 Fed. 378.

The complaint in an action to recover damages for infringement of a patent must show on its face that plaintiff has complied with the requirements of R. S. sec. 4900, by causing the patented article, or the package in which it is contained, to be marked in some suitable manner with the word "Patented." Sprague v. Bramhall-Deane Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 738.

Profits not accruing within statutory period.—R. S. sec. 4921 as amended by Act March 3, 1897, providing that in any suit or action for infringement of a patent, there shall be no recovery of profits or damages for any infringement committed more than six years before the filing of the bill or the issuing of the writ in such suit or action, applies not only to suits in equity under said section 4921, but also to actions on the case to recover damages for infringement, brought under section 4919. The amendment is not a statute of limitation, but a qualification on the right of recovery, and need not, therefore, be specially pleaded by defendant in an action under section 4919. Peters v. Hanger, (1904) 134 Fed. 586, 67 C. C. A. 386, reversing 127 Fed. 820, 62 C. C. A. 498.

Questioning validity of patent by demurrer.—The question of the validity of a patent on its face may be raised by demurrer in an action at law for its infringement. Thomas v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (1907) 149 Fed. 753, 79 C. C. A. 89.

The question whether or not the subject-matter of a patent is within one of the classes of things which are patentable under the statute is purely one of law, and may be determined on demurrer in an action for its infringement. American Disappearing Bed Co. v. Arnaelsteen, (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 324.

Averment of prior suit in equity.—The declaration in an action for infringement of a patent alleged the proper issuance of the patent. Defendant filed a plea, setting up in bar a decree entered in a prior suit in equity between the parties for infringement of the same patent dismissing the bill for want of equity, and alleging that the device relied on as an infringement was the same in both suits. The latter allegation was denied by a replication. Held that the sustaining of a motion by defendant for judgment on the pleadings was error, since the court could not know without proof that the decree determined the invalidity of the patent, and the plea was met and an issue of fact raised as to the identity of the causes of action by the replication. Robinson v. American Car, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 150 Fed. 331, reversing (1906) 142 Fed. 170.

IV. RECOVERY.

Measure of damages.—Where the owners of a patent granted an exclusive license thereunder, authorizing the licensee to grant licenses to others on such terms as it saw fit, reserving as a royalty a certain per cent of the profits realized by the licensee, in a joint suit by the owners and licensee for infringement which interfered with sales by the licensee and the granting of licenses, the license fee established, charged, and received by the licensee may properly be taken as a basis for the computation of damages and profits recoverable from the infringer. Fox v. Knickerbocker Engraving Co., (1908) 158 Fed. 422.

Action solely to recover profits.—An action at law cannot be maintained for the sole purpose of recovering the profits which an infringer of a patent has made. Brown v. Lan- yon, (1906) 148 Fed. 838, 78 C. C. A. 528.

Vol. V, p. 566. [Act of March 3, 1897, ch. 395.]

Suits against aliens.—This statute applies only to defendants who are inhabitants of some district within the United States, and does not affect patent suits against aliens, which may be brought in any district where the defendant may be found. United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Duplessis Independent Shoe Machinery Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 930.

Characterizing place of business.—It is not essential under this Act that the bill should use the words, "regular and established," in characterizing defendant's place of business, if it appears that it is such from the facts alleged. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Electrode Mfg. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 543.

Place from which goods are sold.—This statute gives jurisdiction in a district where defendant has an established place of business from which it sold the alleged infringing articles, and in which it also assembled the different parts of such articles. American

Stoker Co. v. Underfeed Stoker Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 642.

Individuals sued with corporation.—In a bill for infringement of a patent against a corporation and an individual, which charges that the corporation has a regular and established place of business within the district where its business is conducted by its co-defendant as its president and general manager, and where they have committed joint acts of infringement, it is not necessary to allege affirmatively that the individual defendant is either an inhabitant of the district or has a regular and established place of business therein. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Electrode Mfg. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 543.

Averment of sale in district.—A bill for infringement of a patent filed against a foreign corporation, in order to confer jurisdiction on the court, must allege both acts of infringement in the district where filed, and that the defendant has at the time of suit a regular and established place of business there. Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Fox Typewriter Co., (1908) 158 Fed. 476.

Infringement within the district of suit (Southern District of New York) required to sustain the suit is not made out by proof that an infringing article sold in another state bore a label with the name of defendant and the words "New York" thereon, in the absence of evidence that defendant made, used, or sold the article, or attached the label, or was engaged in the manufacture of similar articles in New York. Rumford Chemical Works v. Egg Baking Powder Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 953.

Place of business at time of bringing suit.—To confer jurisdiction it is not necessary that the defendant should have had a regular and established place of business within the district at the time the alleged acts of infringement were committed therein, but it is sufficient if it had such place at the time of bringing suit. Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Fox Typewriter Co., (1908) 158 Fed. 476.

Vol. V, p. 567, sec. 4920.

- I. PLEADING AND PROOF IN GENERAL, 1628.
- II. STATUTORY DEFENSES, 1630.

I. PLEADING AND PROOF IN GENERAL.

Pleading license.—A plea to a bill for infringement of a patent alleged that complainant was employed by defendant, a corporation engaged in the manufacture of carbons, as a mechanical engineer, and agreed to give his time, skill, and attention and inventive ability to the service of defendant in and about the cheapening and improving of the process of electroplating, and other processes in the manufacture of carbons; that while so employed, and at defendant's expense, he made the inventions covered by the patent, which consist of a process and machine for electroplating; that such inventions and improvements "belong" to defendant; that "said defendant is entitled to the perpetual use of the same, and that, by reason of the facts hereinbefore stated, . . . complainant is not entitled to any relief prayed for in said bill of complaint, but that said defendant . . . is entitled and has the right to the perpetual use in its business for its purposes" of said inventions. Held that such plea should be construed as a plea of license only, which was all that was required to constitute a defense to the bill. Barber v. National Carbon Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 370.

Defense of license and noninfringement.—A defense of noninfringement pleaded in the answer in an infringement suit is not waived by a further defense of license, but raises an issue of fact under which complainant has the burden of proof, and defendant is not estopped by pleading the license from contesting such issue. Niagara Fire Extinguisher Co. v. Hibbard, (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 844.

Decree against defendant's vendor.—It is not a defense to a suit for infringement against a user that a decree has previously been obtained against the maker, from whom the defendant bought the infringing article. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Mutual L. Ins. Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 213.

Right to plead generally.—In patent cases pleas should not be allowed unless they reduce the controversy to a single point or issue, except in very special cases, nor should the question of infringement be tried on a plea, even though it goes to the jurisdiction in the case of a suit against a nonresident, since that question can be raised on a motion to dismiss at the close of complainant's proofs. Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Fox Typewriter Co., (1908) 158 Fed. 476.

It is the office of a plea in equity to present some one single and well-defined ground of defense, which, if sustained, will dispose of the case and avoid the expense and delay of a hearing; and in a suit for infringement of a patent the defense of noninfringement cannot properly be presented by a plea, at least where it involves a consideration of evidence extrinsic to the patent itself. American Sulphite Pulp Co. v. Bayless Pulp, etc., Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 843.

Discontinuance of infringement before suit brought.—In a suit for infringement, a plea setting out that defendant abandoned the manufacture and sale of the infringing article before the commencement of the suit will be stricken out where such statement is contradicted by evidence already in the record. Silver v. J. P. Eustis Mfg. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 348.

To a bill alleging infringement of certain letters patent, the defendant filed a plea setting up that from a certain date, which was fifteen days before the filing of the bill of complaint, it had not infringed the complainant's devices, and that it had on the day named leased and surrendered all its plant, tools, machinery, stock on hand, and good will to another, without stating to whom they were leased or the length of the demise, and further stating that on the day named it had in good faith ceased the manufacture, sale, and use of the alleged infringing devices, and since that time had had no intention, "and now has no intention," of manufacturing, using, or selling the same. Held that the plea was insufficient in view of the uncertainty of the lease, and of the fact that the defendant had infringed, and that the bill alleged that "the defendant now continues, and threatens to continue, to make, use, and sell" the alleged infringing devices. Held, further, that the complainant is entitled to greater security against a confessed infringer than the mere statement that it has no present intention of further infringement, or even the statement that it will not further infringe. General Electric Co. v. Bullock Electric Mfg. Co., (1905) 138 Fed. 412.

Sufficiency of plea in general.—If a plea is to be allowed in a suit for infringement of a patent in any case, it should reduce the issue to a single point, so that, conceding the facts to be as settled by the bill and plea, a full and final determination may be had, and unless it does so, and fully meets the equities of the bill, it will be overruled. Schnauffer v. Aste, (1906) 148 Fed. 867.

Duplicity of plea.—In a suit in equity for infringement of a patent, a plea alleging that prior to the alleged invention by complainant of the device covered by the patent another invented and disclosed the device made and used by defendant which is claimed to infringe, and with reasonable diligence made an application for a patent therefor, which is still pending, is bad, since it does not go to a single point, nor reduce the case to one point, but to two points, viz., possible prior invention, if the two devices should be shown to be the same, and possible noninfringement, if they should be shown not to be the same. Thresher v. General Electric Co., (1906) 143 Fed. 337.

Lack of invention and noninfringement.—In a suit in equity for infringement of a patent the defenses of lack of invention and noninfringement cannot be made by plea, but only by answer. Western Electric Co. v. North Electric Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 79, 67 C. C. A. 553.

Plea of noninfringement.—In a suit in equity for infringement of a patent, the defense of noninfringement cannot be made by plea, except under extraordinary or very special circumstances, and while it may be within the discretion of the court to permit the defense of prior invention to be raised by plea to justify such practice, it should appear with reasonable certainty that the determination of the plea will end the case. Thresher v. General Electric Co., (1906) 143 Fed. 337.

In a suit in equity for infringement of a patent, a plea which sets up the single defense of noninfringement is not a good plea, such defense being one which should be taken by answer, and the plea will either be stricken out or ordered to stand as an answer, as in the judgment of the court will best subserve the ends of justice. Glucose Sugar Refining Co. v. Douglass, (1906) 145 Fed. 949.

Presumption of validity.—Where, in a suit for infringement of a patent, the only defenses pleaded were that complainant's alleged original invention was in extensive use throughout the United States for more than two years prior to the dates pleaded as those on which the applications for patents were made, and a denial of infringement, the court will be concluded as to the validity of the patent, in view of the prior state of the art, by the presumption in its favor arising from the grant of the patent. Campbell v. New Idea Arc Light Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 115.

Reissued patent invalid on its face.—The defense that a reissue is void on its face when compared with the original patent may be raised and determined on demurrer where both patents are properly before the court. Edison v. American Mutoscope, etc., Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 361.

Patent dated more than six months after allowance.—A defense to a suit for infringement on the ground that the patent bears date more than six months later than the notice given to the applicant of the allowance of the application may properly be taken by plea. Western Electric Co. v. North Electric Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 79, 67 C. C. A. 553.

Denial that patentee was first inventor.—A denial in the answer in a suit for infringement of a patent that the patentee was the first inventor of the improvement described in the patent named in the bill, specifying it by number, is sufficient to raise the issue of invention, although the title of the patent as stated in the answer may be technically inaccurate. Robinson v. American Car, etc., Co., (1905) 135 Fed. 693, 68 C. C. A. 331, affirming (1904) 132 Fed. 165.

Prior patents as anticipations.—Prior patents not pleaded cannot be availed of as anticipations, but they are admissible in evidence as showing the prior art, and are to be considered in determining whether, in view of such art, the patent in suit discloses invention. Jones v. Cyphers, (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 753, affirming (1902) 115 Fed. 324.

A prior patent, although not pleaded as an anticipation, may be shown and considered on the question of infringement as a part of the prior art to limit the claims of the patent in suit. Parsons v. New Home Sewing Mach. Co., (1903) 125 Fed. 386.

Insufficient denial of infringement.—Where a defendant charged with infringement of a process patent admits that his product is the same, and that in making it the same materials are used and steps taken as called for by the patent, a mere denial that the process followed is the same, without disclosing the one claimed to be used, is insufficient to negative infringement. Hemolin Co. v. Harway Dyewood, etc., Mfg. Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 483.

Mere denial of infringement insufficient.—Where a defendant charged with infringement of a process patent admits that his product is the same, and that in making it the same materials are used and steps taken as called for by the patent, a mere denial that the process followed is the same, without disclosing the one claimed to be used, is insufficient to negative infringement. Hemolin Co. v. Harway Dyewood, etc., Mfg. Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 483.

Admission of infringement.—Where the answer to a bill charging infringement of a patent admitted that defendant had during the time alleged made and used articles conforming to the claims of the patent, no further proof is required from complainant on the issue of infringement. Fox v. Knickerbocker Engraving Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 442, affirming 158 Fed. 422.

Abandonment of manufacture of infringing article.—In a suit for infringement, a plea setting out that defendant had abandoned the manufacture and sale of the infringing article before the commencement of the suit will be stricken out where such statement is contradicted by evidence already in the record. Silver v. J. P. Eustis Mfg. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 348.

Necessity to set up defense of nonpatentability.—It is the duty of the court to dismiss a suit brought to restrain infringement of a patent where the structure is not patentable, even though the defense be not set up in the answer. Conderman v. Clements, (1906) 147 Fed. 915, 78 C. C. A. 51.

Allegation of nonmarking.—In a suit for infringement of a patent, where the bill does not show that the patented article was marked as required by R. S. sec. 4900, it must clearly allege that explicit notice of infringement was given to defendant, otherwise damages are not recoverable except for infringement after the suit was commenced. An allegation that defendant was informed or had knowledge of the infringement is insufficient. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Condit Electrical Mfg. Co., (1906) 159 Fed. 154.

Waiver of failure to prove marking.—Where a bill for infringement of a patent properly alleged that the patented machine of complainant was marked in accordance with the requirement of R. S. sec. 4900, which allegation was not denied in the answer, and no objection was made on the hearing to the failure of complainant to prove it, such objection is waived, and cannot be taken for the first time on entry of the decree. Pettibone v. Pennsylvania Steel Co., (1905) 134 Fed. 889.

Amendment of answer.—Under the authority given the court to permit amendments by equity rule 60, a defendant in a suit for infringement of a patent, who has set up prior invention, knowledge, or use, will be given leave to amend his answer, even after replication filed, by adding the name of another witness, giving his place of residence, as required by this section, where satisfied that the application is not made for delay, and that the amendment is in furtherance of justice. Standard Elevator Interlock Co. v. Ramsey, (1904) 130 Fed. 151.

Disclaimer of intention to continue infringement.—The assertion in the answer of a defendant, sued for infringement of a right to make the devices complained of as an infringement, in the absence of a very express denial of a purpose to exercise the right claimed, justifies the presumption that further infringement is to be apprehended, if that device shall prove to be an infringement and the coupling with such assertion of a general averment that defendant does not intend to employ the patented device or to interfere with the rights of complainant cannot be construed as a disclaimer of an intention to continue to make the infringing device. Johnson v. Foos Mfg. Co., (1906) 141 Fed. 73, 72 C. C. A. 105.

Demurrer on ground of invalidity of patent.—A demurrer to a patent may be sustained, but only when the question of invention is free from doubt and there is an absolute conviction in the mind of the court of the lack of invention. General Electric Co. v. Campbell, (1905) 137 Fed. 600; Jacks-Evans Mfg. Co. v. Hemp, (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 254; Peters v. Chicago Biscuit Co., (1906) 142 Fed. 779; Kuhn v. Lock-Stub Check Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 445, affirming (1907) 157 Fed. 235; Sanitary Metal Tile Co. v. New York Metal Ceiling Co., (1910) 188 Fed. 441.

A patent will not be adjudged void on demurrer, where the precise points raised have been previously decided in other suits in the district in favor of the complainant. Regensberg v. American Exch. Cigar Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 549.

By profert of a patent in a suit for its infringement it is carried into the bill, and, if it is plainly devoid of invention on its face, a demurrer to the bill on that ground is well taken, and must be sustained. Hogan v. Westmoreland Specialty Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 199.

A bill for infringement of a patent is not demurrable because of its failure to allege that the invention was not patented in a foreign country more than seven months prior to the filing of the application in this country; the provision of Rev. St., § 4887, as amended by Act March 3, 1897, c. 391, § 3, denying the right to a patent in case of such foreign patenting more than seven months prior to the application, being a matter of defense to be pleaded by answer. American Cereal Co. v. Oriental Food Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 649.

II. STATUTORY DEFENSES.

Purpose of statute.—The purpose of this section making it a defense to an action for infringement of a patent that the patented invention had been in public use or on sale in this country for more than two years before the application for the patent, is to require a patentee to act promptly in securing his patent. National Cash Register Co. v. American Cash Register Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 79.

Necessity of notice.—The defendant in a suit for infringement of a patent must give notice in his answer of any defense by way of prior patents, publications, or public use relied on to show want of novelty or invention, otherwise such evidence is receivable only to show the state of the art, and to aid in the proper construction of the patent in suit. Morton v. Llewellyn, (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 693.

Estoppel to contest validity of patent.—The settlement by a licensee under a patent of a suit brought against it for infringement of another patent does not estop its licensor, who was not a party, and did not participate in the settlement, from subsequently contesting the validity of the patent sued on. Automatic Racking Mach. Co. v. White Racker Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 643.

Even if the assignor of a patent be estopped as against the assignee to deny its validity, it is open to him in a suit for infringement to show the prior state of the art as bearing on the construction and scope of the patent, and to show that the acts alleged are not violations. Aberthaw Constr. Co. v. Ransome, (1906) 192 Mass. 434, 78 N. E. 485.

Unauthorized issuance of patent.—In a suit for infringement of a patent the want of legal authority in the Commissioner of Patents to issue the same may be pleaded as a defense. Weston Electrical Instrument Co. v. Empire Electrical Instrument Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 599, 69 C. C. A. 329, affirming (1904) 131 Fed. 90.

Fraudulent procurement of patent.—It is not open to an alleged infringer to collaterally attack a patent on the ground of fraud in its procurement, as that the patentee's solicitor contributed a substantial part of the invention and embodied it in the application after the patentee had made oath to the same. Eastern Paper Bag Co. v. Continental Paper Bag Co., (1906) 142 Fed. 479.

A patent procured by fraud and collusion, or by illegal procedure, either in the Patent Office or in a suit to procure its issuance under R. S. sec. 4915, can be attacked only by the government, and such matters cannot be set up as a defense in a suit for infringement. Western Glass Co. v. Schmertz Wire-Glass Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 788, modifying (1910) 178 Fed. 977.

Patent void on its face.—The defense that a reissue is void on its face when compared with the original patent may be raised and determined on demurrer where both patents are properly before the court. Edison v. American Mutoscope, etc., Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 361.

Want of novelty apparent on face of patent.—Where the want of novelty of a device is manifestly apparent on the face of the patent, the issue may properly be determined at the threshold of the case on demurrer. American Salesbook Co. v. Carter-Crume Co., (1903) 125 Fed. 499.

Evidence of prior patents to show state of art.—A prior patent, although not pleaded as an anticipation, may be shown and considered on the question of infringement as a part of the prior art to limit the claims of the patent in suit. Parsons v. New Home Sewing Mach. Co., (1903) 125 Fed. 386.

Prior invention not pleaded.—In a suit for infringement of a patent, where defendant manufactures under a patent of prior date, but complainant undertakes to carry the date of his invention back to a still earlier date, although no such issue is tendered by his pleading, defendant may meet such proof by the defense of laches or abandonment, without pleading the same, since, if pleaded, it would not be responsive to anything in the bill. Curtain Supply Co. v. National Lock Washer Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 45.

Proof of prior use.—That the device of a patent was publicly used and exhibited in actual use for two years is sufficient to sustain a suit for infringement without a showing that it has been in constant use since that time. Los Angeles Art Organ Co. v. Æolian Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 880.

I. GENERAL EQUITABLE JURISDICTION.

Action for damages maintainable only at law.—An action to recover damages and royalty for the infringement of a patent can only be maintained at law. De Forest v. Collins Wireless Telephone Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 821.

Adequate remedy at law.—Where, on the hearing of a suit in equity for infringement of a patent, in which an injunction and accounting were asked, it was shown that defendant made and used but one of the patented articles about which there was any dispute as to complainant's consent, and that a royalty for its use was agreed on, which defendant promised to pay, and there was no evidence of defendant's insolvency, or of any profits to be accounted for, or tending to show any threat or intention to use the patented article without complainant's consent, the bill was properly dismissed, on the ground that no case was shown for the exercise of equitable jurisdiction. Plotts v. Central Oil Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 901.

Allegations in a bill for infringement that complainant derives his benefit from his patent through limited granting of licenses does not deprive equity of jurisdiction by showing that he has an adequate remedy at law where it does not appear that there is a fixed license fee for all users. Peters v. Chicago Biscuit Co., (1906) 142 Fed. 779.

A bill for infringement of a patent which charges past infringement only and contains no allegation of present or threatened infringement, does not state a case within the jurisdiction of a court of equity, when taken in connection with a plea denying any infringement since more than a year prior to the filing of the bill, and with the fact that the patent expired before the hearing. Weston Electrical Instrument Co. v. Vallee Bros. Electrical Co., (1906) 145 Fed. 534.

Demand for injunction.—Where a bill alleging infringement of an unexpired patent demands damages and a permanent injunction, equity has jurisdiction. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. American Graphophone Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 860, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 350.

Recovery of profits as ground for equitable jurisdiction.—The fact that profits are recoverable in a suit in equity for infringement of a patent under this section and not in an action at law, while not in itself any basis for equitable jurisdiction, is a reason why that jurisdiction should not be relinquished when it may be upheld on other grounds. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Electrode Mfg. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 543.

Effect of assignment during suit.—A court of equity, which has acquired jurisdiction of a suit by the owner of a patent to enjoin its infringement and to recover damages for past infringement, does not lose such jurisdiction because, pending the suit, the patent is assigned to another, who is brought in by a supplemental bill under equity rule 57, and may proceed, not only to grant an injunction, but to award damages to both the original complainant and his assignee for infringement proved during the time of their respective ownership. Leadam v. Ringgold, (1905) 140 Fed. 611.

II. JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION.

Infringement and unfair trade.—There being diversity of citizenship, it was proper to join in one bill of action for infringement of a design patent and for unfair competition in trade. Havens v. Burns, (1911) 188 Fed. 441.

Infringement and compelling transfer of patent.—A bill by the equitable owner of a patent against the holder of the legal title to compel a transfer of the patent and for infringement is not multifarious. Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Avery Portable Lighting Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 60.

Infringement of several patents.—A bill for the infringement of two patents is multifarious, unless it alleges that they are capable of conjoint use, and have been so used by defendant in what is practically a single device. Robinson v. Chicago R. Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 40.

A bill for the infringement of an expired and an unexpired patent, alleging that the infringement consists in the use by defendant of a machine which embodies the devices of both patents, so conjoined as to render it practically impossible to apportion the damages and profits resulting from the use of each element of the machine, is not multifarious as joining a legal with an equitable demand, since the recovery sought is not separable with respect to the two patents, and a court of equity, having acquired jurisdiction, will grant all appropriate relief in connection with the use of the alleged infringing machine. Huntington Dry Pulverizer Co. v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 558.

Uniting patents not used together.—Where the defendant, pending a suit for infringement of a patent, begins the use of another alleged infringing device, separate and distinct from that complained of in the bill, although such fact does not render the suit defective, within the meaning of equity rule 57, but constitutes ground for an independent suit, the court may nevertheless, in the interest of saving delay and expense by the needless duplication of proofs, permit the question of the second infringement to be brought into the case by a supplemental bill. Chicago Grain Door Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 101.

Original patent and patent for improvement.—While a bill for infringement of two separate patents must show that the inventions are capable of conjoint use it is sufficiently shown where one patent shows on its face that it is for an improvement on the invention of the other. Moss v. McConway-Torley Co., (1906) 144 Fed. 128.

Infringement of product and process.—A bill for the infringement of two patents, although one is for a process and the other for a product, is not multifarious, where both relate to the same article and are capable of being conjointly infringed, as it is alleged in the bill they are by the defendant. American Graphophone Co. v. Leeds, etc., Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 281.

Infringement by different persons.—A bill for infringement against a corporation and an individual described as its president and general manager, which charges that defendants have and each of them has committed certain acts of infringement, sufficiently alleges a joint infringement, and is not demurrable for multifariousness. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Electrose Mfg. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 543.

Complainant obtained a decree against an Illinois corporation for an injunction and accounting for infringement of a patent, and thereafter filed a petition, in the nature of a supplemental bill, against a New Jersey corporation having the same name as the original defendant, alleging that, pending the suit, the latter had transferred to it all of its property and good will, receiving payment partly in cash, but principally in the stock and bonds of the purchasing company. It also alleged that the latter company, after the transfer, conducted the defense in the suit, and prayed that it be brought under the injunction, and also be adjudged to pay whatever damages should be recovered on account of its own and its predecessor's infringement. Held that, while the petition stated ground for the injunctive relief, it showed no right to the other relief prayed for, and was, moreover, multifarious, being in its latter aspect essentially a creditor's bill. Western Telephone Mfg. Co. v. American Electric Telephone Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 603.

III. PLEADINGS.

The form and requisites of bills in suits for infringement of patents have been settled by repeated decisions, and the practice can only be changed by an amendment of the equity rules or of the rules of the Circuit Courts. American Graphophone Co. v. National Phonograph Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 349.

Validity of patent.—A bill for infringement must show the facts which are by statute made essential to the validity of the patent sued on—such as original invention, that the invention had not been previously patented or described in a printed publication, or used for more than two years prior to the application—as requisite conditions precedent to the right to sue. American Graphophone Co. v. National Phonograph Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 349.

A bill for infringement of a patent in order to state a case must allege the facts which are essential to the validity of the patent under R. S. secs. 4886, 4887, as amended by Act March 3, 1897, c. 391, and negative those the existence of which would defeat it. Moss v. McConway-Torley Co., (1906) 144 Fed. 128.

A bill for infringement of a patent must specifically allege all of the facts necessary to show the validity of the patent under the statutes, and a failure to allege that it was issued in the name of the United States or under the seal of the Patent Office, or that it was signed by the Commissioner of Patents, renders the bill demurrable. Eastwood v. Cutler-Hammer Mfg. Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 718.

Under the weight of authority, a bill for infringement must allege the facts which are by statute made essential to the validity of the patent sued on, as that no application for a foreign patent for the invention was filed more than seven months before the filing of the application in this country, which would render the patent invalid under R. S. sec. 4887, as amended by Act March 3, 1897, c. 391, § 3. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. Leeds, etc., Co., (1908) 165 Fed. 931.

Averment of diligence.—A bill for infringement of a patent which alleges acts of infringement within six years need not specifically allege that complainant has been diligent. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Electro Mfg. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 543.

Averment of due proceedings in patent office.—A bill for infringement of a patent makes a prima facie case where it alleges the invention, the issue of letters patent, ownership by complainant, infringement by defendant, and damages sustained. The filing of an application in due form commensurate with the grant is presumed from the issuance of the patent, and need not be alleged, any defect therein affecting the validity of the patent being matter of defense. Bowers v. Bucyrus Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 39.

Allegation as to prior patent or published description.—A bill for infringement of a patent applied for after Act March 3, 1897, c. 391, took effect is bad on demurrer where it fails to allege that the invention was not patented or described in any printed publication in this or any foreign country more than two years prior to the application for the patent, or whether or not it was patented in any foreign country, and, if so, that application was made within seven months thereafter for the United States patent. Moss v. McConway-Torley Co., (1906) 144 Fed. 128.

Patent made part of bill by reference.—Where a bill for infringement of a reissued patent makes profert of such reissue, and recites that it was founded on the original patent, giving its date and number, such original is essentially incorporated into the bill, and may be examined and compared with the reissue on demurrer to the bill. Edison v. American Mutoscope, etc., Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 361.

Averments on information and belief.—A bill for infringement of a patent is not demurrable because material facts are alleged on information and belief. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Electro Mfg. Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 543.

Expired patents.—A suit for an infringement may be prosecuted, even though the patent may have expired after suit begun.

Interlocking Steel Sheeting Co. v. Friestedt Interlocking Channel Bar Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 398. See also Huntington Dry Pulverizer Co. v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 558.

Patent void on its face.—Where the invalidity of a patent for lack of invention is clear on its face, the court may so declare it sua sponte, although the question is not raised by the pleadings, and may dismiss a bill for its infringement. Wills v. Scranton Cold Storage, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 181, affirming (1906) 147 Fed. 525.

Averments of litigation and sustained validity of patent.—In a bill to enjoin infringement of a patent, allegations setting out proceedings in other courts with reference to the patent, the granting of foreign patents thereon, and acquiescence therein in this and other countries, are proper, as going to the question of acquiescence, and are material, as tending to establish a presumptive right on an application for a preliminary injunction. Peters v. Chicago Biscuit Co., (1906) 142 Fed. 779.

Enumeration of claim relied on.—A bill for infringement of a patent containing a number of claims must specifically enumerate the claims to be relied on, and where it does not the objection may properly be raised by demurrer on the ground that it is inequitable and unconscionable. Eastwood v. Cutler-Hammer Mfg. Co., (1906) 148 Fed. 718.

Averments of title or ownership.—A bill for infringement must allege complainant's title and its source, and it is not sufficient merely to attach a copy of the patent as an exhibit showing its issuance to complainant as assignee. American Graphophone Co. v. National Phonograph Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 349.

Sufficient averment of title.—A bill for infringement of a patent, alleging title in complainant, based on an instrument of transfer of several patents and containing reservations, if it does not appear that such reservations apply to the patent in suit, is not demurrable for want of title in complainant. Sirocco Engineering Co. v. Monarch Ventilator Co., (1910) 184 Fed. 84.

Ownership of assignee.—A bill to recover damages and profits for infringement of a patent, which merely alleges that it was issued in due form of law on application "to the proper department of the government," and while alleging title in complainant by assignment does not show the date of such assignment, nor that it carried the right to past damages, is insufficient. Vant Woud Rubber Co. v. Sternau, (1906) 145 Fed. 197.

Description of invention or profert of patent.—The mention in a bill for infringement, of prior patents to the same patentee, does not amount to a profert of such patents so as to bring them before the court for consideration on a demurrer to the bill. Bowers v. Bucyrus Co., (1904) 132 Fed. 39.

A bill for infringement of a patent, which makes profert of the patent, is not demurrable because it gives only a general description of the patented device. Hildreth v. Bee Candy Mfg. Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 40.

Denial of prior use or sale.—A bill for infringement of a patent must allege that the invention of the patent had not been in public use or on sale in this country for more than two years prior to the application for the patent. Hayes-Young Tie Plate Co. v. St. Louis Transit Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 900.

Infringement of material part of invention.—A bill for infringement of a patent must charge the infringement of a material part of the invention to entitle the complainant to relief in equity. Moss v. McConway-Torley Co., (1906) 144 Fed. 128.

General charge of infringement.—Where a bill charges infringement of a patent generally, in accordance with the approved practice, it may be construed to charge infringement of all the claims; and, unless under very exceptional circumstances, the complainant cannot be required to amend by specifying the claims with respect to which infringement is claimed and the parts of defendant's structure which are claimed to infringe. Morton Trust Co. v. American Car, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 916, reversing (1903) 121 Fed. 132.

Charging infringement on information and belief.—Where a bill of complaint charges infringement of letters patent, the averment of infringement under the form, "Your orator further shows, on information and belief, that," etc., is sufficient; the fact of infringement not being necessarily within the knowledge of the complainant. Murray Co. v. Continental Gin Co., (1903) 126 Fed. 533.

Extent of complainant's loss or damage.—The failure of a bill for infringement to allege the extent of complainant's loss or damage is not ground for demurrer. American Graphophone Co. v. National Phonograph Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 349.

Amendment of bill.—In a suit for infringement by an exclusive licensee, the failure of the bill to allege that the license includes the exclusive right to make the patented article may be cured by amendment, where the evidence shows a license to make, as well as to use and vend. Fox v. Knickerbocker Engraving Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 714.

Cross-bill setting up interference.—Conceding that the defendant in a suit for infringement of a reissue patent may by cross-bill set up an interfering patent, and obtain a decree canceling complainant's reissue for fraud, such cross-bill must at least set out the specific facts relied on to constitute the fraud. Coffield Motor Washer Co. v. A. D. Howe Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 668.

Supplemental bill to set up new infringements.—Where a patent has been adjudged valid and infringed and an accounting ordered, it is the better practice to require the complainant to set up any alleged new infringements by supplemental bill, which can be disposed of and the order of reference modified as required, rather than to extend the accounting to devices which have not been adjudged to infringe and entail costs upon the parties which may prove unnecessary. Murray v. Orr, etc., Hardware Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 369.

Supplemental bill to meet modification of infringing structure.—The fact that, pending a suit for the infringement of a patent, the defendant modifies the alleged infringing structure, affords no ground for a supplemental bill alleging infringement by the new structure. If the original structure infringed, full relief may be obtained as to the new structure under the original bill, while if it did not a new case, based on infringement subsequent to the commencement of the suit, cannot be made by a supplemental bill. Westinghouse Air Brake Co. v. Christensen Engineering Co., (1904) 126 Fed. 764.

IV. INJUNCTIONS.

Necessity for special prayer for preliminary injunction.—Where a preliminary injunction is sought, it must be specially asked for in the prayer of the bill in conformity to equity rule 21, otherwise the bill is demurrable. American Graphophone Co. v. National Phonograph Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 349.

Discretion of court as to preliminary injunction.—A motion for a preliminary injunction to restrain infringement of a patent is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and, to justify the granting of such an injunction, complainant's case must exhibit a right free from doubt or reasonable dispute by showing either, first, a prior adjudication sustaining the patent after a bona fide and vigorous contest, or, second, a continuous public acquiescence of such character as to be the equivalent of an adjudication, or, third, by clear and satisfactory evidence that the patent is valid. Hartford v. Western Mfg. Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 676.

Limiting injunction to acts injurious to complainant.—A preliminary injunction to restrain contributory infringement of patents covering a piano player by the sale to purchasers of such players of music rolls to be used therewith, in violation of the license contracts under which the instruments were sold by complainant, held properly granted, although the rolls made and sold by defendant were also adapted to be used with other instruments, where the injunction was carefully limited by its terms so as to prohibit only sales of rolls "intended to be used" in players covered by the patents in suit and sold subject to such restrictions. Æolian Co. v. Harry H. Juelg Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 155 Fed. 119, affirming (1906) 145 Fed. 939.

Nonuser of patent.—Nonuser of a patent for an improvement in paper bag machines, in order to save the expense of changing or altering the old machines, will not justify a court of equity in withholding injunctive relief against infringement. Continental Paper Bag Co. v. Eastern Paper Bag Co., (1908) 210 U. S. 405, 28 S. Ct. 748, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1122, affirming (1906) 150 Fed. 741, 80 C. C. A. 407.

The fact that no machine has ever been made and shown to work successfully under a patent does not prevent the owner of the patent, if it is valid, from restraining infringement of it. Hoe v. Miehle Printing Press, etc., Co., (1906) 141 Fed. 112.

Where a patented device is obviously operative and useful, the fact that it has never been manufactured by the owner of the patent does not affect his right to maintain a suit for infringement. U. S. Fastener Co. v. Bradley, (1906) 149 Fed. 222, 79 C. C. A. 180, affirming 143 Fed. 523.

Patent held merely to prevent business competition.—Quere, whether a suit in equity may be maintained for an injunction to restrain infringement of a patent, as well as for an accounting, although the owner of the patent has never constructed a machine thereunder for practical use, and apparently does not intend to do so, but merely to hold the patent to prevent the use of the invention by competitors in business. Eastern Paper Bag Co. v. Continental Paper Bag Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 479.

Patent near expiration.—Complainant filed a bill for infringement of a patent, praying for an injunction and for an accounting of profits and damages. The bill was filed the day prior to the expiration of the patent, and averred that during the six years next prior to the filing of the bill complainant had not made, used, nor sold his process, nor any part thereof, that he had obtained no financial advantage from his invention, nor had he sustained any actual damage during such period by the enjoyment of the invention by others. Held that, since the bill was sufficient to sustain an ad interim restraining order, and complainant had no adequate remedy at law, the bill was not demurrable because filed so short a time before the expiration of the patent that no motion for an injunction could have been regularly made. Tompkins v. International Paper Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 773.

Conjoint use of expired and unexpired patents.—Courts must refuse a preliminary injunction on affidavits against the conjoint use of two patents, one of which has expired because originally taken out both at home and abroad and its life has expired with the terms of the foreign patent, and the broader of which has not been adjudicated in the courts as to its features of invention. National Phonograph Co. v. American Graphophone Co., (1905) 138 Fed. 231.

Extent of infringement immaterial.—The fact that a defendant, sued for infringement of a patent by making and selling the patented machine, has made and sold but one such machine, and that pending the suit the purchaser was licensed by complainant, does not deprive a court of equity of jurisdiction to award an injunction, unless it further appears clearly that there is no reason to apprehend the making by defendant of other infringing machines. Johnson v. Foos Mfg. Co., (1906) 141 Fed. 73, 72 C. C. A. 105.

Single sale.—The sale of an infringing article to an agent of the owner of the patent, while it may not afford a basis for the recovery of damages or profits, constitutes an infringement, which entitles such owner to an injunction; and where two such sales are proved, made at different times from a stock on hand, the seller apparently supposing that the purchaser was buying in the regular course of business, it is sufficient to support an inference that other similar sales were made, and to warrant a decree for an accounting, in the absence of any evidence to contradict or explain the transactions. Badische Anilin, etc., Fabrik v. Klipstein, (1903) 125 Fed. 543.

Where, on an application to punish defendant for contempt in violating an injunction restraining the sale of meters infringing complainants' patent, it appeared that but a single sale had been made by defendant since the injunction, and that was of a meter differing in form, if not in principle, from the one established by the decree as an infringement, and that complainant's object was to obtain an adjudication that the meter so sold was in fact an infringement, and such question could be fully litigated on the taking of the account, the motion to punish for contempt would be denied. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Sangamo Electric Co., (1904) 128 Fed. 747.

Unfair conduct of complainant.—Motions for preliminary injunctions restraining infringement of a patent for a milk can by a large number of users, based on a decision of the Circuit Court finding infringement by the manufacturer, must be denied where it appears that only a small number of the cans used by the defendants and claimed to infringe were of the pattern which was held to infringe by the court, and also that complainant had misrepresented the scope of the decision to defendants for the purpose of obtaining from them large license fees. Ironclad Mfg. Co. v. Sugar Loaf Dairy Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 108.

Threatened or continued infringement.—Defendant bought an infringing machine, which it commenced using after suit brought, but with such alterations that it did not infringe. It denied the validity of the patent, however, and throughout the suit asserted its right to use the machine in the manner its construction contemplated, and could have put it in shape for such use in a short time and with little expense. Held that complainant was entitled to an injunction notwithstanding the fact that there had been no actual infringement. Westinghouse Mach. Co. v. Press Pub. Co., (1904) 127 Fed. 822.

Preparations or threats to infringe a patent shown by ex parte affidavits only are not sufficient to warrant the granting of a preliminary injunction. American Graphophone Co. v. Leeds, etc., Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 427.

A court of equity may enjoin a threatened infringement of a patent, although no act of infringement had been committed when the bill was filed. Tindel-Morris Co. v. Chester Forging, etc., Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 304.

A federal court of equity may entertain a suit to enjoin infringement of a patent where it is threatened, although no act of infringement had been completed when the bill was filed. Chester Forging, etc., Co. v. Tindel-Morris Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 899, affirming 163 Fed. 304.

Ceasing infringement and promising to abstain.—That the defendant in a suit for infringement had ceased infringement before the suit was brought does not deprive equity of jurisdiction, where the defendant denies the validity of the patent, and does not set up that he has abandoned the manufacture and sale of the alleged infringing article, and does not intend further infringement. Cayuta Wheel, etc., Co. v. Kennedy Valve Mfg. Co., (1903) 127 Fed. 355.

Where it is not shown that a complainant has suffered or is threatened with any serious injury from the alleged infringement of his patent by defendant, and defendant denies infringement since the commencement of the suit, and states that he abandoned the manufacture and sale of the alleged infringing article, and does not intend to and will not further infringe, such irreparable injury does not appear as to require the granting of a preliminary injunction. The effect of such injunction in deterring others from infringement cannot be considered on such an application. Silver v. J. P. Eustis Mfg. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 348.

The fact that a defendant shown to have used an infringing device in the past disclaims any intention of using it in the future does not affect complainant's right to an injunction. Brookfield v. Elmer Glassworks, (1904) 132 Fed. 312.

A preliminary injunction to restrain infringement of a patent will not be issued, where defendant admits the use of the alleged infringing device, without knowledge of complainant's rights, but alleges that such use has ceased, and the court is assured that it will not be resumed. General Electric Co. v. Pittsburg-Buffalo Co., (1906) 144 Fed. 439.

Where an answer in a suit in equity for infringement of a patent denies the validity of the patent, and asserts the right of defendant to make and vend the machine covered thereby, and also by implication admits an allegation of the bill that it has on hand and is offering for sale a large number of infringing machines, a mere averment that it ceased selling an alleged infringing machine prior to the commencement of the suit, and has no intention of using or selling any machines embodying the features of the patent, not supported by any clear proof, is not such a disclaimer as will deprive the complainant of the right to an injunction. Deere, etc., Co. v. Dowagiac Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 177.

Where a defendant had ceased infringement of a patent before suit brought, which fact complainant had full opportunity to learn, and the court is satisfied that defendant acted in good faith, and that no further infringement is reasonably to be apprehended, it may properly refuse an injunction and dismiss the bill. Kennicott Water Softener Co. v. Bain, (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 520.

Merely use of infringing device.—A preliminary injunction should not be granted where the defendant in a suit for infringement is merely a user of the alleged infringing device, and it is not shown that irreparable injury or any special injury will result to complainant from its continued use, and where the preliminary proofs on a defense of res judicata pleaded leave the question in serious doubt. Jefferson Electric Light, etc., Co. v. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co., (1908) 134 Fed. 892, 67 C. C. A. 189.

Proof of validity of patent and infringement.—Unless a patent is supported by public acquiescence, or prior adjudication, or some other peculiar condition, the complainant's rights must be free from doubt to entitle him to a preliminary injunction. Parsons Non-Skid Co. v. Victor Tire Grip Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 617.

In suits for infringement the rule is that the patent must be supported by public acquiescence or prior adjudication to entitle complainant to a preliminary injunction, unless there are some peculiar conditions which call for the exercise of the court's discretion in granting the injunction. It is also incumbent on complainant to show that the threatened injury will be irreparable. Silver v. J. P. Eustis Mfg. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 348.

A court is not required to grant a preliminary injunction against the infringement of a patent because its validity has been sustained by a decision in another circuit, but is at liberty to exercise its independent judgment on the proofs, and will the more readily do so where it appears that before the hearing in the prior suit the defendant therein had ceased to have any interest in defending it. Diamond Match Co. v. Union Match Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 602.

Effect of decree in prior litigation.—The presumption in favor of the validity of a patent created by a decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals sustaining it cannot be overcome on a motion for a preliminary injunction in a subsequent case by ex parte affidavits relating to matters occurring several years previously. American Graphophone Co. v. International Record Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 427.

Validity of patent adjudicated in another circuit.—Where a patent has been held valid and infringed by a court of another circuit after a contested hearing, it is the practice to grant a preliminary injunction on such decision unless new evidence is produced which is of such character that it may fairly be supposed that it would have changed the decision if it had been before the court in the prior suit. Brill v. Peckham Mfg. Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 139.

Presumption as to validity of patent.—The fact alone that a patent is unadjudicated will not defeat the right to a preliminary injunction against its infringement; but unless it also appears from common knowledge, or from the prior art shown, that there is reasonable ground for doubt as to its validity, the presumption arising from its issuance by the Patent Office is sufficient to warrant injunctive relief against an infringer. Palmer v. Wilcox Mfg. Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 375.

Doubt as to validity of patent or infringement.—Where the complainant's right, on the proofs, is doubtful, and there is a substantial controversy between the parties as to the validity of a patent, which cannot well be determined without a full hearing, the court will not grant a preliminary injunction which would work great financial injury to a defendant able to respond in damages if infringement should be found on the final hearing. Diamond Match Co. v. Union Match Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 802.

An application for a preliminary injunction against infringement of the Custodis patent, No. 512,504, for a chimney, denied in view of the fact that the patent had not been adjudicated, and that the showing made raised a serious question as to its validity. Alphons Custodis Chimney Constr. Co. v. Heinicke, (1904) 135 Fed. 552.

Infringement of the Hoggson patent, No. 520,429, for an electric battery, by a battery in which the cells are not connected by the spring clamp specified in the patent, and which is an important, if not an essential, feature of the invention, nor by any equivalent therefor, is too doubtful to warrant the granting of a preliminary injunction. American Electrical Novelty, etc., Co. v. Stanley, (C. C. A. 1905) 142 Fed. 754, reversing 140 Fed. 444.

A preliminary injunction should not be granted to restrain an alleged infringement of a paper patent issued more than sixteen years before suit, the validity of which has not been established by adjudication or public acquiescence, and where there is a strong showing of anticipation. Standard Roller Bearing Co. v. Hess-Bright Mfg. Co., (1908) 145 Fed. 356.

Previous adjudication of validity.—Where the validity of a patent has been sustained after protracted litigation, the only question open on motion for a preliminary injunction in a subsequent suit against another defendant is the question of infringement, unless evidence of invalidity is introduced of such conclusive character that, if introduced in the former case, it would probably have led to a different conclusion. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Sterling-Meaker Co., (1906) 140 Fed. 554.

The fact that a patent has not been adjudicated is not sufficient ground for refusing a preliminary injunction against its infringement, where that is clear, unless there is a substantial question as to its validity. Lambert Snyder Vibrator Co. v. Marvel Vibrator Co., (1905) 138 Fed. 82.

Where the validity of a reissue patent has been adjudged by the Circuit Court of Appeals, a defense of laches in applying for the reissue, set up by a defendant in a subsequent suit for its infringement, is not sufficient ground for refusing a preliminary injunction, where infringement is not denied. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. International Trolley Controller Co., (1905) 141 Fed. 128.

Where a patent has been sustained by a Circuit Court of Appeals, the only question open on an application for a preliminary injunction in a subsequent suit in the same circuit is that of infringement, unless new evidence of invalidity of a conclusive character is produced. Cohen v. Stephenson, (1906) 142 Fed. 467, 73 C. C. A. 583.

A preliminary injunction should not be granted to restrain infringement of a patent which has not been adjudicated, where the proofs leave the question of its validity in doubt, especially when it appears that defendants are financially responsible. Bristol Oil, etc., Co. v. Beacom, (1905) 143 Fed. 550.

Where a patent has been sustained on a motion for a preliminary injunction, and the order affirmed on appeal, it comes before another court on a similar application as a sustained patent, and the ruling may properly be followed, in the absence of any contrary decision, unless there is some new question raised, and so far sustained as to make a prima facie defense against validity. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Jeffrey Mfg. Co., (1897) 144 Fed. 130.

On an application for a preliminary injunction to restrain infringement of a patent, by a defendant over whom complainant prevailed in interference proceedings in the Patent Office and in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia on appeal therefrom, the judgment of such court creates a presumption in complainant's favor as to the question of priority of invention, and, where that is the only question in issue, entitles him to the injunction, unless overcome by proof establishing defendant's contention beyond a reasonable doubt. Laas v. Scott, (1906) 145 Fed. 195.

The owner of a patent, who has obtained an interlocutory decree adjudging its validity and infringement, is not required to wait until it has become final before bringing suit against the defendant for infringement by the same service in another district; nor is he precluded, by the fact that evidence has been taken in the second suit, from pleading therein the final decree when obtained in the first suit as an adjudication. Bredin v. National Metal Weatherstrip Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 741.

Where a bill for infringement of patents alleged that defendant had obtained the parts of the patented machines from complainant by fraud, and was engaged in putting them together with the intent to use the machines in infringement of the patents, and the proofs on a motion for a preliminary injunction clearly sustained such allegation, the fact that the validity of the patents had not been adjudicated did not require the court to refuse the injunction. Chester Forging, etc., Co. v. Tindel-Morris Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 890, affirming 163 Fed. 304.

A preliminary injunction against an alleged infringer of an unadjudicated patent should not be granted where the question of infringement is concededly one of fact as to the operation of defendant's device, and the showing is entirely by ex parte affidavits, which are conflicting. Wright Co. v. Herring-Curtiss Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 110, reversing 177 Fed. 257.

Where there has been a prior adjudication sustaining a patent and the infringement thereof in the same or in another circuit, where its validity was contested on full proofs, a Circuit Court should, on motion for preliminary injunction, sustain the patent, and leave the determination of its validity to the final hearing. Interurban R., etc., Co. v. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 166.

Prior adjudication sustaining a patent held sufficient to justify the granting of a preliminary injunction against its infringement. Walker Patent Pivoted Bin Co. v. Bernard Gloekler Co., (1909) 188 Fed. 435.

Decision of Patent Office as adjudication of validity.—Ordinarily a decision of the Patent Office in interference proceedings, awarding a patent to one of two applicants, does not constitute a prior adjudication of the validity of the patent, which will warrant the granting of a preliminary injunction to restrain its infringement even against the unsuccessful applicant, nor estop him from contesting its validity, except on the ground of his own priority of invention. Turner Brass Works v. Appliance Mfg. Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 195.

The fact that an applicant for a patent was successful in interference proceedings in the Patent Office is presumptive evidence of the validity of his patent, on a motion for a preliminary injunction, as against the other party to the proceedings, only so far as concerns the question of priority of invention. Perfection Cooler Co. v. Rose Mfg. Co., (1909) 175 Fed. 120.

Extent of injury by granting or refusing injunction.—Where the complainant has made a prima facie case for injunction against infringement, the right is not to be denied on the ground that the injunction would be inconvenient to defendant or seriously interfere with the success of his business. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Jeffrey Mfg. Co., (1897) 144 Fed. 130.

When special circumstances are known which would render the granting of an injunction to restrain the infringement of a patent proper, but it also appears that the granting of the injunction would cause irreparable injury to defendants if they should finally succeed in the suit, the better practice is to permit them to give security to pay any damages which complainant may recover, and, on this being given, to refuse the injunction. Karfiol v. Rothner, (1907) 151 Fed. 777.

A preliminary injunction will not be granted to restrain alleged infringement of an unadjudicated patent of recent date, where the defenses involve issues of fact, and where complainant cannot in any event be subjected to more than a small amount of damages before the case can be heard on the merits. Meyers v. Skinner, (1910) 179 Fed. 860.

Determining validity of patent.—It is the general rule that a preliminary injunction will not be granted to restrain the alleged infringement of patents which have not been adjudicated, and in which there has been no such public acquiescence as to establish their validity, unless special circumstances are shown which would render it necessary to protect complainant's rights. Karfiol v. Rothner, (1907) 151 Fed. 777.

A preliminary injunction against infringement of a patent will usually be denied, where its validity is denied and has not been established by prior adjudication or by long acquiescence. Earll v. Rochester, etc., R. Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 241.

Where a patent has been adjudged valid and infringed by the Circuit Court of Appeals, a Circuit Court within the circuit may properly grant a preliminary injunction against infringement by another on a showing that the two alleged infringing devices are not materially different. Consolidated Rubber Tire Co. v. Diamond Rubber Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 677.

The owner of a patent, who has obtained an interlocutory decree adjudging its validity and infringement, is not required to wait until it has become final before bringing suit against the defendant for infringement by the same device in another district; nor is he precluded, by the fact that evidence has been taken in the second suit, from pleading therein the final decree when obtained in the first suit as an adjudication. National Metal Weather Strip Co. v. Bredin, (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 1003, affirming (1906) 147 Fed. 741.

Doubtful infringement.—Where, in a proceeding for contempt against a defendant for infringing a patent in violation of the court's injunction, the question whether the article sold by defendant is an infringement is in dispute and doubtful, it will not be determined on ex parte affidavits, but only after a regular and orderly hearing. In re Henvis, (1903) 125 Fed. 655.

The complainant in a suit for infringement of a patent is not entitled to a preliminary injunction where, on the showing made, there is a substantial doubt of infringement. Brookfield v. Elmer Glassworks, (1904) 132 Fed. 312.

The showing on a motion for a preliminary injunction to restrain infringement, of a number of unadjudicated patents relating to electric railway signals, held to present too many elements of doubt to warrant the granting of an injunction. Hall Signal Co. v. General R. Signal Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 907.

A preliminary injunction against infringement of the Sachs patent, No. 680,341, for an electric safety fuse, denied, where on the showing made there was a serious question whether the article made and sold by defendants embodied the invention of the patent and it also appeared that similar articles were generally made by others and for sale in the open market, and that the injunction, if granted, would cause serious loss to defendants. Johns-Pratt Co. v. Sachs Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 129.

A motion for a preliminary injunction against infringement of a patent denied where the patent was new and unadjudicated and not a pioneer, and infringement was denied and in doubt on the showing made. Sharp v. Bellinger, (1907) 155 Fed. 130.

Previous adjudication of noninfringement.—An application to a Circuit Court for a preliminary injunction to restrain infringement of a patent will not be granted, where it has been adjudged by a Circuit Court of Appeals of another circuit, after full consideration and upon substantially the same record, that defendant's device does not infringe. If the record on such application contains important new matter, the court will exercise its own judgment on the whole record. Calculagraph Co. v. Automatic Time Stamp Co., (1906) 149 Fed. 436.

Acquiescence in infringement may debar the owner of a patent from the right to a preliminary injunction, but will not prevent the granting on final hearing of such relief as may be equitable. Empire Cream Separator Co. v. Sears, (1907) 157 Fed. 238.

Right to preliminary injunction involving issue in case.—A preliminary injunction against infringement of a patent will not be granted where it involves the determination by the court on affidavits of the very issue in the case; nor will it be granted in a doubtful case on the theory that defendant, if not an infringer, will not be injured thereby. Motion Picture Patents Co. v. New York Motion Picture Co., (1909) 174 Fed. 51.

Infringement dependent on identity of compounds.—A patentee of a composition is not at liberty to prove that a part of the compound described in his claim for a patent is not essential or material to its operation; and, therefore, a temporary restraining order granted on a bill to enjoin an infringement of a patent for a composition for use as a furniture polish is improperly granted, where it is shown in the bill that the defendant's alleged infringing composition contains no coal oil, while that substance is one of the ingredients of complainant's composition as described in his specification and claims, and an essential ingredient according to the statements of the primary examiner in a preliminary rejection of complainant's application, though the bill alleges that the coal oil is no essential part of the complainant's invention, not affecting the quality of the composition as a polishing fluid, but being intended to thin a coloring ingredient. Lane v. Levi, (1903) 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 168.

Ability of defendant to respond in damages.—A preliminary injunction against infringement will not be granted when defendant is responsible, and a substantial doubt of his infringement exists, or when the complainant's right is doubtful. Hallock v. Babcock Mfg. Co., (1903) 124 Fed. 226.

Where defendant had been manufacturing, selling, and advertising the motor claimed to be an infringement of complainant's motor, with the constant claim of right to do so, for six years, and had built up an established business, having expended large sums of money therein, and was amply able to respond in damages for any injury to complainant, whose patent was about to expire, a preliminary injunction was not justified. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Wagner Electric Mfg. Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 902.

Scope and extent of injunction.—An injunction against infringement of a patent should not be made so broad as to prevent the defendant from making and selling a device which it had added to that of the patent and designed to be used with it. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Holland, (1906) 143 Fed. 903.

Security in place of injunction.—Where a patent in suit has only a very short time to run, and the interruption to defendant's business may be seriously affected by the granting of a preliminary injunction, it may be properly refused, on the giving of a sufficient bond by defendant. Interurban R., etc., Co. v. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 166.

Conditions of bond.—The conditions of a bond to be given on the granting of a preliminary injunction, the necessary effect of which would be to stop a business then being established, determined. Commercial Acetylene Co. v. Acme Acetylene Appliance Co., (1911) 188 Fed. 89.

Dissolution for improper conduct of complainant.—The wrongful use by a complainant of a preliminary injunction against infringement of a patent held to afford ground for its dissolution. Meyers v. Skinner, (1911) 186 Fed. 347.

Damages to defendant on dissolution of injunction.—Where, on application for preliminary injunction, complainant fails to disclose to the court that one of the patents sued on has expired, it is sufficient ground on dissolution for giving actual damages to the defendant for injuries to its business. National Phonograph Co. v. American Graphophone Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 231.

V. DECREE AND AWARD.

Estimated advantage gained over other modes.—On an accounting for infringement of patents for a process of making prism plate glass and a machine for practicing such process, the measure of defendant's liability for profits is the saving or advantage secured by the use of the infringing process and machines. To ascertain such saving comparison is to be made with other processes open to defendant which were capable of producing an article of similar character and value if there were such, the measure of liability being the saving in the cost of manufacture by the use of the infringing process, and the amount depending on the quantity made which was fit for market, without regard to what was actually done with it. If there was no other process open to defendant's use which would produce an article of equal value in the market, the difference in the market value of the article as made by the patented process and that made by that nearest in character may be considered, and may be taken as the measure of liability, where the cost of manufacture by the two processes is substantially the same. Pressed Prism Glass Co. v. Continuous Glass Prism Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 151.

Where a patent for certain improvements in machines for making paper bags was found to be infringed by machines made and used, but not sold, by defendant, and it appears that the product of such machines has no superiority which gives it an enhanced price over that of noninfringing machines, the only profits recoverable are the savings in the cost of construction and maintenance of the machines, or in the cost of the product due to the use of the infringing devices. Eastern Paper Bag Co. v. Continental Paper Bag Co., (1905) 142 Fed. 517.

Profits that complainant might have made.—On an accounting for infringement of a patent, complainant is entitled to recover the amount of the profits he would have realized, if he had made the sales which were made by defendant, where he was prepared to supply the demand, although it may exceed the profits made by defendant. Westinghouse v. New York Air Brake Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 807.

Articles supplied to customers without charge.—On an accounting, in a suit for infringement of a patent for a machine, complainant is not entitled to an allowance for profits on parts furnished by defendants to replace those of machines previously sold, and for which it does not appear that any charge was made. Paxton v. Brinton, (1903) 126 Fed. 541.

Profits actually realized although business unprofitable.—A corporation organized and owned entirely by persons who joined in the sale and assignment of a patent to complainant, and which subsequently engaged in the manufacture and sale of an infringing article, cannot avoid an accounting for profits made on the ground that by reason of its having also made and sold other articles the cost of the infringing articles cannot be definitely ascertained, nor because it lost money on its entire business, where it does not appear that it lost on the infringement. In such case the cost of the article as made by complainant where shown may be made the basis for the accounting. Force v. Sawyer-Boss Mfg. Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 884.

Manufacture of machines for maker of infringing articles.—On an accounting for damages and profits for infringement of a patent for a manufactured article, defendants cannot be required to account for the profits on machines manufactured and sold by them, to be used by others in making the infringing article, since, while they may be liable as contributory infringers on account of such sales, the infringement itself consisted in the manufacture and sale of the article made on such machines by the purchasers, and the damages recoverable therefor cannot be measured by the profits made on the machines. Diamond Drill, etc., Co. v. Kelley, (1904) 131 Fed. 89.

Entire device not covered by patent.—In determining the profits and damages recoverable for infringement of a patent for a device which constitutes only one feature of the machine or structure sold by defendant, it is the settled rule that the burden of proof rests on the complainant to separate or apportion defendant's profits between the patented and unpatented features, and by evidence which is reliable and tangible, or he must show by equally satisfactory evidence that profits and damages should be calculated on the whole machine, for the reason that its entire value as a marketable article is properly and legally attributable to the patented feature. Westinghouse v. New York Air Brake Co., (C. C. A. 1905) 140 Fed. 545.

Patent merely an improvement.—Where it appears that the improvements covered by complainant's patent constituted the chief value of the infringing articles sold by defendant, and that without them no sales would probably have been made, complainant is entitled to recover the entire profits realized from the sale. Force v. Sawyer-Boss Mfg. Co., (1904) 131 Fed. 884.

Where the devices covered by a patent were mere improvements in the line of simplicity of construction and consequent saving in cost of manufacture, and there is no satisfactory evidence that they rendered the machine as a whole more salable, an infringer is only liable for profits realized from the use of the patented parts which were new and wrongfully appropriated by him, and the complainant must furnish evidence from which the profits may be thus apportioned. Force v. Sawyer-Boss Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 804, reversing in part (1904) 131 Fed. 884.

The only invention disclosed by the Ottofy patent, No. 795,059, for a street flushing cart, is in the combination with other elements, all of which are old, of a nozzle of such construction and position as to throw the water in a flat sheet nearly parallel with the surface of the street in a forward and lateral direction so as to loosen up the dirt and force it away to the sides of the street, and on an accounting an infringer is liable only for the profits realized from the use of such improved nozzle, over what he might have made by the use of other nozzles that did not infringe. American Street Flushing Mach. Co. v. St. Louis Street Flushing Mach. Co., (1910) 180 Fed. 759.

Improvement constituting entire commercial value.—Owner of a patent held entitled to recover as profits from an infringer the entire profits made by defendant on machines sold embodying the patented feature. Maimin v. Union Special Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 123, affirming 185 Fed. 120.

Liability not limited to profits on particular element.—The liability of an infringer who has appropriated the combination under the Hoyt patent, No. 448,230, for a grain drill, as a whole is not limited to the profit made on any particular element, but extends to the profit made on the entire machine. Brennan v. Dowagiac Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 472.

The Murray patent, No. 442,531, for a store service ladder, is for an entire new article, and the patentee is entitled to recover from an infringer the entire net profits made by the latter on the infringing ladders in the absence of proof that some portion of such profits was the result of something else than the patented device. Orr, etc., Hardware Co. v. Murray, (C. C. A. 1908) 183 Fed. 54.

Profits distinguished from damages.—On an accounting for infringement of a patent the defendant's profits and complainant's damages are distinct from and independent of each other and are governed by different principles, and one cannot be said to be the measure of the other, nor the allowance of one to preclude recovery of the other. Beach v. Hatch, (1907) 153 Fed. 763.

How computed.—On an accounting as to profits, made by an infringer of a patent, covering a part of a machine which had practically superseded all devices to produce a similar result previously in use, it was proper, in determining the cost of manufacture, to compare the cost of making the machine with the patented device with that of making the one which was the nearest approach to it in the market and in common use. Mast v. Superior Drill Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 45.

Award of arbitrary amount.—A court has no power to award an arbitrary sum as profits or damages recoverable for the infringement of a patent, not based on any finding made by the master on the accounting nor upon the evidence. Mast v. Superior Drill Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 45.

Deduction of losses.—On an accounting for profits for infringement of a patent, the infringer is not entitled to deduct from the profits made during a certain period of time a loss subsequently incurred in a separate transaction; on such accounting only losses occurring concurrently with the making of profits and directly resulting from the particular transactions on which the profits are allowed may be considered in diminution of profits. Canda v. Michigan Malleable Iron Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 178.

Saving from use of infringing device.—The owner of a patent may recover from the user of an infringing device as profits the amount saved by defendant by the substitution of such device for one previously used, although the saving resulted from the fact that the devices previously used were frequently broken through accident or the carelessness or miscalculation of employees or others having to do with their use, while the patented device was not subject to such breakage, where the accident and carelessness are recognized to be appreciable sources of danger to employers in like case, and where there is evidence from which the amount of the saving can be estimated with reasonable accuracy. Doten v. Boston, (C. C. A. 1905) 138 Fed. 406.

Assignment of patent pending suit.—Where, in a suit for infringement of letters patent, an injunction was granted, and the complainant assigned its entire interest in the patent and took from the assignees a non-assignable license, it could not, in the suit as it then stood with respect to the parties, recover profits or damages from an infringement occurring after the execution of the assignment. Goss Printing Press Co. v. Scott, (1905) 134 Fed. 880.

Effect of decree for defendant.—A final decree of a federal Circuit Court in favor of defendant in a patent infringement suit entitles him to continue the business of manufacturing and selling throughout the United States the alleged infringing article, free from all interference by the complainant by virtue of the patent alleged to have been infringed. Kessler v. Eldred, (1907) 206 U. S. 285, 27 S. Ct. 611, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1065.

Effect of decree as res judicata.—Where a suit for infringement against a dealer in the alleged infringing article was defended by the manufacturer of such article at his own cost, and on appeal it was adjudged that complainant was not the original inventor, and that his patent was void, such adjudication is a bar to a subsequent suit directly against the manufacturer on the same patent. Sacks v. Kupferle, (1904) 127 Fed. 560.

Reference to ascertain damages and profits.

—Semble that, on a reference for an accounting by defendant under a decree finding infringement of a patent, the defendant is the only "party accounting" within the meaning of equity rule 79, and complainant cannot be required to bring in an account as therein provided. Goss Printing Press Co. v. Scott, (1906) 148 Fed. 393.

Where, on a reference for an accounting as to damages for infringement of a patent, the master by his rulings limits the scope of the inquiry, the matter may properly be presented to the court for decision by a motion for instructions to the master. Walker Patent Pivoted Bin Co. v. Miller, (1906) 146 Fed. 249.

Where in a suit for infringement the validity of a patent has been sustained, the general principles and scope of the invention determined, and certain structures made by defendants held to infringe, on an accounting for damages and profits the complainant is not limited to an inquiry as to the number of such particular constructions made and sold by defendants, but, except as concluded by the decree, and provided the differences be not so great and the question of infringement in such doubt that the complainant should be put to a supplemental, if not a new, bill, the whole question of infringement and its extent are generally open for consideration by the master. Walker Patent Pivoted Bin Co. v. Miller, (1906) 146 Fed. 249.

Where it is alleged and proved by defendant that the patented machine was not marked as required by the statute, the complainant will be confined in the accounting to infringement after the bill was filed. No other notice being shown, the bill itself is notice. Eastern Dynamite Co. v. Keystone Powder Mfg. Co., (1908) 164 Fed. 47.

Established license fee as liquidated damages.—Damages for infringement of a patent can be considered as liquidated where an established license fee renders such damages easily determinable, but an infringer is liable for interest on such damages only from the dates when he incurred the obligation to pay damages, and not from the date when the license fee became payable. Diamond Stone Sawing Mach. Co. v. Brown, (1907) 155 Fed. 753.

Damages for partial infringement.—Where a part of a machine made and sold by defendant is found to infringe complainant's patent, the court will not undertake to determine, in reduction of damages, the collateral question whether or not such part also infringes another patent, the validity and scope of which are not directly put in issue. Brinton v. Paxton, (1904) 134 Fed. 78, 67 C. C. A. 204.

Interest on damages.—Interest on damages awarded for infringement by final decree allowed, under the circumstances of the case, from the date of the master's report, by which the damages as finally awarded were practically liquidated. Westinghouse v. New York Air Brake Co., (1904) 133 Fed. 936.

Assignment of patent pending suit.—A court of equity, which has acquired jurisdiction of a suit by the owner of a patent to enjoin its infringement and to recover damages for past infringement, does not lose such jurisdiction because, pending the suit, the patent is assigned to another, who is brought in by a supplemental bill under equity rule 57, and may proceed, not only to grant an injunction, but to award damages to both the original complainant and his assignee for infringement proved during the time of their respective ownership. Leadam v. Ringgold, (1905) 140 Fed. 611.

Nominal damages.—A complainant is entitled to recover only nominal damages on account of the competition of defendant by the sale of an infringing article, where on the accounting it does not furnish evidence showing the amount of its loss on that account, or even the profit it made on the patented article when sold. Force v. Sawyer-Boss Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 894, reversing (1904) 131 Fed. 884.

Both profits and damages are recoverable in a suit for infringement in a proper case. Fox v. Knickerbocker Engraving Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 714.

Grounds for increasing damages.—A court is warranted in exercising the discretionary power to increase the damages found to have been sustained by a complainant by the infringement of a patent, where the infringement was palpable, and defendant persisted in it after full knowledge of the patent and an opportunity to settle, and has shown a determination to litigate to the end, and to cause all the delay and expense possible. National Folding Box, etc., Co. v. Robertson, (1903) 125 Fed. 524.

Treble damages.—The conduct of defendants in a suit in equity for infringement of a patent held to have been such, in deliberately and intentionally infringing, in purposely protracting the litigation, and in transferring the property of the corporation, which was the principal defendant, for the purpose of rendering a recovery nugatory, as to warrant the court in imposing triple damages under this section. Weston Electrical Instrument Co. v. Empire Electrical Instrument Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 301.

Where a defendant knowingly infringed a patent and continued such infringement after suit brought, taking business away from licensees by cutting prices, the case is a proper one for the court in the exercise of its discretion, to award the complainant treble damages. Fox v. Knickerbocker Engraving Co., (1908) 158 Fed. 422.

Award to joint owners.—In a suit by joint owners of a patent for its infringement, profits cannot be recovered which accrued from infringements prior to the date of the joint ownership, and when the patent was the sole property of one of the complainants. Canda v. Michigan Malleable Iron Co., (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 178.

VI. COSTS.

Costs on award of nominal damages.—Where, on an accounting in an infringement suit, complainant is awarded only nominal damages, it may properly be taxed with all the costs of the accounting, including the hearing on exceptions to the master's report. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Minnesota Moline Plow Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 314.

The general rule is that, where a complainant recovers only nominal damages and profits on an accounting for infringement, the costs of the reference are taxed against him; but, like other matters of costs in suits in equity, the rule is subject to modification in a particular case, in the discretion of the court, as may be equitable under the circumstances. Kansas City Hay Press Co. v. Devol, (1904) 127 Fed. 363.

Joint infringers.—In a suit against joint wrongdoers, it is only in rare and exceptional cases that the court will exercise its discretion to relieve one from full liability for the costs. Vrooman v. Penhollow, (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 495, denying rehearing and modifying (1910) 179 Fed. 296, 102 C. C. A. 484.

Decree against defendant by consent.—Where defendant in a suit for infringement, before any testimony has been taken, offers before the referee to consent to a decree as prayed in the bill, and his counsel makes no further appearance, no costs will be taxed against him for the subsequent taking of testimony, nor for the printing of the record, both of which the offer rendered unnecessary. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Klump, (1904) 131 Fed. 93.

VII. LIMITATIONS AND LACHES.

Mere delay.—A demurrer to a bill for infringement on the ground of laches cannot be sustained, where the only facts to support it appearing from the bill are that the suit was not commenced until a short time before the patent expired and that it had previously been sustained. Huntington Dry Pulverizer Co. v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., (1904) 130 Fed. 558.

Delay amounting to acquiescence in infringement.—Where a patentee, with knowledge of a device made by defendant, made no claim of infringement for five years, he will be held estopped thereafter to place a different construction on his patent, just before its expiration, for the purpose of making out a case of infringement. McGill v. Whitehead, etc., Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 97.

A device relating to automatic music-playing instruments was used generally by manufacturers of such instruments for more than twelve years after the issuance of a patent therefor without notice or objection from the owners of the patent, and in many cases without knowledge of it on the part of the users, and during such time large capital was invested in the business, and instruments embodying the device aggregating several millions of dollars in value were sold. Complainant, which was one of the manufacturers so using the device without right under the patent, became the owner of the patent some five years after it was issued, and continued the use of the device without marking the same patented or giving any notice of its alleged exclusive right to its competitors in business.

Held that it was estopped by its laches from maintaining a suit for infringement against another, who, in the meantime, had established the manufacture of instruments in which the device was used without knowledge of the patent. Wilcox, etc., Co. v. Farrand Organ Co., (1905) 139 Fed. 46.

Unexcused and unexplained delay in bringing suit for infringement of a patent for eleven or twelve years after notice of such infringement, and when in the meantime the business of the alleged infringer had been transferred to another, constitutes acquiescence in the infringement, if any, or culpable laches, and estops the complainant from relief in equity. National Cash Register Co. v. Union Computing Mach. Co., (1906) 143 Fed. 342.

A bill to restrain the infringement of a patent was verified June 27, 1906, and was accompanied by a motion for a preliminary injunction returnable July 12th. The bill was filed June 28, 1906, and the subpoena served July 29th following. The patent was dated July 9, 1889, and expired July 9, 1906. The bill did not fix the date of the alleged infringement, beyond the allegation that it occurred within six years prior to the filing of the bill, complainant knowing at the time the bill was filed that it could not be brought to the attention of the court in time to obtain injunctive relief; and the only proffered excuse for complainant's laches was that there was no appointed sitting of the court at which complainant could be heard until three days after the patent expired. Held that, the sole practical purpose of the bill being to collect damages, it would be dismissed for laches. Beid-Archer Co. v. North American Chemical, etc., Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 746.

Defendants obtained a patent and entered into an arrangement with complainants by which the latter, as well as defendants, manufactured under it for several years, and then complainants purchased a prior patent for a similar article. After the lapse of two years more, and within less than a year prior to the expiration of their patent, complainants brought suit against defendants for infringement. Held that, the delay having been with full knowledge of defendants' device, they were barred by laches from maintaining such suit. Germer Stove Co. v. Twentieth Century Heating, etc., Co., (1907) 157 Fed. 842.

Long unexplained delay.—An unexplained delay of twelve years after alleged infringement was commenced before bringing suit constitutes such laches as precludes the recovery of profits or damages. Safety Car Heating, etc., Co. v. Consolidated Car Heating Co., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 658, affirming (1908) 160 Fed. 476.

Pendency of other suits.—The owner of a patent is not subject to a plea of estoppel, laches, or implied license because of delay in bringing suit against an infringer during the pendency of a test suit in which the validity of the patent was involved. Hutter v. Koscherak, (1905) 137 Fed. 92.

The owner of a patent is not barred by laches from maintaining a suit in equity for its infringement because of a delay of six years, in bringing such suit after the alleged infringement commences, where it appears that during such time another suit was pending for infringement by a machine substantially the same as defendant's. Plecker v. Poorman, (1905) 147 Fed. 528.

Poverty of plaintiff.—Mere delay in the bringing of a suit for infringement of a patent, where it was because of the inability of the owner to bear the expense of the litigation, is not such laches as will defeat the suit. Davis v. A. H. Reid Creamery, etc., Supply Co., (1911) 187 Fed. 157.

Vol. V, p. 598, sec. 4922.

Application of statute.—This section applies to a suit in which certain claims of a patent are held valid and infringed, while other independent claims infringement of which is alleged are held invalid, and in such case the complainant is not entitled to recover costs. General Electric Co. v. Crouse-Hinds Electric Co., (1906) 147 Fed. 718.

When disclaimer may be made.—Under this section the better practice is to require such disclaimer to be filed before final decree. Suddard v. American Motor Co., (1908) 163 Fed. 852.

Costs in trial court only.—The provision of this section and R. S. sec. 973, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 289, that when judgment or decree is rendered for the plaintiff or complainant in any suit at law or in equity for infringement of part of a patent, etc., no costs shall be recovered unless the proper disclaimer was entered in the Patent Office before the suit was brought, applies only to costs in the trial court, and not to costs on appeal, the allowance or refusal of which is to be determined by the appellate court in view of the special circumstances of the case. Where the court below denied all relief and dismissed the bill, which action was reversed on appeal as to certain claims of the patent, complainant will be awarded costs in the appellate court. Kahn v. Starrels, (1905) 136 Fed. 597, 69 C. C. A. 371; Johnson v. Foos Mfg. Co., (1906) 141 Fed. 73, 72 C. C. A. 105.

Necessity of disclaimer.—R. S. sec. 973, providing that costs shall not be recoverable when a decree is entered for infringement of part of a patent, where the patentee has claimed to be the inventor of a material part of the thing patented, of which he was not the inventor unless a disclaimer was entered prior to the bringing of the suit, applies only where a disclaimer is necessary to save the patent. National Electric Signaling Co. v. De Forest Wireless Tel. Co., (1905) 140 Fed. 449.

Necessity of invention.—In order to decide that a design is unpatentable, it is not necessary to find that it infringes an earlier one; for, to entitle an applicant to the benefit of the Design Act, there must be an exercise of the inventive faculty. In re Schraubstadter, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 331.

Originality and the exercise of the inventive faculty are as essential to give validity to a patent for a design as for a mechanical invention. General Gaslight Co. v. Matchless Mfg. Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 137.

Successive patents to same person.—A design patent will operate as an anticipation of a subsequent patent to the same inventor, just as though issued to another person, where everything to be found in the one is portrayed in the other. Williams Calk Co. v. Neverslip Mfg. Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 210.

Novelty.—Originality and the exercise of the inventive faculty are as essential to give validity to a patent for a design as for a mechanical invention. General Gaslight Co. v. Matchless Mfg. Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 137; Weisgerber v. Clowney, (1904) 131 Fed. 477.

This requirement, however, does not preclude the selection and adaptation of an existing form, provided it is more than the exercise of the imitative faculty and the result is in effect a new creation producing a different effect on the eye of the ordinary observer. Phoenix Knitting Works v. Grushlaw, (1910) 181 Fed. 168.

Amount of novelty.—Unlike the case of mechanical contrivances, the change or omission or addition of a few minor details of ornamentation in a design, even though ornamentation may depend on the harmonious blending of numerous details, will not justify the multiplication of design patents, even though one design may readily be distinguished from another by some one or more features. In re Freeman, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 226.

Substantial difference is required to render two several devices patentable as designs. In re Freeman, (1904) 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 226.

Test of novelty.—A design is patentable if it presents to the eye of the ordinary observer a different effect from anything that preceded it, and renders the article to which it is applied pleasing, attractive, and popular, even if it is simple, and does not show a wide departure from other designs, or if it is a combination of old forms. Phoenix Knitting Works v. Bradley Knitting Co., (1910) 181 Fed. 163.

The novelty of a design is to be determined by the comparative appearance of the designs to the eyes of average observers, and not to the eyes of experts. In re Schraubstadter, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 331.

Utility.—The utility intended by the statute in employing the word "useful," as it did before the amendment of 1902, is artistic, and not practical. What is meant is that the design shall constitute something which is artistically worth the while, and is not frivolous or hurtful. Williams Calk Co. v. Neverslip Mfg. Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 210, affirmed (C. C. A. 1906) 149 Fed. 928.

Design patents are granted for appearance, and not with reference to mechanical usefulness. West Disinfecting Co. v. Frauk, (C. C. A. 1906) 146 Fed. 388; affirmed 149 Fed. 423, 79 C. C. A. 359.

Æsthetic value.—A design patent is addressed to the eye, and is to be judged by its ability to please, and, while there is no objection to the article to which it relates being useful as well as ornamental, such a patent cannot be made to cover a mechanical function or construction. Weisgerber v. Clowney, (1904) 131 Fed. 477.

An article to be a proper subject for a design patent must be one which by artistic treatment in form and configuration may be given value from an æsthetic point of view. Williams Calk Co. v. Kerthner, (1908) 145 Fed. 928, 76 C. C. A. 466, affirming (1905) 136 Fed. 210.

The patentability of a design does not depend on its æsthetic value. The Design Act, as construed by the courts, intends that the patentability of a design shall be determined by its appeal to the eyes of the ordinary man; and not to the eyes of a jury of artists. In re Schraubstadter, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 331.

Articles not intended for display.—A washer for thill-coupling, adapted to be used around the spherical knuckle of the thill-iron, as a packing between that and the draft-eye, where it is concealed from sight, is useful, but not ornamental, and therefore cannot be made the subject of a design patent. Bradley v. Eccles, (C. C. A. 1903) 126 Fed. 945, affirming 122 Fed. 867, and reversing 122 Fed. 871.

New combinations of old forms in designs.—Whenever ingenuity is displayed in producing a new design which imparts to the eye a pleasing impression; even though it be the result of uniting old forms and parts, such production is patentable. General Gaslight Co. v. Matchless Mfg. Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 137.

Where it appears that, by uniting old elements perceivable in other lamp designs, a new lamp of different contour and construction is produced, and where the collected elements also impart an ornamental and graceful appearance, not possessed by prior lamp designs, the conception is beyond what an ordinarily skilled workman is able to achieve. General Gaslight Co. v. Matchless Mfg. Co., (1904) 129 Fed. 137.

Mere assembling of old parts.—The mere assembling of old parts to make a structure of a new design, although new lines and curves and a harmonious and novel whole are produced, does not involve invention so as to render the design patentable. Crier v. Innes, (1908) 160 Fed. 103, affirmed (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 824.

Ancient ornamentation.—In a font of type, the addition of an old waved outline to common forms of letters does not amount to invention. In re Schraubstadter, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 331.

Design for sarcophagus.—A sarcophagus monument is a "manufacture" within the meaning of this section and a proper subject for a design patent. Crier v. Innes, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 324, affirming (1908) 160 Fed. 103.

Design for head of nail.—A design is not patentable which consists of an iron nail having a mushroom-shaped head and a circular protuberance on the convex side of the head. In re Sherman, (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 100.

Anticipation of mechanical invention.—A design patent will render void a mechanical patent subsequently issued to the same inventor within two years, as a matter of double patenting, where the two are indistinguishable in their characteristics and are manifestly the outcome of the same inventive idea. Williams Calk Co. v. Neverslip Mfg. Co., (1905) 136 Fed. 210.

Vol. V, p. 602, sec. 4930.

Necessity of detailed description.—While a claim for a design patent, reciting, "substantially as shown," or, "as shown and described," and accompanied by a drawing, is in a large class of cases sufficient, and is, in most cases, better in form than a detailed description, yet there are cases where such detailed description is not only permissible, but necessary. In re Mygatt, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 366.

Description by drawings.—In an application for a design patent for a font of type, it is sufficient to furnish the conventional drawing accepted for years by the Patent Office, and it is not necessary, under the Patent Office rules relating to designs, to show or describe the type itself. In re Schraubstadter, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 331.

Vol. X, p. 250, sec. 1.

Amendment not retrospective.—This amendment does not operate retroactively, and therefore does not apply to applications pending at the date of its passage. Gueniffet v. Wictorsohn, (1908) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 432.

This amendment did not operate retrospectively, and therefore the rights of an applicant whose application was pending at the time of the passage of the amendment are to be governed by the original and not by the amendatory Act, and his priority of invention will relate only from the date of the filing of his application here, and not from the date of the filing of his foreign application. De Ferranti v. Lyndmark, (1908) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 417.

Under this amendment an application relates back to the date of the filing of the foreign application, and gives the applicant priority of invention as of that date, while under the original Act the applicant's priority dated only from the filing of his application in the Patent Office here. De Ferranti v. Lyndmark, (1908) 30 App. Cas. (D. C.) 417.

Application prior to international convention.—A German inventor who filed his application for a patent in this country prior to the date when Germany agreed to the international convention for the protection of industrial property is not entitled to his filing date in that country as the date of disclosure and constructive reduction to practice, under this amendment. Winter v. Latour, (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 415.

Term as affected by foreign patent.—This amendment does not affect the term of patents for inventions previously patented in a foreign country, but only their validity, and did not operate to revive such a patent which had previously expired under the provisions of the section as it originally stood. Sawyer Spindle Co. v. Carpenter, (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 976, affirming (1904) 133 Fed. 238.

Acceptance of convention by foreign government.—A finding by the Commissioner of Patents in an interference case that the Interior Department was duly advised that Germany had adhered to the international convention, to take effect May 1, 1903, is a sufficient showing that subsequent to that date Germany was affording citizens of the United States applying for patents there the privileges accorded citizens of foreign countries applying for patents here, under this amendment. National Metallurgic Co. v. Whitman, (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 420.

PENAL LAWS.

1909 Supp., p. 408, sec. 11.

Right of United States to control proceeding.—Proceedings for the enforcement of the neutrality laws are necessarily under the control of the United States, and a proceeding against a vessel seized on complaint of an informer for violation of this section cannot be continued if the United States disavows and declines to ratify the seizure. Chamberlin Metal Weather-Strip Co. v. Peace Metal Weather-Strip Co., (1911) 186 Fed. 843.

1909 Supp., p. 414, sec. 35.

Constitutionality.—This section which authorizes the imposition of a maximum fine of five hundred dollars and imprisonment for not more than two years upon a civilian for knowingly purchasing or receiving in pledge any public property from a soldier, is not unconstitutional as providing for an excessive fine or a cruel and unusual punishment, nor as providing for the taking of property without due process of law. Ontai v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 188 Fed. 310.

Clothing furnished to a soldier by the United States under a clothing allowance does not become his private property which he has a right to dispose of, while in the service, but is "public property" within this section, which makes it a criminal offense to knowingly purchase or receive in pledge from any soldier "any arms, equipments, ammunition, clothes, military stores, or other public property, whether furnished to the soldier . . . under a clothing allowance or otherwise, such soldier . . . not having the lawful right to pledge or sell the same." Ontai v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 188 Fed. 310.

1909 Supp., p. 462, sec. 211.

Construction of statute.—This section prohibiting the mailing of obscene and filthy matter, has been held not limited to publications or writings relating to sexuality, but to include every filthy communication. U. S. v. Dempsey, (1911) 188 Fed. 450.

Question for jury.—Whether a letter was "filthy," and thus nonmailable, within this section, is a question for the jury. U. S. v. Dempsey, (1911) 188 Fed. 450.

1909 Supp., p. 473, sec. 240.

"Consignee."—This section provides that whoever shall knowingly ship from one state into another any package containing intoxicating liquor, unless the package be so labeled on the outside cover as to plainly show the name of the consignee, the nature of the contents, and the quantity contained therein, shall be fined and the liquor forfeited. It has been held that the term "consignee" was so used in its primary legal sense to describe the person to whom the liquor was to be delivered at destination in accordance with the contract of carriage, and hence where wholesale merchants in California, after collecting enough orders from purchasers in New England to make car load shipments, labeled each package with its own name, the character and quantity of the liquor, and the name of the purchaser, and consigned the entire car to itself or to its own order with directions to the carrier to notify designated persons, the shipper was also the consignee within the statute; the names of the purchasers being regarded as surplusage, so that there was no violation of the Act. U. S. v. Eighty-Seven Barrels, etc., of Wine, (1910) 180 Fed. 215.

PENSIONS.

Vol. V, p. 618, sec. 4.

Conviction of infamous crime.—In Garitee v. Bond, (1905) 102 Md. 379, 62 Atl. 631, it was held that one convicted of making an overcharge for prosecuting a pension claim, in violation of this section, and subject to imprisonment in the discretion of the court, had not been convicted of a "crime rendering him infamous according to law," within the Maryland statute (Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 93, sec. 51) making one convicted of a "crime rendering him infamous according to law," disqualified from acting as executor, though it be assumed that in the contemplation of the federal jurisdiction the offense be deemed an infamous one.

Vol. V, p. 663, sec. 3.

Scope of investigation.—A special pension examiner has neither power nor right to extort a confession of violations of the criminal provisions of the pension laws by a witness at a special examination, though there is no intention of prosecuting the witness therefor. In re O'Shea, (1908) 166 Fed. 180.

Presence of attorney.—A special pension examination authorized by this section is not a secret proceeding, and hence a witness subpoenaed to testify is entitled to have her attorney present at the examination so long as he conducts himself properly and does not unlawfully interfere with the examination. In re O'Shea, (1908) 166 Fed. 180.

Notice to claimants.—Special examinations as to the merits of pension claims, authorized by this section, can only be held on notice to the claimants. In re O'Shea, (1908) 166 Fed. 180.

Cross-examination.—Witnesses subpoenaed for examination as to the merits of pension claims, as authorized by this section, are subject both to examination and cross-examination. In re O'Shea, (1908) 166 Fed. 180.

Vol. V, p. 664, sec. 4745.

The language "any pledge, mortgage, sale, assignment, or transfer," etc., found in this section, refers to the pension before it has been reduced to the possession of the pensioner and taken into his custody and control. Omans v. Beeman, (1910) 66 Misc. 625, 124 N. Y. S. 166.

Vol. V, p. 665, sec. 4746.

Effect of amendment.—Making and presenting false, fictitious, and fraudulent papers in connection with entry of coal lands is not made criminal by this section, as amended by the Act of July 7, 1898, because such amendatory statute, in repeating the original words, "concerning any claim for pension or payment thereof, or pertaining to any other matter within the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Pensions," adds the words "or of the Secretary of the Interior," since such section as originally enacted related exclusively to pension or bounty land claims, and every enumeration or description of new acts or papers in addition to those embraced in the section prior to the amendment, alone concerns pension or bounty land claims. U. S. v. Keitel, (1908) 211 U. S. 370, 29 S. Ct. 123, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 230; U. S. v. Herr, (1908) 211 U. S. 404, 29 S. Ct. 134, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 251; U. S. v. Herr, (1908) 211 U. S. 406, 29 S. Ct. 135, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 252; London v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 82.

Indictment.—An indictment under this section, as amended by Act July 7, 1898, which charges that the defendants "did knowingly and wilfully procure the presentation to the Commissioner of Pensions of a false and fraudulent paper writing," etc., is insufficient where it does not state the manner of presentation, or the name of the person procured to present it, or that his name is unknown. Miller v. U. S., (1905) 136 Fed. 581, 69 C. C. A. 355.

Under this section as amended which penalizes the making of a false or fraudulent affidavit, it is not sufficient simply to allege that the affidavit was false. There must be a clear averment of the respect in which it is false equivalent to the assignment in perjury cases. U. S. v. Medina, (1909) 15 N. M. 204, 103 Pac. 976.

Swearing witness.—Under this section as amended which subjects to punishment one who knowingly certifies, when not true, that a witness has been sworn to an affidavit to be used in a pension case, administering the oath immediately before the taking down of the statement thereunder, equally with administering it after taking down such statement, is swearing the witness to such affidavit within the statute. U. S. v. Medina, (1909) 15 N. M. 204, 103 Pac. 976.

Recovery by United States from bank on pension checks bearing false indorsement. — The right of the United States to recover back moneys paid to a bank on pension checks bearing the forged indorsements of the payees is not conditioned either upon demand or the giving of notice of the discovery of the forgeries, since the bank, by presenting the checks for payment, warrants their genuineness, and the United States cannot, especially in view of the provision of R. S. secs. 4746, 4865, contemplating departmental regulations for establishing the identity of pensioners, be charged with knowledge of their signatures. U. S. v. National Exch. Bank, (1909) 214 U. S. 302, 29 S. Ct. 665, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 1006, reversing (1907) 151 Fed. 402, 80 C. C. A. 632.

General rule of exemptions. — To the same effect as the original note, In re Ferguson, (1909) 140 Wis. 583, 123 N. W. 123.

Exemption only before received by pensioner. — Of similar effect to the original note, Omans v. Beeman, (1910) 66 Misc. 625, 124 N. Y. S. 166.

Property purchased with pension money. — Of similar effect to the original note, In re Ferguson, (1909) 140 Wis. 583, 123 N. W. 123.

The words "inure wholly to the benefit of such pensioner" as used in this section mean only that the pension funds should be protected until they had come safely into the hands of the pensioner, after which they were liable for his debts; and hence pension money, in the hands of a bankrupt at the time of the adjudication, neither invested nor mingled with other funds, was not exempt. In re Jones, (1909) 166 Fed. 337.

Pension money paid to the guardian of an insane pensioner, and by him loaned, is in process of transmission to the pensioner, and still under control of the federal government, and is so exempt from taxation. Manning v. Spry, (1903) 121 Ia. 191, 96 N. W. 873.

Interest on pension money. — Under this section providing that no pension money due to any pensioner shall be liable to seizure under process while in the course of transmission to the pensioner, and the Iowa statute (Code, secs. 1309, 4009) providing that the term "credit" in the chapter relating to assessment of taxes shall include every claim or demand due or to become due for money, and every annuity or sum of money receivable at stated periods, but United States pensions are not included, and declaring that all pension money shall be exempt from execution, interest received on pension money loaned out by a pensioner is not exempt from taxation. Bednar v. Carroll, (1908) 138 Ia. 338, 116 N. W. 315.

Vol. V, p. 677. [Pension, a vested right, etc.]

Government's right to recover from bank cashing fraudulent pension checks. — Where a fraudulent pension was granted to W., and while the same was in full force, and before cancellation on the notice prescribed by such act, the defendant bank cashed a number of pension checks drawn to her order, which on presentation were paid by the government, it was held that the government could not recover the money from the bank on the theory that the pension was fraudulent and invalid. U. S. v. North Wilkesboro Bank, (1910) 183 Fed. 759, 106 C. C. A. 471.

PERJURY.

Vol. V, p. 701, sec. 5392.

Jurisdiction. — Perjury committed by false swearing before a United States commissioner is not subject to the jurisdiction of a state court under a state statute defining and punishing perjury. Com. v. Kitchen, (1911) 141 Ky. 655, 133 S. W. 586.

State laws. — Where a defendant swore falsely, as to his qualifications to become a surety on a distiller's bond, before a deputy internal revenue collector, it was held that he was properly charged with perjury thereon, as defined by this section, though under the state law perjury could only be committed in a judicial proceeding, other false oaths being defined and punished as "false swearing." U. S. v. Hardison, (1905) 135 Fed. 419.

What does or does not constitute offense — Oaths used in land offices. — Under Timber and Stone Act June 3, 1878, sec. 1, ch. 151, 20 Stat. L. 89, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 300, which requires applicants to purchase land thereunder to file a verified written statement, and after the required publication of notice to "furnish to the register of the Land Office satisfactory evidence" of certain facts, the regulations of the Land Department, requiring such evidence to be in the form of depositions under oath, are in furtherance of the purposes of the statute and valid, and the false swearing in either the preliminary statement or in such depositions constitutes the crime of perjury and an offense against the United States, under this section. Van Gasner v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 47.

Where an entryman on public lands signed and swore to an affidavit that he entered the land for his individual use and benefit, and not for speculation, when in fact he intended to immediately transfer the land to another under a pre-existing contract, he thereby committed perjury as defined by this section. Nickell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 702, affirmed (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 741. See also U. S. v. Brace, (1907) 149 Fed. 869.

Proceedings under Oleomargarine Act.—Section 6 of the Oleomargarine Act (Act May 9, 1902, ch. 784, 32 Stat. L. 197, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 131), in requiring wholesale dealers to keep such books and render such returns as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may by regulation require under prescribed penalties for its violation, has no relation to the tax to be assessed on such dealer, and the regulations made thereunder and in force prior to their revision in 1907, in requiring an oath to the returns, do not have the force of law in such sense that a false oath to a return subjects the maker to prosecution for perjury under this section. U. S. v. Lamson, (1908) 165 Fed. 80.

Naturalization proceedings.—Perjury committed by a false allegation of fact in a naturalization petition is punishable under this section, regardless of whether such evidence is punishable under Naturalization Act June 29, 1906, ch. 3592, sec. 23, 34 Stat. L. 603, 1909 Supp. Fed. Stat. Annot. 375, or not. U. S. v. Dupont, (1910) 176 Fed. 823.

Internal revenue matters.—R. S. sec. 3165, as amended by Act Cong. March 1, 1879, ch. 125, sec. 2, 20 Stat. L. 329, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 573, authorizes every collector and deputy collector to administer oaths touching any part of the administration of the internal revenue laws, or where such oaths are authorized by law, or by regulations authorized by law. Internal Revenue Laws 1900, p. 47, sec. 321 (R. S. sec. 321, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 556), gives the Internal Revenue Commissioner general supervision of the collection of taxes imposed by any internal revenue law, and authorizes him to prepare and distribute instructions, regulations, etc., pertaining thereto; and one of the regulations providing for the collection of taxes on distilled spirits required collectors to examine distillers' sureties, and to require them to "justify" on a prescribed form. It has been held that under such provision an oath taken by a distiller's surety, with reference to his qualifications, before a deputy collector, was an oath taken in a case in which "a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered," within section 5392. U. S. v. Hardison, (1905) 135 Fed. 419.

Proceedings for patent.—R. S. sec. 4806, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 421, requires an applicant for a patent to make oath that he fairly believes himself to be the original and first inventor or discoverer of the art, machine, manufacture, composition, or improvement for which he solicits a patent, that he does not know and does not believe that the same was ever before known or used. The Commissioner of Patents, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, under authority to make rules, promulgated rule 46, providing that the applicant shall make oath or affirmation that he does verily believe himself to be the original and first inventor and discoverer of the art, and also to state whether he is the "sole" or joint inventor of the invention claimed in his application. It has been held that, since the Interior Department could not by rule or regulation add any word or words to the statutory oath, an applicant for a patent was not guilty of perjury, though he falsely stated that he was the "sole" inventor of the article for which a patent was applied. Patterson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 970, reversing (1909) 172 Fed. 241.

Disqualification as witness.—The provision in this section that every person convicted of perjury shall thereafter be incapable of giving testimony in any court of the United States until such time as the judgment against him is reversed excludes a witness convicted of perjury under the laws of the United States from giving evidence in any United States court, whatever the law of the state where the trial had on the subject may be. Wise v. Williams, (1908) 162 Fed. 161.

The disqualification clause applies only to United States courts and not to testimony in state courts. Samuels v. Com., (1909) 110 Va. 901, 66 S. E. 223.

Necessity for conviction.—Under this section the incapacity to testify attaches only to a person who has been convicted under the section. O'Leary v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 158 Fed. 796.

Vol. V, p. 705, sec. 5393.

Necessity for subscription to false oath.—To support an indictment for subornation of perjury based on the alleged procurement of the making of a false affidavit or oath before the receiver or register of a land office in support of an application to enter land under the homestead law, it is not essential that the affidavit should have been subscribed as well as sworn to before such officer. Nurnberger v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 721.

Entries to public lands.—Procuring entryman on public lands to make false affidavits constitutes subornation of perjury as defined by this section. Nickell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 702, (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 741.

Where an indictment charged that the defendant induced C. to make application for the purchase of timber lands, and in the furtherance of such application to make a false oath at the time of final entry with reference to the good faith of the application, which the register of the Land Office was authorized to administer by R. S. sec. 2246, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 233, and by the regulations of the Land Department, it sufficiently charged the offense of subornation of perjury. U. S. v. Brace, (1907) 149 Fed. 870.

Instructions.—Instructions given on the trial of a defendant charged with suborna-tion of perjury in procuring homestead entrymen to make false oaths were held erroneous and misleading in that they authorized the jury to convict in case they found that any statement made by affiants in their affidavits was false and was intentionally sworn to, when there was evidence tending to show that some of the recitals in the affidavits respecting the intention to reside on and improve the land as affiants understood the law were not applicable to their entries; and that their act in swearing to the same was not therefore wilful and corrupt, as required by R. S. sec. 2291, as amended by Act March 3, 1877, ch. 122, sec. 2, 19 Stat. L. 404, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 292, to constitute the crime of perjury. Nurnberger v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 722.

Vol. V, p. 705, sec. 5396.

Requisites.—Since, as before, the enactment of R. S. sec. 1025, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 340, providing that no indictment shall be held insufficient for defects in matter of form only, and this section, relating to indictments for perjury, every indictment for perjury in a federal court must contain allegations showing (a) judicial proceedings or course of justice; (b) that all the defendant was sworn to give evidence therein; (c) the testimony given by him; (d) its falsity; and (e) its materiality to the issue or inquiry. Hogue v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 184 Fed. 245.

Setting forth the substance of the offense charged.—An indictment under this section, charging the defendant with perjury in falsely swearing that material changes were made in a certain document before he signed it, was insufficient, where it did not show the substance at least of the change which it was charged that he testified was made. Hogue v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 184 Fed. 245.

Averring such court or person to have complete authority.—R. S. sec. 2249, as amended by Act Cong. March 4, 1904, ch. 394, 33 Stat. L. 59, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 358, authorizes proof of homestead claims to be made before United States commissioners in the land district in which the lands are situated, and this section declares that every person who having taken an oath before a competent officer in any case in which the law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered that he will testify truly, etc., wilfully and contrary to his oath states or subscribes any material matter which he does not believe to be true, is guilty of perjury. An indictment for perjury in support of a homestead claim, sworn to before a United States commissioner, alleged that the commissioner was an officer who was authorized by the laws of the United States to administer an oath and take testimony in such proceeding, and was then and there engaged in taking testimony on the application of W. to make final homestead proof, etc., that it thereupon became material that the commissioner should be informed by the testimony whether W. had settled and resided on the land in good faith; and that to prevent the commissioner from knowing the true facts the defendant wilfully, corruptly, and falsely testified to facts specified which he did not believe to be true. It was held that under such allegations the court would take judicial notice that the commissioner had competent authority to administer the oath to defendant in the particular proceeding, and that the indictment was not, therefore, defective for failure to allege the commissioner's authority to administer the oath on which the perjury was based. Barnard v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 162 Fed. 618.

Vol. V, p. 707, sec. 5397.

Sufficiency of indictment.—An indictment for subornation of perjury in procuring another to make a false oath or affidavit before the receiver of a Land Office to secure an entry of land, which averred that such oath or affidavit was made in support of "a certain application in writing to enter under the homestead laws of the United States, subject to entry at said Land Office," certain land described, was held to be sufficient after verdict as showing that the land described was at the time public land of the United States, subject to homestead entry at such Land Office. Nurnberger v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 721.

Designation of court.—An indictment for subornation of perjury must designate the court in which the perjury occurred by specific averment or equivalent words. Where the caption and commencement show the court in which the indictment was found, further averments with reference to the proceedings in which the alleged perjury was committed, reciting them to have been in "said court," are not sufficient. U. S. v. Howard, (1904) 132 Fed. 326.

Averment that witness was sworn.—Under the settled rule that an indictment for subornation of perjury must contain all the averments necessary in one charging the crime of perjury against the witness suborned, such an indictment with respect to perjury committed in court must, by direct averment or equivalent words, show that the suborned witness was sworn to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. It is not sufficient to charge that defendant procured the witness falsely upon oath to depose, etc., since such averment relates to the acts of defendant, and not of the witness; nor is the defect cured by further expressions which assume, without stating, that the witness was sworn—such as that “when he was so sworn,” or “when he so swore,” he did not believe the things to which he testified to be true. U. S. v. Howard, (1904) 132 Fed. 325.

Averment of materiality of false testimony.—An indictment for subornation of perjury must show that the testimony of which the perjury is predicated was material, either by an averment in terms that it was material or by stating facts showing its materiality. U. S. v. Howard, (1904) 132 Fed. 326.

Omission of date.—An indictment for subornation of perjury, under R. S. sec. 5393, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 705, which charges that the offense was committed “on the—day of December, 1893,” is defective, but the date not being of the essence of the offense, the defect is one of form only, and is cured by R. S. sec. 1025, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 340, which provides that no indictment shall be deemed insufficient by reason of any defect or imperfection in matter of form only, which shall not tend to the prejudice of the defendant. U. S. v. Howard, (1904) 132 Fed. 325.

Omission of word “wilful.”—The crime of perjury, as defined in R. S. sec. 5392, consists in a witness wilfully stating contrary to his oath any material matter which he does not believe to be true; and while, in an indictment for subornation of perjury, the omission of the identical word “wilful” in charging the false swearing by the witness may not be fatal, the indictment must in such case contain equivalent words, themselves free from ambiguity or equivocation. Such requirement is not met by an averment that the defendant knew at the time of the subornation that the testimony to be given by the witness was “false, wilful, and contrary to the oath” to be taken by the witness, which relates to the knowledge of defendant, and not to the state of mind of the witness. U. S. v. Howard, (1904) 132 Fed. 326.

Evidence.—On the trial of a defendant charged with subornation of perjury in procuring homestead entrymen to make the required oath that the entry was not made for the benefit of any other person, when in fact they had agreed to convey the land to the defendant for a stipulated price as soon as they obtained title, it was held to be error to refuse to permit the defendant to testify that he made no such agreements, but that the agreements actually made, as he understood them, left the conveyance optional with the other parties or to other facts, which tended to show that his act was not wilful nor corrupt, as required by the statute to constitute the crime charged. Nurnberger v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 722.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Vol. V, p. 716, sec. 3.

Vessels subject to duty.—A foreign built vessel, owned entirely by a citizen of the United States, and entering a port of the United States from Manila, P. I., is not subject to tonnage duty under this Act, extending such duty to “foreign” vessels entering from the Philippine Archipelago, since, while not “a vessel of the United States,” because not entitled to registry, she is an American and not a foreign vessel, by virtue of the citizenship of her owner. The Alta, (C. C. A. 1905) 136 Fed. 513.

Vol. V, p. 718, sec. 1.

Indictment for infamous crime.—The requirement of the Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, that infamous crimes must be presented by indictment, has no application to the Philippine Islands. Dowdell

v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 325, 31 S. Ct. 590, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 753.

Trial by jury.—Dowdell v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 325, 31 S. Ct. 590, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 753, following the same case set out in the original note.

Vol. V, p. 718, sec. 2.

The collection of duties on imports to Manila, which was not authorized by the President's order of July 12, 1898, after the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain, was not ratified by this section ratifying such order and the action of the federal authorities taken in accordance with its provision. Lincoln v. U. S., (1905) 197 U. S. 419, 25 S. Ct. 455, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 816, (1906) 202 U. S. 484, 26 S. Ct. 728, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1117.

Vol. V, p. 719, sec. 5.

Advised of nature and cause of accusation.—The requirement of the Philippine Bill of Rights, that the accused be advised of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, is satisfied where such complaint, however open it may be to criticism on demurrer, supposing the strict rules of the old common law to be applied, leaves no doubt in the mind of a person of rudimentary intelligence that it means to charge the accused with falsification of documents, contrary to the Philippine Penal Code. Paraiso v. U. S., (1907) 207 U. S. 368, 28 S. Ct. 127, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 249.

Confronting witnesses.—The right of the accused, under this section, to meet the witnesses face to face was not infringed by the action of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands, upon suggestion of diminution of the record, in ordering the judge and clerk of the court below to supply the failure of the record to show whether the accused pleaded to the complaint, and were present in court during the entire trial. Dowdell v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 325, 31 S. Ct. 590, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 753.

Cruel and unusual punishment, forbidden by the Philippine Bill of Rights, is inflicted by the provisions of the Philippine Penal Code under which the falsification by a public official of a public and official document must be punished by fine and imprisonment at hard and painful labor for a period ranging from twelve years and a day to twenty years, the prisoner being subject, as accessories to the main punishment, to carrying, during his imprisonment, a chain at the ankle, hanging from the wrist, to deprivation during the term of imprisonment of civil rights, and to perpetual absolute disqualification to enjoy political rights, hold office, etc., and to surveillance of the authorities during life. Weems v. U. S., (1910) 217 U. S. 349, 30 S. Ct. 544, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 793.

Imprisonment for debt, contrary to this section, is not provided by the Philippine Penal Code, under which a person convicted of embezzlement may be made to suffer a subsidiary imprisonment for a term not exceeding one-third of the principal penalty, in lieu of the restoration of the sum found to be embezzled, with the right to be released from such subsidiary punishment upon payment of the money wrongfully converted. Freeman v. U. S., (1910) 217 U. S. 539, 30 S. Ct. 592, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 874.

Self-crimination.—An accused person cannot claim to have been compelled to be a witness against himself, in violation of this section, because of the denial of a motion to compel the provincial fiscal to return a statement made by accused in ignorance of his rights, and to prohibit the fiscal from using the statement, where such statement was not afterwards used in any way. Pendleton v. U. S., (1910) 216 U. S. 305, 30 S. Ct. 315, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 491.

Due process of law and criminal appeal.—The refusal of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands, on an appeal in a criminal case, to entertain an objection to the sufficiency of the complaint, because such objection was not raised before final judgment in the trial court, does not amount to a conviction of the accused without informing them of the nature and character of the offense charged, or to a conviction without due process of law, in violation of this section, although that court, on appeal, has power to re-examine both the law and the facts, where, as a necessary consequence of the facts found, the testimony offered at the trial, without objection or exception in any form, established every ingredient of the crime. Serra v. Mortiga, (1907) 204 U. S. 470, 27 S. Ct. 343, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 571.

Due process of law.—The due process of law secured to the people of the Philippine Islands by this Act was not denied by the affirmance in the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands of a conviction of the offense described in Philippine Penal Code, art. 343, which was repeated after the conviction and sentence in the court of the first instance by the Act of the Philippine Commission of Oct. 9, 1907, Act No. 1757, the repealing Act also providing for the punishment of the same offense, and within limitations not exceeded by the sentence imposed under the former Act. Ong Chang Wing v. U. S., (1910) 218 U. S. 272, 31 S. Ct. 15, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1040.

Due process of law was not denied by the action of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands in making an order upon its own motion when the accused were absent from the court, requiring the judge and clerk of court below to supply deficiencies in the record. Dowdell v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 325, 31 S. Ct. 590, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 753.

Twice put in jeopardy.—An accused is not placed twice in jeopardy for the same offense within the meaning of this section because the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands, upon reversing judgment below in a criminal case, on an appeal taken by the accused, convicted him, on the same facts, of a different offense, carrying an increased sentence. Trono v. U. S., (1905) 199 U. S. 521, 26 S. Ct. 121, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 292; Flemister v. U. S., (1907) 207 U. S. 372, 28 S. Ct. 129, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 252.

Treating as two different offenses assaults on two different individuals does not place the accused twice in jeopardy for the same offense, even if these assaults occurred very near each other, in one continuing attempt to defy the law. Flemister v. U. S., (1907) 207 U. S. 372, 28 S. Ct. 129, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 252.

The offenses of behaving in an indecent manner in a public place, open to public view, punishable under municipal ordinance, and of insulting a public officer by deed or word in his presence, contrary to P. I. Pen. Code, art. 257, are not identical, so that a conviction of the first will bar a prosecution for the other, although the acts and words of the accused set forth in both charges are the same. Gavieres v. U. S., (1911) 220 U. S. 836, 31 S. Ct. 421, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 489.

An acquittal of homicide, as defined in the Penal Code of the Philippine Islands, art. 404, is a bar to a subsequent conviction of the same offense arising out of the same facts, under an information charging the higher crime of assassination, as defined by article 403, since if not guilty of the lesser crime the accused could not, for the same acts, be guilty of the offense of higher grade. Grafton v. U. S., (1907) 206 U. S. 333, 27 S. Ct. 749, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1084.

Vol. V, p. 722, sec. 9.

Hearing on appeal.—The Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands, in reviewing the judgment of the court of first instance, in a criminal case, may determine for itself the guilt or innocence of the defendant, upon the proofs presented at the trial. Pendleton v. U. S., (1910) 216 U. S. 305, 30 S. Ct. 818, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 491.

One acquitted by a military court of competent jurisdiction of the crime of homicide, as defined by the Penal Code of the Philippine Islands, art. 404, cannot be tried a second time in a civil court of those islands for the same offense. Grafton v. U. S., (1907) 206 U. S. 333, 27 S. Ct. 749, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1084.

Vol. V, p. 722, sec. 10.

This section is substantially re-enacted in Judicial Code, sec. 248, ante, title JUDICIARY, vol. 1, p. 234, of this Supplement.

All the reported cases taken to the Supreme Court from the Philippines down to June, 1911, which are not cited or not sufficiently described below in this note, are as follows: Kepner v. U. S., (1904) 195 U. S. 100, 24 S. Ct. 797, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 114; Mendezona v. U. S., (1904) 195 U. S. 158, 24 S. Ct. 808, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 136; Trono v. U. S., (1905) 199 U. S. 521, 26 S. Ct. 121, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 292; Grafton v. U. S., (1907) 206 U. S. 333, 27 S. Ct. 749, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1084 (criminal cases involving constitutional question whether defendant was twice in jeopardy for the same offense); Dorr v. U. S., (1904) 195 U. S. 138, 24 S. Ct. 808, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 128 (as to constitutional right to trial by jury); Serra t. Mortiga, (1907) 204 U. S. 470, 27 S. Ct. 343, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 571 (a conviction of adultery on complaint of the injured party, involving constitutional question of due process of law); Flemister v. U. S., (1907) 207 U. S. 372, 28 S. Ct. 129, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 252; Carrington v. U. S., (1908) 208 U. S. 1, 28 S. Ct. 203, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 367 (Federal Constitution and statutes involved); Calvo t. De Gutierrez, (1908) 208 U. S. 443, 28 S. Ct. 382, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 564 (decree construing a family settlement of real estate); Bosque v. U. S., (1908) 209 U. S. 91, 28 S. Ct. 501, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 698 (application for admission to the bar, construction and effect of treaty involved, and due process of law); Strong v. Repide, (1909) 213 U. S. 419, 29 S. Ct. 521, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 853 (an action to recover shares of corporate stock); Pendleton v. U. S., (1910) 216 U. S. 305, 30 S. Ct. 315, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 491 (as to alleged compulsory self-incrimination); Weems v. U. S., (1910) 217 U. S. 349, 30 S. Ct. 544, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 793, (determining that a punishment was forbidden by the Philippine Bill of Rights); Freeman v. U. S., (1910) 217 U. S. 539, 30 S. Ct. 592, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 874 (a criminal case involving the provision in the Bill of Rights for the government of the Philippines "that no person shall be imprisoned for debt"); Ling Su Fan v. U. S., (1910) 218 U. S. 302, 31 S. Ct.

21, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1049, and Ong Chang Wing v. U. S., (1910) 218 U. S. 272, 31 S. Ct. 15, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1040 (criminal cases involving constitutional question of due process of law); Chantango v. Abaroa, (1910) 218 U. S. 476, 31 S. Ct. 34, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1116 (a civil action for a jurisdictional amount, involving question of bar by previous acquittal in a criminal action); Atlantic, etc., Co. v. Philippine Islands, (1910) 219 U. S. 17, 31 S. Ct. 138, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 70 (an action to recover from the government of the Philippine Islands the cost of repairing the damage to an incomplete public work); Enriquez v. Go-Tiongco, (1911) 220 U. S. 307, 31 S. Ct. 423, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 476 (to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment dismissing a suit to set aside a judgment sale of community property); Gavieres v. U. S., (1911) 220 U. S. 338, 31 S. Ct. 421, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 489; Dowdell v. U. S., (1911) 221 U. S. 325, 31 S. Ct. 590, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 753 (a criminal case involving constitutional questions).

Appellate jurisdiction in divorce case.—The general rule that the federal courts have no jurisdiction of the subjects of divorce or alimony does not preclude an appeal from a decree of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands reversing a decree of the court of first instance, granting a divorce to a wife and awarding her as alimony pendente lite, and as her share of the conjugal property, a sum in excess of $25,000. De La Rama v. De La Rama, (1906) 201 U. S. 303, 26 S. Ct. 485, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 765.

Statute of the United States involved.—A suit to restrain the defendant from setting up title to certain gold mines in the Philippine Islands, or interfering with the same, and to obtain an accounting in which the meaning and effect of the provision of the Act of July 1, 1902, ch. 1369, sec. 45, 32 Stat. L. 703; 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 731, concerning land titles are in question, involves a statute of the United States and a decree therein is therefore appealable. Reavis v. Fianza, (1909) 215 U. S. 16, 30 S. Ct. 1, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 72.

Cases involving a treaty.—Judgments of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands denying any liability of the present city of Manila upon municipal obligations incurred prior to the cession of the Philippine Islands to the United States by the treaty of Dec. 10, 1898, 30 Stat. L. 1754, 7 Fed. Stat. Annot. 814, are rendered in cases in which a treaty of the United States "is involved," and are therefore appealable, "since neither the court below nor this court can determine the continuity of the municipality nor the liability of the city as it now exists for the obligation of the old city, without considering the effect of the change of sovereignty resulting from that treaty." Vilas v. Manila, (1911) 220 U. S. 345, 31 S. Ct. 418, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 491.

"Value in controversy."—The value of a mortgaged vessel and the profits from its use, demanded in a dismissed counterclaim in a suit to foreclose the mortgage, cannot be added to the amount of the mortgage debt in determining the value of the matter in controversy for the purpose of appellate jurisdiction. Martinez v. International Banking Corp., (1911) 220 U. S. 214, 31 S. Ct. 408, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 438, the court saying: "The case of Harten v. Löffler, (1909) 212 U. S. 397, 29 S. Ct. 351, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 568, is cited as authority. But conceding that cases may arise where the amount of a judgment in favor of a plaintiff may be combined with the sum demanded in a dismissed counterclaim of a defendant, to determine whether the jurisdictional value exists, manifestly this is not a case for the application of the doctrine. The value of the matter in dispute in this court is the test of our jurisdiction. Hilton v. Dickinson, (1883) 108 U. S. 165, 2 S. Ct. 424, 27 U. S. (L. ed.) 688."

Two suits separately commenced, but tried together for convenience, will not be treated as consolidated, for the purpose of increasing the amount in dispute so as to sustain an appeal, where the understanding of court and counsel below was that there was in fact no consolidation. Martinez v. International Banking Corp., (1911) 220 U. S. 214, 31 S. Ct. 408, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 438.

Uniting interests in several parties.—The judgment in an action to recover real property in which the plaintiff, although claiming under a single title all the land occupied separately by the various defendants, does not allege joint ownership or joint possession or joint action of any kind, the controversy with each defendant relating to a separate and distinct parcel does not show a jurisdictional amount in dispute, for the purpose of appeal, where such judgment, while apparently rendered jointly, so far as the damages are concerned, against all the defendants, runs separately against each defendant for recovery of possession of that part of the land of which he was alleged and found to be in possession, and the whole amount of the damages added to the value of the land in controversy with any one of the defendants does not equal the jurisdictional amount. Tupino v. La Compania General De Tabacos De Filipinas, (1909) 214 U. S. 288, 29 S. Ct. 610, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 992.

Affidavits of value.—In Roura v. Philippine Islands, (1910) 218 U. S. 386, 31 S. Ct.

73, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1080, to review a judgment affirming the trial court in refusing, on the opposition of the insular government, the prayer for registration of a land title, the court said: "Without going into detail, we say, in view of the affidavits filed in this court concerning the value of the property after allowing for the elements of speculation possibly entering into the amount fixed in the affidavits, we think, in the absence of affidavits in rebuttal, a sufficient showing has been made to give jurisdiction."

To the point that affidavits of value of property claimed by the appellant should be confined to the part of his claim that is in controversy in the Supreme Court on the appeal, see Reavis v. Fianza, (1909) 215 U. S. 16, 30 S. Ct. 1, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 72.

"Final judgments and decrees."—A judgment of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands which directs the entry of judgment for the plaintiff below, in accordance with its decision, but leaves to the lower court the judicial determination of the exact amount for which the judgment shall be entered, is not final for the purpose of an appeal. Martinez v. International Banking Corp., (1911) 220 U. S. 214, 31 S. Ct. 408, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 438.

Mode of review.—Writ of error, and not appeal, is the proper proceeding to obtain a review by the United States Supreme Court of a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Land Registration, which denied registration of a tract of land. Tiglaio v. Insular Government of Philippine Islands, (1910) 215 U. S. 410, 30 S. Ct. 129, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 257, following Carino v. Insular Government of Philippine Islands, (1909) 212 U. S. 449, 29 S. Ct. 334, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 594; Jover v. Costas v. Insular Government of Philippine Islands, (1911) 221 U. S. 623, 31 S. Ct. 664, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 884.

"Errors alleged to have been committed in an action at law can be reviewed here only by writ of error. This, in the absence of modification by statute, is the rule in respect to all courts whose records are brought here for review." Behn v. Campbell, (1907) 205 U. S. 403, 27 S. Ct. 502, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 857, entertaining a writ of error to review a judgment in an action plainly at law, but citing Behn v. Campbell, (1905) 200 U. S. 611, 26 S. Ct. 753, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 619, where an appeal first taken in the same case was dismissed.

Appeal, and not a writ of error, is the proper method of obtaining a review of a final order of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands denying an application for a writ of habeas corpus, because "final orders of the Circuit Courts or District Courts of the United States in habeas corpus can only be reviewed by appeal, and not by writ of error." Fisher v. Baker, (1906) 203 U. S. 174, 27 S. Ct. 135, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 142, dismissing a writ of error.

Record.—A conviction for crime is not reviewable as involving the denial of the protection afforded by the Philippine Bill of Rights, where the most that can be gathered from the record is that the complaint was bad by the rules of criminal pleading. Paraiso v. U. S., (1907) 207 U. S. 368, 28 S. Ct. 127, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 249, dismissing a writ of error. See generally cases cited under Issue must appear of record, in note to section 5 of the Circuit Court of Appeals Act of 1891, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 405, and ante, title JUDICIARY, p. 1321, of this Supplement.

Denial of a motion for rehearing by the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands cannot serve to bring federal questions into the record so as to sustain a writ of error to that court. Paraiso v. U. S., (1907) 207 U. S. 368, 28 S. Ct. 127, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 249.

Presumptions on appeal.—The grounds for refusing to grant a new trial for newly discovered evidence will be presumed, on a writ of error, to have been sufficient, where they do not appear on the record. Santos v. Holy Roman Catholic and Apostolic Church, (1909) 212 U. S. 463, 29 S. Ct. 338, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 599, an action to recover possession of a chapel.

Questions reviewable—assignment of errors.—Alleged errors of law in the opinion of the court below, which was engaged with a discussion of evidence and the inferences which might properly be drawn from it, will not be considered on a writ of error if they are not contained in the assignment of errors, where, on the whole, it is clear that the facts found justify the judgment rendered. Behn v. Campbell, (1907) 205 U. S. 403, 27 S. Ct. 502, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 857.

"We do not feel called upon to consider errors not assigned. See O'Neil v. Vermont, (1892) 144 U. S. 323, 331, 12 S. Ct. 693, 36 U. S. (L. ed.) 450, 455." Paraiso v. U. S., (1907) 207 U. S. 368, 28 S. Ct. 127, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 249.

Questions not raised below, respecting the denial of rights which find expression and sanction in the Federal Constitution and the Philippine Bill of Rights, may be considered by the Supreme Court, on error to the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands, in the exercise of its discretion under Supreme Court rule 35, to notice a plain error not assigned. Weems v. U. S., (1910) 217 U. S. 349, 30 S. Ct. 544, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 793.

The objection that possession and working of mining claims in the Philippine Islands for the time required under the Act of July 1, 1902, ch. 1369, sec. 45, 32 Stat. L. 703, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 731, to establish a right to a patent, will not support a suit to enjoin setting up title or interfering with the same, comes too late after a trial upon the merits. Reavis v. Fianza, (1909) 215 U. S. 16, 30 S. Ct. 1, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 72.

Scope of review.—"In reviewing the action of the court below we are, of course, confined to the record and the case therein made, and may not, as the result of mistaken suggestions as to the issues and proof, disregard our duty by deciding, not the case as made, but an imaginary one, wherein issues not made and not presented below would have to be supplied, and whereby conjecture and surmise must be indulged to replace the total absence of all proof on a particular subject." Roura v. Philippine Islands, (1910) 218 U. S. 386, 31 S. Ct. 73, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1080.

Review of questions of fact.—On a writ of error findings of fact are not open to re-examination, as only questions of law are brought up by the writ. Santos v. Holy Roman Catholic and Apostolic Church, (1909) 212 U. S. 463, 29 S. Ct. 338, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 599.

On writ of error in a criminal case assignments of error which challenge the sufficiency of the evidence to warrant a conviction cannot be considered where it is not contended that there was no evidence of guilt. Ling Su Fan v. U. S., (1910) 218 U. S. 302, 31 S. Ct. 21, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1049.

"On appeal or writ of error from the judgment of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands the facts (when the courts below differ) will be reviewed by this court." Strong v. Repide, (1909) 213 U. S. 419, 29 S. Ct. 521, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 853, citing De La Rama v. De La Rama, (1906) 201 U. S. 303, 309, 26 S. Ct. 485, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 765, 767.

"An appeal brings up questions of fact as well as of law, but upon a writ of error only questions of law apparent on the record can be considered, and there can be no inquiry whether there was error in dealing with questions of fact." Behn v. Campbell, (1907) 205 U. S. 403, 27 S. Ct. 502, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 857, the court further saying: "It was held in De La Rama v. De La Rama, (1906) 201 U. S. 303, 26 S. Ct. 485, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 765, that upon an appeal this court will consider whether a reversal by the Supreme Court of the findings of the court of first instance was justified on the ground that the findings below were plainly and manifestly against the weight of evidence, and, upon being satisfied that the action of the Supreme Court was not warranted, on that ground would reverse it. But this case was one of appeal. . . . The principle acted upon in that case is not applicable to writs of error."

Concurrent findings of fact by the two lower courts in support of a claim of certain natives of the Philippine Islands to have held possession of certain mines, and to have worked them to the exclusion of all others down to the bringing of suit, will not be disturbed by the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal, if there is some evidence of the facts found. Reavis v. Fianza, (1909) 215 U. S. 16, 30 S. Ct. 1, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 72.

While, upon review by appeal, "this court will generally accept the concurrent conclusions of the trial and appellate courts, yet as was said by Mr. Justice Brewer in Beyer v. Le Fevre, (1902) 186 U. S. 114, 119, 22 S. Ct. 765, 46 U. S. (L. ed.) 1080, 1082: 'There has always been recognized the right and duty of this court to examine the record, and if it finds that the conclusions are wholly unwarranted by the testimony, it will set the verdict or report aside and direct a re-examination.'" De La Rama v. De La Rama, (1906) 201 U. S. 303, 26 S. Ct. 485, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 765.

Harmless error.—The exclusion of evidence in an equity cause, even if erroneous, is not ground for reversal, where, if admitted, it could not have affected the result. Reavis v. Fianza, (1909) 215 U. S. 16, 30 S. Ct. 1, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 72.

Vol. V, p. 722, sec. 12.

Jurisdiction not conferred.—This section which reserved to the United States in the Philippine Islands "such land or other property as shall be designated by the President of the United States for military and other reservations," does not confer upon him the power to withdraw the reservation completely from the local jurisdiction and place it under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department, thereby erecting a new and independent authority for all purposes of civil government. (1906) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 91.

Vol. V, p. 731, sec. 45.

Adverse claims.—An adverse claim which will defeat the right to a patent under this section when natives and their ancestors have held possession and worked mining claims in the Philippine Islands for the period required by that section, cannot be based upon entry and staking of claim and filing notice of location, where such possession was continuous down to the bringing of suit to restrain the person relying upon such acts as amounting to an adverse claim from setting up title or interfering with the claims. Reavis v. Fianza, (1909) 215 U. S. 16, 30 S. Ct. 1, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 72.

Claim of title.—The possession and working of a mining claim in the Philippine Islands for the time requisite, under this section, in order to establish a right to patent, need not have been under a claim of title. Reavis v. Fianza, (1909) 215 U. S. 16, 30 S. Ct. 1, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 72.

Vol. X, p. 262, sec. 6.

Prohibiting exportation of Philippine coin.—The owner of Philippine silver coin is not deprived of his property therein without due process of law, contrary to the Act of July 1, 1902, by the prohibition against the exportation of such coin from the Philippine Islands, under penalty of forfeiture and fine or imprisonment, which is made by the Philippine law No. 1411, enacted by the Philippine Commission in the exercise of the power under the Act of Congress of March 2, 1903 (32 Stat. L. 952, ch. 980), sec. 6, to adopt such measures as are deemed proper, not inconsistent with the organic act, to maintain the parity between gold and silver pesos, but such statute is within the limits of the police power. Ling Su Fan v. U. S., (1910) 218 U. S. 302, 31 S. Ct. 21, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1049.

PILOTAGE.

Vol. V, p. 747, sec. 4235.

Constitutionality of pilotage laws.—No inherent rights guaranteed by the Federal Constitution are infringed by state regulations providing for the appointment of pilots, and restricting the right to pilot to those duly appointed. Olsen v. Smith, (1904) 195 U. S. 332, 25 S. Ct. 52, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 224, affirming (Tex. 1902) 68 S. W. 320.

The adoption of compulsory pilotage regulations by a state, under the authority of this section, does not violate U. S. Const., art. 1, sec. 9, cl. 8, which provides that no preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one state over those of another. Thompson v. Darden, (1905) 193 U. S. 310, 25 S. Ct. 660, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1064.

Vol. V, p. 749, sec. 4236.

When waters are not the boundary.—In Leech v. Louisiana, (1909) 214 U. S. 175, 29 S. Ct. 552, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 956, it was held that the state of Louisiana may make it a criminal offense for a pilot not duly qualified under its laws to pilot a foreign vessel from the Gulf of Mexico to New Orleans, Louisiana, although he holds a license issued under the authority of the state of Mississippi; since New Orleans, although upon the Mississippi river, is not "situate upon waters which are the boundary between two states." The court said: "The case for the plaintiff in error depends upon the assumption that the 'waters which are the boundary between two states' are, in this case, the whole Mississippi river so far as navigable. We are of opinion that the assumption is wrong, and that the limit of the waters referred to is the point at which they cease to be a boundary between two states. Neither continuity of water nor identity of name will carry them beyond that point. If the plaintiff in error had undertaken to pilot from the Gulf to Natchez, a different question would have been presented, and it may be that in that case the Mississippi license would have been good. But New Orleans, although upon the Mississippi, is not situate upon waters which are the boundary between two states, and therefore the section relied upon does not apply."

Only the discriminating features of state pilotage laws are abrogated by the provision of this section forbidding such discrimination, and annulling and abrogating "all existing regulations or provisions making any such discrimination," Olsen v. Smith, (1904) 195 U. S. 332, 25 S. Ct. 52, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 224, affirming (Tex. 1902) 68 S. W. 320.

Separating discriminating features from rest of statute. — Whether clauses of a state pilotage law granting discriminatory exemption, in violation of this section, can be eliminated without destroying the remaining provisions, is a question for the state court to decide, and cannot be reviewed by the federal Supreme Court, on writ of error to the state court. Olsen v. Smith, (1904) 195 U. S. 332, 25 S. Ct. 52, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 224, affirming (Tex. 1902) 68 S. W. 320.

By the provisions of sections 1965 and 1969 of the Code of Virginia. — Thompson v. Darden, (1905) 198 U. S. 310, 25 S. Ct. 680, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1064, affirming the case set out in the original note.

Vol. V, p. 750, sec. 4444.

Effect on treaties. — State pilotage laws, applied to a British vessel coming from a foreign port, do not conflict with a treaty provision that "no higher or other duties or charges shall be imposed in any ports of the United States on British vessels than those payable in the same ports by vessels of the United States," because of the exemption of coastwise steam vessels of the United States from pilotage, resulting from this section, or of any lawful exemption of coastwise vessels, created by the state laws. Olsen v. Smith, (1904) 195 U. S. 332, 25 S. Ct. 52, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 224, affirming (Tex. 1902) 68 S. W. 320.

No monopoly or combination forbidden by the federal anti-trust laws is created by state regulations providing for the appointment of pilots, and restricting the right to pilot to those duly appointed. Olsen v. Smith, (1904) 195 U. S. 332, 25 S. Ct. 52, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 224, affirming (Tex. 1902) 68 S. W. 320.

The exemption of coastwise steam vessels of the United States from the operation of state pilotage laws interferes with such laws only so far as they relate to these vessels. Olsen v. Smith, (1904) 195 U. S. 332, 25 S. Ct. 52, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 224, affirming (Tex. 1902) 68 S. W. 320.

In The Queen, (1910) 184 Fed. 537, affirmed (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 725, it was held that a duly registered American steamer engaged in making voyages between United States ports on Puget Sound and San Francisco, although in making such voyages she touched at the foreign way port of Victoria, taking on freight and passengers for San Francisco, was a "coastwise steam vessel," within the meaning of this section, which exempts such vessels from the operation of state pilotage laws, and that a state pilot whose services were refused on her entry into the port of San Francisco, her master and mate being licensed pilots under the laws of the United States, could not subject her to pilotage fees under the California statute (Pol. Code Cal., secs. 2466, 2468).

The North Carolina statute (Pub. Laws 1907, p. 906, ch. 625, sec. 13) requires all coastwise or foreign vessels over sixty gross tons to take a state licensed pilot between the sea and a certain port in the state. It has been held that this statute is not unconstitutional as undertaking to regulate commerce between the states and foreign countries, as applied to vessels other than coastwise steam vessels; the federal statute recognizing the right of the states to regulate pilots, except in so far as Congress sees fit to do so. St. George v. Hardie, (1908) 147 N. C. 88, 60 S. E. 920.

PORTO RICO.

Vol. V, p. 765, sec. 8.

The local statutory law of real property requiring the giving and recording of cautionary notice of a pending suit in order to affect innocent third parties dealing with the recorded owner is applicable to a suit brought on the equity side of the United States District Court of Porto Rico, in view of the provisions of this section, although by sec. 34 of this Act, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 773, the District Court of the United States for Porto Rico is given, in addition to the ordinary jurisdiction of federal District Courts, jurisdiction of all cases cognizant in the federal Circuit Courts, with power to proceed therein in the same manner as a Circuit Court. Romeu v. Todd, (1907) 206 U. S. 358, 27 S. Ct. 724, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1093.

Damages for a wrongful attachment may, under this section, be assessed in the special proceeding provided by Porto Rico Code Civ. Pro., arts. 1409-1415, where attachments have wrongfully been issued and vacated for any cause. Perez v. Fernandez, (1906) 202 U. S. 80, 26 S. Ct. 561, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 942, holding also that when the District Court is exercising the jurisdiction of a Circuit Court under section 34 of this Act, infra, this page, the general provisions for a jury trial as to issues of fact in the federal Circuit Courts, contained in R. S. sec. 648, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 389, do not prevent the court from enforcing the express provisions of Porto Rico Code Civ. Pro., arts. 1409-1415, for the recovery and assessment of damages for wrongful attachment.

Abolishing quasi-public office. — Congress could, by this act, confiscate without compensation, so far as the Federal Constitution is concerned, the office of solicitor of the courts of first instance of the capital of Porto Rico, lawfully purchased in perpetuity, prior to occupation of Porto Rico by the military authorities of the United States, and the cession of that island to the United States. Sanchez v. U. S., (1910) 216 U. S. 167, 30 S. Ct. 361, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 432.

Vol. V, p. 766, sec. 11.

Contract obligations were not impaired by so much of this section as requires United States currency at the rate of exchange prescribed by the act, and not at the rate of one dollar for each peso of indebtedness, to be accepted in discharge of an obligation on account of a purchase in 1894 of a plantation in Porto Rico, which was to be satisfied with money current in the province at the rate of 100 centavos for each peso of indebtedness. Serralles v. Eabri, (1906) 200 U. S. 103, 26 S. Ct. 176, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 391.

Vol. V, p. 767, sec. 14.

Extradition. — Precisely the same power to issue a requisition for the return of a fugitive criminal as is possessed under R. S. sec. 5278, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 78, by the governor of any organized territory, is given by the governor of Porto Rico by the provisions of this section that the laws of the United States not locally inapplicable shall be in force and effect in Porto Rico, and of section 17, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 768; that the governor of Porto Rico shall have all the powers of governors of the territories of the United States that are not locally inapplicable. New York v. Bingham, (1909) 211 U. S. 468, 29 S. Ct. 190, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 286, affirming (1907) 189 N. Y. 124, 81 N. E. 773, which affirmed (1907) 117 App. Div. 411, 102 N. Y. S. 878; In re Kopel, (1906) 148 Fed. 505.

Vol. V, p. 772, sec. 32.

Corporation laws. — The legislative assembly of Porto Rico has authority to pass laws setting forth the conditions under which domestic corporations may be organized and foreign corporations may do business there, subject, however, to the exceptions and restrictions contained in the Organic Act, and the joint resolution of May 1, 1900, 31 Stat. 715, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 776, in regard to franchises of a public or quasi-public nature, including all railroad, street railway, telegraph, and telephone franchises, privileges, or concessions. (1907) 26 Op. Atty.-Gen. 176.

Vol. V, p. 772, sec. 33.

Questions between Roman Catholic church and people affecting property rights. — Under this section, with the provisions of sections 8 and 15 of the same act, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 765, 769, the legislative assembly of Porto Rico had power to confer original jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court of Porto Rico for the trial and adjudication of questions between the Roman Catholic church and the people or any municipality affecting property rights. Ponce v. Roman Catholic Apostolic Church, (1908) 210 U. S. 296, 28 S. Ct. 737, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1068.

Vol. V, p. 773, sec. 34.

This section was amended by section 3 of the Act of March 2, 1901, ch. 812, 31 St. L. 953, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 777, for which latter section see also infra, p. 1681.

And see reference to section 34 in note to section 8 of this Act, supra, p. 1657.

Court of bankruptcy. — The District Court of the United States for Porto Rico is a court of bankruptcy "not within any organized circuit of the United States," as described in section 2 and section 24a of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, ante, this Supplement, pp. 469, 603; and an appeal from an adjudication of bankruptcy by that court was taken to the federal Supreme Court in Armstrong v. Fernandez, (1908) 208 U. S. 324, 28 S. Ct. 419, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 514.

"Cases cognizant in the Circuit Courts of the United States." — A mere reference in a bill in equity to the provisions of an order of the military governor of Porto Rico does not present a controversy arising under the laws of the United States, of which the federal District Court for Porto Rico would have jurisdiction without regard to the citizenship of the parties, even if such order be treated as a law of the United States, where the bill does not call the attention of the court to a controversy arising under such order, in such a way as to invoke the court's action thereon. Fraenkl v. Cerecedo, (1910) 216 U. S. 295, 30 S. Ct. 322, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 486.

A common-law action to recover damages for a wrongful attachment is not within the jurisdiction of the District Court under this section. Perez v. Fernandez, (1906) 202 U. S. 80, 26 S. Ct. 561, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 942.

Conformity to Porto Rican practice. — "We think it was the intention of Congress in the Porto Rican Act to require the District Court exercising the jurisdiction of a Circuit Court, in analogy to the powers of the Circuit Courts in the states, to adapt itself, save in the excepted cases in equity and admiralty, to the local procedure and practice in Porto Rico. This conclusion is in accord with the policy of the United States, evidenced in the legislation concerning the islands ceded by Spain, and secures to the people thereof a continuation of the laws and methods of practice and administration familiar to them, which are to be controlling until changed by law." Perez v. Fernandez, (1906) 202 U. S. 80, 26 S. Ct. 561, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 942.

The District Court for Porto Rico when exercising the jurisdiction of a Circuit Court under this section must conform to the local practice for the issuing of attachments, and the recovery of damages when wrongfully issued, in view of the provisions in section 8 of this act, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 765 and supra, p. —, and secs. 914, 915 of the United States Revised Statutes, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 563, 577. Perez v. Fernandez, (1906) 202 U. S. 80, 26 S. Ct. 561, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 942.

Removal of causes. — "We do not think the rule which demarks the line between the courts of the United States and state courts within the removal act should be held applicable to Porto Rico to the extent which might have obtained had the Act of 1901 [sec. 3, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 777] not been enacted. We conclude, therefore, that where a case is removed from the local Porto Rican court to the United States court, over which case the latter court would have had jurisdiction as to all the parties impleaded, if the case had been there originally brought, even though the removal was irregular, the party who caused the removal cannot be heard, after judgment against him, to assert that the United States court was wanting in jurisdiction solely on the ground that the case was erroneously removed." Garrozi v. Dastas, (1907) 204 U. S. 64, 27 S. Ct. 224, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 369.

Vol. V, p. 773, sec. 35.

The part of this section which deals with review by the United States Supreme Court on writs of error and appeals is revised and re-enacted with material changes and evidently superseded by Judicial Code, sec. 244, ante, p. 233, of this Supplement. The remaining part of the section remains in force under the last paragraph of Judicial Code, sec. 297, ante, p. 250, of this Supplement.

All the reported cases heard by the federal Supreme Court on appeals or writs of error under this section, prior to June, 1911, other than those elsewhere cited in this note are as follows:

From the District Court for Porto Rico. — Perez v. Fernandez, (1906) 202 U. S. 80, 26 S. Ct. 561, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 942; Romeu v. Todd, (1907) 206 U. S. 358, 27 S. Ct. 724, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1093; Martinez v. La Asociacion, etc., (1909) 213 U. S. 20, 29 S. Ct. 327, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 679; Cabrera v. American Colonial Bank, (1909) 214 U. S. 224, 29 S. Ct. 623, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 974; Santiago v. Noguerras, (1909) 214 U. S. 260, 29 S. Ct. 608, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 989; Fraenkl v. Cerecedo, (1910) 216 U. S. 295, 30 S. Ct. 322, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 486; Will v. Tornabelli, (1910) 217 U. S. 47, 30 S. Ct. 424, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 660; Todd v. Romeu, (1910) 217 U. S. 150, 30 S. Ct. 474, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 705; Souffront v. La Compagnie des Sucreries, (1910) 217 U. S. 476, 30 S. Ct. 608, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 846; Javierre v. Central Altagracia, (1910) 217 U. S. 502, 30 S. Ct. 598, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 859; Herencia v. Guzman, (1910) 219 U. S. 44, 31 S. Ct. 135, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 81; Perez v. Fernandez

(1911) 220 U. S. 224, 31 S. Ct. 412, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 443; Blanco v. Hubbard, (1911) 220 U. S. 233, 31 S. Ct. 415, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 447.

From the Supreme Court of Porto Rico. — Ponce v. Roman Catholic Apostolic Church, (1908) 210 U. S. 296, 28 S. Ct. 737, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 1068; Maytin v. Vela, (1910) 216 U. S. 598, 30 S. Ct. 439, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 632.

"Same cases as from the Supreme Courts of the territories." — Prior to the change in this section by Judicial Code, sec. 244, ante, p. 233, this Supplement, the court said: "There may be cases — certainly civil cases — in the United States District Court for Porto Rico that do not involve any question arising under the Constitution, or a treaty, or an Act of Congress; and yet if the case be one which if determined in a Supreme Court of one of the territories of the United States could be brought here for re-examination, the final judgment could be reviewed by this court, although no right of a distinctly federal nature was involved." Amado v. U. S., (1904) 195 U. S. 172, 25 S. Ct. 13, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 145, a writ of error to the District Court.

"Constitution of the United States . . . brought in question." — Errors assigned with respect to the action of the trial court with reference to an alleged confession of guilt furnish no basis for the exercise by the federal Supreme Court of its appellate jurisdiction over the Porto Rican Supreme Court, where the record does not show even the semblance of the assertion or denial of a right under the Federal Constitution. Kent v. Porto Rico, (1907) 207 U. S. 113, 28 S. Ct. 55, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 127.

"Act of Congress is brought in question."—The federal question presented by the contention that the changes made by the Porto Rico legislature in the boundaries of judicial districts and in the number of judges deprived the courts affected of their validity under section 33 of this Act, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 772, legalizing existing tribunals, was held to be too frivolous to sustain a writ of error to the Supreme Court of Porto Rico, when the whole of section 33 is considered together with the context of the Act and especially with section 15 thereof, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 768. Kent v. Porto Rico, (1907) 207 U. S. 113, 28 S. Ct. 55, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 127.

Denial of right claimed under Act of Congress.—The ruling of the District Court for Porto Rico that the recovery for the breach of a promise to marry was not limited to the expense incurred in reliance on the promised marriage, as provided by Porto Rico Civ. Code, art. 44, is not the equivalent, for the purpose of sustaining a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court, of a denial of a right claimed under a law of the United States, on the theory that this article became a law of the United States by reason of section 8 of this Act, continuing local laws in force. Ortega v. Lara, (1906) 202 U. S. 339, 26 S. Ct. 707, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1055.

A judgment of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico requiring an indebtedness to be liquidated in United States currency at the rate of 100 cents for each peso of indebtedness, on the ground that section 11 of this Act, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 766, under which the debtor claimed the right to pay in such currency at the rate of sixty cents for each peso of indebtedness, had no application to the case, is reviewable in the federal Supreme Court as denying a right claimed under a federal statute. Serralles v. Eabri, (1906) 200 U. S. 103, 26 S. Ct. 176, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 391.

The overruling of a motion in arrest of judgment, in which the accused asserted that the grand jurors were not selected or drawn as required by the federal statutes, presents a case in which "an Act of Congress is brought in question and the right claimed thereunder is denied." Rodriguez v. U. S., (1905) 198 U. S. 156, 25 S. Ct. 617, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 994, a writ of error to the District Court.

The claim in a written motion in arrest of judgment or sentence that the indictment did not set forth "an offense under the statutes of the United States" is too indefinite to give the federal Supreme Court jurisdiction of a writ of error to the District Court under this section. Amado v. U. S., (1904) 195 U. S. 172, 25 S. Ct. 13, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 145.

When the matter in dispute exceeds the sum of $5,000.—An appeal was sustained from a decree of the United States District Court for the district of Porto Rico in a suit brought by a wife to obtain a liquidation of the community, in which the matter in dispute exceeded $5,000. Garrozi v. Dastas, (1907) 204 U. S. 64, 27 S. Ct. 224, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 369.

Parties to writ of error.—The death of the insured after judgment in favor of defendant in an action on the policy in which the insured was originally named as the sole plaintiff, does not require the dismissal of a writ of error sued out to review the judgment without reviving the action, suggesting the death on the record, or giving notice to the succession, where, to meet the plea that the plaintiff had no interest in the cause of action, the caption in the declaration was amended to show that the action was brought for the use of a specified corporation, and an averment of an assignment of the policy to such corporation was inserted in the body of the pleading. Amadeo v. Northern Assur. Co., (1906) 201 U. S. 194, 26 S. Ct. 507, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 722, a writ of error to the District Court.

The objection that a writ of error sued out on behalf of a liquidating company to review a judgment for defendant in an action on a policy of insurance could only be prosecuted by the liquidator will not require dismissal of such writ, where to meet the plea that the insured, who was originally named as the sole plaintiff, had no interest in the cause of action, the caption of the declaration was amended to show that the action was brought for the use of such company, and an averment of the assignment of the policy to such company "in liquidation, and of which Pedro Salazar is liquidator," was inserted in the body of the pleading, and no objection in this regard was made below. Amadeo v. Northern Assur. Co., (1906) 201 U. S. 194, 26 S. Ct. 507, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 722.

Questions reviewable.—Questions not presented by the pleadings nor raised in the lower court will not be considered on appeal. Rodriguez v. Vivoni, (1906) 201 U. S. 371, 26 S. Ct. 475, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 792, an appeal from the District Court.

On review of a judgment or decree of the District Court of Porto Rico, the federal Supreme Court will, of its own motion, inquire into the jurisdiction of the court below, although no special exception was taken. Perez v. Fernandez, (1906) 202 U. S. 80, 26 S. Ct. 561, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 942.

Scope of review.—Under this section it was held that no judgment or decree of the District Court of the United States for the district of Porto Rico can be reviewed by the Supreme Court in matter of fact, but only in matter of law, for that is the rule in cases coming "from the Supreme Courts of the Territories" to which the Act refers. Garzot v. De Rubio, (1908) 209 U. S. 283, 28 S. Ct. 548, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 794, quoting from Idaho, etc., Land Imp. Co. v. Bradbury, (1889) 132 U. S. 509, 513, 10 S. Ct. 177, 33 U. S. (L. ed.) 433, 436, as to "our jurisdiction over causes coming from the territories generally."

Harmless error.—Error committed by the trial court either in admitting evidence or in the legal effect given to the evidence admitted concerning acts which were held adequate to interrupt the course of prescription is not ground for reversal, although the defeated party, relying on the certainty of a reversal because of such errors, may have neglected to make a full defense, or to assign other substantial errors in the Appellate Court. Royal Ins. Co. v. Miller, (1905) 199 U. S. 353, 28 S. Ct. 46, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 226, a writ of error to the District Court.

Writs of habeas corpus, when grantable by the judges of district and circuit courts of the United States. See the title HABEAS CORPUS, 3 Fed. Stat. Annot. 162, and ante, p. 1100, this Supplement.

Vol. V, p. 774, sec. 36.

Audit of expenditure.—A Porto Rican law concerning an audit of expenditures before disbursement is not objectionable to or inconsistent with the Organic Act merely because it provides for an effective audit of court expenses. Such a law does not transcend the legislative power of the insular government, and, whether wise or not, cannot be treated as void or inapplicable to the United States court in Porto Rico. (1907) 26 Op. Atty-Gen. 438.

Vol. V, p. 775, sec. 38.

The irrigation bonds of Porto Rico issued in conformity with the requirements of this section, and sections 1 and 3 of the Porto Rican Act of September 18, 1908, will constitute a valid and binding obligation of the people and government of Porto Rico, when they shall have been executed with due formalities, and their issue and sale (made or proposed) has been authenticated by the executive council, acting upon the approval and adoption of plans and specifications for the irrigation system as required by local law. (1908) 27 Op. Atty-Gen. 104.

Vol. V, p. 777, sec. 3.

A corporation created by a decree of the Spanish Crown for charitable purposes, and limited in its field of operation to Porto Rico, does not continue, after the ratification of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain, to be a citizen or subject of Spain, within the meaning of this section, so as to give jurisdiction to the federal District Court for Porto Rico over a suit to which it is a party. Martinez v. La Asociacion, etc., (1909) 213 U. S. 20, 29 S. Ct. 327, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 679.

A charitable corporation created by decree of the Spanish Crown to operate in Porto Rico is not a citizen of the United States within the meaning of this section, but since the enactment of the Act of April 12, 1900, 31 Stat. L. 77, ch. 191, 5 Fed. Stat. Annot. 762 et seq., is a citizen of Porto Rico, if a citizen of any country. Martinez v. La Asociacion, etc., (1909) 213 U. S. 20, 29 S. Ct. 327, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 679.

Between Spanish subjects.—Jurisdiction of the District Court under this section extends to a cause where the parties on both sides are subjects of the King of Spain. Ortega v. Lara, (1906) 202 U. S. 339, 26 S. Ct. 707, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 1055.

POSTAL SERVICE.

Vol. V, p. 792, sec. 3829.

The government's mere occupation of a rented building on a post road for a post office, it has been held, did not constitute the establishment of a post office in the sense of accomplishing of itself any appropriation or dedication of the site selected to public use, or any interference with existing rights therein under this section. U. S. v. Boston El. R. Co., (1910) 176 Fed. 968.

A policy insuring articles sent by mail provided that no article should be considered as insured until a letter of advice, with a description of the property, etc., should be deposited in the post office at the place of mailing, and that the article should be deposited and registered at the post office. It was held under this section that mailing the letter of advice by depositing it in a mail box was insufficient, and did not cause the article to become insured. Banco De Sonora v. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co., (1904) 124 Ia. 576, 100 N. W. 532.

Vol. V, p. 794, sec. 3834.

Action on postmaster's bond.—Under the bond of a postmaster, conditioned that he will faithfully discharge all the duties and trusts imposed on him by law or the rules and regulations of the Post-office Department, and Postal Laws and Regulations, sec. 1051, providing that the postmaster will be held accountable for all registered matter coming into his office, he is liable for a registered package delivered to him; it being afterwards stolen, though without negligence on his part. U. S. v. Griswold, (1905) 9 Ariz. 304, 80 Pac. 317, reversing (1904) 8 Ariz. 453, 76 Pac. 596, set out in original note.

Vol. V, p. 808, sec. 1.

Postmaster-General not authorized to impose fines.—There is no statute which authorizes the Postmaster-General to impose fines and enforce their collection from the legal salaries of clerks and others in the department. Sherlock v. U. S., (1908) 43 Ct. Cl. 161.

Vol. V, p. 812, sec. 9.

Liability of postmaster on bond for unlawful appointment.—Under this section it has been held that a postmaster who, by direction of the Post-office Department, appointed a clerk in his office and mailed the checks in payment of her salary to her in Washington, taking credit therefor in his accounts, which he certified under oath were just and true as he verily believed, although such clerk rendered no service in his office, is liable on his bond for the amount of the salary so allowed and paid him, notwithstanding the fact that he acted in good faith and in the supposition that such clerk was employed in the department in connection with the establishment of a free delivery at his office. U. S. v. Moore, (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 36.

Vol. V, p. 816. [Postoffices at county seats to be continued.]

Re-establishment.—Where such consolidation has taken place, such post office must be re-established regardless of any view the Postmaster-General may entertain in respect of the public interests affected. U. S. v. Cortelyou, (1905) 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 298.

Vol. V, p. 818, sec. 2.

Act applied to Long Island City.—Congress has classified letter carriers with reference to the population of municipal subdivisions and without reference to the receipts of post offices; and the classification of a letter carrier depends upon the population of the place where he serves. Long Island City on Jan. 1, 1898, by virtue of the Act of the Legislature of New York (Laws 1897, p. 1, ch. 378, sec. 1), became a part of the city of New York; and thereafter the letter carriers serving therein became letter carriers in the city of New York and entitled to be paid as such. Maguire v. U. S., (1908) 43 Ct. Cl. 400.

Vol. V, p. 818, sec. 4.

"Substitute letter carriers" and regular "letter carriers" have always been treated by the Post-Office Department and by Congress as distinct classes. The employment of "substitute letter carriers" is authorized by this Act, the compensation thereby authorized being "one dollar per annum and the pro rata compensation of the carriers whose routes they may be required to serve." Alderman v. U. S., (1908) 44 Ct. Cl. 35.

The post-office regulations cannot be construed to confer upon the First Assistant Postmaster-General authority to suspend without pay or remove a letter carrier. In the absence of a provision to the contrary, the power of removal is incident to the power of appointment, but to remove an officer there must be a valid exercise of power by proper authority. A letter carrier cannot be deprived of a salary unless the power was exercised expressly, and not indirectly or by implication. A removal or suspension without pay must be upon the direct order of the Postmaster-General; and, where it is a case of suspension without pay it should be expressly so stated in the order. Beuhring v. U. S., (1910) 45 Ct. Cl. 404.

Vol. V, p. 819. [Act of May 24, 1888, ch. 308.]

There is no law authorizing payment to a "substitute letter carrier" for time consumed in familiarizing himself with duties to be performed when he shall take the place of the regular letter carrier. The time spent by him in qualifying himself to perform the service when the regular letter carrier ceases to perform it is not service rendered. Kingston v. U. S., (1908) 44 Ct. Cl. 44.

The latter provision of this Act does not extend to "substitute letter carriers," for to so construe it would be putting a premium upon inexperience and inefficiency. Alderman v. U. S., (1908) 44 Ct. Cl. 35.

A letter carrier cannot be deprived of his statutory compensation unless the power to deprive him of it is actually exercised, expressly, and not indirectly or by implication. And it has been held that where a letter carrier entitled to an annual salary is not suspended without pay and is not restored to duty with loss of pay, he is entitled to be paid during the period of suspension. Steele v. U. S., (1905) 40 Ct. Cl. 403.

Vol. V, p. 821. [Hours of work, Sundays and holidays.]

The proviso does not apply only to letter carriers in new offices, but is a permanent remedial amendment of the existing eight-hour law, and both Acts must be construed in pari materia and in harmony with the evident intent of the later enactment.

The fact that the Post-Office Department gave a different interpretation to the statute favorable to letter carriers at large cannot prevail in the courts against the clear and unambiguous language of the statute. Van Doren v. U. S., (1910) 45 Ct. Cl. 476.

Vol. V, p. 823, sec. 3870.

Scope of bond.—The bond of a letter carrier and his surety for the faithful performance by the carrier of the duties imposed upon him, either by the postal laws of the United States or the regulations of the Post-Office Department, binds the surety for the faithful discharge by his principal of the duty of collecting letters and packages to be registered which were imposed on the letter carrier by the order of the Post-Office Department during the term of the bond. National Surety Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 70.

A mail carrier and the surety on his bond, which is conditioned that the principal shall account for and pay over all property and money coming into his possession by virtue of his position, are liable to the United States for the full amount of money stolen by the carrier from a registered letter, notwithstanding the fact that by the postal regulations the United States limits its own liability for the loss of money contained in any single registered letter to twenty-five dollars. U. S. v. American Surety Co., (1907) 155 Fed. 941.

Vol. V, p. 829, sec. 10.

"Periodical publication."—Although a publication complies formally with the conditions of this Act it will not be entitled to a second-class postage rate, unless, as required by section 10, it is a "periodical publication," which means that it shall not only have the feature of periodicity, but shall be a periodical in the ordinary sense of the term. U. S. v. Cortelyou, (1907) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 570.

The duty imposed by law upon the Postmaster-general of determining whether a publication is a "periodical publication," and as such entitled to second-class postage rates, is not a mere ministerial one, but involves the exercise of some discretion, which will not be interfered with by the courts unless clearly wrong. U. S. v. Cortelyou, (1907) 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 570.

Vol. V, p. 830, sec. 14.

Although the question whether certain publications are periodicals.—Under the settled rule that laches is not imputable to the government in its character as sovereign by those subject to its dominion, the fact that action on an application for admission of a periodical publication to the mails at the second-class rate of postage was delayed for several years by the officers of the Post Office Department, and that in the meantime the publication was admitted as second-class matter under a temporary permit issued by authority of section 282 of the Postal Regulations of 1893, to remain in force "until the Post Office Department shall determine whether it is admissible as second-class matter," does not entitle the publisher to a hearing before the department acts on his application, as in case of revocation of a privilege once granted, and the courts have no authority to review the action of the Postmaster-general in refusing the application. Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, (1907) 168 Fed. 752. modified in (1910) 182 Fed. 13, 104 C. C. A. 453.

The word "primarily" as used in this Act, excluding from the second-class rate regular publications designed primarily for advertising purposes, or for free circulation, or for circulation at nominal rates, means "chiefly" or "principally." Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, (1910) 182 Fed. 13, 104 C. C. A. 453, modifying (1907) 168 Fed. 752.

A newspaper otherwise entitled to be admitted to the second class would violate the law by mailing under the second-class rate only where the papers mailed are designed primarily for advertising purposes, or for free circulation, or for circulation at nominal rates. U. S. v. Atlanta Journal Co., (1911) 185 Fed. 656.

Revocation of certificate of entry of publication.—The Postmaster-general is not bound by the construction placed by a predecessor in office on the statute relating to second-class mail matter, so as to preclude him from revoking a certificate of entry of a publication as second-class matter, which had been issued by such predecessor, where no vested right has been created by such certificate. Columbian Correspondence College v. Wynne, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 149.

Vol. V, p. 833, sec. 1.

An incorporated educational institution conducting a correspondence college for the gain and profit of its stockholders is not a regularly incorporated institution of learning within the meaning of this Act. Columbian Correspondence College v. Wynne, (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 149.

Vol. V, p. 834, sec. 1. [Second-class mail privileges, etc.]

Validity of order.—Complainant, the publisher of a periodical, was notified to appear June 17, 1906, before the Third Assistant Postmaster-general and show cause why the authorization for the admission of his publication as second-class mail matter should not be revoked, and why the third-class rate of postage should not be charged for the transmission of such publication. Complainant appeared and was notified that he might submit evidence, but nothing further was done until April 19, 1906, when the publisher was notified that, as a result of investigation, it was found that his right to mail subscription copies as second-class matter did not exceed 141,328, and that he would be afforded an opportunity to present evidence to the contrary on a subsequent day. The letter also informed him that the right of such publication to second-class entry was also in dispute. On the adjourned day the publisher appeared, but the hearing was limited to the question as to the number of copies the publisher was entitled to mail as second-class matter, and without further hearing his right to use the second-class privilege at all was subsequently revoked. It was held that such order was entered without the hearing required, and was therefore void. Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wynan, (1907) 132 Fed. 787.

Sufficiency of notice.—A notice by the Third Assistant Postmaster-general to publishers that on a specified day and place they will be given a hearing to show cause why second-class mail privilege heretofore accorded the issue of one of their publications shall not be revoked and third-class rates charged, on the ground that they do not constitute a newspaper or other periodical publication, but are in fact books, is sufficiently explicit, especially where the publishers admit that the question raised is one of law. Hitchcock v. Smith, (1910) 34 App. Cas. (D. C.) 821.

Object of the Act.—"There is another federal statute (section 3892, Rev. Stat.), which seems to proceed upon the theory that the legal custody of the government continues until the mail matter reaches the addressee for whom it was intended, and that any destruction or embezzlement of such a letter, which by mistake has left the hands of the postal authorities, and has not yet reached the addressee, may be punished as a federal crime. U. S. v. McCreedy, (1882) 11 Fed. 225." U. S. v. Meyers, (1906) 142 Fed. 907. See to the like effect U. S. v. Bullington, (1908) 170 Fed. 121.

Destruction of letter withdrawn from mail by postmaster.—Where a postmaster having written, stamped, and deposited a letter in the mail, before it was transported, withdrew it and delivered it to defendant, who agreed to take it, with other mail, to the addressee, but defendant instead secreted or destroyed the letter, it was held that the postmaster's withdrawal of the letter terminated the government's authority over it, and that its subsequent destruction constituted no offense. U. S. v. Bullington, (1908) 170 Fed. 121.

"The words 'obscene,' 'lewd,' and 'lascivious,' as used in this section, signify that form of immorality which has relation to sexual impurity, having the same meaning as is given them at common law in prosecutions for obscene libel." Hanson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 749. See to the like effect U. S. v. O'Donnell, (1908) 165 Fed. 218.

The word "obscene" should be given fully as broad a significance as it had at common law. Knowles v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 409.

The test is whether the tendency of the matter.—If it is of such nature that the reading would, in the opinion of reasonable persons, or the jurors selected to try one charged with violating the section, tend to deprave or corrupt the morals of reasonable persons, and would suggest to the minds of either sex thoughts of an impure or libidinous character, it is within the prohibition of the statute. U. S. v. Musgrave, (1908) 160 Fed. 700. See to the same effect Macfadden v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 51.

The true test to determine whether a writing is nonmailable under this statute as obscene, lewd, or lascivious, is whether its language has a tendency to deprave and corrupt the morals of those whose minds are open to such influences, and into whose hands it may fall, by arousing or implanting in such minds obscene, lewd, or lascivious thoughts or desires. Knowles v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 409.

Medical works.—Where the acts described and the ideas conveyed in a book are calculated to deprave the morals of the reader by exciting sensual desires and libidinous thoughts, the book is obscene, and it is immaterial that the information conveyed is accurate and scientific and tends to prevent disease and other ills resulting from existing ignorance upon the topics discussed; that, as a whole, the book is calculated to be of value to the medical practitioner and to men and women in the marriage relation, that its publication was approved by several physicians; and that some portions of it are extracts from standard medical works. Burton v. U. S., (1906) 142 Fed. 57, 73 C. C. A. 243.

Determination of obscene character.—Whether or not a book is obscene within the provision of this section should be determined upon a consideration of such parts of it as are claimed to be obscene, together with so much of the context as may be necessary to a proper understanding of the parts referred to, but not necessarily upon an inspection of the entire book with reference to all its contents. Burton v. U. S., (1906) 142 Fed. 57, 73 C. C. A. 242.

Language which is exceedingly coarse and vulgar.—Accused mailed a pamphlet entitled "Sexual Debility, Its Cause and Cure," containing matter relevant to the title, and another entitled "Syphilis and Gonorrhea, Their Origin, Effect, and Cure," which was similarly comprehensive of the matters treated of, except that it extended to other venereal diseases. A third pamphlet was entitled "A Guide to Full Pockets," and was intended to attract readers to subscribe for stock in a corporation engaged in selling medicines and prescriptions intended to relieve sexual disorders. It was held that, though such pamphlets contained vulgar terms and were coarse in expression, they did not, in the absence of a design to pander to lascivious curiosity or corrupt morals, constitute nonmailable matter within this section. Hanson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 749.

Description of obscene matter.—An indictment under this section, which charges defendant with having mailed a letter containing "obscene, lewd, and lascivious matter," is not broadened in scope by a further characterization of such matter as of an indecent character. U. S. v. O'Donnell, (1908) 165 Fed. 218.

Spreading obscene matter on record discretionary with court.—Whether or not a writing charged to have been deposited in a post office in violation of law is too obscene, lewd, and lascivious to be spread upon the records is a question which it is within the discretion of the court to determine. Rinker v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 755.

It is a question for the jury whether the matter is obscene, lewd, and lascivious within this section. U. S. v. Benedict, (1908) 165 Fed. 221; Konda v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 91.

"Or other publication of an indecent character."—In this section, which declares un-mailable "every obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet . . . or other publication of an indecent character," the words "indecent character" qualify only the words "other publication," and, in an indictment for its violation by mailing of a letter, it is not essential that the letter be described as of an indecent character, in addition to describing it as obscene, lewd, and lascivious. Rinker v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 755.

Sufficiency of allegations—As to character of letter.—An indictment under this section sufficiently describes the letter, where it sets out sufficient thereof to identify it and alleges that the contents are so obscene, lewd, and lascivious as to be improper to spread on the records of the court, and, if the defendant desires more specific information as to such contents, he may apply for a bill of particulars. Rinker v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 755.

In an indictment under this section an averment that defendant knowingly deposited in a post office for mailing circulars giving information how, where, of whom, and by what means obscene, lewd, and lascivious books might be obtained, and that defendant unlawfully and knowingly meant and intended thereby to give such information, is a sufficient averment that defendant knew the character and contents of such circulars, and it is not necessary to set out the same, nor to further characterize or describe the books referred to therein than to aver that they were obscene, lewd, and lascivious. Shepard v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 584.

An indictment under this section states an offense where it sets out a letter written to defendant inquiring for some medicine or other means for accomplishing an abortion, and a letter, alleged to have been mailed by defendant in reply, which, when read in connection with the letter of inquiry, in effect offers for a stated consideration to effect the desired result by some treatment or operation, although the particular means is not specified; the word "thing," as used in the statute, being a comprehensive term, which includes any kind of treatment or operation. U. S. v. Somers, (1908) 164 Fed. 259.

An indictment under this section, which charges defendant with depositing on a day named in the United States mail a letter containing information where and of whom articles intended to prevent conception could be obtained, addressed to a person named at Goshen, Ind., but which contains no copy of the letter, no averment that it is so indecent as to be unfit to be spread upon the record of the court, and no allegation of its date, of the name signed to it, of the place where it was mailed, or of any words, figures, or marks which it contains, whereby it can be identifled, does not state the facts which constitute the offense charged with such clearness and certainty as to enable the defendant to avail himself of a conviction or acquittal thereon in defense to a second prosecution for the same offense, and it is insufficient in the face of a motion in arrest of judgment. Floren v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 961, following Grimm v. U. S., (1894) 156 U. S. 608, 15 S. Ct. 471, 39 U. S. (L. ed.) 550; Rosen v. U. S., (1896) 161 U. S. 29, 16 S. Ct. 438, 480, 40 U. S. (L. ed.) 606.

Article or thing designed to prevent conception.—An indictment under this statute must state what the particular "article or thing" consisted of; describing it with at least such particularity that the accused may not only know the particular charge against him, but may be able to plead the judgment of conviction or acquittal in bar of a second prosecution. U. S. v. Pupke, (1904) 133 Fed. 243.

On or about a given date sufficient.—An indictment under this section for depositing an obscene, lewd, and lascivious letter in the mails, is not bad because it alleges that the offense was committed "on or about" a given date, where it shows that but a short time elapsed between the writing of the letter and the finding of the indictment; the defect being one of form only, by which the defendant was not prejudiced, and to be disregarded under R. S. sec. 1025. Rinker v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 755.

Duplicity.—An indictment under this section, charging the defendant with having mailed a letter giving information where and how, and of whom and by what means, articles and things designed and intended "for the prevention of conception and for the procuring of abortion" might be obtained, does not charge two offenses. Lee v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 848.

Knowingly.—One who causes objectionable matter written by him to be printed in a newspaper, intending to bring it to the attention of the readers of the paper, and knowing that the regular and established method of transmitting the paper to its readers is by mail, knowingly causes the objectionable matter to be deposited in the mail within this section, when in such regular course the paper with the objectionable matter printed therein is deposited in the post office for mailing and delivery. Demolli v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 363.

An indictment under this section which charges that defendant "unlawfully and knowingly" mailed an obscene, lewd, and lascivious pamphlet, sufficiently charges that he knew the character of such pamphlet. Konda v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 166 Fed. 91.

An indictment charging the defendant with "wilfully, unlawfully, wrongfully, and knowingly" mailing an obscene circular giving information where an obscene book might be obtained, the sufficiency of which is not questioned before verdict, is, upon motion in arrest of judgment, to be taken as meaning that the circular was mailed with knowledge of its contents and of the book respecting which it gave information. Burton v. U. S., (1906) 142 Fed. 57, 73 C. C. A. 243.

A criminal intent.—In a prosecution under this statute the purpose of the defendant is immaterial, and that his motive was good is no defense. Knowles v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 409.

Defendant's belief as to character of obscene matter.—In a prosecution under this section the inquiry is whether or not the publication charged to have been obscene was in fact of that character, and if it was, and the defendant knew its contents at the time he deposited it in the mail, it is not material that he himself did not regard it as obscene. Burton v. U. S., (1906) 142 Fed. 57, 73 C. C. A. 243.

"Deposit or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery"—Deposit by third person.—It is not essential to the commission of the offense prescribed by this section that the objectionable matter be deposited in the mail by the offender himself, or by another acting under his express direction; he being equally responsible if it is deposited therein as a natural consequence of an act intentionally done by him with knowledge of its probable effect. Demolli v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 144 Fed. 363.

An indictment charging that a defendant deposited in the mails unmailable matter includes the charge that he caused such matter to be deposited, it being immaterial whether he deposited it by his own hand or by an agent. Shepard v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 584.

Deposit in letter box.—Under such an indictment an averment that prohibited matter was deposited in a post office box is sustained by proof that it was deposited in a letter box placed by the government for receiving mail, and was taken by its agents from such box to the post office, and there stamped and sent out. Shepard v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 584.

Sufficiency of indictment.—An indictment under this section has been held to sufficiently charge that defendant deposited an obscene letter in a post office "for mailing or delivery," although not in such language, where the plain and reasonable meaning of the language used is that such was the purpose with which the letter was deposited in the post office. Rinker v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 755.

Unmailable character of writing question for jury.—In a prosecution under this section there is a preliminary question for the court to determine whether the writing could by any reasonable judgment be held to come within the prohibition of the law, and, whenever reasonable minds might reach different conclusions as to its character, it is the duty of the court to submit the question to the jury. The court cannot properly in any case declare the writing to be within the statute as matter of law. Knowles v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 409.

Whether or not a newspaper article commenting on the death of a young unmarried woman as the result of an attempted abortion, and in effect approving fornication and condemning society for its attitude toward it, was within this section is a question for the jury. Knowles v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 409.

Inquiry by government officer.—Accused being on trial for sending an obscene letter through the mails, directed to G., the government offered in evidence an alleged reply to a letter written to accused by a postal inspector, written on the back of the inspector's letter, which the government claimed was in the handwriting of accused, stating that accused had received a dental certificate, and was glad to get it, because it saved him accepting free board and lodging for six months, and that, while he liked big dinners, he did not like to impose on good nature; the government claiming that this had reference to accused's conviction and incarceration before G., as a justice of the peace, on a charge of practicing dentistry without a license. It did not appear that the inspector had any knowledge of accused's incarceration as claimed. It was held that the letter was not admissible as showing motive for sending the alleged obscene letter to G. U. S. v. North, (1911) 184 Fed. 151.

Liability of partners.—Where, in the execution of their joint enterprise, one partner deposits a nonmailable circular in the mail by the authorization of another, or with his knowledge and acquiescence, the latter causes the circular to be so deposited within the meaning of this section. Burton v. U. S., (1906) 142 Fed. 57, 73 C. C. A. 243.

A corporation has capacity to commit the crime of mailing obscene, nonmailable matter, prohibited by this section. U. S. v. New York Herald Co., (1907) 159 Fed. 296. And it has been held that such section was applicable to a corporation organized for the purpose of publishing a newspaper, and that proof of the mailing by such corporation of its newspaper, containing obnoxious matter, was sufficient to show that the corporation had knowledge thereof. U. S. v. New York Herald Co., (1907) 159 Fed. 296.

What constitutes "lottery," "gift concert," etc.—An advertisement in a newspaper.—A newspaper advertisement offering a prize for the best essay on the name of a certain breakfast food to be judged by three persons named, and each essay when submitted to be accompanied by three labels from packages of such food, may or may not be an advertisement of a lottery which will render the newspaper unmailable under this Act, depending on whether or not the prize is "dependent upon lot or chance." To escape such condemnation the offer must be made and carried out in good faith, and the prize awarded on the merits, and the advertisement should contain a sufficiently definite statement of what the word "best" means as used therein to advise competitors of the standard of comparison to be applied by the judges. Brooklyn Daily Eagle v. Voorhies, (1910) 181 Fed. 579.

Corporate certificates on instalment plan.—A scheme by which certificates are issued by a corporation, on each of which the holder agrees to pay one dollar per week, subject to forfeiture for nonpayment, and about seventy-five per cent. of which payments are paid into a "mutual benefit credit fund" until all certificates prior in date have matured and been canceled, when his own certificate shall mature, and he shall be paid from such fund the sum of two dollars for each week such certificate has been in force, provided there is so much in the fund, not exceeding however $160, is a lottery within the meaning of this section. Fitzsimmons v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 477, 482.

Averments in indictments—Existence of lottery or gift enterprise.—An indictment for sending through the mails a newspaper containing an advertisement of a lottery or gift enterprise, or a complete or partial list of prizes awarded at the drawing of a lottery or gift enterprise, must aver, either specifically or by necessary intendment, the existence of a lottery or gift enterprise. U. S. v. Irvine, (1907) 156 Fed. 376.

Vol. V, p. 849, sec. 3.

Offer of reward for kidnapping on face of envelope.—The deposit in a post office of a stamped envelope, on the face of which was printed in large red letters, "$1,000 reward will be paid to any person who kidnaps Ex-Gov. Taylor and returns him to Kentucky authorities," constitutes a violation of this Act. Warren v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 718.

Intent.—In a prosecution for sending nonmailable matter through the mail, in violation of this Act, it is not material whether the objectionable language is true or false, or whether accused was actuated by public spirit or private malice. Warren v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 183 Fed. 718.

Vol. V, p. 872, sec. 3929.

Review by courts.—A federal court of equity has jurisdiction of a suit to determine whether or not the matter because of which it is proposed to exclude a newspaper from the mails has been legally held to be unmailable by the Postmaster-general, under the statutes of the United States, and if his action is found to be unauthorized to enjoin the exclusion of such paper. Brooklyn Daily Eagle v. Voorhies, (1910) 181 Fed. 579.

In a doubtful case within his jurisdiction, in the absence of fraud or gross mistake of fact, where there is some evidence satisfactory to the Postmaster-general to sustain a fraud order issued under R. S. secs. 3929, 4041, as amended by Act Sept. 19, 1890, ch. 908, secs. 2, 3, 26 Stat. L. 466, and by Act March 2, 1895, ch. 191, sec. 4, 28 Stat. L. 964, his decision of a question of fact on which the order is founded is conclusive and will not be reviewed by the courts. People's U. S. Bank v. Gilson, (C. C. A. 1908) 161 Fed. 286, affirming (1905) 140 Fed. 1.

Under this section and section 4041, infra, the Postmaster-general may find that a concern is using the mails in conducting a scheme to defraud which warrants the issuance of such an order on the evidence of the agents and inspectors of the department, and such a finding cannot be reviewed by the courts in so far as it involves questions of fact, nor unless a plain error of law is shown. People's U. S. Bank v. Gilson, (1905) 140 Fed. 1.

Issuance of fraud order by the department.

—The use of the postal service of the United States is not a matter of right, but of privilege, limited by the statutes declaring certain classes of matter to be nonmailable, and it is competent for the Post-office Department to determine ex parte that a concern is using the mails in conducting a scheme to defraud, in violation of the statute, and to base an order excluding it from such use on such finding. If a hearing is granted before the issuance of such an order, the concern affected may properly be required to assume the burden of proof, and to show affirmatively that its business is legitimate and honest. People's U. S. Bank v. Gilson, (1905) 140 Fed. 1.

What transactions will justify fraud orders.—This and section 4041, infra, are not restricted to schemes wanting in all the elements of a legitimate business, or in which it is intended to return nothing whatever or nothing equivalent in value for the money obtained, but embrace those whereby a business otherwise legitimate is designedly so conducted that by false representations its patrons are induced to part with their money in the belief that they are purchasing something worth more than that which is actually being sold, though they may approximate in commercial value the price asked and received. Harris v. Rosenberger, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 449, reversing (1905) 136 Fed. 1001.

A scheme conducted by a company by the issuance and sale of so-called "diamond leases," numbered consecutively in order of their issuance and arranged in series, each purchaser being required to make a certain number of weekly payments, and the fund thus created to be applied in fixed proportions to the payment of the expenses of the company and the redemption of the oldest outstanding lease in the same series and in prior series by purchasing and delivering to each holder a diamond of a stated weight and value, there being no other fund applicable to such redemption, except that arising from such weekly payments and from fines and forfeitures on account of lapses, is a lottery or scheme for the distribution of property by lot or chance, within the meaning of this section and section 4041, infra. Preferred Mercantile Co. v. Hibbard, (1905) 142 Fed. 877.

"Our conclusion is that when a business, even if otherwise legitimate, is systematically and designedly conducted upon the plan of inducing its patrons, by means of false representations, to part with their money in the belief that they are purchasing something different from, superior to, and worth more than, what is actually sold, it becomes an objectionable scheme or device within the intendment of sections 3929 and 4041, although what is being sold may approximate in commercial value the price asked and received." Harris v. Rosenberger, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 449.

R. S. secs. 3929 and 4041 apply to two classes of cases: First, to schemes for the distribution of money, etc., by lot, chance, or drawing of any kind; and, second, to all schemes or devices for obtaining money or property of any kind by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises. Degge v. Hitchcock, (1910) 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 218.

This section contemplates three classes of transactions, namely, lotteries and other like games of chance, "confidence games," and schemes which from their very nature, in the light of business experience, are sure to end in financial disaster to their contributors; and does not include an ordinary mail-order liquor business in which the customers are given a fair commercial equivalent for the price paid, though the seller is guilty of trade puffing and of a false statement in his advertising as to the age of his liquors. Rosenberger v. Harris, (1905) 136 Fed. 1001.

For descriptions of particular schemes, see Preferred Mercantile Co. v. Hibbard, (1905) 142 Fed. 877; U. S. v. McKenna, (1906) 149 Fed. 252.

Jurisdiction of Postmaster-general.—The Postmaster-general, though entitled to pass finally on questions of fact raised in such proceedings, has not exclusive jurisdiction to pass on questions of law. Rosenberger v. Harris, (1905) 136 Fed. 1001.

Requisites by bill to enjoin fraud order.—A bill in equity cannot be maintained in a federal court to enjoin the enforcement of a fraud order made by the Postmaster-general unless it makes a clear prima facie case that the facts adduced before him could not possibly support such order, or that complainant's legal or constitutional rights have been violated, and such a bill is insufficient where it shows a hearing upon due notice on charges of fraud clearly within the statute, but does not show what proofs were adduced. Appleby v. Cluss, (1908) 160 Fed. 984.

Liability for penal sum.—The surety on the bond of a bidder for a contract for carrying the mails on default by the principal is liable for the full sum mentioned as the penalty of the bond without regard to the actual damages sustained by the United States, where the bond, although in the usual form, recites that it is given pursuant to Act June 23, 1874, 18 Stat. L. 235, ch. 456, sec. 245, and "subject to all the terms, conditions, and remedies thereon in said Act provided;" one of its provisions being that in case of default by a bidder "he and his sureties shall be liable for the amount of said bond as liquidated damages to be recovered in an action of debt on said bond." U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1907) 151 Fed. 534.

A proposal bond, given by a bidder for a contract for carrying the mail, conditioned as required by this Act, is an absolute undertaking to pay the amount named therein as liquidated damages in case of condition broken, and not one of indemnity or security to the government against loss or damages for breach of contract, and in an action thereon the actual damages cannot be inquired into. U. S. v. Alcorn, (1906) 145 Fed. 995.

In an action on a proposal bond given by a bidder for a contract for carrying the mail, as required by this Act, where the bidder entered into the contract with the required surety for its faithful performance, but failed to complete such performance, the fact that the government recovered from such surety the actual damages sustained by reason of the breach of contract does not constitute a defense. U. S. v. Alcorn, (1906) 145 Fed. 995.

Liability for loss by robbery of the mail.—Where a contract for transportation of mail provided that the contractor should account for and pay over all money of the United States which might come into his possession, he being only required to carry mail, and not to carry money as such, his surety was not liable, on his bond for the faithful carrying out of the contract, for the loss by robbery of money belonging to the United States, placed in his mail bag without his knowledge or acquiescence, even though he was an insurer of the safe delivery of money delivered to him for transportation with knowledge. American Surety Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 408.

Where plaintiff went to defendant as a notary who took his oath to a bid for a contract carrying mail, and requested him not to divulge the bid, such implied promise, if there was one, was illegal and contrary to public policy under this section, which condemns the suppression of such bidding. Hardison v. Reel, (1911) 154 N. C. 273, 70 S. E. 463.

Vol. V, p. 888, sec. 3960.

Extra service without contract—right to payment.—A contractor for carrying the mails is not entitled to extra compensation for services outside the terms of his contract, which were performed in compliance with the unauthorized demand of the local postmaster, where, upon protest to the Postmaster-General, the contractor was promptly relieved from such services, and another contract was made for their performance. Slavens v. U. S., (1905) 196 U. S. 229, 25 S. Ct. 229, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 457, affirming (1903) 38 Ct. Cl. 574; Travis v. U. S., (1905) 196 U. S. 239, 25 S. Ct. 233, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 461, affirming (1903) 38 Ct. Cl. 590.

An increase in the service required on a mail route, as the result of the establishment of a new distributing station in the city of New York, amounting to more than 300,000 miles of additional transfer service, and involving an additional expenditure of nearly $10,000 for ferry tolls, cannot be required by the Postmaster-General without extra compensation, under the authority reserved to him in the contract to call for new, additional, mail messenger, or transfer service without additional compensation. U. S. v. Utah, etc., Stage Co., (1905) 199 U. S. 414, 26 S. Ct. 69; 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 251, affirming (1904) 39 Ct. Cl. 420.

The carriage of the mails up and down the steps at elevated railroad stations is called for by a contract for performing the covered regulation wagon, mail messenger, transfer, and mail station service on a mail route, in which the contractor agreed to take the mails from and deliver them to the post offices, mail stations, and cars. U. S. v. Utah, etc., Stage Co., (1905) 199 U. S. 414, 26 S. Ct. 69, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 251, affirming (1904) 39 Ct. Cl. 420.

Vol. V, p. 893, sec. 3962.

The power to fine is discretionary.—See Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, (1907) 152 Fed. 787, to the same effect as the note in the original.

Vol. V, p. 904, sec. 3982.

The word "packet" as used in this section is limited to its original meaning throughout the postal laws to cover only a written communication of four or more sheets, which by Act 1827, sec. 5, ch. 61, 4 Stat. L. 238, was required to pay quadruple postage, and does not include a "packet of merchandise" not exceeding four pounds sent by mail. Williams v. Wells Fargo, etc., Express, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 352.

No monopoly by postal service of carriage of parcels.—While Congress has full constitutional power to reserve to the postal department a monopoly of the business of receiving, transmitting, and delivering mails, and in the exercise of such right may enact such rules, regulations, and laws as will effectively preserve its monopoly and prescribe fines, penalties, forfeitures, and punishments therefor, yet this monopoly is intended to extend only to letters, packets of letters, and the like mailable matter; and Congress has never attempted to extend its monopoly to the transportation of merchandise in parcels weighing less than four pounds, nor to prohibit private express companies making regular trips over established post routes from engaging in the business of carrying such parcels for hire. Williams v. Wells Fargo, etc., Express, (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 352.

Suit for penalty must be in the name of the United States.—R. S. sec. 3982 prohibits the establishment of a private express for the conveyance of letters or packets over any post road, and provides that any person violating the section shall be liable to a penalty of $150 for each offense; section 4059 declares that all penalties imposed for a violation of law affecting the Post-office Department shall be recoverable one-half to the use of the person informing and prosecuting the same and the other half to the use of the Post-office Department; but section 919, constituting part of the Act regulating procedure in federal courts, commands that all suits for the enforcement of a penalty arising under the postal laws shall be brought in the name of the United States. It was held that a suit to recover a penalty for the alleged violation of this section could not be brought by a private prosecutor, but was maintainable only by and in the name of the United States. Williams v. Wells Fargo, etc., Express, (C. C. A. 1910) 17 Fed. 352.

If a railway postal clerk was in charge of the mail at the time he was injured by the derailment of a train, in an action against the railroad company for his injuries the burden of proving he was a passenger would not rest on him, as this section imposes on railway companies carrying mail the duty to also carry, without extra compensation, the person in charge thereof. Hoskins v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (Mont. 1909) 102 Pac. 988.

Vol. V, p. 918, sec. 13.

Compensation where only part of road aided by grant.—A railway company carrying the mails over a continuous route which includes certain land-aided railroads is only entitled to the land-grant rates for those portions of the route, under the provisions of this Act, which provisions must be construed as extending not only to the original land-aided companies, but to every other company carrying the mails over such roads. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1910) 217 U. S. 180, 30 S. Ct. 470, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 721, affirming (1908) 43 Ct. Cl. 595.

Adjustment of compensation for extension of route.—The adjustment of compensation to a railway company for carrying the mails, made by the Postmaster-General in the exercise of his authority under this Act, to arrange the railway routes upon which the mail is to be carried, and to adjust and readjust compensation, may be confined, where an extension is made beyond the terminal of an established mail route, to the extension alone, without readjusting the compensation for the whole route as extended. In this case Mr. Justice McKenna said: "There is nothing in the section which requires the abrogation of prior contracts when an extension is made beyond the terminal of an established route or precludes provisions for the extension alone." Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1905) 198 U. S. 385, 25 S. Ct. 665, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 1094.

A post-office inspector's relinquishment of his salary cannot be regarded as voluntary; but the rule does not apply to a case where he is seeking to recover pay for time during which he was excused from duty because of illness. Small v. U. S., (1909) 45 Ct. Cl. 13.

Vol. V, p. 937, sec. 4025.

The appropriation acts appropriating for actual and necessary expenses of general superintendents and "railway postal clerks, while actually traveling on business of the department and away from their several designated headquarters," by their own language exclude railway postal clerks traveling in the discharge of their ordinary duty. Hartman v. U. S., (1905) 40 Ct. Cl. 133.

Vol. V, p. 942, sec. 4030.

One who receives a money order, without a written application and payment therefor as required by law, is liable to the United States for its value, though he has, in good faith, paid the full value to the issuing agent in other ways. U. S. v. Bolognesi, (1908) 164 Fed. 159.

Vol. V, p. 944, sec. 4037.

Title to order.—Defendant was the indorsee of a money order which he sent by an agent to the post office on which it was drawn in order to get it cashed. The agent sold the order to plaintiff, indorsing it with his own name. Under this Act it was held that plaintiff obtained no title to the order. Moore v. Skyles, (1905) 33 Mont. 135, 82 Pac. 799.

It is no defense to an action by the United States to recover the amount paid in redemption of postal money orders from the payees to whom they were paid, and to whom they were issued by a post-office clerk without authority and in violation of law, without first receiving applications and payment therefor, that defendants took such orders in good faith from said clerk in payment of sums justly due them from him as a banker, or that their invalidity did not appear from their face. U. S. v. Bolognesi, (1909) 169 Fed. 1013.

Vol. V, p. 946, sec. 4041.

What transactions are fraudulent.—The provisions of sections 3929 and 4041 R. S., empowering the Postmaster-General to issue so-called fraud orders as a means of stopping the use of the mails as an agency in conducting schemes or devices for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, are not restricted to schemes or devices which are wanting in all the elements of a legitimate business, or in which it is intended to return nothing whatever or nothing at all equivalent in value for the money obtained, but embrace those whereby a business, otherwise legitimate, is systematically and designedly so conducted that, by means of false representations, its patrons are induced to part with their money in the belief that they are purchasing something different from, superior to, and worth more than, what is actually being sold, although that may approximate in commercial value the price asked and received. Harris v. Rosenberger, (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 449.

Money received by rural letter carrier not "money order funds."—The post-office regulations authorize rural letter carriers to take and receipt for money from patrons of their routes and to purchase and forward money orders to the persons or corporations for which they are designed. It has been held that money received and receipted for by a rural letter carrier from patrons of his route, to be used in the purchase and forwarding of money orders, while in the possession of such carrier and before surrender at the post office, did not constitute "money order funds," for the embezzlement of which the carrier could be prosecuted under this section and section 4045. U. S. v. Mann, (1907) 160 Fed. 552.

Averment that funds came into possession by virtue of employment necessary.—An indictment under this section is not sufficient where it merely avers that defendant was a clerk employed in a money order office, and charges the offense in the language of the statute, but it must, in addition, charge that the funds converted came into his possession by virtue of his employment, which is essential to the crime of embezzlement and to differentiate it from larceny. U. S. v. Allen, (1909) 150 Fed. 152.

Vol. V, p. 953, sec. 4053.

Intent not an element.—Any appropriation of money order funds by a postmaster to his own use is embezzlement within this section regardless of the intent or purpose of the conversion. Griffin v. Zuber, (Tex. 1908) 113 S. W. 961.

Vol. V, p. 957, sec. 5463.

Sentence.—"If this section were before us for construction, unaffected by precedent, we should be disposed to hold that it was intended to provide for the punishment of two distinct offenses, one of forging or altering a money order and one of uttering the same, and that the first two counts of the indictment which is before us charge distinct and separate crimes, punishable by separate sentences. But it has been generally held that the forging and uttering of a forged instrument are parts of one transaction, and that, where the different counts of an indictment charge different crimes which are parts of a single transaction, the sentence based on a general verdict or plea of guilty must impose only one penalty, and that a separate sentence for each count is erroneous and void. Ex p. Joyce, (1877) 23 Int. Rev. Rec. 297, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,556; Parker v. People, (1880) 97 Ill. 32; In re Walsh, (1893) 37 Neb. 454, 55 N. W. 1075; Devere v. State (1890) 3 Ohio Cir. ## Vol. V, p. 959, sec. 5467.

Sufficiency of allegation—Description of employment.—The provision of this statute making it a criminal offense for an employee in the postal service to embezzle a letter, necessarily implies that the letter must have come into his possession in his official character; and an indictment thereunder which fails to allege such fact is fatally defective. Shaw v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 174.

In a prosecution under this section an indictment is fatally defective which fails to show that the letter embezzled came into the possession of the defendant officially; that is to say, as an employee of the postal service. U. S. v. Aurandt, (1910) 15 N. M. 292, 107 Pac. 1064.

Description of contents.—An indictment of a railway postal clerk for embezzling a letter containing "articles of value," to wit, "twelve dollars in money of the United States," which letter was addressed to a specified person at a specified address, it being alleged that a further description of the letter and its contents is unknown to the grand jurors, sufficiently describes the money. Shaw v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 348.

An indictment of a railway postal clerk for secreting and embezzling a letter containing an article of value need not describe the article with the same precision as in a prosecution for forgery or larceny, but the article must be stated. Shaw v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 348.

The allegation in the present case that the embezzled letter contained "an article of value," a more definite description of which "being to grand jurors unknown," considered in the light of the record, and doubted, but not decided, whether the allegation was sufficient under the rule last mentioned. U. S. v. Aurandt, (1910) 15 N. M. 292, 107 Pac. 1064.

Money is comprehended by the term an "article of value" within this section. Shaw v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 348.

Evidence.—In a trial of a railway postal clerk for embezzling a letter containing money the fact that the letter which was introduced in evidence was found in his pocket was some evidence tending to show intent to embezzle. Shaw v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 180 Fed. 348.

Upon a trial under this section it has been held admissible to show by other employees that the mails at the office had been very heavy for some time prior to this occurrence.

and that many letters and packages came in bad condition, with the edges worn and broken, so that articles could readily fall out, as evidence tending to support the defense; its weight being for the jury. The government was entitled to prove a statement made by defendant a short time previously that he had destroyed a number of election circulars, a quantity of which had come into the office for distribution, as evidence tending to show the commission of an offense of similar character to those charged and bearing on the question of intent. Chitwood v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 153 Fed. 551.

Pretended postmark of a fictitious post office.—"It makes no difference with respect to the duty of a carrier when a letter comes into his hands in the course of his official employment, whether it be genuine, or a decoy or have a fictitious address, or whether it bears the pretended postmark of a fictitious post office. The opening, detention, destruction, or the embezzlement of the contents of either kind of letter is equally punishable." Byram v. U. S., (1905) 25 App. Cas. (D. C.) 546.

Decoy letter.—A post-office superintendent discovered a misboxed letter, which had been placed in a "dead" pigeonhole at the top of the case, where defendant, a clerk, was engaged in sorting mail. The letter was removed by the superintendent and handed to a post-office inspector, who took it to the addressee, and, without delivering it, obtained permission to open it. He then returned to the post office, unsealed the letter, and took from it an express order for two dollars, a statement of account, and a letter from the sender of the money order. After making a copy of the letter, he placed it in the envelope with two marked one dollar bills, and forwarded the money order and the statement to the addressee. The envelope containing the letter and bills having been duly sealed was returned to the dead pigeonhole, and a short time thereafter was embezzled by defendant. It was held that the letter at the time it was returned by the inspector to the dead pigeonhole had not ceased to be mail matter, and that defendant was therefore properly convicted of embezzling a letter containing inclosures, in violation of this section. Ennis v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 842.

"This statute is not confined to a technical larceny from the mails."—An indictment under this statute is not governed by the rules applicable to one for larceny, but is sufficient if it charges that the defendant unlawfully stole from a designated post office a letter, described sufficiently for its identification, and it is unnecessary to aver that it contained anything of value, or whose property it was, or that it was in the post office for transmission through the mails. Bowers v. U. S., (1906) 148 Fed. 379, 78 C. C. A. 193.

Vol. V, p. 971, sec. 5475.

Sentence must impose "imprisonment at hard labor."—A sentence under this section or under section 5478 is fatally defective unless it imposes imprisonment "at hard labor" as required by each section. Sorenson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 785.

Vol. V, p. 972, sec. 5478.

Sufficiency of allegations in indictment.—An indictment does not charge an offense under this section where it charges the breaking into a building used in part as a post office, with intent to commit larceny "in said building," but fails to charge an intent to commit larceny in that part of the building used as a post office, to which part only the statute applies. U. S. v. Martin, (1905) 140 Fed. 256.

Burglary of room adjoining post office.—An intent to commit larceny or other depredation in the part of the building used as a post office is an essential ingredient of the offense; and where a post office was kept within a room used for mercantile purposes, being separated from the remainder of the room by a fence or partition, a breaking and entering of such room and the stealing of property from a safe therein, although including post office funds, will not warrant a conviction under this section unless it is shown that the safe was within the inclosure used as the post office. Sorenson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 168 Fed. 785.

I. IN GENERAL.

"The purpose of the amendment was not to restrict."—This amendment did not limit the scope of such sections to schemes, artifices, or devices described in the amendment, but added to the offenses denounced by the original Act those specified in Act of 1889. Miller v. U. S., (1904) 133 Fed. 337, 66 C. C. A. 399.

Three essential elements.—The elements of the offense of devising a scheme or artifice to defraud, to be effected by means of the post office establishment of the United States, in violation of this section, are: (1) That defendant devised the scheme to defraud, as alleged; (2) that he intended to effect such scheme or artifice by opening correspondence or communication with the persons intended to be defrauded, by means of the post-office establishment of the United States, or by inciting them to open correspondence with him respecting such scheme or artifice; and (3) that in the furtherance and execution of the scheme, or in attempting to further the same, defendant deposited or caused to be deposited in the United States post office letters, papers, writings, or circulars, or took from the post office papers or writings connected with the furtherance of such scheme. U. S. v. Dexter, (1907) 154 Fed. 890. See to the same effect Brown v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 60; Brooks v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 223, 76 C. C. A. 581; U. S. v. Smith, (1909) 166 Fed. 958; Foster v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 165; Horn v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 721; Rimmerman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 307.

II. SCHEME OR ARTIFICE TO DEFRAUD.

A "scheme or artifice" to defraud, within this section, prohibiting the use of the post-office establishment in aid of a scheme or artifice to defraud, is the formation of a plan, device, or trick to perpetrate a fraud on another. U. S. v. Dexter, (1907) 154 Fed. 890.

What constitutes.—This section includes everything designed to defraud.—This section includes every scheme to be effected by the use of the post-office establishment which is in fact designed to defraud, by representations as to the past or present, or suggestions and promises as to the future, it being immaterial that the business or scheme conducted is an actual business provided it is the basis of a fraudulent scheme. Foster v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 165. See to the same effect Lemon v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 953.

Calculated to deceive or defraud. — Whether the pretensions made by the accused, which are averred to constitute the scheme to defraud, constitute an agreement, valid or otherwise, or consist of representations of fact, present or future, an expression of opinion or assurance of past, present, or future conditions, it may constitute a scheme to defraud, provided only it be designed and reasonably adapted to deceive. Brooks v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 223, 76 C. C. A. 581.

To constitute the offense of using the mails to carry into effect a scheme to defraud, within this statute, it is not necessary that there should be actual misrepresentation as to an existing fact; but it is sufficient if the representations made were intended and calculated to deceive and defraud. McCarthy v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 117.

A scheme for giving horoscopes. — A scheme by a defendant to induce persons by means of letters sent through the mails to send him one dollar each in payment for a special life reading, giving the horoscope of the sender and the events of his life from the cradle to the grave, is a scheme or artifice to defraud to be effected by the use of the Post Office Department, within the meaning of this section, if in consideration of the payment so sent defendant returned and intended to return to the senders a stock letter purporting to be a special life reading, but which were alike in each case, regardless of the age, color, or sex of the recipient. So too is a scheme by a defendant to induce persons receiving such letters to purchase from him paper made in imitation of parchment at the price of one dollar per yard, by representations made in such letters that the paper was pure parchment, and that certain charms, if written on pure parchment, would have certain influences on the lives of the persons who used them, if defendant knew that such paper was not pure parchment, and was worth much less than one dollar per yard. U. S. v. White, (1906) 150 Fed. 379.

Intimidating letters of labor union. — Officers of a labor union who send letters or circulars through the mails to customers of a manufacturing corporation to induce them to withdraw their custom from it for the purpose of ruining its business or forcing it to pay a fine imposed on it for employing non-union workmen, whether such fine and boycott were initiated by such officers or by the union with their participation and approval, are guilty within this section. U. S. v. Raish, (1908) 163 Fed. 911.

Exaggerations. — The fact that a circular sent out by mail by a commission merchant to advertise his business contained some exaggerations as to his facilities for handling property consigned to him, or that he failed to settle with some of his patrons, is not sufficient to establish a scheme or artifice to defraud, within this section. Faulkner v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 157 Fed. 940.

Averment and description of scheme to defraud — Sufficiency of averments. — An indictment charging defendants with a scheme to use the mails, and a contract between the directors of a mutual insurance company and one of the defendants to procure from its members money, to appropriate these sums to the defendants and thereby render the corporation insolvent, shows a scheme to defraud the members of the corporation, within this section. Miller v. U. S., (1904) 133 Fed. 337, 66 C. C. A. 399.

An indictment under this Act which charges that defendants devised a scheme to defraud intended to be executed, and which was executed, by the use of the mail service of the United States by pretending that they were engaged in a certain solvent banking enterprise, and making other pretenses in relation thereto, which pretenses were false and were made for the purpose of inducing others to deposit money with them or to buy stock, and with the intention of appropriating such money to their own use, is sufficient to charge the offense, and need not specifically charge that defendants knew their bank to be insolvent. Lemon v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 953.

An indictment under this section, while required to allege the particulars of the scheme with sufficient certainty to show its existence and character, need not do so with the same particularity as to time, place, and circumstance as is required with reference to the mailing of the letter. Brooks v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 223, 76 C. C. A. 581.

Though an indictment for using the post office in furtherance of a scheme to defraud must describe the alleged scheme with such certainty as to clearly inform the defendants of the charge made against them, an indictment is sufficient if it states such elements with sufficient certainty to enable the defendants to prepare their defense. Foster v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 165.

An indictment alleged that the defendant with others by means of advertisements published in newspapers, and correspondence conducted by and through the United States mail service, pretended to be engaged under the name "National Securities Company" in a lucrative and honorable business as a broker, dealing in grain, provisions, and stocks, and pretended to be possessed of superior knowledge concerning the business, making loss improbable, and pretending to pay interest to depositors at the rate of six per cent. per month, and to permit withdrawals at the depositors' election, when in fact he had no such superior knowledge, did not intend for any great length of time to pay six per cent. per month, nor permit withdrawals at depositors' pleasure, but intended by such false pretensions to induce deposits, for the sole purpose of converting them to his own use. It was held that the indictment sufficiently alleged a scheme to defraud, within such section. Brooks v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 223, 76 C. C. A. 581.

Where an indictment charged defendant with devising a scheme to defraud, by inducing others to purchase stock on false representations of fact, and alleged that the scheme was to be effected by correspondence through the post office, and that a letter was actually mailed in furtherance thereof, the indictment was not demurrable for failure to charge that the stock was lacking in value to such an extent as to defraud those who paid the price asked therefor. Nor was it demurrable for failure to allege the particulars in which the representations charged were false, as such defect could be cured by furnishing a bill of particulars. U. S. v. Palmieri, (1909) 169 Fed. 490.

In an indictment for using the mails in and for executing a scheme to defraud, it need not be alleged that the contents of a letter or circular charged to have been mailed pursuant to such scheme were false. Grey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 101.

A count in an indictment under this section, for using the mails to carry out a scheme to defraud, is not insufficient because it refers to a prior count for a statement of the scheme to defraud, where the reference is adequate to the making up of a sufficient accusation. Bartholomew v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 902.

An indictment for using the mails in furtherance of a scheme to defraud set out in the first count a description of the scheme, with an allegation that defendants devised it, and in the second and third counts, instead of repeating such allegation, charged that defendants "in and for executing the scheme and artifice to defraud set out in the first count of this indictment, which statement is hereby made a part of this second count of this indictment, and in attempting so to do," etc. It was held that the latter counts were not objectionable for failure to charge that defendants actually devised the scheme, on the theory that the word "statement" related only to the description of the scheme. Foster v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 165.

If the scheme is sufficiently outlined to show its design and adaptability to deceive, and to fairly acquaint the accused with what he is required to meet, it answers the requirement of the statute. Brooks v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 223, 76 C. C. A. 581.

An indictment for using the mails to defraud, in violation of this section, by subdividing a tract of land in Louisiana of small value into lots ten or twenty feet square, and selling certificates, each purporting to give the holder an option to purchase an interest in a lot, upon false representations that the lots were within an oil district and very valuable, and that large cash offers had been made for certain of the same, construed, and was held to charge a scheme and artifice to defraud within the meaning of this statute, which, when carried on by means of correspondence through the mails, constituted a violation thereof. Gourdain v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 453.

Defendants were officers of a manufacturing corporation, owning a plant and actually engaged in manufacturing and selling the product. In order to sell an increased issue of stock, defendants sent through the mails letters to certain persons, representing that the company desired to establish branch selling houses and to employ managers therefor at a stated salary. The letters also contained false representations as to the profits and dividends of the company, and by their means certain of the persons addressed were induced to purchase stock of the company at par in the belief that they would be appointed branch managers. It was held that an indictment charging such facts, and that the representations made were knowingly false, did not charge the offense of using the mails to defraud, within the meaning of this section, it not being charged that the stock was not worth the price paid for it. Miller v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 35.

Duplicity. — Avertments in an indictment that artifices used in furtherance of a scheme to defraud, to be carried on through the use of the mails, were intended to give one understanding of the scheme to one class of investors and another and different understanding to a different class, both being deceived and defrauded by the same artifices, do not make out two separate schemes so as to render the indictment bad for duplicity. Gourdain v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 453.

Variance. — A defendant charged in the indictment with having devised a scheme to defraud, to be effected by means of the post office establishment, in violation of this statute, must be shown to have devised the particular scheme specified in the indictment, and cannot be convicted on evidence that it is consistent with a different scheme, which, although equally within the statute, is not charged. Beck v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 145 Fed. 625.

In a prosecution under this section defendant cannot be convicted unless the proof establishes the "scheme" substantially as alleged in the indictment. Brown v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 219, 76 C. C. A. 577.

A conviction on an indictment for using the mails to defraud, in violation of this section, which charged that defendant falsely represented to the persons intended to be defrauded by letters and circulars sent through the mail that she was conducting a fair, honest, and bona fide matrimonial agency, well knowing that she was not, was sustained by evidence showing that she inserted false advertisements in newspapers, purporting to have been inserted by a man or woman of wealth who desired to marry, and in reply to answers received through the mail sent letters and circulars representing that she conducted a matrimonial bureau, and had many clients of wealth of both sexes, and thereby obtained from persons so addressed a fee of five dollars each for membership in such bureau and to be introduced to such clients of wealth, when in fact, so far as shown, none were ever so introduced, and no marriages resulted, and defendant made no attempt to carry out the promises made. Glinn v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 177 Fed. 679.

The rule upon the question whether there is an intent.—On the trial of a defendant charged, under this statute, with using the mails to effect a scheme or artifice to defraud, where it is shown that defendant published advertisements and sent out circulars and letters offering to impart to persons communicating with him, in return for money sent him, instructions as to how they could acquire occult and supernatural powers, the question for the jury to determine is not whether or not it was possible for him to impart such information, but whether he honestly and in good faith intended to do so, and upon such determination the question whether he believed himself able to do so is material. U. S. v. White, (1906) 160 Fed. 379.

To constitute an offense within this statute there must have been an intention to injure the person addressed or sought to be reached by defrauding him of something which he already had; and the making of false representations, for the purpose of deceiving the persons addressed by raising expectations of gain or advantage which it was not the intention to fulfil, is insufficient. Miller v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 174 Fed. 35.

In a prosecution under this section, it is a defense that defendant honestly believed that the representations made in the letters or circulars which he is charged with having sent through the mails were true, and that he had no actual intent to defraud. Rudd v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 912.

In a prosecution for misuse of the mails in furtherance of a scheme to defraud by the sale of worthless mining stock, if any one or more of the defendants honestly believed that the representations made by him respecting the property were true, or had reasonable grounds to so believe, such belief would constitute a complete defense as to him. Horn v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 721.

This section does not make any discrimination with respect to the right to the use of the postal establishment of the United States by persons whose vocation is healing, between those who profess to cure by the use of mental science and those who use drugs; and, in a prosecution thereunder for such use of the mails, the question of the defendant's good faith is the cardinal question. If she practiced in good faith, without the intention to defraud, she is not guilty, although in fact the theory and practice followed were worthless; but if, without belief in her practice, and with knowledge that her representations regarding it were false, she made them to defraud, the fact that mental healing is a lawful vocation does not prevent conviction. Post v. U. S., (1905) 135 Fed. 1, 67 C. C. A. 569, rehearing denied 135 Fed. 1022, 67 C. C. A. 679, reversing (1904) 128 Fed. 950.

To constitute a violation of this section it is not necessary that the scheme should be fraudulent on its face; but, although it is apparently a legitimate business, it is within the statute if there was an intention not to conduct such business honestly, but to use it to defraud. McConkey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 171 Fed. 829.

Under this section the intent to defraud is an essential element of the offense, to be determined by the jury as a question of fact from all of the evidence; and an instruction in such a case that "the law presumes that every man intends the natural, legitimate, and necessary consequences of his acts," is erroneous, as tending to mislead the jury into the presumption that if the scheme in its operation resulted in defrauding persons, the law raises a conclusive presumption of an intent to defraud. Hibbard v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 66.

In a prosecution under this section, if a defense that defendant honestly believed that the representations made in the letters or circulars which he is charged with having sent through the mails were true, and that he had no actual intent to defraud, is made, it is for the determination of the jury. Rudd v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 912.

Averment of intent.—An indictment for misuse of the mails, in furtherance of a scheme to defraud by the sale of worthless mining stock, alleging that defendants' representations were in fact false and untrue and known by defendants to be so, constituted a sufficient averment, if such were necessary, that defendants did not in good faith believe, or have reasonable grounds to believe, that the representations were true. Horn v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 721.

An indictment alleged that defendant by advertisements sought to bring the alleged business of the Globe Realty Company, a pretended real estate agent, to the attention of persons who had real estate to sell, intending to procure them to list the same with such company, which had no existence except as a name under which defendant did business, for the purpose of procuring them to pay for advertising their real estate whether a sale was made or not; that defendant intended to make no efforts toward such sale; that he intended to execute such scheme by the use of the post office establishment of the United States, and in so doing deposited a letter and circular addressed to D. to induce him to sign a contract in accordance with such scheme. It was held that such indictment stated an offense within this statute and was not demurrable because it did not allege that the acts charged were wilfully and unlawfully done. U. S. v. Smith, (1909) 166 Fed. 958.

Where an indictment for misuse of the mails charged a scheme to defraud by means of false representations to be disseminated through the mails, that the scheme was carried out, that the representations were false and fraudulent, and that thereby certain named persons were induced to part with their money and give it to defendant, it was not necessary that the indictment should also allege that the scheme was formed by defendant with intent to defraud. Ewing v. U. S., (1905) 136 Fed. 53, 69 C. C. A. 61.

Evidence—Admissibility of cash book.—In a trial for conspiring to use the mails in carrying out a scheme to defraud, the cash book, checks, and entries of cash in defendant's deposit book in a trust company, made during the continuance of the scheme, were properly admitted to show the conspiracy. U. S. v. Marrin, (1908) 159 Fed. 767.

Admissibility of declarations. — In a prosecution for misuse of the mails, in furtherance of a scheme to defraud by sale of worthless mining stock, evidence that one of the defendants promised witness that she should have a half interest in the profits of 28,000 shares of canceled or forfeited stock of a mining corporation, when it was resold by him, that she was to pay nothing for the stock, and when it was resold five cents a share was to go to the corporation, and the witness and defendant were to divide the balance, and that she had received $562 as her share of the part of the stock that had been sold, was properly admitted as against such defendant to show his method of dealing with the stock of the company. Horn v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 721.

Sufficiency. — Where the evidence established the charge that defendant advertised as a matrimonial agency, and obtained money from a person by false representations made in the advertisement, the offense of using the mails to defraud was complete; and it was no defense that defendant afterwards put the person defrauded in correspondence with a woman whom he married. Grey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 101.

Accused was indicted for depositing a letter in the post office in execution of a scheme to defraud. The scheme alleged consisted of the insertion of an advertisement in a newspaper containing the words "How to speculate on Board of Trade. Sent free by J. L. Brown & Co." etc., to induce the public through correspondence conducted by mail to purchase through defendant under the name of "J. L. Brown & Co." commodities on some board of trade to enable defendant, who did not intend to make such purchases, to convert the money to his own use. The proof was that one Hardwick saw such advertisement and without correspondence sent defendant $1,000 by wire, with instructions to buy options on pork. Defendant immediately returned a memorandum showing a sale made by him to Hardwick, and not a purchase made on a board of trade for him. Thereafter Hardwick deposited more money, and directed further purchases of pork, which were made in the same manner. It was held that such facts were insufficient to establish the charge laid in the indictment. Brown v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 219, 76 C. C. A. 577.

Letterheads. — On the trial of a defendant for using the mails to defraud, where he was charged with having used a letterhead purporting to show that he was engaged in a business in which he was not in fact engaged, for the purpose of obtaining property on credit, it was error to admit in evidence against him a letterhead of a firm having the same surname, where he was not charged with using such letterheads nor with making any representations respecting his connection with the firm, and also to admit a list, supposed to be of creditors, and unreceipted bills from parties not named in the indictment, all of which were found in defendant's office, there being no evidence to show by whom the list was made, nor whether or not he was in fact indebted to any of the parties, nor how the transactions arose. Booth v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1905) 139 Fed. 252.

Conviction of defendant's predecessor. — On the trial of a defendant, charged with having conducted a scheme to defraud by the use of the mails, evidence that defendant's predecessor in the business had been indicted for the same offense was competent on the question of intent, if defendant was shown to have had knowledge of the fact and thereafter continued the business. Grey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 172 Fed. 101.

Burden of proof. — In a prosecution for the use of the mails to carry out a scheme to defraud in the practice of mental healing, it being charged in the indictment that the defendant's promises to heal were impossible of performance, and evidence having been received on both sides of that issue, it was error to instruct the jury that the burden rested on the defendant to prove to their satisfaction that she possessed such power. Post v. U. S., (1905) 135 Fed. 1, 67 C. C. A. 569, rehearing denied 135 Fed. 1022, 67 C. C. A. 679, reversing (1904) 128 Fed. 950.

Order of proof. — In a prosecution for using the mails in conducting a scheme to defraud in violation of this section, there is no hard and fast rule requiring that concert of action between two defendants should first be shown before evidence of acts of one can be admitted against the other, but the order of evidence is within the discretion of the court, and it is sufficient if the jury, before considering such evidence, are satisfied either by direct evidence or by proof of facts and circumstances from which it may be reasonably inferred that such concert existed, and that defendants were conducting a joint scheme. Doyle v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 169 Fed. 625.

III. OPENING CORRESPONDENCE THROUGH POST OFFICE.

The intended use of the United States mail. — To constitute the offense of "using the mails to effectuate a scheme to defraud," within this statute, the scheme must have been one which contemplated the use of the post office establishment to effectuate it, and it is not sufficient that the mails were used as a mere incident to some fraudulent scheme. U. S. v. McCrory, (1910) 175 Fed. 802. See to the same effect, Marrin v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 167 Fed. 951; Rimmerman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 307.

The offense denounced by this section consists in the devising of a fraudulent scheme and the depositing in the mail of a letter, writing, or other paper for executing or attempting to execute such scheme. When such acts are shown, the crime is established, and while what is actually accomplished may be evidence of what was intended to be accomplished, it is not the sole evidence. The offense is complete if an attempt be made to execute by the use of the postal establishment. Humes v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 485.

While the formation of some scheme or artifice to defraud is an essential element of the offense of using the United States mails in an intentional effort to defraud, in violation of this statute, the gist of the offense is the use, or attempted use, of the mails for the forbidden purpose, and it is therefore only essential to charge the scheme with such particularity as will enable the accused to know what is intended and to apprise him of what he will be required to meet on a trial; the indictment being sufficient if it is distinctly alleged that the United States mails were intended to be used in consummating such scheme. Horn v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 721.

An indictment under this statute, which states the essential elements of an intent to defraud by use of the mails in the general words of the statute, but with such reasonable particularity as will apprise the accused with reasonable certainty of the nature of the accusation, so that he may prepare his defense, and will enable him to plead his conviction or acquittal as a bar to a subsequent prosecution for the same offense, and will enable the court to say that the facts stated are sufficient in law, is good. Brown v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 60.

An indictment under this statute is not demurrable because the letter set out therein and charged to have been mailed by defendant in carrying out his alleged scheme to defraud does not contain any of the representations which the indictment charges that it was defendant's scheme to make in letters sent through the mails; all that is necessary to constitute the offense being that the letter should have been mailed pursuant to the scheme to defraud and as a step in its execution. Rumble v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 772.

An indictment alleged that defendant and another devised a scheme to defraud certain persons named, "which said scheme to defraud was to be effected by opening correspondence and communication with such persons and by distributing advertisements, circulars, prospectuses and letters by means of the post office establishment of the United States and by inciting such persons to open a correspondence through such post office establishment, with them, the said [defendants named], concerning said scheme, which scheme was then and there as follows, to wit," etc., followed by a specification of the scheme, in which it was alleged that defendants made through the mails a number of representations, which were all false and known by them to be false, and that, in reliance upon such representations, persons named in the indictment were induced to, and did, give to defendant and his associate certain sums of money, and that, in furtherance of such scheme, a certain specified letter was placed in the mails, etc. It was held that the indictment was not fatally defective, in that it was not directly charged therein, and that it did not appear therefrom, that the alleged scheme to defraud included or contemplated a use of the mails or post office establishment of the United States.

Ewing v. U. S., (1905) 136 Fed. 53, 69 C. C. A. 61.

Sufficiency. — Where one was tried for conspiring to use the mails to carry out a scheme to defraud, under sections 5440 and 5480, it was sufficient for the government to show that written or printed matter about the scheme charged was mailed to one of the three persons named in the indictment as the persons defendant planned to defraud, and that copies of the same printed matter were sent through the mails to a mailing list throughout the United States. U. S. v. Marrin, (1908) 159 Fed. 767.

As against objection to testimony or motion in arrest, an indictment for using the mails to defraud sufficiently charged that a letter was intended to be sent or delivered by the post-office department, where it stated that accused deposited and caused to be deposited in a particular post office a certain envelope, duly stamped and sealed, and addressed to certain persons. Dyar v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 614.

Persons to be defrauded. — In a prosecution for using the post-office establishment in furtherance of a scheme to defraud, it is not necessary to show that any one has been in fact defrauded, nor is it necessarily conclusive against the fraudulent nature of the scheme that those named in the indictment as among those intended to be defrauded have not been so defrauded in fact. Foster v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 165.

In an indictment for conspiring to use the mails to carry out a scheme to defraud, under sections 5440 and 5480, the names of as many persons defendant planned to defraud may be used in the indictment as the pleader may know, and all mail connected with the scheme, shown to have passed through the post office to any person whether named in the indictment or not, is evidence upon the question of the existence of the scheme. U. S. v. Marrin, (1908) 159 Fed. 767.

A scheme by the owner of a saloon to be effected by opening correspondence through the mails, to induce different persons to each purchase a half interest in his saloon as a partner, and to pay largely more than it was worth, by misrepresenting its value and the amount of its profits, and to thus obtain their money without their receiving any equivalent therefor, is a scheme to defraud, within the meaning of this section. Van Deusen v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 151 Fed. 989.

IV. DEPOSITING AND RECEIVING LETTERS FROM THE MAIL.

The letters mailed need not be of a nature calculated to be effective. — See to the same effect as the first paragraph of the original note, Lemon v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 953.

In a prosecution for using the post office in furtherance of a scheme to defraud, in violation of this section, it is not necessary that the scheme charged if carried out would necessarily defraud. Rimmerman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 307.

Instructions as to mailing letters.—In a prosecution under this section it was held that the court properly charged that defendant could not be convicted for devising the scheme alone, but that the gravamen of the offense rested in the mailing of the letters alleged in the indictment, and that in order to convict the jury must find that defendant placed or caused the letters to be placed in the post office as alleged. Brooks v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 223, 76 C. C. A. 581.

Opening correspondence with oneself not within statute.—One who devises a fraudulent scheme by opening a correspondence with himself by means of the post office is guilty of no offense within this statute. Erbaugh v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1909) 173 Fed. 433.

Averments in indictments—Pursuance of scheme to defraud.—An indictment for using the post-office establishment in the furtherance of a scheme to defraud has been held to sufficiently charge that defendants intended to effect the scheme or artifice by opening correspondence with the person sought to be defrauded through the United States mails. Rimmerman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 186 Fed. 307.

It is sufficient, under this section, to allege that the scheme or artifice to defraud, having been devised by the defendant, was to be effectuated by the use of the mails, and that the defendant, in furtherance of such intention and scheme or artifice, deposited a letter which was to be delivered by medium of the post office. U. S. v. Sherwood, (1910) 177 Fed. 596.

The gist of the offense being the scheme to use the mails in furtherance of a purpose to defraud, and an act done to carry out the same, and not the obtaining of money by means of false representations, the indictment was not defective for failure to negative the truth of such representations. And where an indictment for misuse of the mails in furtherance of a scheme to defraud alleged that the representations made by letters, circulars, etc., sent through the mails, were utterly false and untrue in fact, and were known by defendant and his accomplice to be so, and it did not appear that defendant made any objection to the introduction of evidence on such branch of the case, he could not object for the first time on appeal that the indictment did not negative the truth of the representations alleged, on the ground that the allegations made were mere conclusions of law. Ewing v. U. S., (1905) 136 Fed. 53, 69 C. C. A. 61.

Where an indictment for misuse of the mails in furtherance of a scheme to defraud charged that such scheme was to be accomplished by means of circulars and newspapers circulated in Iowa and elsewhere, it was not demurrable for failure to set out such advertisements. U. S. v. Smith, (1909) 166 Fed. 958.

Date of mailing.—In a prosecution for devising a scheme or artifice to defraud, to be effected through the post-office establishment, the date of the alleged mailing of the different letters, papers, or writings described in the indictment was not an essential element of the offense; it being sufficient that the letters, writings, circulars alleged, or some of them, were deposited, or caused to be deposited, by defendant, at any time within three years next prior to the finding of the indictment. U. S. v. Dexter, (1907) 154 Fed. 890.

Evidence—Admissibility of letters connected with scheme.—Upon a trial under this section, letters shown to have been mailed or received by defendant need not be effective to forward such scheme to render them admissible in evidence, but it is sufficient if it appears therefrom that they were intended to be utilized in some way in connection with it. Walker v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 111.

Where, in a prosecution for mailing certain letters in furtherance of a scheme to defraud, defendant's participation in securing a certain false affidavit and laudatory letter appeared in the stock advertisements of the business in which defendant was engaged, such stock advertisements and copies of the affidavit and letter were admissible. Brooks v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 223, 76 C. C. A. 581.

In a prosecution under this section it is not necessary to prove a specific intent to defraud, where such intent is manifest from the nature of the scheme itself. Walker v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 111.

Sufficiency.—On the trial of a defendant indicted, under this section, evidence that defendant published advertisements soliciting persons who read them to write to him, and that when he received letters from such persons he had made all arrangements to carry on a systematic correspondence with them through the mails, warrants a finding that the scheme or artifice was one to be effected by means of the post-office establishment of the United States, within the meaning of the statute. U. S. v. White, (1906) 150 Fed. 379.

Where accused had been a party to a scheme to defraud solely by means of express and telegraph companies, but was not shown to have had any connection with his former confederates after they commenced to unlawfully use the mails for such purpose, he was not guilty of violating this section. Dalton v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 461.

Question for jury.—Where defendants were indicted for misuse of the mails in furtherance of a scheme to defraud by the sale of certain mining stock, and the indictment set out certain letters alleged to have been written and mailed by defendant pursuant to such scheme, whether the letters tended to connect the defendant with the scheme as alleged, or were mailed in execution or attempted execution thereof, was for the jury. Horn v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 721.

Evidence of the mailing of similar letters.—In a prosecution under this section averments in the indictment of fraudulent representations made by the defendant by the use of the mails, made to characterize his alleged scheme to defraud, may be proved by the introduction in evidence of letters or circulars mailed by defendant other than the one set out in the indictment, and for that purpose a circular printed and sent out through the mails by an agent of defendant is admissible in evidence, where it is shown that it was known to and approved by defendant, that it contained copies of letters written by him, and that statements and representations therein made were based on those made by him to the agent. Rumble v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 772.

In a prosecution for mailing certain letters in furtherance of a scheme to defraud, letters other than those counted on in an indictment, purporting to have been written by the company operated by defendant, to different persons throughout the country, and relating to transactions by the company with them, were admissible to show that the scheme contemplated the use of the mails, and as bearing on the intent with which the business was done, and the existence of a scheme to defraud. Brooks v. U. S., (1906) 146 Fed. 223, 76 C. C. A. 581.

✓V. INDICTMENT AND SENTENCE.

Joinder of offenses.—Under this section making it a criminal offense to deposit a letter in a post office for the purpose of executing a scheme to defraud, the provision that "the indictment, information, or complaint may severally charge offenses to the number of three when committed within the same six calendar months; but the court shall thereupon give a single sentence . . ." does not prevent the joinder in one indictment of counts charging offenses in different periods of six months, nor the imposition of sentence on each of such counts in case of conviction thereon. U. S. v. McVickar, (1908) 164 Fed. 894.

The provision of this section that an indictment may charge offenses to the number of three when committed within the same six calendar months, but the court thereupon shall give a single sentence, does not render an indictment bad because offenses not committed within the same six calendar months are joined therein, but the offenses in such case are separate and distinct, and punishable as such. Hall v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 420.

R. S. sec. 1024 authorizes the consolidation for trial of indictments for using the mails to defraud under section 5480, notwithstanding the fact that such indictments charge offenses not committed within the same six months and which could not be joined in one indictment under the latter section, and in the aggregate more than the three offenses which may be so joined. Booth v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 836.

What constitutes a separate offense.—Each mailing or taking from the post office of a letter pursuant to a scheme to defraud constituted a separate offense under this section. Francis v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 155, modifying (1906) 144 Fed. 520.

PRISONS AND PRISONERS.

Vol. VI, p. 38, sec. 5544.

Right of officers to parole.—A federal prisoner sentenced to a workhouse in Ohio may be paroled by the prison authorities, as authorized by R. S. Ohio, 1892, sec. 2102. In re Naples, (1905) 142 Fed. 781.

Vol. VI, p. 40, sec. 1.

Prior sentences.—To the same effect as the original note. U. S. v. Farrar, (1905) 139 Fed. 260, 71 C. C. A. 386, reversing (1904) 133 Fed. 254; U. S. v. Jackson, (C.

C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 783, reversing (1905) 140 Fed. 266; Woodward v. Bridges, (1906) 144 Fed. 156.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS, COURT OF.

Vol. VI, p. 56, sec. 10.

Effect of patent.—The acquisition of rights as a riparian proprietor which could not be displaced by a subsequent attempt to appropriate the water cannot be based upon a patent from the United States, issued pursuant to a decree of the court of private land claims, confirming a Mexican grant to riparian lands, on the theory that such patent not only confirms the Mexican title, but releases that of the United States. Boquillas Land, etc., Co. v. Curtis, (1909) 213 U. S. 339, 29 S. Ct. 493, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 822.

Vol. VI, p. 57, sec. 12.

"Imperfect grants." — A Spanish grant made, in 1728, by the Governor and Captain General of New Mexico, and not shown to have been confirmed by a Spanish official, is an imperfect grant — that is, one requiring further action of the political authorities to its perfection, recognition of which is forbidden by this section, in the absence of a proceeding within two years for establishment of its validity — the Royal Regulation of the King of Spain of Oct. 15, 1762, sec. 3, providing that all persons holding grants made after 1700 should exhibit their title to the proper officer for confirmation, and that failure to do so should result in their being deprived of and ejected from such lands, and grants of them being made to other persons, and section 12, conferring the confirmatory power on the governors of distant provinces, acting under the advice of certain other officials as to land therein. Sena v. American Turquoise Co., (1908) 14 N. M. 511, 98 Pac. 171.

Vol. VI, p. 58, sec. 13.

Effect of recitals in patent. — A recital in a patent from the United States, confirming a Mexican land grant to the original grantees, "their heirs, successors in interest, and assigns," that two persons named therein had acquired an undivided interest in the land, which patent was based on a decree to that effect of the court of private land claims, established by this act, is sufficient to establish a record title in the persons so named as against others holding merely by adverse possession, although under sections 8, 13, of this act, the confirmation of the grant by that court only quitclaims the title of the United States, and saves the right of third person. Herrick v. Boquillas Land, etc., Co., (1906) 200 U. S. 96, 26 S. Ct. 192, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 388.

Vol. VI, p. 62, sec. 14.

To what cases applicable. — The claim of one whose title under a Mexican land grant is perfect and complete, and who is, therefore, not bound under this act, to apply to the court of private land claims for confirmation, is not cut down to the extent that the land has been patented by the United States to third parties, because he appeared and prayed confirmation in a suit brought against him by the United States under the authority of section 8 of this act, to remove the government's doubt as to title or boundaries, on the theory that the language of section 14, giving that effect to such patents "if in any case" it shall appear that the lands or any part thereof, decreed to any claimant under the act, shall have been sold by the United States, applies not only to the proceeding brought by the claimant himself for confirmation, but also to the proceeding on behalf of the government, in which the court is to determine the matter, subject to all lawful rights adverse to the claimant or possessor, and as between such claimant and possessor and any other claimant or possessor, and subject in this respect to all the applicable statutory provisions. Richardson v. Ainsa, (1910) 218 U. S. 289, 31 S. Ct. 23, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1044.

PUBLIC CONTRACTS.

Vol. VI, p. 116, sec. 3732.

Under this section, see Hoe v. U. S., (1910) 218 U. S. 322, 31 S. Ct. 85, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 1055.

Vol. VI, p. 122, sec. 3736.

Executed contracts. — This section should not be construed to apply to executed contracts so as to defeat the title of the United States to land it has paid for, and an act authorizing a public improvement and appropriating money therefor is sufficient authority for the purchase of land necessary or proper to such improvement. Burns v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 160 Fed. 631.

Vol. VI, p. 125, sec. 1.

Amendment.—This Act was amended by Act of Feb. 24, 1905, c. 778, 32 Stat. L. 811, 10 Fed. Stat. Annot. 343.

Jurisdiction of federal courts.—An action on the bond of a contractor for government work brought under this act in the name of the United States for the use of a person who furnishes labor or materials in the prosecution of the work, is not one in which the United States is plaintiff or petitioner, within the meaning and intent of section 1 of the Judiciary Act of Aug. 13, 1888, ch. 866, 25 Stat. 433, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 265, but one in which it is merely a nominal party, and, in the absence of express provisions therefor in the statute giving the right of action, a federal court is without jurisdiction thereof unless the requisite diversity of citizenship and amount in controversy are affirmatively shown. U. S. v. Barrett, (1905) 135 Fed. 189. See also Burrell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 147 Fed. 44.

But in U. S. v. Axman, (1906) 152 Fed. 816, an action by the United States on relation of a materialman against a government contractor and a surety to recover on the contractor's bond to the government, as required by this act, for materials furnished to enable him to perform the contract, was held to constitute a case arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, and therefore within the jurisdiction of the federal courts, as provided by Act Cong. March 3, 1875, as amended by Act March 3, 1887, and corrected by Act Aug. 13, 1888, ch. 866, sec. 1, 25 Stat. 433, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 265.

Jurisdiction of state courts.—This Act creates rights of action in favor of laborers and materialmen, which may be enforced under the law and practice, in the courts, of the state where suit on the bond is brought. U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1906) 78 Vt. 445, 63 Atl. 581.

Rights of sureties.—Where a federal contractor's surety was compelled to pay labor and material claims to an amount exceeding the amount due from the government to the contractor it was held that it was entitled to subrogation to the rights of the laborers and materialmen so paid against such sum which claim was prior to that of a mere volunteer lender of funds to the contractor, not shown to have been used in the performance of the contract. Henningsen v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 1906) 143 Fed. 811.

Liability of surety.—A bond given by a contractor for government work, conditioned as provided by this Act, is in effect two separate instruments; one securing performance of the contract to the United States, and the other the payment by the contractor of bills for labor and materials furnished, and in the latter aspect the surety is not discharged from liability by a variation of the contract which might relieve it from liability to the United States, as by a change in the site of a building. U. S. v. California Bridge, etc., Co., (1907) 152 Fed. 559.

The surety on a bond given by a partnership as government contractor for public work, conditioned as required by this Act, is not released from liability thereon for the claim of one who supplied labor or materials in the prosecution of the work because of the fact that other persons were associated with the firm as partners in carrying out the contract. Philadelphia City Trust, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 147 Fed. 155.

Scows furnished for removing stone, etc.—The furnishing of scows to the defendant, to be used in removing the stone and in other work being prosecuted by the defendant, was held not to constitute the furnishing of "labor and materials" to the defendant, so as to entitle the plaintiff to recover the amount due under the charter party on the bond. U. S. v. Conkling, (C. C. A. 1905) 135 Fed. 508.

Coal used by a building contractor to heat buildings, covered by specifications requiring him to provide fuel for heating while the work is going on, is "material," within the implied terms of the contract, which he is bound to furnish, and hence within the scope of his bond, required by the federal statute (Act Aug. 13, 1894, ch. 280, 28 Stat. 278) for the protection of persons supplying materials. U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1910) 83 Vt. 278, 75 Atl. 280. Compare U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1909) 82 Vt. 94, 71 Atl. 1106.

This Act is broad enough to include within the protection of a bond so conditioned one who supplies coal to the contractor which is used to operate hoisting or pumping engines employed in the work. Philadelphia City Trust, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1906) 147 Fed. 155.

Subcontractor taking contractor's note.—A surety on the bond of a contractor with the United States for a public work, conditioned for the payment by such contractor of all claims for labor and materials, as required by this Act, was not released from liability to a subcontractor by the taking by the latter of a note from the contractor for his claim due in three months, but which did not mature until final settlement had been made between the contractor and the United States and a few days after receivers in insolvency had been appointed for the contractor. U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1909) 172 Fed. 268, affirming (1910) 178 Fed. 692, 102 C. C. A. 192.

The giving of a note by a contractor for government work for the amount of an account rendered for materials furnished does not release the surety on his bond, given pursuant to this Act, from liability for such material; an action on the bond being based on the account, and not on the note. U. S. v. Axman, (1906) 153 Fed. 982.

Labor and material furnished subcontractors.—Labor and materials used in the prosecution of a public work, whether furnished under the contract directly to the contractor or to a subcontractor, must be deemed within the obligation of a surety company under a bond executed pursuant to this act, conditioned for the prompt payment of the contractor to "all persons supplying it labor or materials in the prosecution of the work provided for in said contract," in view of the manifest purpose of that statute to protect those whose labor or material has contributed to the prosecution of the work. U. S. v. American Surety Co., 200 U. S. 197, 26 S. Ct. 168, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 437; Smith v. Mosier, (1909) 169 Fed. 430.

Attorney's fees.—In an action on a bond given under this Act the court may in its discretion allow a statutory attorney's fee in favor of each claimant who has become a party and recovers on his claim to be taxed as costs. Title Guaranty, etc., Co. v. Puget Sound Engine Works, (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 168.

"Claims for labor and material."—Claims for patterns made for a contractor from which to make castings required for a vessel, for towing in the delivery of materials, for wharfage paid in connection with such delivery, and by a local transfer company for hauling materials, are all for labor or material, within the meaning of this Act, and recoverable on the bond; but advances of freight made to common carriers by such transfer company are not so recoverable. Title Guaranty, etc., Co. v. Puget Sound Engine Works, (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 168.

Bond conditioned in language of statutes.—Under this Act, requiring persons entering into a contract for the construction of a public building to give a bond conditioned to "promptly make payments" to all persons supplying them with labor or materials, a contractor's bond containing conditions in the language of the statute constitutes a covenant by the contractor to pay all materialmen and laborers for the material and labor furnished by them. U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1906) 78 Vt. 445, 63 Atl. 581.

In name of United States.—An action by a materialman on a bond given by a contractor for public building under this Act, is properly brought in the name of the United States as covenantee in the bond. U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1906) 78 Vt. 445, 63 Atl. 581.

An agreement to supply materials to a contractor is not supplying them, and where one has agreed to supply materials, but they have never been delivered to or used by the contractor in his lifetime, or his sureties completing the work after his death, it cannot be said that the materials have been supplied to the contractor in the prosecution of the work within the meaning of the statute. U. S. v. Murdock, (1904) 99 Me. 258, 59 Atl. 60.

The words "public works," as used in this Act, relate to fixed improvements, such as fortifications, river and harbor improvements, etc., and do not include a movable article, such as a seagoing dredge; and a person supplying materials to a contractor under contract for the construction of such a dredge is not entitled to sue in the name of the United States for his benefit on a bond given by the contractor, conditioned on his paying persons supplying labor or materials in the prosecution of the work. Penn Iron Co. v. Wm. R. Trigg Co., (1907) 106 Va. 557, 56 S. E. 329.

Materials not becoming part of permanent structure.—This Act does not merely give the relief afforded by the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien on a building erected for a private owner, but protects persons furnishing materials in the prosecution of the work, though they do not become a part of the permanent structure. U. S. v. Aetna Indemnity Co., (1902) 40 Wash. 87, 82 Pac. 171.

What contracts included.—A contract to "furnish all necessary labor and materials" required in the "construction" of a government building, which also provides for work to be done, and prescribes when and how it shall be done, and in which the government agrees to pay for the construction of the building, and not merely for labor and materials, is a contract for the construction of the building, within the meaning of this Act. U. S. v. Murdock, (1904) 99 Me. 258, 59 Atl. 61.

Form of action.—A common-law action of covenant in which judgment for the amount due the use plaintiff may be assessed, instead of an action under the statute in which judgment is rendered for the penalty of the bond, is an appropriate and proper remedy to enforce the bond of a contractor under this Act. U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1906) 78 Vt. 445, 63 Atl. 581.

Allegations necessary.—In an action brought upon a bond given under this Act against the principal and surety therein named, demurrer was filed to the declaration because it was not averred therein that the claim of the United States thereunder, if any, had been paid. It was held that such averment was unnecessary, because the United States is not a preferred creditor under said bond. U. S. v. Perth Amboy Shipbuilding, etc., Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 689.

The same declaration was also demurred to upon the further ground that it did not aver that there were no other persons having claims or demands against the defendants under said bond, or if there were such creditors, that they had been paid. It was held, further, that such averment was unnecessary, since the Act referred to confers an independent right of action upon each creditor having a claim under the bond. U. S. v. Perth Amboy Shipbuilding, etc., Co., (1905) 137 Fed. 690.

Who may sue.—The covenant of the bond is several, and each person who supplies labor or material has a right of action on the bond for the amount due him independent of the rights of action of all other persons, and a suit brought by one materialman is no bar to an action by another. U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1906) 78 Vt. 445, 63 Atl. 581.

Necessity for naming persons for whose benefit bond given.—A bond given by contractors for a public building under this Act, conditioned that the contractors "shall promptly make payment to all persons who furnish them with labor or material in the prosecution of the work contemplated by the contract," need not name the laborers and materialmen for whose benefit the bond is given, but any person who subsequently furnished the contractors labor or materials is protected by the bond. U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1906) 78 Vt. 445, 63 Atl. 581.

For whose benefit.—Persons who, in view of the financial embarrassment of a public contractor, undertake to superintend the completion of a public work and to furnish the necessary funds, for which they are to be paid by an assignment of the reserve fund in the hands of the government and by checks or payments under the original contract, are not subcontractors furnishing labor and materials for the fulfillment of such original contract, so as to be entitled to the protection of the bond executed pursuant to this Act, conditioned for the prompt payment by the original contractors to all persons supplying them with labor or materials in the prosecution of the work. Hardaway v. National Surety Co., (1909) 211 U. S. 552, 29 S. Ct. 202, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 321.

Assignment of rights of laborers and materialmen.—To the same effect as the original notes. Title Guaranty, etc., Co. v. Puget Sound Engine Works, (C. C. A. 1908) 163 Fed. 169.

Vol. VI, p. 132, sec. 3744.

Performed contract.—To the same effect as the original note. U. S. v. Andrews, (1907) 207 U. S. 229, 28 S. Ct. 100, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 185.

Vol. X, p. 343. [Contractors for public buildings, etc.]

Not retroactive.—Those provisions, if any, governing procedure, contained in this amended Act, for the protection of persons furnishing materials and labor for the construction of public works, will not be given a retroactive effect so as to apply to existing causes of action, where such amendatory statute, which consists of but one section, contains various provisions dealing with substantive rights, which must be regarded as prospective in their operation. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1908) 209 U. S. 306, 28 S. Ct. 537, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 804.

Where a federal contract had been performed prior to this Act, it was held that the one-year limitation prescribed by such amendment was inapplicable to an action by a materialman against the contractor's surety. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 692; U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1910) 178 Fed. 721. For other cases see U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1909) 171 Fed. 247; U. S. v. Schofield Co., (1910) 182 Fed. 241; Title Guaranty, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 98; U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., (1907) 80 Vt. 84, 66 Atl. 809; Burton v. Seifert, (1908) 108 Va. 338, 61 S. E. 933.

Jurisdiction of federal courts.—A suit brought in the name of the United States under this Act, on the bond of a public contractor, for the benefit of a person furnishing materials and labor for the construction of a public work, is governed by that part of the Act of March 3, 1887, 24 Stat. L. 552, ch. 373, as corrected by the Act of Aug. 13, 1888, 25 Stat. L. 434, ch. 866, 4 Fed. Stat. Annot. 265, which provides that no civil suit shall be brought before any federal Circuit Court "against any person, by any original process or proceedings, in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant." Davidson Bros. Marble Co. v. U. S., (1909) 213 U. S. 10, 29 S. Ct. 324, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 675.

This Act requires action on the contractor's bond to be brought "in the name of the United States in the Circuit Court of the United States in the district in which said contract was to be performed . . . and not elsewhere," and that it shall be commenced "within one year after the performance and final settlement of said contract, and not later." It has been held that the jurisdiction of such court to enforce the remedy given is exclusive, and that the commencement of an action on such a bond in a state court of Colorado, which was afterward dismissed, did not extend the time for bringing a new action in the federal court by virtue of the Colorado statute (Mills' Annot. Stat. Colo., sec. 2917), which in certain cases of dismissal permits a new action to be brought within one year thereafter. U. S. v. Boomer, (1910) 183 Fed. 727, 106 C. C. A. 164.

District in which suit brought.—The provisions as to the proper district for suit on the bond of a public contractor, made by this Act, do not apply where the contract with, and the bond to, the government, and the contract under which the labor and materials were furnished, all antedate the passage of the amendatory Act. Davidson Bros. Marble Co. v. U. S., (1909) 213 U. S. 10, 29 S. Ct. 324, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 675.

A vessel building for the United States, the title to which passes to the government as fast as paid for, is a "public work" within the meaning of this Act. Title Guaranty, etc., Co. v. Crane Co., (1910) 219 U. S. 24, 31 S. Ct. 140, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 72, affirming (1908) 163 Fed. 168, 89 C. C. A. 618.

Subcontractor's profits.—This section requiring a government building contractor to give a bond to pay all persons supplying labor and materials, makes the surety liable to a subcontractor for the subcontractor's profits, the Act not restricting liability to the value of labor and materials furnished. Burton v. Seifert, (1908) 108 Va. 338, 61 S. E. 933.

Interventions.—This Act which provides that in an action by the United States on the bond of a contractor for public work, persons having claims for labor or materials supplied to such contractor may intervene and be made parties and have their claims adjudicated subject to the prior claim of the United States, gives them such right only subject to the ordinary rules and practice governing interventions, and such creditor will not be allowed to intervene after the action has been dismissed as to the contractor for want of service and as between the plaintiff and the surety has been fully tried and submitted for decision. U. S. v. McGee, (1909) 171 Fed. 209.

Assignment of claims.—Claims for labor and materials against a contractor for a public work may be assigned without losing the protection of the bond given conformably to this Act for the benefit of laborers and materialmen. Title Guaranty, etc., Co. v. Crane Co., (1910) 219 U. S. 24, 31 S. Ct. 140, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 72.

Affidavit and copy of bond.—The failure of a plaintiff, in an action on the bond of a contractor for a public work, given conformably to this Act, for the protection of laborers and materialmen, to apply, as provided in the statute, for a copy of the bond, and furnish an affidavit that labor or materials have been supplied by him for the prosecution of the work, is not fatal to the suit, where no action has been brought by the United States for more than six months from the completion of the work, and affidavits are made and copies filed by interveners, since, under the circumstances, the omission is only a formal defect. Title Guaranty, etc., Co. v. Crane Co., (1910) 219 U. S. 24, 31 S. Ct. 140, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 72, affirming (1908) 163 Fed. 168, 89 C. C. A. 618.

Claims for cartage and towage to the place where a vessel is building for the United States, and for patterns furnished to the molding department of the builder, are within the obligation of the latter's bond, given conformably to this Act. Title Guaranty, etc., Co. v. Crane Co., (1910) 219 U. S. 24, 31 S. Ct. 140, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 72.

The additional phrase, "the person or persons supplying the contractor with labor and materials," used in this Act, in describing the persons entitled to a copy of the contract and bond for the purpose of suit, does not change the rule that labor and materials used in the prosecution of a public work, though furnished to a subcontractor, are within the obligation of a bond conditioned conformably to those statutes for the prompt payment by the contractor to all persons supplying him with labor or materials in the prosecution of the work. Mankin v. U. S., (1910) 215 U. S. 533, 30 S. Ct. 174, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 315.

Want of consideration cannot be urged to defeat an action on the bond of a public contractor, given conformably to this Act for the protection of laborers and materialmen, because it was not executed until ten days after the contract was made—especially where the bond was under seal. Title Guaranty, etc., Co. v. Crane Co., (1910) 219 U. S. 24, 31 S. Ct. 140, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 72.

In name of United States.—The objection that the United States should have been made a party cannot avail to defeat the action on the bond of a contractor for a public work, given conformably to this Act, where the suit was begun in the name of the United States, to the real plaintiff's use. Title Guaranty, etc., Co. v. Crane Co., (1910) 219 U. S. 24, 31 S. Ct. 140, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 72.

Time to sue.—This Act in so far as it prohibits the bringing of an action by the subcontractor prior to the expiration of six months from the completion and final settlement of the contract, is not a statute of limitations, but during such period no right of action accrues to the subcontractor; the right to sue during that time being vested exclusively in the United States. Stitzer v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 513.

Waiver of six months limitation.—The nonaccrual of the cause of action in favor of a subcontractor until six months after final completion and settlement is jurisdictional, and cannot be waived by the parties. Stitzer v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 513.

Completion and final settlement.—The words "completion and final settlement," as used in this Act, are not equivalent, though the latter may by inference be held to include the former, but both constitute an essential prerequisite to a subcontractor's right to sue, and hence where a contract was still open and unsettled as late as July 12, 1909, a suit on the contractor's bond, begun October 21st following, was premature and unsustainable. Stitzer v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 182 Fed. 513.

"Complete performance of said contract."—In U. S. v. Winkler, (1908) 162 Fed. 397, it appeared that a contractor who had given a bond, under this Act, and whose contract contained the usual provision giving the United States, in case of his default, the right to have the contract completed at his cost, became insolvent and abandoned the work. It was held that such abandonment was not a "complete performance of said contract" which gave a right of action to creditors for labor and materials on the bond under the statute, which contemplates a completion of the work, whether by the contractor or the United States, and a final settlement to determine the prior rights and claim of the United States under the contract, and the lapse of six months thereafter for the bringing of suit to enforce such rights against the bondsmen before an action can be maintained by such creditors.

Effect of proving claim in bankruptcy against contractor's estate.—A subcontractor for public work, entitled to sue the surety on the statutory bond given by the contractor, does not lose his right of action by proving his claim against the estate of the contractor in bankruptcy. Title Guaranty, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 187 Fed. 98.

Amount of liability.—The recovery on the bond of a contractor for a public work for labor and materials furnished a subcontractor is not limited to the amounts remaining unpaid to the subcontractor when notice was given of outstanding claims, where the bond is conditioned, conformably to this Act, for the prompt payment by the contractor to all persons supplying him with labor or materials in the prosecution of the work. Man- kin v. U. S., (1910) 215 U. S. 533, 30 S. Ct. 174, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 315.

Actions by United States.—The provision of this Act requiring bonds given by contractors for government work to contain an additional obligation securing the payment of claims for labor and materials supplied to the contractor, and providing for the enforcement of such obligation, has no relation to actions on such bonds by the United States, and, while the labor and material creditors are authorized to intervene in such actions and have their claims adjudicated subject to the prior right of the United States, the government, in commencing such an action, is not required to serve or publish notice to such claimants, nor to bring the suit in the district where the contract was to be performed; such provisions of the Act being applicable only to suits brought thereunder. U. S. v. McGee, (1909) 171 Fed. 209.

Docket fees.—Each successful claimant in an action on the bond of a public contractor, given conformably to this Act, may be allowed the docket fee authorized by R. S. sec. 824, 2 Fed. Stat. Annot. 278, since the claims are several, and represent distinct causes of action in different parties, although consolidated in a single suit. Title Guaranty, etc., Co. v. Crane Co., (1910) 219 U. S. 24, 31 S. Ct. 140, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 72.

PUBLIC DEBT.

Vol. VI, p. 143, sec. 3701.

Checks or orders of the treasurer.—Hibernia Sav., etc., Soc. v. San Francisco, (1906) 200 U. S. 310, 26 S. Ct. 265, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 495, affirming (1903) 139 Cal. 205, 72 Pac. 920, 96 Am. St. Rep. 100, set out in the original note.

Bank capital invested in United States bonds.—The immunity of national securities from state taxation is violated by a tax imposed under the authority of the Iowa Code, sec. 1322, directing that shares of stock of state banks shall be assessed to such banks, and not to individual stockholders, the substantial effect of which is to require taxation upon the property, not including the franchises, of such banks, and to adopt the value of the shares as the measure of the taxable valuation of such property, without permitting any deduction from such valuation on account of bonds of the United States owned by the banks. Home Sav. Bank v. Des Moines, (1907) 205 U. S. 503, 27 S. Ct. 571, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 901.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Vol. VI, p. 212, sec. 452.

This section must be strictly construed, as it imposes a penalty or forfeiture. Hand v. Cook, (1907) 29 Nev. 518, 92 Pac. 3.

A special agent of the General Land Office is prevented from making a valid timber culture entry under this section. Prosser v. Finn, (1908) 208 U. S. 67, 28 S. Ct. 225, 52

U. S. (L. ed.) 392, affirming (1906) 41 Wash. 604, 84 Pac. 404.

Reliance, in making a timber culture entry, upon the opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that the provisions of this section do not embrace a special agent of the Land Office, can confer no interest upon such special agent which will prevent the government, by its proper officer or department, from canceling his entry. Prosser v. Finn, (1908) 208 U. S. 67, 28 S. Ct. 225, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 392, affirming (1906) 41 Wash. 604, 84 Pac. 404.

Continuing in possession after ceasing to be a special agent of the Land Office is not the equivalent of a new timber culture entry, where the original entry was invalid because made in direct violation of this section. Prosser v. Finn, (1908) 208 U. S. 67, 28 S. Ct. 225, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 392, affirming (1906) 41 Wash. 604, 84 Pac. 404.

Deputy surveyor.—“The later rulings of the Land Department are to the effect that this statute is applicable to a deputy surveyor, and therefore that such an officer is prohibited from acquiring or becoming interested in the purchase of any of the public lands. Muller v. Coleman, 18 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 394; In re Neill, 24 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 393; Floyd v. Montgomery, 26 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 122. See also In re McMicken, 10 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 97, 11 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 96. In the case of Hand v. Cook, (1907) 29 Nev. 518, 92 Pac. 3, a majority of the Supreme Court of Nevada held that the statute in question did not apply to a deputy mineral surveyor; but the reverse was held by the Supreme Court of Utah in the case of Lavagnino v. Uhlig, (1903) 26 Utah 1, 71 Pac. 1046, 99 Am. St. Rep. 808. It will not do for a court to take a strained and narrow view of the language employed by Congress in its enactments, but rather give such a construction as will carry into effect its obvious intent. We entertain no doubt that a deputy mineral surveyor is an employee ‘in the General Land Office’ within the meaning of the statute. That is the office in which the land laws of the United States are administered and executed, by and through the thousand and one officers and employees in and out of the particular building or buildings in which that department of the government is conducted. Nor do we see that there is any much clearer way to prohibit an act than to say expressly that it is prohibited. That Congress did in the section in question.” Waskey v. Hammer, (C. C. A. 1909) 170 Fed. 31.

Clerks.—This section assumes that there must be and are clerks and other employees of the General Land Office, and the specification of them after the word “officers” clearly indicates that Congress did not intend that they should be comprehended within that term, or that they should be officers of the General Land Office. U. S. v. Schlierholz, (1904) 133 Fed. 333.

Vol. VI, p. 212, sec. 453.

The Land Department of the federal government is the tribunal specially designated by law to receive and consider the evidence and thereupon determine the rights growing out of settlements on public lands, with a purpose to secure them to those who have complied with the laws regulating the disposition of them; and if its officers err in the interpretation of the law applicable to the facts presented or a fraud is practiced by one rival claimant on the other by which the latter is deprived of his right if the officers themselves are chargeable with fraudulent practices which have resulted in their granting title to the wrong party, their action may be reviewed and annulled by a court of equity at the instance of the aggrieved claimant, and the wrongful holder of the title may be compelled to surrender it, but for mere errors of judgment on the weight of the evidence produced before them in any case, the only remedy is by appeal. On such questions their rulings are final and conclusive on all courts whatsoever. Kennedy v. Dickie, (1906) 34 Mont. 205, 85 Pac. 982.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, although powerless to adopt a regulation which is in any wise inconsistent with, or repugnant to, the public land laws, are empowered to enforce, by appropriate regulations, every part of those laws as to which it is not otherwise specially provided. Leonard v. Lennox, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 760.

Power to correct errors.—The Secretary of the Interior will not be compelled by mandamus to deliver a patent for public land to an entryman, where it appears that the entry was canceled by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the ground that it was of unsurveyed land; and that the decision of the office was affirmed on appeal by the entryman to the secretary, who directed that no patent should issue, but, by mistake of a clerk, a patent was prepared in violation of such direction, and passed to execution and record, without discovery of the mistake. The secretary has the power to correct such a mistake before the patent has actually passed out of his possession. Garfield v. U. S., (1908) 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 338.

The decision of the Secretary of the Interior on an appeal to him in a controversy over a land entry is conclusive as to questions of fact, in the absence of fraud or gross mistake, but not upon questions of law, and if through an error of law he directed a patent to issue to the wrongful claimant, the patentee will be held in equity as a trustee for the rightful owner. Le Marchal v. Teagarden, (C. C. A. 1909) 175 Fed. 682, reversing (1907) 152 Fed. 662.

The Secretary of the Interior, having complete jurisdiction of a contest before the Land Department, is not bound by findings of fact made by his predecessor at a previous stage of the controversy. Greenmeyer v. Coate, (1909) 212 U. S. 434, 29 S. Ct. 345, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 587, affirming (1907) 18 Okla. 160, 88 Pac. 1054.

Findings of the Secretary of the Interior to the effect that a designated party to a controversy in the Land Department had the right to enter the land as a homestead does not prevent such department, if patent has not issued, from instituting further inquiry, and, upon such inquiry, finally awarding the land to the party held to have a better right. Love v. Flahive, (1907) 205 U. S. 195, 27 S. Ct. 486, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 768, affirming (1905) 33 Mont. 348, 83 Pac. 883.

A second contest will not be entertained by the Interior Department against an entry of public lands on a charge which has once been investigated or decided by the department. Parryman v. Cunningham, (1905) 16 Okla. 94, 82 Pac. 822.

When a patent has once issued for public lands of the United States, the duties of the Interior Department have been fully performed, and it cannot lawfully further consider the rights of contesting parties to such land. The department has no power to set aside or cancel the patent. Johnson v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., (1904) 2 Alaska 224.

Vol. VI, p. 216, sec. 458.

Patent passes title.—A patent to public land, duly issued upon the decision of the proper officers and recorded in the record book kept in the Land Department of the government for that purpose, passes the title, and a delivery to the patentee is not necessary. U. S. v. Laam, (1906) 149 Fed. 581; Lonabaugh v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1910) 179 Fed. 476, reversing (1907) 158 Fed. 314.

Title by patent from the United States is title by record, and delivery of the patent to patentee is not, as in a conveyance by a private person, essential to pass title. Rogers v. Clark Iron Co., (1908) 104 Minn. 198, 116 N. W. 739.

Compliance with statute is imperative.—To entitle one to a patent under the public laws, it is necessary that he comply with all the requirements of the statute and the authoritative regulations of the Land Department. Leonard v. Lennox, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 760.

Presumption of compliance with statute.—A patent to land is the judgment of the Land Department and the conveyance of the title in execution of it to the party adjudged entitled, and, when the land described was within the jurisdiction and subject to the disposition of the Land Department, it is impervious to collateral attack. Neff v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1908) 165 Fed. 273.

A patent issued by the federal government is prima facie evidence that all the pre-requisites of the law necessary to its issuance have been complied with. Bradshaw v. Edelen, (1906) 194 Mo. 640, 92 S. W. 691.

Void patent.—A federal patent purporting to grant lands in which the government has no title is void as an evidence of title and may be so declared in an action at law at the instance of any one in possession lawfully or under color of title. Tapia v. Williams, (Ala. 1911) 54 So. 613.

Where public lands, patented under the general land laws, had previously been reserved or otherwise appropriated by Act of Congress, the patent is void, and the land may be recovered by the true owner by an action at law, where he has such title as will support an action in ejectment. Eastern Oregon Land Co. v. Brosnan, (1906) 147 Fed. 807.

Vol. VI, p. 229, sec. 2238.

No commissions for selling the lands ceded by the Osage Indians to the United States by the treaty of Sept. 29, 1865 (14 Stat. 687), to be sold for their benefit, beyond what brings his annual compensation to the legal maximum of $2,500, can be claimed by a register of the Land Office who received his appointment after the Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Commissioner of the General Land Office, had charged the various registers and receivers with the duty of selling such lands, and had limited their annual compensation for this and all other services to the existing legal maximum. Stewart v. U. S., (1907) 206 U. S. 185, 27 S. Ct. 631, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 1017, affirming (1904) 39 Ct. Cl. 321.

Vol. VI, p. 233, sec. 2246.

The courts will take judicial notice of the qualification of the receiver of the Land Office to administer an oath. U. S. v. Eddy, (1905) 134 Fed. 119. See also U. S. v. Brace, (1907) 149 Fed. 869.

Vol. VI, p. 285, sec. 2289.

Requisites to valid entry.—Where a person had occupied public lands, but failed to file within three months after the land was surveyed his declaratory statement as required by the pre-emption laws, he acquired no right or title, and the land became subject to disposition by the United States as before its occupancy. Rio Grande Western R. Co. v. Stringham, (Utah 1910) 110 Pac. 868.

The regulation of the Land Department Nov. 19, 1901, requiring applicants under the nonmineral laws to support their applications by showing that the land is non saline, is a valid regulation, and an applicant must comply with that regulation. Leonard v. Lennox, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 760.

Who may enter homestead.—One who was within the Ponca Indian reservation before the hour of twelve noon, central standard time; of Dec. 16, 1893, and made the race from said reservation into that part of the Cherokee outlet which was opened to settlement on that day, is not, by reason thereof, disqualified from settling upon and filing a homestead entry on a quarter section of land within the country then declared opened to settlement. Saylor v. Frantz, (1906) 17 Okla. 37, 86 Pac. 432.

The fact that a settler, who is actually residing on public land with the bona fide intention of acquiring title thereto under the homestead law, purchased his improvements from a prior settler, does not affect his right to so acquire the land. Trodick v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 913.

The Secretary of the Interior has authority to deny an application to make a homestead entry, made by a person who has no equities in the land, when such land is covered by an Indian allotment, even though such Indian allotment has been erroneously made, when the equities in favor of the allottee are such that a great injustice would be done him if the allotment should be canceled. Baldwin v. Keith, (1904) 13 Okla. 624, 75 Pac. 1124.

Homestead rights coextensive with boundaries.—The possession of a homestead entryman under the public land laws are co-extensive with the boundaries of his land, and extend over shore lands of navigable waters abutting thereon. U. S. v. Roth, (1904) 2 Alaska 257.

As between two simultaneous applications for entry of homestead land, the question as to which of the applicants has made the prior settlement is a question of fact for the determination of the Land Department. Love v. Flahive, (1905) 33 Mont. 348, 83 Pac. 882.

Rights of entryman.—One having homestead entry on lands of the United States is entitled to possession until his entry is canceled, so that no right of action accrues to the successful contestant for unlawful detainer until the homestead entry is canceled. Bilyeu v. Pilcher, (1905) 16 Okla. 228, 83 Pac. 546.

So long as a homestead entry valid on its face remains uncontested and uncanceled, the land is withdrawn from the public domain and cannot be granted by the United States to a subsequent claimant. Jameson v. James, (1909) 155 Cal. 275, 100 Pac. 700.

Even though land belonged to the United States when the state conveyed it to the plaintiff, yet he having inclosed, improved, cultivated, and been in the actual possession of it, it was not subject to entry under the United States homestead laws. Carmichael v. Campodonico, (1908) 7 Cal. App. 597, 95 Pac. 164.

A homestead entry, valid on its face, constitutes such an appropriation of the land as to segregate it from the public domain, and, so long as it remains a subsisting entry, precludes it from subsequent entry. Holt v. Murphy, (1904) 15 Okla. 12, 79 Pac. 265.

An attempt to enter lands under the homestead laws after the lands had been patented to prior entrymen does not confer any interest therein, the land having been withdrawn by the patent from the jurisdiction of the Land Department. Linebeck v. Vos, (1908) 160 Fed. 540.

Where the defendants were in actual possession of public land of the United States inclosed by a substantial fence, and were using it for agricultural purposes, claiming title thereto, it is not subject to homestead entry. Gragg v. Cooper, (1907) 150 Cal. 584, 89 Pac. 346.

Where at the time the complainant attempted to move on public land in controversy, he knew that the defendants were then in open and undisturbed possession thereof, and had been for several years, claiming to own it under a contract of purchase from a railroad company, the complainant is not entitled to enter the land as a homestead, nor will his entry create any rights therein. Dockendorf v. Bassett, (1908) 160 Fed. 543.

One who settles on public land covered by a valid homestead entry is a mere trespasser, and acquires no rights against a contestant who secures the cancellation of the first entry and is awarded the preference right to enter the land. Gourley v. Countryman, (1907) 18 Okla. 220, 90 Pac. 427.

A homestead entry on public land then in the open and undisturbed possession of another constitutes an unlawful trespass on such possession, and gives the entryman no rights or interest in the land as against a bona fide possessor to whom a patent had been duly issued. Lyle v. Patterson, (1908) 160 Fed. 545.

Right of actual settler.—While one who settles on segregated land embraced in a homestead entry acquires no rights as a settler thereby, yet on the relinquishment of the entryman, there being no intervening superior rights, the rights of the settler attached, and, if qualified, he is entitled to the homestead entry if he applies within ninety days from the time his rights attach. Gourley v. Countryman, (1907) 18 Okla. 220, 90 Pac. 427.

Vol. VI, p. 290, sec. 2290.

"Entry" defined.—In statutes and in common parlance the word "entries," when applied to proceedings in the Land Office under the homestead law, is used with various meanings—sometimes in the sense of preliminary entries, at other times in the sense of final entries, and again in the sense of the proceedings as a whole. Stearns v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 902.

Not applicable to mineral, coal, and saline lands.—This section is a part of the general homestead law and relates to the enforcement of its restrictive provisions, but not to the enforcement of the prohibitive or qualifying provisions of the mineral, coal, and saline land laws. As to the latter, the means of enforcement are not specially prescribed by statute, and so may be designated by executive regulation under sections 441, 453, and 2478 of the Revised Statutes, which empower the commissioner, under the direction of the secretary, to enforce, "by appropriate regulations," every part of the public land laws as to which it is not otherwise specially provided. Leonard v. Lennox, (C. C. A. 1910) 181 Fed. 760, 767.

Who may enter homestead.—One M., an alien, who had not declared his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States, but who was an occupant of a tract of public land, executed a deed, by which he purported to convey to defendant railroad company a strip for right of way over such land. The land was at that time within the limits of a railroad grant and had been reserved from entry or sale. Subsequently the grant was forfeited and the land restored to the public domain, and M., who had in the meantime declared his intention to become a citizen, made a homestead entry thereof and later received a patent under which complainants acquired title. It was held that the right-of-way deed was a nullity, both because M. was an alien, who could not under the policy of the land laws acquire any right in the land, and because it was at the time reserved and not subject to disposition thereunder, and that, being void as against public policy, the subsequent title acquired by him did not relate back to give it validity. Call v. Los Angeles-Pac. Co., (1908) 162 Fed. 926.

Compliance with law necessary.—An entryman on public lands secures no title to the land he desires to homestead until he has complied with the law and earned his patent. Knapp v. Alexander-Edgar Lumber Co., (1911) 145 Wis. 528, 130 N. W. 504.

One who takes possession of a tract of public land with a view to becoming an entryman under the homestead law, except as to the limited statutory time allowed him preceding actual entry at the land office, is a mere "squatter" having no rights in the land as against the government or others. U. S. v. Bagnell Timber Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 795.

It is not a compliance with the homestead law for a man to file on a tract of land with no intention of making it his home, with no purpose to live there, and with no intention of cultivating any part of it and acquiring it for a place of residence; but there must be a combination of act and intent to make the property entered his actual place of abode. U. S. v. Richards, (1906) 149 Fed. 443.

No vested right is obtained in a piece of government land, by reason of an application for a homestead entry thereon, when such application is denied. Baldwin v. Keith, (1904) 13 Okla. 624, 75 Pac. 1124.

To establish a residence under the homestead law there must be a combination of act and intent, the act of occupying and living upon the claim, and the intention of making the place a home to the exclusion of a home elsewhere. Whaley v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1908) 167 Fed. 664.

The homestead law plainly confers the right of possession upon the entryman when the preliminary entry is made, for it makes actual settlement, followed by the residence and cultivation for a period of five years, a condition to obtaining the title. Stearns v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 152 Fed. 902.

The purpose of the homestead laws is to induce settlement, cultivation, and the establishment of homes upon the public lands. The law requires the homesteader to reside upon his land at least one year before he may make his proof of title. Ware v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 577, 584.

Entry cannot be made on land in actual possession of another. — Only unoccupied and unimproved lands of the United States are subject to pre-emption or homestead settlement, though the possession of the prior occupant was wrongful as against the United States. Harvey v. Holles, (1908) 160 Fed. 531.

Quantity of land which one person may enter.—A homesteader who initiates a right as to either surveyed or unsurveyed land, and complies with the legal regulations, may, when he enters the land, embrace in his claim land in contiguous quarter sections, if he does not exceed the quantity allowed by law, and provided that his improvements are upon some portion of the tract, and that he does such acts as put the public upon notice of the extent of his claim. St. Paul, etc., R. Co. v. Donohue, (1908) 210 U. S. 21, 28 S. Ct. 600, 52 U. S. (L. ed.) 941.

An agreement to convey part of the homestead is absolutely void and unenforceable. Harris v. McCrary, (1909) 17 Idaho 300, 105 Pac. 558.

The use of the land entered by a homesteader, together with adjacent lands by another person, for grazing purposes, until the entryman makes his final proof or disposes of his holdings, without the reservation or application of any part of the land or of its use to cultivation or to residence thereon, is inconsistent with the purpose and spirit and violative of the provisions of the law, and an agreement to procure homesteaders to make entries of public lands in order that third persons may obtain such use from them is an unlawful agreement. It is a contract to induce homesteaders to make applications to enter lands, not for their exclusive use and benefit, but for the use and benefit of another in violation of the oaths they are required to take when they make their applications to enter. If qualified homesteaders could lawfully lease or grant the use of the lands they might enter to others, without restriction or reservation, until they should prove up or dispose of their holdings, third parties might appropriate to themselves by the use of successive homesteaders, who would dispose of their holdings before they made proof of title, large tracts of the public domain for indefinite periods, and might thereby retard or prevent the use or sale of these lands by the United States. Ware v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 577, 584.

Fraudulent entry.—Evidence that the defendant induced another man, who was old, destitute, and decrepit, to make a homestead entry of land near his own, paid the entry fees and for the relinquishment of a prior entry, kept the entryman in supplies until the entry was commuted, furnished the money to pay the commutation price, taking a mortgage therefor and possession of the land, and a deed as soon as a patent was issued, and that the proof of improvement and cultivation on which the commutation was allowed was false, to defendant's knowledge, is sufficient to establish that the entry was made for defendant's benefit and was fraudulent, and to authorize the cancellation of the patent. Gilson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1911) 185 Fed. 484.

Title conferred by receiver's receipt.—Although title does not pass from the United States to a homestead entryman until the issuance of a patent, the receiver's receipt issued to an entryman in possession and claiming land under this section constitutes sufficient title to enable him to maintain or defend a suit concerning the land. Thompson v. Basler, (1906) 148 Cal. 646, 84 Pac. 161.

False oath.—An indictment for subornation of perjury in procuring another to make a false oath or affidavit before the receiver of a land office to secure an entry of land, which avers that such oath or affidavit was made in support of "a certain application in writing to enter under the homestead laws of the United States, subject to entry at said land office," certain land described, is sufficient, after verdict, as showing that the land described was at the time public land of the United States subject to homestead entry at such land office. Nurnberger v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 156 Fed. 721.

Vol. VI, p. 292, sec. 2291.

Status after final proof.—After final proof on public land entered as a homestead according to the federal law, its status is fixed by state laws, though legal title does not pass from the federal government until issuance of the patent, which is a mere ministerial act. Eckert v. Schmitt, (1910) 60 Wash. 23, 110 Pac. 635.

The issuance of a patent, or such other act as passes the legal title from the government, is the final act, and the expression and entry of the final judgment, of the officers of the Land Department, and marks the termination of the jurisdiction of these officers. Peyton v. Desmond, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 2.

One who purchases from an entryman, on the faith of a final receipt or patent certificate, before the issuance of a patent, takes only the equity of his vendor, subject to the authority of the Land Department to cancel the entry, while the legal title remains in the United States, if it is found that the entry is based upon an error of law or a clear misapprehension of the facts, which, if not corrected, will lead to the transfer of the government's title to one not entitled to it. Peyton v. Desmond, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 2.

A state statute, purporting to regulate the effect of final receipts issued by the Land Department of the United States, cannot restrict the authority of the officers of that department in the disposition of the public lands, or withhold from the grantees of the United States any of the incidents of the transfer of the government title. Peyton v. Desmond, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 2.

Final proof creates vested right.—Where a government homestead entryman, after five years' residence, made final proof before the expiration of seven years, as required by this section, he thereby acquired a vested right to the land which he was entitled to convey; and this though such proofs were not forwarded to the land office because of the entryman's failure to pay the necessary fees, so that a duly recorded conveyance of the land by the entryman prior to the forwarding of such proofs constituted a valid conveyance and notice as against the holder of a deed of trust subsequently executed by the entryman and recorded after he had received his final receipt from the Land Office. Dale v. Griffith, (1908) 93 Miss. 573, 46 So. 543.

Patent relates back to time of entry.—A patent issued on a homestead entry relates back to the time of the entry only. U. S. v. Bagnell Timber Co., (C. C. A. 1910) 178 Fed. 795.

A patent issued under the homestead laws relates back to the initiation of the claim, and gives the patentee the right to recover the value of timber wrongfully cut and removed from the land after the initiation of his claim, as established by the patent proceedings, and prior to the issuance of the patent. Peyton v. Desmond, (C. C. A. 1904) 129 Fed. 2.

Patent not subject to collateral attack.—Where public land is patented to a homestead entryman as agricultural land, the patent constitutes a judgment establishing the character of the land, which cannot thereafter be collaterally attacked. Paterson v. Ogden, (1903) 141 Cal. 43, 74 Pac. 443.

Erroneous recitals in a patent from the government to a homesteader, the presence of which is not required by law, are not binding on the grantee. McCorkell v. Herron, (1905) 128 Ia. 324, 103 N. W. 988.

Identity of patentee as entryman.—The issuing of a patent to homestead land by the Interior Department necessarily involves a finding by the department that the patentee is the same person who applied to enter the land, which finding is conclusive on the court in collateral proceedings. Redwater Land, etc., Co. v. Reed, (S. D. 1910) 128 N. W. 702.

Affidavit of nonalienation.—A homestead entryman, on making final proof, must file an affidavit that he has not directly or indirectly alienated, or agreed to alienate, said land. Harris v. McCrary, (1909) 17 Idaho 300, 105 Pac. 558.

Agreement to sell.—An agreement to sell land entered by a homesteader, made prior to his acquisition of the patent, in violation of the homestead law, need not be in writing, nor of sufficient form or of a nature to be enforced in a court of law; but it is sufficient that the minds of the applicant and some other person have met definitely and understandingly, so that there was a mutual consent that, when the applicant acquired title to the land from the United States, it should inure to the benefit of the other for a consideration. U. S. v. Richards, (1906) 149 Fed. 443.

Any agreement by a homesteader to transfer his claim or any interest therein, before final proof, except as expressly authorized by the homestead law of the United States, is contrary to public policy and void. Cascade Public Service Corp. v. Railsback, (1910) 59 Wash. 376, 109 Pac. 1062.

But an entryman may acquire a valid title under the homestead law, though his entry was made with a view of disposing of the land after he had completed his purchase, provided that at the time and before the completion thereof he had not entered into any agreement whereby such other should receive any of the benefit of such purchase. U. S. v. Richards, (1906) 149 Fed. 443.

A contract by which one proceeding under the pre-emption law agreed, in consideration of an advance of a portion of his expenses to be incurred in perfecting the entry, to pay a specified sum for locating him on the land, and a further amount, to be determined by the proceeds of any sale which he might make after acquiring title, is not invalid under R. S. sec. 2262, 6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 278, relating to pre-emptions. Hafemann v. Gross, (1905) 199 U. S. 342, 26 S. Ct. 80, 20 U. S. (L. ed.) 220.

Mortgage not alienation.—In Hafemann v. Gross, (1905) 199 U. S. 342, 26 S. Ct. 80, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 220, it was said: "It has been held that a contract to convey the whole or part of the land, made prior to the perfection of his equitable right, by one seeking pre-emption or a homestead, is void, and will not be enforced in the courts (Anderson v. Carkins, (1890) 135 U. S. 483, 34 U. S. (L. ed.) 272, 10 S. Ct. 905), and, if known to the department, will prevent the passing of the legal title. Such has been the uniform ruling of the Land Department, as well as of the courts, state and federal. With respect to a mortgage or deed of trust executed under like circumstances, the decisions of the Land Department have been all to the effect that such mortgage or deed of trust is not an alienation within the scope of the homestead statute, or forbidden by the pre-emption law, especially where, in the case of a pre-emption, the mortgage is given to secure money borrowed to complete the purchase of the land. See, in reference to pre-emptors, Larson v. Weisbecker, 1 Land Dec. 409, Opinion of Secretary Teller; Re Ray, 6 Land Dec. 340, Opinion of Acting Secretary Muldrow; Haling v. Eddy, 9 Land Dec. 337, Opinion of Secretary Noble; Murdock v. Ferguson, 13 Land Dec. 198; Opinion of Assistant Secretary Chandler. With reference to a homestead entryman, see Mudgett v. Dubuque, etc., R. Co., 8 Land Dec. 243, Opinion of Secretary Vilas; Dawson v. Higgins, 22 Land Dec. 544, Opinion of Secretary Smith; Kezar v. Horde, 27 Land Dec. 148, Opinion of Secretary Bliss. In addition, see Lawson v. Reynolds, 28 Land Dec. 155, in which Secretary Hitchcock held that a 'written agreement executed by a homesteader, and operating as a mere lease of part of the premises and the grant of an easement, the use of which would tend to improve and increase the value of the land as a homestead, is not an alienation of any part of such land, and no bar to the perfection of the entry.' See also Kingston v. Eckman, 22 Land Dec. 234, in respect to an entry under the Timber and Stone Act of June 3, 1878 (20 Stat. L. 89, ch. 151), as amended by the Act of Aug. 4, 1892 (27 Stat. L. 348, ch. 375), the provisions of which statute in reference to the oath of the applicant are similar to those in the Pre-emption Act. There has been some division in the courts upon the question. In Brewster v. Madden, (1875) 15 Kan. 249, the Supreme Court of that state, in an opinion delivered by the writer of this, held that a mortgage given by a pre-emptor prior to the entry of the lands was void, reaching this conclusion largely on the proposition that, at the time the Pre-emption Act [5 Stat. L. 453, ch. 16] was passed (1841), mortgages, always in form conveyances, were then regarded by the profession generally as conditional alienations. To like effect were the early rulings of the Supreme Court of Minnesota (McCue v. Smith, 9 Minn. 252, 86 Am. Dec. 100; Woodbury v. Dorman, 15 Minn. 338), though these rulings were subsequently distinctly overruled by the same court, Jones v. Tainter, 15 Minn. 512; Lang v. Morey, (1889) 40 Minn. 396, 12 Am. St. Rep. 748, 42 N. W. 88. Bass v. Buker, (1887) 6 Mont. 442, 12 Pac. 922, deciding the same way, was also overruled in Norris v. Heald, (1892) 12 Mont. 282, 33 Am. St. Rep. 581, 29 Pac. 1121. The large majority of state decisions follow these later rulings. See, in case of pre-emptions, Wilcox v. John, (1895) 21 Colo. 367, 52 Am. St. Rep. 246, 40 Pac. 880; Christy v. Dana, (1868) 34 Cal. 548; Christy v. Dana, (1871) 42 Cal. 174; Camp v. Grider, (1882) 62 Cal. 20; and in reference to homesteads, Fuller v. Hunt, (1878) 48 Ia. 163; Dickerson v. Bridges, (1898) 147 Mo. 235, 48 S. W. 825; Weber v. Laidler, (1901) 26 Wash. 144, 90 Am. St. Rep. 726, 66 Pac. 400; Spiess v. Neuberger, (1888) 71 Wis. 279, 5 Am. St. Rep. 211, 37 N. W. 417; Kirkaldie v. Larrabee, (1866) 31 Cal. 455, 89 Am. Dec. 205; Orr v. Stewart, (1885) 67 Cal. 275, 7 Pac. 693; Stark v. Duvall, (1898) 7 Okla. 213, 54 Pac. 453. In Orrell v. Bay Mfg. Co., (1903) 83 Miss. 800, 36 So. 561, the court held that the prohibition of the alienation of public land by parties who have taken the preliminary steps to acquire the same under the homestead laws, and who have not perfected their entries, has reference to an absolute sale of the land, or some part of it, and in that case the leasing of trees on the land for turpentine purposes, and the sale of trees, was held not an alienation within the meaning of the statute. Obviously, the trend of the authorities is strongly in favor of the proposition that a mortgage or deed of trust by one seeking an entry under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, made prior to the perfection of his equitable right, is valid."

A mortgage, being merely security for a debt, conveys no title, and is not an alienation within this section. Stark v. Morgan, (1906) 73 Kan. 453, 85 Pac. 567; Adam v. McClintock, (N. D. 1911) 131 N. W. 394.

Grant of water privilege.—A contract for the transfer by a homesteader, before final proof, of a water flume for power purposes to generate electricity is void and not subject to specific performance. That the original contract was extended and ratified after final proof will not make it enforceable, since the original contract is the basis of the action, and it is on grounds of public policy that courts refuse to specifically enforce such contracts. Cascade Public Service Corp. v. Railroad, (1910) 59 Wash. 376, 109 Pac. 1062.

But it has been held that an entryman's deed which does not purport to convey the land, or any part thereof, but only a portion of certain water flowing in a stream, and a right of way over the land to convey the water by ditch or otherwise, not made in contemplation of the homestead entry, is not prohibited by this section. Mt. Carmel Fruit Co. v. Webster, (1903) 140 Cal. 183, 73 Pac. 827.

A sale of timber by a homestead entryman before the completion of the requisite improvements, and before the receipt of a patent or final certificate, to carry out in good faith the acquisition and enjoyment of a homestead, even though a profit does incidentally result from the sale, is not void. King-Ryder Lumber Co. v. Scott, (1904) 73 Ark. 329, 84 S. W. 487.

A sale of standing timber by a homestead settler prior to the issuance of his final certificate, although in direct violation of the rights vested in him by his inchoate entry, is not an alienation of a "part of the land." Orrell v. Bay Mfg. Co., (1903) 83 Miss. 800, 36 So. 561.

Cutting timber.—A homesteader may lawfully cut and remove such timber from the public lands he enters as it is necessary for him to remove and enable him to reside upon, improve, and cultivate the land before his final proof. But the cutting of the timber or any other use of the land or of its products by him prior to his final proof must be incident to his actual cultivation, improvement, and living upon the land in good faith, to procure his homestead for his own benefit. Conway v. U. S., (1899) 95 Fed. 615, 619, 37 C. C. A. 200, 204; Grubbs v. U. S., (1900) 105 Fed. 314, 320, 321, 44 C. C. A. 513, 519, 520; Ware v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1907) 154 Fed. 577, 584.

A settler applying for a homestead, on making and filing the affidavit required, and paying a certain sum proportionate to the amount of land applied for, acquires the right to occupy the land, to protect it from trespass by others, and to use it for all purposes incidental to its cultivation; also to cut and remove timber when necessary for the improvement of the land and the preparation of it for tillage, but not to fell timber, or permit it to be done by his vendee, for purposes of speculation or profit, as such act is prohibited by, and renders him and his vendee liable to prosecution under R. S. sec. 2461. Orrell v. Bay Mfg. Co., (1903) 83 Miss. 800, 36 So. 561.

Death of entryman.—Where a homestead entryman at his death has complied with the homestead law, except as to presenting final proof, his rights are to be determined as if his patent had in fact issued. Hays v. Wyatt, (1911) 19 Idaho 544, 115 Pac. 13.

The inchoate rights of a decedent cannot be sold for the payment of his debts; and an attempted sale by the administrator does not vest in the purchaser the right to oust a settler settling on the land after the claimant's death with the intention of taking it as a homestead. Towner v. Rodegeb, (1903) 33 Wash. 153, 74 Pac. 50.

The doctrine of relation cannot successfully be invoked to confer any right or interest in the land under the operation of the state laws upon the daughter of a deceased homestead settler, as against his widow, to whom, in accordance with the provisions of this section, the patent has issued. McCune v. Essig, (1905) 199 U. S. 382, 26 S. Ct. 78, 50 U. S. (L. ed.) 237.

In Bergstrom v. Svenson, (N. D. 1910) 126 N. W. 497, it appears that the plaintiff's brother in 1896 made a homestead entry, and in 1897 died, leaving surviving plaintiff, who is a citizen of the United States, and a resident of the state, and his mother, who is an alien and a citizen of Sweden. In 1903 plaintiff made final proof and received a receiver's receipt and a patent was issued running to the heirs of plaintiff's brother. It was held that the mother, being an alien, was incapable of making final proof, and not qualified to receive title from the government, and that the title passed to plaintiff, the sole heir capable of making such proof.

The estate of a deceased has no interest in the homestead, and the administrator no right to make final proof or perfect entry for a patent. Demars v. Hickey, (1905) 13 Wyo. 371, 80 Pac. 521, rehearing denied 13 Wyo. 386, 81 Pac. 705.

Cancellation of patent for fraud.—In U. S. v. Mills, (1909) 169 Fed. 686, it appears that the defendant, a young unmarried man, without means, working by the day, his compensation including his board, filed a homestead claim on government land a few miles distant from his place of employment. He went upon the land, built a house, chicken house, and horse stable, and inclosed a small part of the land. During the five years before making final proof he had tenants, mostly negroes living in the house and cultivating the land on shares. He boarded and slept for the most part where he worked, but visited the land every few days, and once in every four or five months slept there. It was held that such facts were not sufficient to establish fraud in the entry or final proof, which entitled the government to a cancellation of the patent issued for the land, there being no substantial evidence that the defendant did not act in good faith and in the belief that he had complied with the law.

Vol. VI, p. 300, sec. 2. [Act of May 14, 1880.]

To whom right of entry enures.—The right of entry given by this section enures to the benefit of one who, by his contest, induced the relinquishment in the local land office of a homestead entry of land in Oklahoma territory prima facie valid, but made by one in fact disqualified to make the entry, although a settlement was made intermediate the homestead entry and the initiation of the contest, since such entry, though ineffectual to vest any rights in the entryman, was sufficient to prevent the acquisition of homestead rights by another until it had been set aside. Hodges v. Colcord, (1904) 193 U. S. 192, 24 S. Ct. 433, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 677, affirming (1902) 12 Okla. 313, 70 Pac. 383.

Not applicable to stone and timber claims.—This section has no application to land sought to be purchased as a stone and timber claim. Howell v. Sappington, (1908) 165 Fed. 944.

Vol. VI, p. 301, sec. 3.

The failure to file an application within the statutory time does not affect the settler's right, except as against another claimant who has acquired or initiated some right before the application is in fact made. Trodick v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (C. C. A. 1908) 164 Fed. 913.

Right of possession protected.—Any person qualified can lawfully settle upon unsurveyed public lands, and, if such settlement is made with the intent of claiming the lands under such homestead law, such settler acquires a prior right to file thereon which carries with it the right to possession and to be protected in his right of possession when unlawfully disturbed by another, and a court of equity has jurisdiction of a suit of which the subject-matter is the right to the possession of the land claimed. Huffman v. Smyth, (1906) 47 Ore. 573, 84 Pac. 80.

No right of action accrues to a successful contestant of a homestead entry for unlawful detainer until the entry is canceled. Bilyeu v. Pilcher, (1905) 16 Okla. 228, 83 Pac. 546.

Vol. VI, p. 303, sec. 2292.

Right of children to patent.—Where a husband deserts his wife, and makes a homestead entry under the United States statutes, and a patent is issued to the guardian of the entryman's illegitimate children after his death, the widow has no equity to have a trust declared in the homestead in her favor, where she did nothing to aid in acquiring the rights under the statute. Douglass v. Stephens, (Fla. 1911) 54 So. 455.

This section only intended to give to minors exclusively when there are no other heirs. Stadin v. Garfield, (1908) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 49; Holloman v. Bullock, (1903) 82 Miss. 405, 34 So. 355.

So that, where one of several children of a deceased entryman is an adult, the other children, although minors, will not be entitled to a patent. Stadin v. Garfield, (1908) 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 49.

It is left to the option of the homesteader, either to leave his homestead to his adult heirs, where he has no widow or minor children, without making a will; or, if he prefers to devise the homestead to some one other than his heirs, he may do so, and thereby cut off the adult children. Hays v. Wyatt, (1911) 19 Idaho 544, 115 Pac. 13.

Vol. VI, p. 304, sec. 2294.

The clerk of the District Court who takes homestead or other land proofs must do so in his official capacity, and all fees collected by him for such service, whether for "preparing the depositions" or administering the oath and affixing the jurat, are provided for by the statute, and are collected by him in his official capacity, and by virtue of his office, and must be accounted for and paid over to the county. Rhea v. Washington County, (1906) 12 Idaho 455, 88 Pac. 89.

Vol. VI, p. 307, sec. 2296.

When this section applies.—This section does not apply after the final proof has been made, and the receiver's final certificate has been issued therefor. Shelby v. Ziegler, (1908) 22 Okla. 799, 98 Pac. 989.

The issuance of the patent, and not the issuance of a final receipt to the homesteader entitling him to a patent, fixes the time from which the property may become liable for subsequent debts of the homesteader. In re Cohn, (1909) 171 Fed. 569.

Land acquired under the homestead laws is not subject to a judgment obtained on a note given between the making of final proof and the issuance of patent. Sprinkle v. West, (1911) 62 Wash. 587, 114 Pac. 430.

Liability for entryman's torts.—The exemption of lands acquired under the homestead laws and the timber culture laws from any debt contracted previous to their acquisition does not exempt them from liabilities for the torts of the entrymen previously perpetrated. Brun v. Mann, (C. C. A. 1906) 161 Fed. 145.

Mortgage debt.—A person may make a valid mortgage on public lands on which he has made a homestead entry before securing a patent to the land. Klempp v. Northrop, (1902) 137 Cal. 414, 70 Pac. 284; Rogers v. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co., (1907) 48 Wash. 19, 92 Pac. 774.
